"Official" according to the dictionary, means pertaining to an office, and "official act" or "official duty" means an act or duty done by an officer in his official capacity. Thus, use of the expression "official duty" in Section 197 CrPC implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in the course of his service and that it should have been in discharge of his duty. The section does not extend its protective cover to every act or omission done by a public servant in service but restricts its scope of operation to only those acts or omissions which are done by a public servant in discharge of official duty. (Para 10)

It is not the duty which requires examination so much as the act, because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned. It is the quality of the act which is important and the protection of this section is available if the act falls within the scope and range of his official duty. There cannot be any universal rule to determine whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, nor is it possible to lay down any such rule. One safe and sure test in this regard would be to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duty. If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant. This aspect makes it clear that the concept of Section 197 CrPC does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case. (Para 7)

Section 197 CrPC has been widened further by extending protection to even those acts or omissions which are done in purported exercise of official duty. That is, under the colour of office. Official duty therefore implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in the course of his service and such act or omission must have been performed as part of duty which further must have been official in nature. The section has, thus, to be construed strictly, while determining its applicability to any act or omission in the course of service. Its operation has to be limited to those duties which are discharged in course of duty. For instance a public servant is not entitled to indulge in criminal activities. To that extent the section has to be construed narrowly and in a restricted manner. (Para 11)

If on facts, therefore, it is prima facie found that the act or omission for which the accused was charged had reasonable connection with discharge of his duty then it must be held to be official to which applicability of Section 197 CrPC cannot be disputed. (Para 12). K. Kalimuthu v. State, (2005) 4 SCC 512: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1291: AIR 2005 SC 2257: 2005 Cri LJ 2190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-3-2005]

Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29; P. Arulswami v. State of Madras, (1967) 1 SCR 201: AIR 1967 SC 776: 1967 Cri LJ 665; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096; P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234, relied on

[2360] — S. 197 — Applicability — Words "official duty" occurring in, how to be construed — Held, "official duty" implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in the course of his service and that it should fall within the scope and range of his official duty — Test is whether omission or neglect to do that act would have brought on the charge of dereliction of his official duty — S. 197 to be construed strictly while determining its applicability to any act or omission in the course of service

The protection given under Section 197 is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings for offences alleged to have been committed by them while they are acting or purporting to act as public servants. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause, and if sanction is granted, to confer on the Government, if they choose to exercise it, complete control of the prosecution. (Para 9)

The protection under Section 197 has certain limits and is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act. Use of the expression "official duty" implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in the course of his service and that it should have been in discharge of his duty. The section does not extend its protective cover to every act or omission done by a public servant in service but restricts its scope of operation to only those acts or omissions which are done by a public servant in discharge of official duty. If on facts, therefore, it is prima facie found that the act or omission for which the accused was charged had reasonable connection with discharge of his duty then it must be held to be official to which applicability of Section 197 CrPC cannot be disputed. (Paras 9 to 11)

If in doing his official duty, he acted in excess of his duty, but there is a reasonable connection between the act and the performance of the official duty, the excess will not be a sufficient ground to deprive the public servant from the protection. The question is not as to the nature of the offence such as whether the alleged offence contained an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official capacity. Before Section 197 CrPC can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. (Para 9)

It is not the duty which requires examination so much as the act, because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned. It is the quality of the act which is important and the protection of this section is available if the act falls within the scope and range of his official duty. There cannot be any universal rule to determine whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, nor is it possible to lay down any such rule. One safe and sure test in this regard would be to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duty. If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant. This aspect makes it clear that the concept of Section 197 CrPC does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case. (Para 9). Centre for Public Interest Litigation v. Union of India, (2005) 8 SCC 202: AIR 2005 SC 4413: (2005) 128 Comp Cas 387.

(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of (contd.)

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Ruma Pal, Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-10-2005]

R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096, followed

[2361] — S. 197 — "Offence committed in discharge of official duty" — Test — Act/omission must be integral to the performance of public duty — Misappropriation of public funds and fabrication of false record is not in furtherance of or in discharge of public duty — Held, sanctions not necessary — Object of obtaining sanction for prosecution of a government servant stated

The essential requirement postulated for the sanction to prosecute the public servant is that the offence alleged against the public servant must have been done while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. In such a situation, it postulates that the public servant's act is in furtherance of the performance of his official duties. If the act/omission is integral to the performance of public duty, the public servant is entitled to the protection under Section 197(1) of CrPC. Without the previous sanction, the complaint/charge against him for the alleged offence cannot be proceeded with in the trial. The sanction of the appropriate Government or competent authority would be necessary to protect a public servant from needless harassment or prosecution. The protection of sanction is an assurance to an honest and sincere officer to perform his public duty honestly and to the best of his ability. The threat of prosecution demoralises the honest officer. The requirement of the sanction by competent authority or appropriate Government is an assurance and protection to the honest officer who does his official duty to further public interest. However, performance of official duty under colour of public authority cannot be camouflaged to commit crime. Public duty may provide him an opportunity to commit crime. The Court to proceed further in the trial or the enquiry, as the case may be, applies its mind and records a finding that the crime and the official duty are not integrally connected.

When the public servant is alleged to have committed the offence of fabrication of record or misappropriation of public fund etc. it cannot be said that he acted in discharge of his official duties because it is not the official duty of the public servant to fabricate the false records and misappropriate the public funds etc. in furtherance of or in the discharge of his official duties. The official capacity only enables him to fabricate the record or misappropriate the public fund etc. It does not mean that it is integrally connected or inseparably interlinked with the crime committed in the course of the same transaction. Shambhoo Nath Misra v. State of U.P., (1997) 5 SCC 326: 1997 SCC (Cri) 676: AIR 1997 SC 2102: 1997 Cri LJ 2491: 1997 All LJ 1089.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-1997]

[2362] — S. 197 — Offence committed 'while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty' — 'Official duty' — Meaning of — Conditions for applicability of S. 197, held, are: (1) act or omission must have been done by public servant in course of his service, and (2) it should have been in discharge of his duty — On facts held, both the conditions fulfilled — Hence failure to obtain sanction for prosecution vitiated the entire proceedings against the accused — Official Secrets Act, 1923, Ss. 3(1)(c), 6(2)(a)(b) and 9 — Atomic Energy Act, 1962, Ss. 24(1)(d) r/w 18(2) and 24(2)(d) r/w 19(b)

The accused-respondent was selected in course of his employment in the Navy to study the feasibility of nuclear power propelled submarine vessel and was attached with Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (B.A.R.C.) as second officer in command. He joined the project in 1976 and was associated with the Centre for nearly 10 years. The accused while working with B.A.R.C. not only obtained Ph.D. but was awarded gold medal for his achievements for his inventions. He voluntarily opted out of service in 1987. He was arrested on May 30, 1988, just when he was about to board a plane for New York. His residence was searched on the next day. Amongst various documents which were seized were the Identity Card of the Indian Armed Forces bearing his photograph and name, eight files containing different types of maps of India, diagrams and computer information, certain books, project report etc. Most of the documents which can be said to be sensitive which were recovered from the accused were admittedly either the book written by him or the paper read by him. Even the thesis written by the accused on which he was awarded Ph.D. by the Bhabha Institute of Technology was seized by the prosecution. On the basis of the documents seized and his interrogation, a complaint was filed against him under S. 3(1)(c), read with Ss. 9, 6(2)(a) and 6(2)(b) of the Official Secrets Act and Ss. 24(1)(d) read with 18(2) and 24(2)(d) read with S. 19(b) of the Atomic Energy Act before the Metropolitan Magistrate who being prima facie satisfied of the offences and their gravity committed the accused to stand trial before the Court of Sessions. Five charges were framed against the accused. First two related to Ss. 3(1) and 3(1)(c) of the O.S. Act. Third and fifth related to Ss. 6(2)(a) and 5 of the O.S. Act and fourth related to violation of Ss. 18(2) and 19 of A.E. Act. The validity of the charges framed was challenged by way of writ petition under Arts. 226 and 227. The High Court directed the Additional Sessions Judge to decide inter alia if sanction under S. 197 CrPC was required. The ASJ held that the documents seized from possession of the accused indicated that they were inseparably intertwined with performance of his official duties whilst in the Navy and therefore, the prosecution could not have been initiated without sanction. In revision filed by the State, the High Court agreed with this finding.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held:

Two questions arose for consideration — one if the offence for which the accused was charged and of which cognizance was taken was committed by him during the period he was in Naval service and if it be so then whether the violations were in discharge of official duty or they were beyond it. As regards the first question, the facts disclose that the act or omission which furnished foundation for indicting the accused either under O.S. Act or A.E. Act were related to the period when he was in service. Moreover, S. 197 of the Code as it stands after 1973, extends the protection even to a retired public servant as is clear from use of the words, 'is or was' provided the accusation is in respect of an act or omission done or purported to have been done when such public servant was in office. By legislative fiction the officer is deemed to be a public servant under S. 197 of the Code irrespective of his retirement if the accusations against him are for act or omission done by him when he was in service. The purpose is to avoid exposing a public servant to vexatious or frivolous prosecutions merely because he has demitted his office.

As regards the second question, evidence shows that the papers seized from the accused were written and the books published when the accused was attached with B.A.R.C. as a Second Officer-in-Command and, therefore, the material or documents which were found by him cannot be said to have been collected or procured by him by going out of way and beyond the discharge of his duties as an officer in the Naval Department. Maybe some of them were secret, confidential or unclassified items. But the accused came across them and obtained their copies in course of his duty as an officer attached to B.A.R.C. Taking out of information obtained in course of employment was thus squarely covered by S. 197. Whether it was for communication or not is not material. Retention of Identity Card issued during service may be dereliction of duty but it was committed when the accused was in service and it was issued to him while discharging his duties as a Naval officer. The Identity Card was issued to the accused as a retired officer and consequently the claim of the prosecution that the accused acted in violation of the provisions of the Act was not justified. But assuming there was violation since it was done when the accused was in service he was entitled to protection under S. 197 of the Code. Likewise the alleged information which the accused was taking with him to United States having been obtained by him in course of employment and in discharge of his duty the High Court did not commit any error of law in recording the finding that no prosecution could be initiated unless sanction under S. 197 was obtained. Thus even the second and the most important requirement of acting in discharge of official duty was satisfied. Therefore, it was necessary for the prosecution to have obtained sanction for prosecuting the accused.

Section 197 does not extend its protective cover to every act or omission done by a public servant in service but restricts its scope of operation to only those acts or omissions which are done by a public servant in discharge of official duty. It has been widened further by extending protection to even those acts or omissions which are done in purported exercise of official duty. That is under the colour of office. Official duty therefore implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in course of his service and such act or omission must have been performed as part of duty which further must have been official in nature. The section has, thus, to be construed strictly while determining its applicability to any act or omission in course of service. Its operation has to be limited to those duties which are discharged in course of duty. But once any act or omission has been found to have been committed by a public servant in discharge of his duty then it must be given liberal and wide construction so far its official nature is concerned. For instance a public servant is not entitled to indulge in criminal activities. To that extent the section has to be construed narrowly and in a restricted manner. But once it is established that act or omission was done by the public servant while discharging his duty then the scope of its being official should be construed so as to advance the objective of the section in favour of the public servant. Otherwise the entire purpose of affording protection to a public servant without sanction shall stand frustrated. If on facts, therefore, it is prima facie found that the act or omission for which the accused was charged had reasonable connection with discharge of his duty then it must be held to be official to which applicability of S. 197 of the Code cannot be disputed.

(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of (contd.)

So far public servants are concerned the cognizance of any offence, by any court, is barred by S. 197 of the Code unless sanction is obtained from the appropriate authority, if the offence, alleged to have been committed, was in discharge of the official duty. The word 'cognizance' means 'jurisdiction' or 'the exercise of jurisdiction' or 'power to try and determine causes'. In common parlance it means taking notice of. A court, therefore, is precluded from entertaining a complaint or taking notice of it or exercising jurisdiction if it is in respect of a public servant who is accused of an offence alleged to have committed during discharge of his official duty. The mandatory character of the protection afforded to a public servant is brought out by the expression, 'no court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction'. Use of the words, 'no' and 'shall' make it abundantly clear that the bar on the exercise of power of the court to take cognizance of any offence is absolute and complete. Very cognizance is barred. That is the complaint cannot be taken notice of.

In the present case the courts below did not commit any error of law in coming to conclusion that the entire proceedings were vitiated as no cognizance of the offences could have been taken against the accused without complying with provisions of S. 197 of the Code. State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Budhikota Subbarao, (1993) 3 SCC 339: 1993 SCC (Cri) 901.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and R.M. Sahai, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-3-1993]

[2363] — S. 197 — Whether offence committed "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty" — Test to determine — The act complained of (1) must be an offence, and (2) must be done in discharge of official duty — There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the official duty — It does not matter that the act exceeds what is strictly necessary for the discharge of the official duty, since that question would arise only later when the trial proceeds — But no sanction is required where there is no such connection and the official status furnishes only the occasion or opportunity for the acts — The claim of the accused that the act alleged was done reasonably and not in pretended course of his official duty can be examined during the trial by giving an opportunity to the defence to prove it — In such cases the question of sanction should be left open to be decided in the main judgment after conclusion of trial

In order to implement certain rural development schemes, approved by the State Cabinet of Sikkim, the Deptt. of Rural Development invited sealed tenders from enlisted contractors. In response, tenders were received and the same were opened by a Tender Committee. Necessary action for acceptance/rejection of tender then followed in respective files. It was alleged that at that stage the then Chief Minister of Sikkim and the then Secretary, Rural Development Deptt., the appellant, along with certain contractors entered into a criminal conspiracy with the object of securing contract works in favour of the said contractors by corrupt or illegal means or by abusing the position of the then Chief Minister and the appellant as public servant and got the works awarded in favour of those contractors thereby causing them pecuniary advantage and corresponding loss to the State of Sikkim by various commissions and omissions. Charge-sheet was submitted against the appellant, the then Chief Minister and the said contractors under Section 120-B IPC read with Sections 5(2)/5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 corresponding to Sections 13(2)/13(1)(d) of the 1988 Act. Before cognizance was taken upon the charge-sheet, the then Chief Minister and the appellant ceased to be public servants. The Special Judge took cognizance and summoned all the accused. On behalf of the appellant a preliminary objection was raised that his prosecution under Section 120-B IPC read with Sections 5(2) and 5(1)(d) of the 1947 Act was not warranted as he being a public servant at the relevant time, sanction was required under Section 197 of the Code and the same having not been obtained, the prosecution for these offences was not fit to continue. The Special Judge rejected the objection. The High Court also dismissed the revision petition holding that no sanction under Section 197 was required. The only question that arose before the Supreme Court was whether sanction for prosecution of the appellant was required under Section 197 CrPC for the said offences. Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The legislative mandate engrafted in sub-section (1) of Section 197 touches the jurisdiction of the court itself. It is a prohibition imposed by the statute from taking cognizance. Different tests have been laid down in decided cases to ascertain the scope and meaning of the relevant words occurring in Section 197: "any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty". The offence alleged to have been committed must have something to do, or must be related in some manner, with the discharge of official duty. No question of sanction can arise under Section 197, unless the act complained of is an offence; the only point for determination is whether it was committed in the discharge of official duty. There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the official duty. It does not matter even if the act exceeds what is strictly necessary for the discharge of the duty, as this question will arise only at a later stage when the trial proceeds on the merits. What a court has to find out is whether the act and the official duty are so interrelated that one can postulate reasonably that it was done by the accused in the performance of official duty, though, possibly in excess of the needs and requirements of the situation. An official act can be performed in the discharge of official duty as well as in dereliction of it. For invoking protection under Section 197 of the Code, the acts of the accused complained of must be such that the same cannot be separated from the discharge of official duty, but if there was no reasonable connection between them and the performance of those duties, and the official status furnishes only the occasion or opportunity for the acts, then no sanction would be required. If the case as put forward by the prosecution fails or the defence establishes that the act purported to be done is in discharge of duty, the proceedings will have to be dropped. (Paras 5 and 15)

It is well settled that question of sanction under Section 197 of the Code can be raised any time after the cognizance; maybe immediately after cognizance or framing of charge or even at the time of conclusion of trial and after conviction as well. But there may be certain cases where it may not be possible to decide the question effectively without giving opportunity to the defence to establish that what he did was in discharge of official duty. In order to come to the conclusion whether claim of the accused that the act that he did was in course of the performance of his duty was a reasonable one and neither pretended nor fanciful, can be examined during the course of trial by giving opportunity to the defence to establish it. In such an eventuality, the question of sanction should be left open to be decided in the main judgment which may be delivered upon conclusion of the trial. (Para 15)

In the present case, the accused is claiming that in awarding contract in his capacity as Secretary, Department of Rural Development, Government of Sikkim, he did not abuse his position as a public servant and works were awarded in favour of the contractor at a rate permissible under law and not at low rates. These facts are required to be established which can be done at the trial. Therefore, it is not possible to grant any relief to the appellant at this stage. During the course of trial, the court below shall examine this question afresh and deal with the same in the main judgment in the light of the law laid down in this case without being prejudiced by any observation in the impugned orders. (Para 16). P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234: AIR 2001 SC 2547.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, S.N. Phukan and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-7-2001]

Hori Ram Singh (Dr.) v. Emperor, AIR 1939 FC 43: 1939 FCR 159; H.H.B. Gill v. R., AIR 1948 PC 128: 49 Cri LJ 503; Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287: 1955 Cri LJ 857: (1955) 1 SCR 1177; Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309: 1955 Cri LJ 865: (1955) 1 SCR 1302; Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140: (1955) 2 SCR 925; Baijnath Gupta v. State of M.P., AIR 1966 SC 220: 1966 Cri LJ 179: (1966) 1 SCR 210; Suresh Kumar Bhikamchand Jain v. Pandey Ajay Bhushan, (1998) 1 SCC 205: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1; Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500: 2001 SCC (Cri) 18; K. Satwant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 266: 1960 Cri LJ 410: (1960) 2 SCR 89; Om Parkash Gupta v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 458: 1957 SCR 423: 1957 Cri LJ 575, relied on [2364] — Ss. 197 and 190 — "Acting in the discharge of his official duty" — Magistrate to consider not only the allegations made in the complaint but also other materials on record — Allegation in the complaint that the accused police officials raided the house of the complainant without warrant, assaulted and abused his wife and others and took away certain articles belonging to him — Material on record showing that material facts were suppressed by the complainant and some of the allegations were false — Held, in the circumstances of the case, sanction was necessary

(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of (contd.)

The High Court was wrong in holding that the Magistrate should have considered only the allegations made in the complaint to find out whether the alleged acts were committed by the police officials while discharging or purporting to discharge their duties.

There was also no material to show that any article belonging to the complainant was misappropriated by any of the police officials. On the contrary the material discloses that seizure lists were prepared and copies thereof were given to the brother-in-law of the complainant who was present. Thus the material collected during the inquiry discloses that material facts were suppressed by the complainant and some of the allegations made in the complaint were not correct.

As the search was made by the police officials after obtaining a proper warrant for that purpose and as there is no credible material to show that they had either abused or assaulted the wife of the complainant or any other person, what they had done appears to have been done while discharging or purporting to discharge their duty. Therefore, no cognizance of the alleged offences could be taken without a proper sanction of the Government. State of Bihar v. Kamla Prasad Singh, (1998) 5 SCC 690: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1374: AIR 1998 SC 2379: 1998 Cri LJ 3601.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1998]

[2365] — S. 197 — "Acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty" — Defamatory language used by a Judge to an Advocate — Held, not in discharge of his official duty — Hence S. 197 not applicable and Sanction for prosecution of the Judge not required — Penal Code, 1860, S. 499

The District Court called for remarks from the appellant, a Munsif Magistrate, on certain allegations made by the respondent, an Advocate, in his application for transfer of a suit pending in the appellant's court. The appellant in his written remarks called the respondent as 'rowdy', 'a big gambler' and 'a mischievous element'. The District Judge read out the appellant's remarks in open court. The respondent then filed a criminal complaint alleging that the remarks amounted to his defamation under S. 499, IPC.

Held :

There was no reasonable nexus between the act complained of, i.e. the defamatory language used by the appellant in his remarks, and the discharge of official duty i.e. to offer his remarks regarding the allegations made in the transfer petition. Therefore, S. 197 was not attracted. B.S. Sambhu v. T.S. Krishnaswamy, (1983) 1 SCC 11: 1983 SCC (Cri) 125: AIR 1983 SC 64: 1983 Cri LJ 158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-11-1982]

Matajog Dubey H.C. Bhari, (1957) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44, applied

[2366] — S. 197 — "Acting or purporting to act in discharge of official duties" — Whether act complained of has a direct nexus or relation with the official duties of a public servant will depend on the facts of each case — Proper approach of the court indicated — Minister for Electricity entering into a criminal conspiracy with the co-accused and illegally selling electricity to an industry — Held, act alleged is directly and reasonably connected with the official duty as a Minister and, therefore, attracts the protection of S. 197(1)

In the present case, the appellant is charged with having entered into a criminal conspiracy with the co-accused while functioning as a Minister. The criminal conspiracy alleged is that he sold electricity to an industry in the State of Karnataka "without the consent of the Government of Kerala which is an illegal act" under the provisions of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948 and the Kerala Electricity Board Rules framed thereunder. It was alleged that the Minister in pursuance of the said alleged conspiracy abused his official position and illegally sold certain units to the private industry in Bangalore which profited the private industry to the tune of Rs 19,58,630.40 or more and it is, therefore, obvious that the criminal conspiracy alleged against the appellant is that while functioning as the Minister for Electricity he without the consent of the Government of Kerala supplied certain units of electricity to a private industry in Karnataka. Obviously, he did this in the discharge of his duties as a Minister. The allegation is that it was an illegal act inasmuch as the consent of the Government of Kerala was not obtained before this arrangement was entered into and the supply was effected. For that reason, it is said that he had committed an illegality and hence he was liable to be punished for criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B IPC. It is, therefore, clear from the charge that the act alleged is directly and reasonably connected with his official duty as a Minister and would, therefore, attract the protection of Section 197(1) of the Act. R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128: AIR 1996 SC 901: (1996) 1 KLT 250: (1996) 1 KLJ 112.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and S.C. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 5-12-1995]

Harihar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1972) 3 SCC 89: 1972 SCC (Cri) 409, explained and distinguished

B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939, followed

[2367] — S. 197 — 'Acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty' — Speech delivered by a member of IAS at a college function not in course of his official act. Govt. of T.N. v. Badrinath, (1987) 4 SCC 654: 1988 SCC (L&S) 44: AIR 1987 SC 2381.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-1987]

[2368] — S. 197 — Offences under Ss. 406, 409 read with S. 120-B IPC — Sanction under S. 197 for prosecution of public servant, held, not necessary

It was laid down in Harihar Prasad case, (1972) 3 SCC 89 that:

> "As far as the offence of criminal conspiracy punishable under Section 120-B, read with Section 409, Indian Penal Code is concerned and also Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act is concerned, they cannot be said to be of the nature mentioned in Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. To put it shortly, it is no part of the duty of a public servant, while discharging his official duties, to enter into a criminal conspiracy or to indulge in criminal misconduct. Want of sanction under Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is, therefore, no bar."

Learned Single Judge of the High Court declined to follow the aforesaid legal position in the present case on the sole premise that the offence under Section 406 of IPC has also been fastened against the accused besides Section 409 of IPC. It is difficult to discern the rationale in the distinguishment. Sections 406 and 409 of IPC are cognate offences in which the common component is criminal breach of trust. When the offender in the offence under Section 406 is a public servant (or holding any one of the positions listed in the section) the offence would escalate to Section 409 of the Penal Code. When in Harihar Prasad case it was held that in regard to the offence under Section 409 of IPC read with Section 120-B it is no part of the duty of the public servant to enter into a criminal conspiracy for committing breach of trust, there is no sense in stating that if the offence is under Section 406 read with Section 120-B IPC it would make all the difference vis-à-vis Section 197 of the Code. (Para 8). State of Kerala v. V. Padmanabhan Nair, (1999) 5 SCC 690: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1031: AIR 1999 SC 2405: 1999 Cri LJ 3696: (1999) 4 LLN 77.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-1999]

Harihar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1972) 3 SCC 89: 1972 SCC (Cri) 409; Shreekantiah Ramayya Munnipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287: 57 Bom LR 632; Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309, followed [2369] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Charge for offences under Ss. 406, 409 and 120-B IPC — Inclusion of S. 406 IPC is immaterial as Ss. 406 and 409 are cognate offences, reiterated (Para 12). Raghunath Anant Govilkar v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 289: 2008 Cri LJ 2054.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-2-2008]

[2370] — S. 197 — Sanction under — Held, is not a condition precedent for launching prosecution for an offence under S. 409 IPC — Penal Code, 1860, S. 409 (Para 12). N. Bhargavan Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2004) 13 SCC 217: 2005 SCC (Cri) 142: AIR 2004 SC 2317: 2004 Cri LJ 2494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-4-2004]

State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539, followed

[2371] — Ss. 197 and 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B, Penal Code, 1860 — Offences for which sanction required under S. 197 — Held, no sanction for prosecution is necessary for offences under Ss. 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B, Penal Code, 1860

The offence of cheating under Section 420 or for that matter offences relatable to Sections 467, 468, 471 and 120-B, Penal Code, 1860 can by no stretch of imagination by their very nature be regarded as having been committed by any public servant while acting or purporting to act in discharge of official duty. In such cases, official status only provides an opportunity for commission of the offence. (Para 50). Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193: AIR 2007 SC 1274: (2007) 51 AIC 623 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432, distinguished

[2372] — S. 197 — Expression "acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty" — Test of connection between the offence and performance of the official duty for determining — Cheating by drawing false. T.A. bills, held, does not fall within the expression — Hence sanction for prosecution under S. 420, Penal Code not required

The appellant, a Regional Officer of the Directorate of Field Publicity, Government of India, travelled by air by obtaining air tickets in lieu of exchange orders. The cost of the tickets was debitable to the account of the Directorate and was to be excluded from the T.A. bills under the rules. On the allegation that the appellant submitted bills including the air fare and received payment for the same, a prosecution report against him was submitted to Magistrate for offence of cheating under S. 420, IPC. The appellant contended that the prosecution was not maintainable in absence of sanction under S. 197, CrPC. The Magistrate as well as the High Court in revision rejected the contention.

(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of (contd.)

Held :

Where a public servant commits the offence of cheating or abets another so to cheat, the offence committed by him is not one while he is acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty as such offence has no necessary connection between it and the performance of the duties of a public servant, the official status furnishing only the occasion or opportunity for the commission of the offences.

Drawing of T.A. bills cannot be said to have been directly and reasonably connected with appellant's duty as Regional Officer of the Directorate and the official status furnished the opportunity for doing the acts which constitute ingredients of the offence. He was, therefore, not entitled to claim the protection of S. 197(1) of the Code. The prosecution is not vitiated for want of sanction. Manohar Nath Kaul v. State of J&K, (1983) 3 SCC 429: 1983 SCC (Cri) 647: AIR 1983 SC 610: 1983 Cri LJ 988. Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and Ranganath Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-1983]

[2373] — S. 197 — "Acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty" — Offences under Ss. 409, 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC — If covered — Held, the said offences cannot be regarded as committed by public servant while discharging or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 409, 420, 467, 468 and 471 (Para 60). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710. Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193, relied on

[2374] — S. 197 — Complaint against police officer — Bar of limitation under S. 53, T.N. District Police Act — When does not apply — Respondent police officer beating and torturing the appellant on the latter appearing before the former in response to a summons issued by him — Criminal complaint filed after two years — Held, bar of S. 53 not attracted — Conduct of the respondent not covered by the expression 'act done or intended to be done under provisions of the Act or any other law' — There is no nexus between the official act of issuance of summons and the action of the respondent on appearance of the appellant — High Court wrongly quashed the complaint as time-barred — T.N. District Police Act, 1859 (24 of 1859), Ss. 53 and 21

Before a prosecution is terminated as barred by S. 53 of the Act, the accused must show that on the allegations made in the complaint it ex facie appears that the act complained of was done under the provisions of the Act or under the provisions of any other law for the time being in force whereunder powers are conferred on the police. It is true that under S. 21 of the Act a police officer can be said to be on duty all the 24 hours. The prosecution launched against the respondent is in regard to the ill-treatment meted out to the appellant when the latter visited the former in response to the summons. It was no part of the duty under the Act, Code or any other law for the time being in force conferring power on the police to beat and torture the appellant when he presented himself before the respondent in response to the summons. By no stretch of reasoning can it be said that the respondent's action of torturing the appellant was in discharge of any duty or function under the Act or under any other law. It is also difficult to say, if the allegations made are taken at their face value, that the respondent's action was incidental to or in furtherance of his duties and functions under any law. It must be realised that in order to avail of the benefit of S. 53 of the Act, the respondent must show that he acted 'under' the Act or any other law. Merely because the appellant was called through a summons issued under law, the conduct of beating and torturing the appellant on the latter appearing in obedience to the summons cannot establish any nexus between the official act of issuance of summons and the action of the respondent on the appearance of the appellant. Unless a relationship is established between the provision of law 'under' which the respondent purports to act and the misdemeanour complained of, the provision of S. 53 will not be attracted. In the present case the allegation in the complaint is that while the appellant was called by service of a summons presumably to inquire into allegations of illicit distillation, the respondent had merely used it as an excuse to secure his presence but in fact his real intention was to beat him up to prevent him from complaining against those who were paying him 'mamool' (illegal gratification) money. Thus according to the appellant the respondent bore a grudge against him and, therefore, he misused his power, issued a summons, secured his presence and then tortured him. He has charged him for the commission of offences under Ss. 341, 342, 363, 364, 506 (Part II) and 307 IPC. These do not attract the provision of S. 53 of the Act. S.P. Vaithianathan v. K. Shanmuganathan, (1994) 4 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1311: AIR 1994 SC 1771: 1994 Cri LJ 2265: (1994) 1 Crimes 725: (1994) 1 MWN (Cri) 161.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and N. Venkatachala, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-3-1994]

State of A.P. v. N. Venugopal, (1964) 3 SCR 742: AIR 1964 SC 33: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 16, followed [2375] — S. 197 — Sanction — Offence must be committed while acting or purporting to act in discharge of official duty — Tampering with search memo while in court's custody by police officials — Held, not act purported to have been done in discharge of their official duty — Hence previous sanction for prosecution not necessary. Balbir Singh v. D.N. Kadian, (1986) 1 SCC 410: 1986 SCC (Cri) 80: AIR 1986 SC 345: 1986 Cri LJ 314: (1986) 1 PLR 296.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-12-1985]

[2376] — S. 197 — Whether act done by a public servant in discharge or purported discharge of his official duty — Offence alleged against police officer of keeping in police custody persons suspected of having committed an offence without producing them before Magistrate within 24 hours of arrest — Held, act of keeping the suspected offenders in police custody was initially legal but later it became illegal when those persons were not produced before a Magistrate within 24 hours of their arrest — Hence the offence alleged was committed by the police officer in his official capacity

The real test to be applied to attract the applicability of Section 197(3) is whether the act which is done by a public officer and is alleged to constitute an offence was done by the public officer whilst acting in his official capacity though what he did was neither his duty nor his right to do as such public officer. The act complained of may be in exercise of the duty or in the absence of such duty or in dereliction of the duty; if the act complained of is done while acting as a public officer and in the course of the same transaction in which the official duty was performed or purported to be performed, the public officer would be protected. (Para 15)

In this case cognizance was only under Section 220 (commitment for trial or confinement by person having authority who knows that he is acting contrary to law) and Section 342 (wrongful confinement) of the Indian Penal Code. Cognizance has also been taken for offences under Section 147 (vexatious injury, search, arrest etc. by police officer) and Section 148 (vexatious delay in forwarding a person arrested) of the Bombay Police Act, 1951. Cognizable and non-bailable offences were registered against the appellants. They were liable to be arrested and detained. The gravamen of the charge is the failure on the part of the accused persons to produce them before a Magistrate within 24 hours of arrest. The complainants were in the custody of the police officers and at the police station. It cannot be denied that the custody which was legal to begin with became illegal on account of non-production of the complainants before the Magistrate by the police officers officially detaining the appellants at a place meant for detaining the persons suspected of having committed an offence under investigation. The act constituting an offence alleged to have been committed by the accused-respondents was certainly done by them in their official capacity though at a given point of time it had ceased to be legal in spite of being legal to begin with. On the totality of the facts and circumstances of the case the Magistrate and the High Court have not erred in holding the accused-respondents entitled to the benefit of protection under Section 197(2) CrPC. (Para 16) . Rizwan Ahmed Javed Shaikh v. Jammal Patel, (2001) 5 SCC 7: AIR 2001 SC 2198: 2001 Cri LJ 2897.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2001]

[2377] — Ss. 197 and 196 — Sanction for prosecution of police officer accused of causing grievous injuries and death in conducting raid and search — Whether the police officer while acting in purported discharge of official duty exceeded limits of his official capacity — For determination of the question, cognizance of the offence has to be taken — In the circumstances, held, trial need not be stayed for want of sanction for prosecution of the accused officer

The question is while investigating and performing the duties as a police officer was it necessary for the petitioner to conduct himself in such a manner which would result in such consequences. In the facts and circumstances of each case protection of public officers and public servants functioning in discharging of official duties and protection of private citizens have to be balanced by finding out as to what extent and how far is a public servant working in discharge of his duties or purported discharge of his duties, and whether the public servant has exceeded his limit. It is true that S. 196 states that no cognizance can be taken and even after cognizance having been taken if facts come to light that the acts complained of were done in the discharge of the official duties then the trial may have to be stayed unless sanction is obtained. But at the same time, criminal trials should not be stayed in all cases at the preliminary stage because that will cause great damage to the evidence. Therefore, the trial should proceed. If necessary the question of sanction under S. 197 may be agitated after some evidence has been noted by the trial court. Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29: AIR 1988 SC 257.

(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-1987]

Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, (1973) 2 SCC 701: 1973 SCC (Cri) 944, relied on

[2378] — S. 197 — Offence committed by a police officer "on account of any act done in pursuance of any duty imposed or authority conferred on him" — Policemen (appellants) keeping a person in lock-up for more than 24 hours without authority and subjecting to third-degree treatment — Held, such offence neither covered by S. 64(3) of the Act nor by S. 197(1) CrPC — Kerala Police Act, 1960 (5 of 1961), S. 64(3)

Even under Section 197 CrPC no protection has been granted to public servants for the type of acts alleged in the case against the appellants. If a police officer dealing with law and order duty uses force against unruly persons, either in his own defence or in defence of others and exceeds such right it may amount to an offence. But such offence might fall within the amplitude of Section 197 CrPC as well as Section 64(3) of the KP Act. But if a police officer assaults a prisoner inside a lock-up he cannot claim such act to be connected with the discharge of his authority or exercise of his duty unless he establishes that he did such acts in his defence or in defence of others or any property. Similarly, if a police officer wrongfully confines a person in the lock-up beyond a period of 24 hours without the sanction of a Magistrate or an order of a court it would be an offence for which he cannot claim any protection in the normal course, nor can he claim that such act was done in exercise of his official duty. A policeman keeping a person in the lock-up for more than 24 hours without authority is not merely abusing his duty but his act would be quite outside the contours of his duty or authority. (Paras 19 and 21). P.P. Unnikrishnan v. Puttiyottil Alikutty, (2000) 8 SCC 131: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1460: AIR 2000 SC 2952.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-9-2000]

K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195, distinguished

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140: (1955) 2 SCR 925; H.H.B. Gill v. R., AIR 1948 PC 128: 49 Cri LJ 503; Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, (1973) 2 SCC 701: 1973 SCC (Cri) 944, relied on

P.P. Unnikrishnan v. Puttiyottil Alikutty, 1999 Cri LJ 4261 (Ker), affirmed

[2379] — S. 197 — Applicability — Demand of illegal gratification of Rs 10,000 by appellant public servants from a shopkeeper (complainant) — On refusal to pay the same, appellants ransacking his shop and taking away the goods — Threatening him with dire consequences — Held, court below was justified in holding that S. 197 was not applicable in such a case — Appellants not entitled to protection under S. 197 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 395, 447 and 506 (Para 13). S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096: AIR 2004 SC 4174: (2004) 3 KLT 505.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-2004]

[2380] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — When not required — Relatability of offence to official duty necessary — False allotment of premises and false issuance of rent receipts by public servant to various persons to show false possession of tenements — Appellant-accused working with Maharashthon Housing and Area Development Authority (MHADA) allotted premises to various persons under his signature, issued rent receipts so that the said persons could claim that they were in possession of the tenements, though in fact, the tenements, in question, were vacant and were not in possession of MHADA — Appellant charged for offences punishable under Ss. 420, 465, 466, 467, 468 and 471 IPC — Held, the charged offences are not relatable to any official duty — Sanction under S. 197(1), therefore, not needed — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 465, 466, 467, 468 and 471

The allegation against the appellant-accused was that while working with Maharashthon Housing and Area Development Authority (MHADA) the appellant allotted premises to various persons under his signature, issued rent receipts so that the said persons could claim that they were in possession of the tenements, though in fact, the tenements, in question, were vacant and were not in possession of MHADA. According to the prosecution, the appellant committed offences punishable under Sections 420, 465, 466, 467, 468 and 471 IPC.

Before the trial court, the appellant filed an application for discharge in terms of Section 228 CrPC primarily on the ground that sanction under Section 197 CrPC had not been obtained. It was also submitted that proceedings could not have been initiated after his retirement in view of Rule 27 of the Maharashtra Civil Services (Pension) Rules, 1982. The application was dismissed by the trial court. It was noted that the appellant was in government service till 31-8-1989. The complaint was filed on 17-7-1989 which was treated as an FIR and, therefore, Rule 27 of the Pension Rules had no application. As regards the requirement of sanction in terms of Section 197 CrPC it was held that acts done by the accused did not fall within the ambit of official duty and, therefore, question of sanction did not arise.

The High Court by the impugned order dismissed the criminal writ petition filed by the appellant, affirming the view taken by the trial court although it held that on 10-8-1992 when the cognizance was taken, the appellant had ceased to be a public servant and that no sanction under Section 197(1) CrPC is needed in the case of retired government servant.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Though the view of the High Court that no sanction under Section 197(1) CrPC is needed in the case of retired government servant is erroneous, in view of the finding that the charged offences are not relatable to any official duty, the appeal fails and deserves to be dismissed. The High Court, was in error in observing that sanction was not necessary because the expression used in Section 197(1) CrPC to refer to a public servant is "was". But the question is really of academic nature because the alleged offences cannot be related to any official duty. (Paras 13, 8 and 9). Raghunath Anant Govilkar v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 289: 2008 Cri LJ 2054.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-2-2008]

Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432; R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096, relied on

41st Law Commission Report; Black's Law Dictionary, cited

[2381] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of appellant police officer for conducting a search without warrant (though other procedures followed) — Need for — Search of residential premises of R-2 conducted by police team headed by appellant on basis of report received by appellant as to commission of dacoity, in which R-2's son was implicated, with a view to arrest the said son — Alleging that search was motivated and was for purpose of humiliating and harassing R-2 and his son, as no search warrant had been obtained, complaint filed by R-2 — Whereupon, Magistrate taking cognizance of offences under Ss. 342, 389, 469, 471 and 120-B IPC against appellant, without sanction under S. 197 having been obtained — Order of Magistrate upheld by High Court — Sustainability — Held, High Court was not justified in holding that S. 197 was not applicable — It only focussed on absence of search warrant and totally ignored other relevant aspects, which had a determinative role in the issue — Hence order of Magistrate taking cognizance set aside — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 342, 389, 469, 471 and 120-B (Paras 21 and 22). Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432: AIR 2006 SC 820: 2006 Cri LJ 808: (2006) 38 AIC 13 (SC): (2006) 1 KLJ 405: (2006) 2 KLT 26.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-1-2006]

Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29; P. Arulswami v. State of Madras, (1967) 1 SCR 201: AIR 1967 SC 776: 1967 Cri LJ 665; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44; R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096, relied on

[2382] — S. 197 — Whether offence committed by public servant "while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty" — Appellant public servant, appointed as Duty Magistrate and asked by SDM to remove an encroachment, ordering to open fire on the mob at the site when, according to him, situation became out of control and as a result one person died and two other received injuries — Held, appellant gave the order of opening fire in exercise of his official duty

There was a dispute between two sets of Mohammedan residents, one set complaining against the other about the encroachment of the property belonging to the mosque and the appellant as the Circle Inspector, on the basis of a complaint had inquired into the matter and arrived at a finding that the situation at the site was volatile for which order under Section 144 CrPC had been promulgated. Thereafter, the appellant made several requests to the encroachers for removal of the encroachment and ultimately the Sub-Divisional Magistrate appointed the appellant as Duty Magistrate for use of police force to remove the encroachment in question. The appellant visited the encroachment site and was able to remove the encroachment partially and reported the said fact to his senior officer, but next day when the appellant along with armed force, reached the encroachment site, several miscreants armed with weapons, started hurling stones and as the situation became out of control, after giving due warning, the appellant was compelled to give order for opening fire and dispersed the mob. On account of such firing, one of the persons died and two others were injured and the appellant then sent a report to his senior officer about the incident. The son of the deceased, Respondent 2, filed a complaint before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, alleging commission of offence by the appellant under Sections 302, 307, 380, 427, 504, 147, 148, and 149 IPC as well as Section 27 of the Arms Act. The CJM held that Section 197 CrPC was not applicable to the facts of the case and that there was sufficient evidence available to establish that prima facie case under Sections 302, 307, 147, 148, 149 and 380 was made out against the accused and, therefore, he directed issuance of non-bailable warrants against the appellant. The appellant then moved the High Court under Section 482 CrPC praying inter alia that no cognizance could be taken without a sanction of the appropriate Government, as required under Section 197 CrPC as the appellant was discharging his official duty pursuant to an order of the competent authority. The High Court, however, without going into the merits of the matter and being of the opinion that all the questions may be raised at the time of framing of charge, disposed of the application filed by the appellant and hence the present appeal in the Supreme Court. When the present appeal had been listed before the Supreme Court, a judgment of the Court in Birendra K. Singh v. State of Bihar (decided on April 7, 2000) had been placed and it was contended that the question of applicability of Section 197 CrPC can be raised at the stage of framing of charge and, therefore, the impugned order of the High Court does not require any interference by the Supreme Court. Correctness of the aforesaid enumeration of law having appeared to be doubtful, the matter had been referred to the present three-Judge Bench. Two questions arose before the larger Bench for consideration:

(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of (contd.)

1. Assuming the provisions of Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies, at what stage the accused can take such plea? Is it immediately after the cognizance is taken and process is issued or is it only when the court reaches the stage of framing of charge as held by the Supreme Court in Birendra K. Singh case?

2. Whether in the facts and circumstances of the present case, is it possible for the Court to come to a conclusion that the appellant was discharging his official duty and in course of such discharge of duty, ordered for opening of fire to control the mob in consequence of which a person died and two persons were injured and in which event, Section 197 CrPC can be held to be attracted?

Allowing the appeal and quashing the criminal proceedings,

Held :

The appellant had been directed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to be present with police force and remove the encroachment in question and in course of discharge of his duty to control the mob, when he had directed for opening of fire, it must be held that the order of opening of fire was in exercise of the power conferred upon him and the duty imposed upon him under the orders of the Magistrate and in that view of the matter Section 197(1) applies to the facts of the present case. Admittedly, there being no sanction, the cognizance taken by the Magistrate is bad in law and unless the same is quashed qua the appellant, it will be an abuse of the process of Court. (Para 9). Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500: 2001 SCC (Cri) 18: AIR 2000 SC 3187.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2000]

Gauri Shankar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2000) 5 SCC 15: 2000 SCC (Cri) 872, applied

[2383] — S. 197 — Requirement of obtaining sanction for prosecution — Notification in question making S. 197 applicable to serving police officials charged with the maintenance of public order — Applicability of — Expression "public order" — Meaning and scope — Respondent police officer committing offences in question while investigating case under Essential Commodities Act (EC Act) — Held, the said investigation may not be equated with the maintenance of public order as is commonly understood — Activities of a single individual giving rise to irregularities of maintenance of books of accounts as regards an essential commodity or resorting to black marketing, unless a volatile situation arises therefrom, cannot lead to disturbance of public peace, safety and tranquillity, which are essential requisites of "public order" — Therefore, the notification in question had no application in the facts and circumstances of the case — Thus, no sanction was required in terms of S. 197 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 19 and 13(2) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6 (Paras 14 and 15). Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 593: AIR 2006 SC 336: 2005 Cri LJ 5068: (2005) 36 AIC 108 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-2005]

[2384] — S. 197 — Requirement of obtaining sanction to prosecute a public servant — Offences under Ss. 467, 468 and 471 IPC — Held, it is no part of the duty of a public servant while discharging his official duties to commit the said offences — Hence, want of sanction under S. 197, held, is no bar to prosecute a public servant in respect of such offences (Para 22). State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539: AIR 2004 SC 730.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-12-2003]

Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287: (1955) 1 SCR 1177: 1955 Cri LJ 857; Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309: (1955) 1 SCR 1302: 1955 Cri LJ 865; Harihar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1972) 3 SCC 89: 1972 SCC (Cri) 409; State of Kerala v. V. Padmanabhan Nair, (1999) 5 SCC 690: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1031, followed

(1997) 1 Shim LC 188 (HP), reversed

[2385] — S. 197 — Sanction for launching prosecution against public servant accused to have committed offence while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty — Appellant while serving as Commandant of BRTF (GREF) alleged of committing offences under Ss. 166 and 167 IPC — Held, appellant was a public servant who misused his position as a public servant — As the offences under Ss. 166 and 167 IPC have direct nexus with commission of criminal misconduct on the part of the public servant, an order of sanction was pre-requisite before issuing summons upon appellant by Judicial Magistrate in this case, but no such order was passed — Contention that no sanction was required in view of Ss. 125 and 126 of Army Act cannot be accepted since those provisions do not apply in the instant case

As an option to get the appellant tried in an ordinary criminal court had been exercised by the respondent, there cannot be any doubt whatsoever that all the prerequisites therefor in regard to the period of limitation as also the necessity to obtain the order of sanction were required to be complied with. A court of law cannot take cognizance of an offence, if it is barred by limitation. Delay in filing a complaint petition therefore has to be condoned. If the delay is not condoned, the court will have no jurisdiction to take cognizance. Similarly unless it is held that a sanction was not required to be obtained, the court's jurisdiction will be barred. (Para 15). P.K. Choudhury v. Commander, 48 Brtf (Gref), (2008) 13 SCC 229: AIR 2008 SC 1937.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-2008]

S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; Raghunath Anant Govilkar v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 289, relied on

(5) Sanction when necessary

Synopsis

(i)	Need for acts to fall under/ have reasonable connection with "discharge of official duty"	783
(ii)	Need for prima facie case against accused	791

(i) Need for acts to fall under/have reasonable connection with "discharge of official duty"

See also Section 197, '(1) Object and purpose — Nature of bar under', and

'(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of', above, and

'(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all', below

[2386] — S. 197 — Applicability — Deeds and acts attributed to public servant not being part of his official duties — Disentitlement to protection of S. 197 — Held, for applying bar of S. 197, each case has to be considered in its own fact situation in order to arrive at a finding as to whether protection of S. 197 could be given to the public servant — Herein, offences complained of cannot be said to be part of duties of respondent investigating officer while investigating an offence allegedly committed — It was no part of his duties to threaten appellant complainant or her husband to withdraw the complaint — Fact situation in the complaint herein was not such to bring the case within ambit of S. 197 — High Court, therefore, erred in quashing the complaint — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 384/506 (Paras 19, 21 and 22)

In the instant case, appellant's husband suffered grievous injury in a shoot-out for which a case was registered and police investigations started. Subsequently, appellant filed a complaint before CJM alleging therein that Respondent 2 (investigating officer) and the co-accused used to come to the house of the appellant on the pretext of conducting investigation in the aforesaid case and on one day they threatened her husband and wanted him to make a tutored statement and under threat even tried to obtain his signature on a blank paper. Therefore, cognizance was taken by the Magistrate and summons were directed to be issued under Sections 384/506 IPC.

Being aggrieved, Respondent 2 moved the High Court under Sections 397/401 read with Section 482 CrPC for quashing the same. Contention of Respondent 2 before the High Court was that the offence was allegedly committed during course of investigation of the case and, accordingly, such offence, if at all committed, was committed by him while discharging official duties which brought him within protective umbrella of Section 197 CrPC. Accordingly, the High Court quashed the proceedings and the cognizance taken on the basis thereof. Hence, the present appeal.

(5)(i) Sanction when necessary - Need for acts to fall under/have reasonable connection with "discharge of official duty" (contd.)

Allowing the appeal, the Supreme Court decided as above. Choudhury Parveen Sultana v. State of W.B., (2009) 3 SCC 398.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-2009]

Bhagwan Prasad Srivastava v. N.P. Mishra, (1970) 2 SCC 56: 1970 SCC (Cri) 292, followed

Sankaran Moitra v. Sadhna Das, (2006) 4 SCC 584: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 358; Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, (1973) 2 SCC 701: 1973 SCC (Cri) 944; Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193, relied on

[2387] — S. 197 — Bar under S. 197 — Held, is mandatory where the act has been done by the public servant in the course of his service or in the discharge of his duty — Protection under S. 197 not available, if the act complained of is not in connection with the discharge of official duty

There can be no dispute on the point that the bar under Section 197 CrPC is mandatory where the act has been done by the public servant in the course of his service or in the discharge of his duty. But, under the said section, no protection has been granted to the public servant if the act complained of is not in connection with the discharge of his duty or in exercise of his duty. (Paras 7 and 10). Raj Kishor Roy v. Kamleshwar Pandey, (2002) 6 SCC 543: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1423: AIR 2002 SC 2861.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2002]

[2388] — S. 197 — Essential requirements of — Expression "acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty" — Test — There must be a reasonable connection between the act and discharge of official duty — For this purpose allegations in complaint relevant — Counter-affidavit containing alleged defamatory statement filed by the accused, a Govt. officer, only as a defence to the allegations made in the writ petition in connection with transfer of the complainant — Held, accused was acting in discharge of his official duties — It is for the criminal court to decide the question of necessity of sanction — Opinion of sanctioning authority in this regard immaterial — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 500/34 and S. 499 Ninth Exception

The complainant was subordinate to the accused persons. He filed two writ petitions under Art. 226 of the Constitution in connection with his promotion and transfer. The accused persons filed counter-affidavit making certain averments. The complainant filed two complaints before the Chief Judicial Magistrate for offence under Ss. 500/34 IPC alleging that in the said counter-affidavit the accused persons had made defamatory statements. The Chief Judicial Magistrate took cognizance of the offence complained of and issued process and summoned the appellants to face the trial. The appellants filed two petitions under S. 482 CrPC in the High Court for quashing the complaints on the ground that the Chief Judicial Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence in the absence of any sanction under S. 197 CrPC by the Government and also on the ground that they were entitled to the benefit under the Ninth Exception to S. 499 IPC. The High Court dismissed both the petitions.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The counter-affidavit was filed on behalf of the accused-appellants in their defence to the allegations made in the writ petition by the respondent. Therefore whatever imputations that have been made in the counter-affidavit were made certainly while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of the official duties. The imputations which according to the complainant amounts to defamation cannot in any manner be said to be not in connection with the official duty. The appellants made these alleged imputations only by virtue of their office while filing the counter-affidavit.

In order to apply the provisions of S. 197 CrPC two conditions must be fulfilled; one is that the offence mentioned therein must be committed by a public servant and the other is that the public servant employed in connection with the affairs of the Union or a State is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be. The object of the section is to provide guard against vexatious proceedings against judges, magistrates and public servants and to secure the opinion of superior authority whether it is desirable that there should be a prosecution. If on the date of the complaint itself it is incumbent upon the court to take cognizance of such offence only when there is a previous sanction then unless the sanction to prosecute is produced the court cannot take cognizance of the offence. Naturally at that stage, the court taking cognizance has to examine the acts complained of and see whether the provisions of S. 197 CrPC are attracted. If the above two conditions are satisfied then the further enquiry would be whether the alleged offences have been committed by the public servant while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duties. If this requirement also is satisfied then no court shall take cognizance of such offences except with the previous sanction. For this purpose the allegations made in the complaint are very much relevant to appreciate whether the acts complained of are directly concerned or reasonably connected with official duties so that if questioned the public servant could claim to have done these acts by virtue of his office, that is to say, there must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of official duties. It is in this context that the words "purporting to act in discharge of official duties" assume importance. The public servant can only be said to act or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties if his act is such as to lie within the scope of his official duties. Director of Inspection & Audit v. C.L. Subramaniam, 1994 Supp (3) SCC 615: 1995 SCC (Cri) 121: AIR 1995 SC 866.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-1994]

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140; Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, (1973) 2 SCC 701: 1973 SCC (Cri) 944; State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Budhikota Subbarao, (1993) 3 SCC 339: 1993 SCC (Cri) 901, followed

Hori Ram Singh (Dr.) v. Emperor, AIR 1939 FC 43: 40 Cri LJ 468: 43 CWN 50: 1939 FCR 159, approved

[2389] — Ss. 197 and 245 — Requirement under S. 197 to obtain sanction to prosecute a public servant — Invocation of said provision — Conditions for — Existence of reasonable connection between the act in question and the discharge of official duty — Necessity of — Stage at which S. 197 could be invoked — Law relating to in this regard, reiterated — Whether on facts the prosecution of appellant public servant without obtaining sanction under S. 197 in respect thereof was proper — Wife of respondent running a kiosk in hospital premises — Govt. deciding to remove the said kiosk as it was causing inconvenience to public and also causing health hazards by supplying unhygienic food — Said decision of Govt. later held by Supreme Court to be valid — In pursuance of the said Govt. order, appellant removing the said kiosk on direction of Executive Engineer T — Filing of complaint under Ss. 166, 448, 427, 380, 392 and 506(II) IPC against Dean of Medical College — Though appellant was known to complainant personally, his name not appearing in complaint — Appellant made accused when his name taken by T in his statement during investigation — No allegation against appellant either in complaint or in statement of complainant under S. 161 CrPC — No material to show commission of alleged crime by appellant — On these facts, held, no case made out against appellant — Further, even if charge-sheet filed against him was accepted to be correct, sanction under S. 197 CrPC was necessary in the present case — Hence, order of High Court setting aside the order of Magistrate which discharged the appellant, not sustainable

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The wife of Respondent 1 was running a kiosk in a hospital premises. The State Government concerned took a policy decision to remove all kiosks, bunks and tea stalls, etc. from the hospital premises as they were causing inconvenience to the public and were also causing health hazards as food stuffs supplied from the said kiosks, bunks and tea stalls were prepared in unhygienic conditions. In pursuance thereof, a government order was issued for removing all the said kiosks. The Public Works Department issued directions to the Executive Engineer to take steps for the said removal. The wife of Respondent 1 was requested through a letter by the Executive Engineer to remove her tea stall. The Executive Engineer T directed the appellant to remove the said tea stall. Pursuant to the said direction, the appellant requested the Assistant Commissioner of Police to give police protection for the purpose of causing such removal.

A writ petition was filed by the wife of Respondent 1, which was disposed of by the High Court with certain directions. In the meanwhile, however, the said tea stall was removed whereupon a contempt petition was filed against the appellant. The said contempt petition was dismissed. The matter thereupon came before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court decided the said matter on 21-2-1997 by holding that the reasons given by the State for removing the bunks/kiosks were reasonable and acceptable. The act of removal was not in any manner inconsistent with the propositions enunciated in the judgment of the High Court.

Thereafter, a complaint petition was filed by Respondent 1 against the Dean of the Medical College under Sections 166, 448, 427, 380, 392 and 506(II) IPC. The Magistrate sent the complaint petition for inquiry to the police authority whereupon a FIR was lodged. It was during investigation that the name of the appellant was taken by T. In respect of the appellant, T in his statement said only that the appellant had informed him by his letter dated 2-7-1997 that he had removed the stall of the wife of Respondent 1 on 1-7-1997. It was also stated that the appellant had engaged men on his own supervision and removed the shop. On the basis of the said statement, the appellant was made an accused and a charge-sheet was filed against him also. In the said charge-sheet only the allegations made in the complaint petition were repeated. What transpired during investigation had not been disclosed. The Magistrate took cognizance against the appellant herein on the basis of the said purported charge-sheet. The IO had noticed that removal of the tea shop was effected as per an order of a court of law. Validity or otherwise of the action on the part of the appellant was not in question. Thereafter, an application for discharge was filed before the Magistrate by the appellant, inter alia, on the ground that no sanction was obtained as was required mandatorily in terms of Section 197 CrPC. The Magistrate allowed the said application. He observed that the act of the appellant was in compliance with the order of T. The case against him was baseless. He was a government servant, but no permission under Section 197 had been obtained to prosecute him. The revision petition filed by Respondent 1 before the High Court against the said order was allowed. Hence, the present appeal.

(5)(i) Sanction when necessary - Need for acts to fall under/have reasonable connection with "discharge of official duty" (contd.)

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

In Matajog Dobey, (1955) 2 SCR 925 the Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court held that Section 197 CrPC would be attracted if the offence alleged to have been committed (by the accused) must have something to do or must be related in some manner with the discharge of official duty. There must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of official duty; the act must bear such relation to the duty that the accused could lay a reasonable (claim), but not a pretended or fanciful claim, that he did it in the course of the performance of his duty. Whether for prosecution of a public servant sanction is necessary to be obtained or not would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Similarly, whether in view of the allegations made in the complaint an order of sanction would be essential or not would again depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Further, in Romesh Lal Jain, (2006) 1 SCC 294 it was held that the question as to whether sanction is necessary or not, that may be appropriately raised at different stages of the case depending upon the allegations made in the complaint. (Paras 13, 14 and 16)

In the present case, no court has declared the policy decision of removal of kiosks, tea stalls and bunks from the hospital premises to be ultra vires. Further, the validity of such a policy decision has been upheld in N. Jagadeesan, (1997) 4 SCC 508. (Para 10)

If, in the aforementioned situation, the appellant only complied with the order of T asking him to remove the said tea stall, he cannot be said to have committed any offence whatsoever. (Para 11)

The statement of T, on the basis whereof the appellant had been charge-sheeted, even if given face value and taken to be correct in its entirety does not disclose an offence. Respondent 1, in view of the fact that a contempt petition was filed against the appellant, presumably knew him personally. Despite the same, he had not been named in the complaint petition. No allegation had been made against him either in his complaint or in his statement under Section 161 CrPC that he had transgressed his authority or committed the alleged crime. (Para 12)

Hence the impugned order cannot be sustained as:

(i) no case was made out to frame charges against the appellant.

(ii) even if the statement of T on the basis whereof the charge-sheet has been filed against the appellant is accepted to be correct, sanction for prosecution of the appellant, as envisaged under Section 197 CrPC in the facts and circumstances of this case was necessary. The High Court, therefore, was not correct in allowing the revision case filed by Respondent 1. (Paras 18, 13 to 17 and 19). Jayasingh v. K.K. Velayutham, (2006) 9 SCC 414: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 573: AIR 2006 SC 2407: 2006 Cri LJ 3272.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2006]

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140; Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294; Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432; Sankaran Moitra v. Sadhna Das, (2006) 4 SCC 584, relied on [2390] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of public servant — Object — Reasonable connection between discharge of public duty and the offending act or omission essential

Per Kuldip Singh, J.

The sanction under S. 197 CrPC is not an empty formality. It is essential that the provisions therein are to be observed with complete strictness. The object of obtaining sanction is that the authority concerned should be able to consider for itself the material before the Investigating Officer, before it comes to the conclusion that the prosecution in the circumstances be sanctioned or forbidden. To comply with S. 197 it must be proved that the sanction was given in respect of the facts constituting the offence charged. It is desirable that the facts should be referred to on the face of the sanction. Section 197 does not require the sanction to be in any particular form. If the facts constituting the offence charged are not shown on the face of the sanction, it is open to the prosecution, if challenged, to prove before the court that those facts were placed before the sanctioning authority. It should be clear from the form of the sanction that the sanctioning authority considered the relevant material placed before it and after a consideration of all the circumstances of the case it sanctioned the prosecution.

Per K. Ramaswamy, J. (supplementing)

The object behind prior sanction is to prevent malicious, vexatious and unnecessary harassment to a public servant by laying false or frivolous accusation or prosecution.

There must be reasonable connection between the acts complained of and discharge or purported discharge of the official duty. The act or omission must bear such a relation to the duty that the accused could lay reasonable nexus between the offending act or omission and the duty but not a pretended or fanciful claim that he did it in the course of the performance of his duty. Public servant can only be said to act or purported to act in the discharge of his official duty if his act or omission is such as to lie within the scope of his official duty. It is not every offence committed by a public servant that requires sanction for prosecution not even every act done by him while he was actually engaged or purported to have engaged under colour of his official duty that receives protection from prosecution. If questioned he must claim that he had done by virtue of office and it is inextricably connected with the duty. Sanction then would be necessary, irrespective of whether it was in fact a proper discharge of his duty or not which is a matter of defence on merits to be considered at the trial and could not arise at the time of grant of sanction which must precede taking cognizance of the prosecution. State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222: 1992 SCC (Cri) 192: AIR 1991 SC 1260. Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh[1] and K. Ramaswamy[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-1991]

[2391] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — When mandatory — Respondent accused of committing offence under Ss. 7 and 13(2), PC Act while acting or purporting to act in discharge of official duty — Sanction by appointing authority, held, is mandatory — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 19, 7 and 13(2)

An FIR was lodged against the respondent under Sections 7 and 13(2), PC Act. By an order dated 15-12-2002, the competent authority refused to grant sanction for prosecution. The matter, however, was placed before the competent authority once again and on or about 14-9-2004 sanction to prosecute the respondent was granted. The High Court by the impugned order dismissed a writ petition thereagainst, holding that the State has no power to review an order granting sanction having exhausted its jurisdiction once.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The respondent is a public servant. The Governor of the State is his appointing authority. He is, therefore, not removable from his office save by and with the sanction of the Government and in that view of the matter if he is accused in any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in discharging of his official duty, grant of prior sanction is imperative in character in terms of Section 197 CrPC. (Para 5)

Although the State in the matter of grant or refusal to grant sanction exercises statutory jurisdiction under Section 197, the same, however, would not mean that power once exercised cannot be exercised once again. For exercising its jurisdiction at a subsequent stage, express power of review in the State may not be necessary as even such a power is administrative in character. (Para 6)

Validity of an order of sanction would depend upon application of mind on the part of the authority concerned and consideration of all the material facts and evidence collected during investigation and placed before it. While granting sanction, the authority cannot take into consideration an irrelevant fact nor can it pass an order on extraneous consideration not germane for passing a statutory order. While passing an order for grant of sanction, serious application of mind on the part of the authority concerned is imperative. (Paras 7 and 6)

In the present case there is no application to show the necessity for reconsideration or review of the earlier order on the basis of the materials placed before the sanctioning authority or otherwise. Such application of mind does not appear from the order of sanction. The High Court in its judgment has clearly held, upon perusing the entire records, that no fresh material was produced. There is also nothing to show as to why reconsideration became necessary. On what premise such a procedure was adopted is not known. (Paras 21 and 7)

(5)(i) Sanction when necessary - Need for acts to fall under/ have reasonable connection with "discharge of official duty" (contd.)

Only when a new Government came in, was a request made for reconsideration of the earlier order. It is not a case where fresh materials were placed before the sanctioning authority. The Government sent nine letters for obtaining the clarifications regarding false implications of the respondent, which were not replied to. If the clarification sought for by the Hon'ble Minister had been supplied, the same should have formed a ground for reconsideration of the order. Only a communication was received from the Director, Vigilance Bureau, which according to the High Court, was not a new material. (Paras 14 to 20 and 8). State of Punjab v. Mohd. Iqbal Bhatti, (2009) 17 SCC 92: 2010 Cri LJ 1436: (2010) 4 CTC 458: (2009) 4 CHN 65: (2009) 82 AIC 114 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2009]

[2392] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — When necessary — Nexus of acts alleged with discharge of official duty — Need for satisfaction of requirement of, before sanction became necessary — Supply of HIV contaminated blood by blood bank of Government Medical College and Hospital due to which some patients who were given blood transfusion testing HIV positive — Prosecution initiated against doctors and technicians of said Hospital for offences under IPC and the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940 — Entries in registers maintained at blood bank found tampered with and corrections made without any initials to certify those corrections — Some pages from official registers torn by accused doctor i.e. Respondent 7 who carried away those pages with him on his transfer — Recovery of said pages from his house — Sanction if necessary to prosecute said doctors and technicians — Considering the allegations pertaining to offences under IPC, held, the acts alleged had no nexus or connection with the discharge of official duties by accused — Hence, prosecution for the said allegations did not require any sanction under S. 197 CrPC — However, as regards the offences under the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940 pertaining to acts of omission and commission in working of blood bank, the question of sanction for prosecution left open to be decided at the end of the trial — Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940, S. 18(a)(i) r/w Ss. 27, 17-A and 17-C — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 269, 201 and 204 r/w S. 34 (Paras 14 and 16). State of Maharashtra v. Devahari Devasingh Pawar, (2008) 2 SCC 540: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 502: AIR 2008 SC 1375: 2008 Cri LJ 1593.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2008]

[2393] — S. 197 — Where the alleged act viz. entry of the accused inside the premises in question was on the basis of an order passed by CJM and was thus intrinsically connected with the discharge of the official duty, held, S. 197 gets attracted even if the act was in excess of discharge of the official duty — Therefore, sanction under S. 197 was required to be obtained before taking cognizance of the offence complained of. Surendra Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 199.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-2000]

[2394] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of public servant — Conditions precedent for invoking S. 197 — Whether the accused committed an offence while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duty — Test to determine is whether the alleged action which constituted an offence has a reasonable and rational nexus with the official duties required to be discharged by the public servant — If answer is in affirmative then sanction for his prosecution is required to be obtained — Appellant in his official capacity as Sub-Divisional Magistrate going to the place of the complainant for the purpose of removal of encroachment from govt. land and in exercise of such duty he allegedly entering the chamber of the complainant, using filthy language and dragging him out of his chamber — Held, the act alleged had a reasonable nexus with the official duty of the appellant — Hence no criminal proceedings could be initiated against the appellant without obtaining sanction

Section 197 CrPC affords protection to a Judge or a Magistrate or a public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government against any offence which is alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. The protection is provided in the form that no court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Central Government or the State Government as the case may be. The object of the section is to save officials from vexatious proceedings against Judges, Magistrates and public servants but it is no part of the policy to set an official above the common law. If he commits an offence not connected with his official duty he has no privilege. But if one of his official acts is alleged to be an offence, the State will not allow him to be prosecuted without its sanction. Section 197 embodies one of the exceptions to the general rules laid down in Section 190 CrPC, that any offence may be taken cognizance of by the Magistrates enumerated therein. Before this section can be invoked in the case of a public servant two conditions must be satisfied i.e. (1) that the accused was a public servant who was removable from his office only with the sanction of the State Government or the Central Government; and (2) he must be accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. (Para 7)

What offences can be held to have been committed by a public servant while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties is a vexed question. Broadly speaking the alleged action constituting the offence said to have been committed by the public servant must have a reasonable and rational nexus with the official duties required to be discharged by such public servant. (Para 8)

In the present case the appellant was present at the place of occurrence in his official capacity as Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the purpose of removal of encroachment from government land and in exercise of such duty, he is alleged to have committed the acts which form the gravamen of the allegations contained in the complaint lodged by the respondent. In such circumstances, it cannot but be held that the acts complained of by the respondent against the appellant have a reasonable nexus with the official duty of the appellant. It follows, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to the immunity from criminal proceedings without sanction provided under Section 197 CrPC. Therefore, the High Court erred in holding that Section 197 CrPC is not applicable in the case. (Para 14). Gauri Shankar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2000) 5 SCC 15: 2000 SCC (Cri) 872: AIR 2000 SC 3517.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-2000]

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44: (1955) 28 ITR 941; Suresh Kumar Bhikamchand Jain v. Pandey Ajay Bhushan, (1998) 1 SCC 205: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1; State v. B.L. Verma, (1997) 10 SCC 772: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1037; N.K. Ogle v. Sanwaldas, (1999) 3 SCC 284: 1999 SCC (Cri) 405, relied on

[2395] — S. 197 — Object of — Protection given to public servants thereunder — Scope of — Case-law considered — Per C.K. Thakker, J., said protection is qualified and conditional — Protection not available if the act complained of has no nexus, reasonable connection or relevance to the official act or duty of the public servant and is otherwise illegal, unlawful or in the nature of an offence

The primary object of the legislature behind Section 197 CrPC is to protect public officers who have acted in discharge of their duties or purported to act in discharge of such duties. But, it is equally well settled that the act said to have been committed by a public officer must have reasonable connection with the duty sought to be discharged by such public officer. If the act complained of has no nexus, reasonable connection or relevance to the official act or duty of such public servant and is otherwise illegal, unlawful or in the nature of an offence, he cannot get shelter of Section 197 CrPC. In other words, protection afforded by the said section is qualified and conditional. (Para 67). Sankaran Moitra v. Sadhna Das, (2006) 4 SCC 584: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 358: AIR 2006 SC 1599.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J.[1] and C.K. Thakker[2] and P.K. Balasubramanyan[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 24-3-2006]

[2396] — S. 197 — Offence by public servant in discharge of his official duty — Bar under S. 197 regarding court's power to take cognizance — Nature and applicability of — Held, is absolute and complete — Hence, court cannot take cognizance of complaint against public servant in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed in discharge of official duty unless sanction is obtained from the appropriate authority — However, given that it must be determined whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, the concept of S. 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case (Paras 7 and 5). S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096: AIR 2004 SC 4174: (2004) 3 KLT 505.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-2004]

[2397] — S. 197 — Offence by public servant in discharge of his official duty — Bar under S. 197 regarding court's power to take cognizance — Nature and applicability of — Held, is absolute and complete — Hence, court cannot take cognizance of complaint against public servant in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed in discharge of official duty unless sanction is obtained from the appropriate authority — However, given that it must be determined whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, the concept of S. 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case — Word "cognizance" — Meaning of, explained — Use of words "no" and "shall"

Before Section 197 can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. It is not the duty which requires examination so much as the act, because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned. It is the quality of the act which is important and the protection of this section is available if the act falls within the scope and range of his official duty. (Para 6)

(5)(i) Sanction when necessary - Need for acts to fall under/ have reasonable connection with "discharge of official duty" (contd.)

There cannot be any universal rule to determine whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, nor is it possible to lay down any such rule. One safe and sure test in this regard would be to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duty: if the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant. This aspect makes it clear that the concept of Section 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case. (Paras 6 and 13)

The mandatory character of the protection afforded to a public servant is brought out by the expression "no court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction". Use of the words "no" and "shall" make it abundantly clear that the bar on the exercise of power by the court to take cognizance of any offence is absolute and complete. (Para 9)

The protective cover of Section 197 has been widened further by extending protection to even those acts or omissions which are done in purported exercise of official duty; that is under the colour of office. Official duty, therefore, implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in the course of his service and such act or omission must have been performed as part of duty which further must have been official in nature. The section has, thus, to be construed strictly, while determining its applicability to any act or omission in the course of service. Its operation has to be limited to those duties which are discharged in the course of duty. For instance a public servant is not entitled to indulge in criminal activities. To that extent the section has to be construed narrowly and in a restricted manner. (Para 12). Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432: AIR 2006 SC 820: 2006 Cri LJ 808: (2006) 38 AIC 13 (SC): (2006) 1 KLJ 405: (2006) 2 KLT 26.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-1-2006]

Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29: AIR 1988 SC 257; P. Arulswami v. State of Madras, (1967) 1 SCR 201: AIR 1967 SC 776: 1967 Cri LJ 665; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44; R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128: AIR 1996 SC 901; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096, relied on

Black's Law Dictionary, referred to

[2398] — S. 197 — Offences under S. 409 IPC (criminal breach of trust by a public servant, etc.) and S. 468 IPC (forgery for the purpose of cheating) — Sanction for prosecution, held, not required as these offences are not committed in the discharge of official duty — Respondent charged with commission of offences under Ss. 409, 420, 461 and 468 IPC but convicted by trial court for the offences under Ss. 409 and 468 only — Appellate court discharging respondent inter alia on the ground that sanction for prosecution was not granted by competent authority — High Court affirming the order — Held, sanction was not required in the present case — High Court's order set aside and appeal of the State directed to be heard on merits — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 409 and 468 (Paras 6 and 9). State of U.P. v. Paras Nath Singh, (2009) 6 SCC 372.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, D.K. Jain and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44; S.A. Venkataraman v. State, AIR 1958 SC 107; C.R. Bansi v. State of Maharashtra, (1970) 3 SCC 537: 1971 SCC (Cri) 143; Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 287: (1955) 1 SCR 1177; Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 309; Harihar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1972) 3 SCC 89: 1972 SCC (Cri) 409; State of Kerala v. V. Padmanabhan Nair, (1999) 5 SCC 690: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1031; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539, applied

[2399] — S. 197 — What acts can be alleged to have been committed by a public servant while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties — Alleged action constituting the offence alleged to have been committed by the public servant must have a reasonable and rational nexus with the official duties required to be discharged by such public servant. Mohd. Hadi Raja v. State of Bihar, (1998) 5 SCC 91: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1265: AIR 1998 SC 1945: 1998 Cri LJ 2826.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1998]

(ii) Need for prima facie case against accused

[2400] — Ss. 197, 170 and 173(2) — Investigating agency (CBI) not obliged to place materials collected during investigation for opinion of sanctioning authority when no prima facie case is made out against the accused — Court can direct further investigation if it is found that the opinion of the IO is not based on full and complete investigation — However, on facts, opinion expressed by the CBI that no prima facie case was made out against the accused is just and proper — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — Ss. 6 and 5(2) r/w S. 5(1)(e)

From a plain reading of Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 it is evidently clear that a court cannot take cognizance of the offences mentioned therein without sanction of the appropriate authority. In enacting the above section, the legislature thought of providing a reasonable protection to public servants in the discharge of their official functions so that they may perform their duties and obligations undeterred by vexatious and unnecessary prosecutions. The CBI was under no obligation to place the materials collected during investigation before the sanctioning authority, when they found that no case was made out against the respondent. To put it differently, if the CBI had found on investigation that a prima facie case was made out against the respondent to place him on trial and accordingly prepared a charge-sheet (challan) against him, then only the question of obtaining sanction of the authority under Section 6(1) of the Act would have arisen for without that the Court would not be competent to take cognizance of the charge-sheet. It must, therefore, be said that both the Special Judge and the High Court were patently wrong in observing that the CBI was required to obtain sanction from the prosecuting authority before approaching the Court for accepting the report under Section 173(2) CrPC for discharge of the respondent.

As regards the direction for further investigation, it is, of course, true that the Special Judge has power to so direct if he finds, on consideration of the police report, that the opinion formed by the Investigating Officer seeking discharge of the respondent is not based on full and complete investigation, however, in issuing the above direction, the Special Judge has not given any reason whatsoever which prompted him to direct further investigation nor does it appear that he has gone through the police report and its accompaniments.

In the instant case a thorough investigation has been made and the opinion expressed by the CBI that no prima facie case was made out against the respondent is just and proper. State v. Raj Kumar Jain, (1998) 6 SCC 551: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1485: AIR 1998 SC 2985.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-1998]

Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117: (1967) 3 SCR 668, relied on

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all

See also Section 197, '(1) Object and purpose — Nature of bar under', and

'(4) "Discharge of official duty"/"Colour of duty" — What is and Determination of', and

'(5) Sanction when necessary', above

[2401] — S. 197 — Applicability — Protection given to public servants under — Object of, restated — Invocation of the said protection — Prerequisite for — Stage at which attracted — Preliminary enquiry by court as to applicability of S. 197 — Held, protection is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act — Therefore the concept of S. 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case — Test to determine the reasonable connection between the act complained of and the official duty, restated — Even if the public servant acted in excess of his duty, if there exists the said reasonable connection, held, the excess will not deprive him of the protection

So far as public servants are concerned, the cognizance of any offence, by any court, is barred by Section 197 CrPC unless sanction is obtained from the appropriate authority, if the offence, alleged to have been committed, was in discharge of the official duty. The section not only specifies the persons to whom the protection is afforded but it also specifies the conditions and circumstances in which it shall be available and the effect in law if the conditions are satisfied. The mandatory character of the protection afforded to a public servant is brought out by the expression "no court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction". Use of the words "no" and "shall" make it abundantly clear that the bar on the exercise of power by the court to take cognizance of any offence is absolute and complete. The very cognizance is barred. That is, the complaint cannot be taken notice of. The word "cognizance" means "jurisdiction" or "the exercise of jurisdiction" or "power to try and determine causes". In common parlance, it means "taking notice of". A court, therefore, is precluded from entertaining a complaint or taking notice of it or exercising jurisdiction if it is in respect of a public servant who is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed during discharge of his official duty. (Paras 7 and 5)

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all (contd.)

The protection given under Section 197 is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings for offences alleged to have been committed by them while they are acting or purporting to act as public servants. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause, and if sanction is granted, to confer on the Government, if they choose to exercise it, complete control of the prosecution. (Para 5)

The said protection has certain limits and is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act. If in doing his official duty, he acted in excess of his duty, but there is a reasonable connection between the act and the performance of the official duty, the excess will not be a sufficient ground to deprive the public servant of the protection. The question is not as to the nature of the offence such as whether the alleged offence contained an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official capacity. (Para 5)

Before Section 197 can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. It is not the duty which requires examination so much as the act, because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned. It is the quality of the act which is important and the protection of this section is available if the act falls within the scope and range of his official duty. (Para 5)

There cannot be any universal rule to determine whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, nor is it possible to lay down any such rule. One safe and sure test in this regard would be to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duty. If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant. This aspect makes it clear that the concept of Section 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case. (Para 5). S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096: AIR 2004 SC 4174: (2004) 3 KLT 505.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-2004]

Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29; P. Arulswami v. State of Madras, AIR 1967 SC 776: 1967 Cri LJ 665, relied on

[2402] — S. 197 — Applicability — Protection given to public servants under — Object of, restated — Invocation of the said protection — Prerequisite for — Stage at which attracted — Preliminary enquiry by court as to applicability of S. 197 — Held, protection is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act — Therefore the concept of S. 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case — Test to determine the reasonable connection between the act complained of and the official duty, restated — Even if the public servant acted in excess of his duty, if there exists the said reasonable connection, held, the excess will not deprive him of the protection

The protection given under Section 197 is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings for offences alleged to have been committed by them while they are acting or purporting to act as public servants. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause, and if sanction is granted, to confer on the Government, if it chooses to exercise it, complete control of the prosecution. (Para 6)

The said protection has certain limits and is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act. If in doing his official duty, he acted in excess of his duty, but there is a reasonable connection between the act and the performance of the official duty, the excess will not be a sufficient ground to deprive the public servant from the protection. The question is not as to the nature of the offence such as whether the alleged offence contained an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official capacity. (Para 6)

Before Section 197 can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. It is not the duty which requires examination so much as the act, because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned. It is the quality of the act which is important and the protection of this section is available if the act falls within the scope and range of his official duty. (Para 6)

There cannot be any universal rule to determine whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, nor is it possible to lay down any such rule. One safe and sure test in this regard would be to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duty: if the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant. This aspect makes it clear that the concept of Section 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case. (Paras 6 and 13). Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432: AIR 2006 SC 820: 2006 Cri LJ 808: (2006) 38 AIC 13 (SC): (2006) 1 KLJ 405: (2006) 2 KLT 26.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-1-2006]

Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29: AIR 1988 SC 257; P. Arulswami v. State of Madras, (1967) 1 SCR 201: AIR 1967 SC 776: 1967 Cri LJ 665; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44; R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128: AIR 1996 SC 901; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096, relied on

Followed in Goondla Venkateswarlu v. State of A.P., (2008) 9 SCC 613*

[2403] — S. 197 — Applicability — Scope of protection under — Invocation of protection under — Prerequisite for — Stage at which attracted — Preliminary enquiry by court as to applicability of S. 197 — Held, said protection is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act — Therefore the concept of S. 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case — Test to determine the reasonable connection between the act complained of and the official duty, restated

The protection given under Section 197 is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings for offences alleged to have been committed by them while they are acting or purporting to act as public servants. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause, and if sanction is granted, to confer on the Government, if they choose to exercise it, complete control of the prosecution. (Para 9)

The protection under Section 197 has certain limits and is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act. Use of the expression "official duty" implies that the act or omission must have been done by the public servant in the course of his service and that it should have been in discharge of his duty. The section does not extend its protective cover to every act or omission done by a public servant in service but restricts its scope of operation to only those acts or omissions which are done by a public servant in discharge of official duty. If on facts, therefore, it is prima facie found that the act or omission for which the accused was charged had reasonable connection with discharge of his duty then it must be held to be official to which applicability of Section 197 CrPC cannot be disputed. (Paras 9 to 11)

If in doing his official duty, he acted in excess of his duty, but there is a reasonable connection between the act and the performance of the official duty, the excess will not be a sufficient ground to deprive the public servant from the protection. The question is not as to the nature of the offence such as whether the alleged offence contained an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official capacity. Before Section 197 CrPC can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. (Para 9)

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all (contd.)

It is not the duty which requires examination so much as the act, because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned. It is the quality of the act which is important and the protection of this section is available if the act falls within the scope and range of his official duty. There cannot be any universal rule to determine whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, nor is it possible to lay down any such rule. One safe and sure test in this regard would be to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duty. If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant. This aspect makes it clear that the concept of Section 197 CrPC does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case. (Para 9). Centre for Public Interest Litigation v. Union of India, (2005) 8 SCC 202: AIR 2005 SC 4413.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Ruma Pal, Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-10-2005]

R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096, followed

[2404] — S. 197 — Applicability — Preliminary enquiry as to reasonable connection — Test for sanction for prosecution restated — District Collector, by an order accompanying the Revenue Collection Certificate, requiring the Tehsildar to recover a certain sum of lease money from S — Tehsildar registering the matter and getting a demand letter issued and served on S but S not making payment — Subsequently, S appearing in the Tehsil Office with his scooter — Tehsildar seizing the scooter and getting the same auctioned — Such an act on the part of Tehsildar, held, was a bona fide act in purported exercise of the power under M.P. Land Revenue Code — Hence, in absence of necessary sanction under S. 197 CrPC, complaint under S. 379, Penal Code filed by S against the Tehsildar on account of seizure of the scooter, held, not maintainable — Further held, High Court erred in examining the legality of the order of attachment of the Collector at this stage and in holding otherwise on that ground — Penal Code, 1860, S. 379 — M.P. Land Revenue Code, 1959 (20 of 1959)

Before coming to a conclusion whether the provisions of Section 197 of CrPC will apply, the court must come to a conclusion that there is a reasonable connection between the act complained of and the discharge of official duty; the act must bear such relation to the duty that the accused could lay a reasonable claim that he did it in the course of the performance of his duty. Therefore, in the present case the conclusion is inescapable that the act of the Tehsildar in seizing the scooter of the respondent was in discharge of his official duty which he was required to do in purported exercise of the power under the M.P. Land Revenue Code on the basis of the order issued by the Collector for getting the lease money from the respondent and the said act cannot be said to be a pretended or fanciful claim on the part of the Tehsildar. The High Court committed error at that stage in examining the flaw or legality of the order of attachment issued by the Tehsildar. Therefore, the acts complained of by the respondent in his complaint under Section 379, IPC against the Tehsildar cannot be taken cognizance of by any court without prior sanction of the competent authority under Section 197 CrPC. Admittedly there was no such sanction of the competent authority. N.K. Ogle v. Sanwaldas, (1999) 3 SCC 284: 1999 SCC (Cri) 405: AIR 1999 SC 1437: 1999 Cri LJ 2105.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-1999]

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44: (1955) 2 SCR 925: (1955) 28 ITR 941; Suresh Kumar Bhikamchand Jain v. Pandey Ajay Bhushan, (1998) 1 SCC 205: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1, followed

B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; B.S. Sambhu v. T.S. Krishnaswamy, (1983) 1 SCC 11: 1983 SCC (Cri) 125; Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, (1973) 2 SCC 701: 1973 SCC (Cri) 944, distinguished

[2405] — S. 197 — Issue of sanction — Adjudication of — Appropriate time/stage of proceedings — The issue of sanction, held, can be decided at any stage of the proceedings

The Revisional Court was not justified in entering into correctness or otherwise of the evidence at the stage of issuance of summons to Respondent 2. In spite of the above material, the Revisional Court interfered with the order of the trial court issuing summons by entering into merits of the case. Admittedly, the Judicial Magistrate had considered a limited question whether on the basis of evidence of prosecution witnesses PWs 2, 14 and 11, prima facie offence had been made out against Respondent 2. He, on the basis of such evidence, was satisfied that the case was required to be gone into and issued a summons. However, the Revisional Court held that at the most there was negligence on the part of Respondent 2 but there was no criminal intent and that he cannot be held criminally liable. Mens rea can only be decided at the time of trial and not at the stage of issuing summons. Moreover, a point as to need or necessity of sanction under Section 197 CrPC can be taken during the conduct of trial or at any stage of the proceedings. Hence, proceedings could not have been quashed on the ground of want of sanction in the present case. The order of the Revisional Court deserves to be set aside even on that ground. It is settled law that offences punishable under Sections 409, 420, 467, 468, 471, etc. can by no stretch of imagination by their very nature be regarded as having been committed by a public servant while "acting or purporting to act in discharge of official duty". (Paras 57, 58, 60 and 61). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[2406] — S. 197 — Need for sanction under — Question relating to — Determination of — Stage for — Held, said question is not necessarily to be considered as soon as the complaint is lodged and on the allegations contained therein — That question may arise at any stage of the proceeding — It may have to be determined from stage to stage — In cases where offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act are concerned, the effect of S. 197 dealing with the question of prejudice is also to be noted — Charge-sheet submitted against appellant public servants in respect of various offences under IPC and Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — Held, there was no infirmity in the judgment of the High Court declining to consider the applicability of S. 197 at the stage of taking cognizance — Accused can raise the said question at an appropriate stage during trial — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(2) r/w S. 5(1)(d) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(d) and 19 (Paras 15 and 16). K. Kalimuthu v. State, (2005) 4 SCC 512: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1291: AIR 2005 SC 2257: 2005 Cri LJ 2190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-3-2005]

[2407] — S. 197 — No prosecution of public servant except with previous sanction — Protection given to public servants under S. 197 — Object of, restated — Invocation of the said protection — Prerequisite for — Held, protection is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act — Test to determine the reasonable connection between the act complained of and the official duty, restated — Even if the public servant acted in excess of his duty, if there exists the said reasonable connection, held, the excess will not deprive him of the protection

The protection given under Section 197 is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings for offences alleged to have been committed by them while they are acting or purporting to act as public servants. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause, and if sanction is granted, to confer on the Government, if they choose to exercise it, complete control of the prosecution. (Para 8)

The said protection has certain limits and is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act. If in doing his official duty, he acted in excess of his duty, but there is a reasonable connection between the act and the performance of the official duty, the excess will not be a sufficient ground to deprive the public servant of the protection. The question is not as to the nature of the offence such as whether the alleged offence contained an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official capacity. Before Section 197 can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. It is not the duty which requires examination so much as the act, because the official act can be performed both in the discharge of the official duty as well as in dereliction of it. The act must fall within the scope and range of the official duties of the public servant concerned. It is the quality of the act which is important and the protection of this section is available if the act falls within the scope and range of his official duty. There cannot be any universal rule to determine whether there is a reasonable connection between the act done and the official duty, nor is it possible to lay down any such rule. One safe and sure test in this regard would be to consider if the omission or neglect on the part of the public servant to commit the act complained of could have made him answerable for a charge of dereliction of his official duty; if the answer to this question is in the affirmative, it may be said that such act was committed by the public servant while acting in the discharge of his official duty and there was every connection with the act complained of and the official duty of the public servant. (Para 8). State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539: AIR 2004 SC 730.

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-12-2003]

Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29; P. Arulswami v. State of Madras, AIR 1967 SC 776: 1967 Cri LJ 665, relied on

[2408] — S. 197 — Protection given to public servants under S. 197 — Object of — Invocation of the said protection — Prerequisite for — Stage at which attracted — Preliminary enquiry by court as to applicability of S. 197 — Held, protection is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act — Therefore the concept of S. 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case — Test to determine the reasonable connection between the act complained of and the official duty, restated — Even if the public servant acted in excess of his duty, if there exists the said reasonable connection, held, the excess will not deprive him of the protection

So far as public servants are concerned, the cognizance of any offence, by any court, is barred by Section 197 CrPC unless sanction is obtained from the appropriate authority, if the offence, alleged to have been committed, was in discharge of the official duty. The section not only specifies the persons to whom the protection is afforded but it also specifies the conditions and circumstances in which it shall be available and the effect in law if the conditions are satisfied. The mandatory character of the protection afforded to a public servant is brought out by the expression, "no court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction". Use of the words, "no" and "shall" make it abundantly clear that the bar on the exercise of power by the court to take cognizance of any offence is absolute and complete. The very cognizance is barred. That is, the complaint cannot be taken notice of. The word "cognizance" means "jurisdiction" or "the exercise of jurisdiction" or "power to try and determine causes". In common parlance it means taking notice of. A court, therefore, is precluded from entertaining a complaint or taking notice of it or exercising jurisdiction if it is in respect of a public servant who is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed during discharge of his official duty. (Paras 9 and 7)

The protection given under Section 197 is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings for offences alleged to have been committed by them while they are acting or purporting to act as public servants. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause, and if sanction is granted, to confer on the Government, if they choose to exercise it, complete control of the prosecution. (Para 7)

The said protection has certain limits and is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act. If in doing his official duty, he acted in excess of his duty, but there is a reasonable connection between the act and the performance of the official duty, the excess will not be a sufficient ground to deprive the public servant of the protection. The question is not as to the nature of the offence such as whether the alleged offence contained an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official capacity. Before Section 197 can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. (Para 7). State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104: AIR 2004 SC 2179: 2004 Cri LJ 2011.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-3-2004]

[2409] — S. 197 — Protection given to public servants under S. 197 — Object of — Invocation of the said protection — Prerequisite for — Stage at which attracted — Preliminary enquiry by court as to applicability of S. 197 — Held, protection is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act — Therefore the concept of S. 197 does not get immediately attracted on institution of the complaint case — Test to determine the reasonable connection between the act complained of and the official duty, restated — Even if the public servant acts in excess of his duty, if there exists the said reasonable connection, held, the excess will not deprive him of the protection

The protection given under Section 197 CrPC is to protect responsible public servants against the institution of possibly vexatious criminal proceedings for offences alleged to have been committed by them while they are acting or purporting to act as public servants. The policy of the legislature is to afford adequate protection to public servants to ensure that they are not prosecuted for anything done by them in the discharge of their official duties without reasonable cause, and if sanction is granted, to confer on the Government, if they choose to exercise it, complete control of the prosecution. (Para 7)

The said protection under Section 197 CrPC has certain limits and is available only when the alleged act done by the public servant is reasonably connected with the discharge of his official duty and is not merely a cloak for doing the objectionable act. If in doing his official duty, he acted in excess of his duty, but there is a reasonable connection between the act and the performance of the official duty, the excess will not be a sufficient ground to deprive the public servant of the protection. The question is not as to the nature of the offence such as whether the alleged offence contained an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official capacity. Before Section 197 CrPC can be invoked, it must be shown that the official concerned was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duties. (Para 7). K. Kalimuthu v. State, (2005) 4 SCC 512: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1291: AIR 2005 SC 2257: 2005 Cri LJ 2190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-3-2005]

[2410] — S. 197 — Question as to sanction for prosecution — Stage(s) at which may be determined — Determination of said question at trial or after trial — Permissibility (Para 16). State of Maharashtra v. Devahari Devasingh Pawar, (2008) 2 SCC 540: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 502: AIR 2008 SC 1375: 2008 Cri LJ 1593.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2008]

Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 593, applied

Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500: 2001 SCC (Cri) 18, distinguished on facts

[2411] — S. 197 — Question of requirement of sanction for prosecution can be raised at any time after cognizance of the offence is taken, may be even at the time of conclusion of trial or after conviction

It is well settled that question of sanction under Section 197 of the Code can be raised any time after the cognizance; maybe immediately after cognizance or framing of charge or even at the time of conclusion of trial and after conviction as well. But there may be certain cases where it may not be possible to decide the question effectively without giving opportunity to the defence to establish that what he did was in discharge of official duty. In order to come to the conclusion whether claim of the accused that the act that he did was in course of the performance of his duty was a reasonable one and neither pretended nor fanciful, can be examined during the course of trial by giving opportunity to the defence to establish it. In such an eventuality, the question of sanction should be left open to be decided in the main judgment which may be delivered upon conclusion of the trial. (Para 15). P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234: AIR 2001 SC 2547.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, S.N. Phukan and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-7-2001]

[2412] — S. 197 — Question relating to sanction under — Stage(s) at which to be considered — Held, said question is not necessarily to be considered as soon as the complaint is lodged — This question may arise at any stage of the proceeding, and question whether sanction is necessary or not may have to be determined from stage to stage

The question relating to the need of sanction under Section 197 CrPC is not necessarily to be considered as soon as the complaint is lodged and on the allegations contained therein. This question may arise at any stage of the proceeding. The question whether sanction is necessary or not may have to be determined from stage to stage. (Para 38). Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193: AIR 2007 SC 1274: (2007) 51 AIC 623 (SC).

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/ raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096; K. Kalimuthu v. State, (2005) 4 SCC 512: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1291; Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432; P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234, relied on

[2413] — S. 197 — Requirement under, of obtaining sanction to prosecute a public servant — Necessity of — Stage for raising question as to applicability of S. 197 — Held (per majority), prosecution hit by provision under S. 197 cannot be launched without the contemplated sanction — It is a condition precedent though the question as to applicability of S. 197 may arise not necessarily at the inception but even at a subsequent stage — Request to postpone the decision on the said question in the instant case, held, not acceptable — Complaint that deceased, a supporter of a political party, was beaten to death by police personnel at the instance of appellant police officer near a polling booth on election day — Appellant was on duty to prevent any breach of law and maintain order on that day — He had reached the spot on receiving information regarding some disturbances at the polling booth — Held, appellant committed the act in question during the course of performance of his duty — Sanction under S. 197(1) was necessary for his prosecution — High Court's judgment taking contrary view set aside — High Court's reasoning that killing of a person by use of excessive force could never be performance of duty, not proper — Its further reasoning that if High Court were to interfere on the ground of want of sanction, people will lose faith in the judicial process, is also not acceptable — Per C.K. Thakker, J. (dissenting), on applicability of S. 197 it is the duty of the Court to apply its mind to the fact situation before it — In the present case the appellant acted illegally, unlawfully and high-handedly and his act could not be said to be an act in discharge of official duty — Therefore, S. 197 not attracted

A criminal complaint was filed against the appellant police officer. The appellant challenged the said complaint on the ground that it was liable to be quashed for want of sanction under Section 197(1) CrPC. In the complaint it was alleged that the husband of the complainant was beaten to death on 10-5-2001 by the police personnel at the instance of the appellant. On the said date there was general election of the State Assembly. The complainant's husband was supporting a particular political party. It was the case of the complainant that her husband was supplying food packets at the polling booth. At that time, some police officers came there and they beat her husband. When her husband left the place, policemen chased him towards the lakeside. Her husband stated to the police personnel that he did not know swimming and requested them not to beat him. But the police officers did not pay any heed to the request and continued beating. The husband of the complainant fell down and became unconscious. He was taken to the hospital but was declared dead there. The complainant informed the Deputy Commissioner of Police on 11-5-2001 that her husband was beaten to death by the police and demanded "stern punishment" to persons responsible for killing him. On the next day i.e. on 12-5-2001, the Deputy Commissioner of Police registered a case for an offence punishable under Section 304 IPC. For a long period no action was taken on the basis of the complaint made by the complainant. The complainant therefore filed a private complaint on 28-5-2001 in the Court of CJM against the appellant and two other police officers for offences punishable under Sections 302, 201, 109 and 120-B IPC. The Magistrate took cognizance of the offences. On 16-6-2001 the Magistrate issued non-bailable warrants against the accused persons including the appellant. Meanwhile, on 30-6-2001, the accused preferred an application under Section 210 CrPC before the Magistrate stating therein that a complaint was filed by the complainant on 12-5-2001 which had been registered as PS Case No. 112 of 2001 for an offence punishable under Section 304 IPC by the police station concerned and proceedings were initiated. It was also stated that thereafter fax message was sent to the Joint Commissioner of Police to investigate the case under Section 302 which was treated as FIR. It was, therefore, prayed that the complaint dated 28-5-2001 may be stayed in view of the provisions under Section 210 CrPC.

Thereafter, the accused filed a petition under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court for quashing of proceedings. It was contended that the alleged offence had been committed by the accused "while acting or purporting to act" in the discharge of their official duties and no cognizance could be taken by the Court except with the previous sanction of the State Government. It was argued that since no such sanction was obtained before filing the complaint, the complaint was not maintainable at law and was liable to be dismissed only on that ground. The High Court, by the impugned order, dismissed the petition observing that it was a case of "merciless beating" by a police officer causing death of a person which could not be said to be an act in the discharge of official duty. Thus, the High Court observed that the instant case could not be said to be a case covered by Section 197 CrPC.

Allowing the appeal by a majority of 2:1,

Held :

Per P.K. Balasubramanyan, J. (for Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J., and himself)

The complainant argued that want of sanction under Section 197(1) CrPC did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to proceed, but it was only one of the defences available to the accused and the accused can raise the defence at the appropriate time. This submission cannot be accepted. Section 197(1), its opening words and the object sought to be achieved by it, and the decisions of the Supreme Court, clearly indicate that a prosecution hit by that provision cannot be launched without the contemplated sanction. It is a condition precedent, as it were, for a successful prosecution of a public servant when the provision is attracted, though the question may arise necessarily not at the inception, but even at a subsequent stage. One cannot therefore accede to the request to postpone a decision on this question. Postponing a decision on the applicability or otherwise of Section 197(1) CrPC can only lead to the proceedings being dragged on in the trial court and a decision by the Supreme Court, here and now, would be more appropriate in the circumstances of the case especially when the accused involved are police personnel and the nature of the complaint made is kept in mind. (Paras 22 and 11)

Coming to the facts of this case, the question is whether the appellant was acting in his official capacity while the alleged offence was committed or was performing a duty in his capacity as a police officer which led to the offence complained of. That it was the day of election to the State Assembly; that the appellant was in uniform; that the appellant travelled in an official jeep to the spot, near a polling booth and the offence was committed while he was on the spot, may not by themselves attract Section 197(1) CrPC. But, as can be seen from the facts disclosed in the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the State based on the entries in the general diary of the police station concerned, it emerges that on the election day information was received in the police station at 1400 hours of some disturbance at a polling booth, that it took a violent turn and clashes between the supporters of two political parties were imminent. It was then that the appellant reached the site of the incident in his official vehicle. It is seen that a case had been registered on the basis of the incidents that took place and a report in this behalf had also been sent to the superiors by the Station House Officer. It is also seen and it is supported by the witnesses examined by the Chief Judicial Magistrate while taking cognizance of the offence that the appellant on reaching the spot had a discussion with the officer-in-charge who was stationed at the spot and thereafter a lathi-charge took place or there was an attack on the husband of the complainant and he met with his death. Obviously, it was part of the duty of the appellant to prevent any breach of law and maintain order on the polling day or to prevent the blocking of voters or prevent what has come to be known as booth capturing. It therefore emerges that the act was done while the officer was performing his duty. That the incident took place near a polling booth on an election day has also to be taken note of. The complainant no doubt has a case that it was a case of the deceased being picked and chosen for ill-treatment and he was beaten up by a police constable at the instance of the appellant and the officer in charge of the police station and at their behest. If that complaint were true it will certainly make the action an offence, leading to further consequences. It is also true as pointed out by the complainant that the entries in the general diary remain to be proved. But still, it would be an offence committed during the course of the performance of his duty by the appellant and it would attract Section 197 CrPC. (Para 23)

The High Court has stated that killing of a person by use of excessive force could never be performance of duty. It may be correct so far as it goes. But the question is whether that act was done in the performance of duty or in purported performance of duty. If it was done in performance of duty or purported performance of duty, Section 197(1) CrPC cannot be bypassed by reasoning that killing a man could never be done in an official capacity and consequently Section 197(1) could not be attracted. Such a reasoning would be against the ratio of the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court. The other reason given by the High Court that if the High Court were to interfere on the ground of want of sanction, people will lose faith in the judicial process, cannot also be a ground to dispense with a statutory requirement or protection. Public trust in the institution can be maintained by entertaining causes coming within its jurisdiction, by performing the duties entrusted to it diligently, in accordance with law and the established procedure and without delay. Dispensing with of jurisdictional or statutory requirements which may ultimately affect the adjudication itself, will itself result in people losing faith in the system. So, the reason in that behalf given by the High Court cannot be sufficient to enable it to get over the jurisdictional requirement of a sanction under Section 197(1) CrPC. (Para 25)

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all (contd.)

Thus, the High Court was in error in holding that sanction under Section 197(1) CrPC was not needed in this case. It is held that such sanction was necessary and for want of sanction the prosecution must be quashed at this stage. (Para 25)

Per C.K. Thakker, J. (dissenting)

The primary object of the legislature behind Section 197 CrPC is to protect public officers who have acted in discharge of their duties or purported to act in discharge of such duties. But, it is equally well settled that the act said to have been committed by a public officer must have reasonable connection with the duty sought to be discharged by such public officer. If the act complained of has no nexus, reasonable connection or relevance to the official act or duty of such public servant and is otherwise illegal, unlawful or in the nature of an offence, he cannot get shelter of Section 197 CrPC. In other words, protection afforded by the said section is qualified and conditional. (Para 67)

When the question comes up for consideration before a court of law as to the applicability or otherwise of Section 197 CrPC, it is not only the power but the duty of the court to apply its mind to the fact situation before it. It should ensure that on the one hand, the public servant is protected if the case is covered by Section 197 CrPC and on the other hand, appropriate action would be allowed to be taken if the provision is not attracted and under the guise of his position as public servant he is trying to take undue advantage. (Para 67)

In the instant case, from the material which has been placed on record, it is amply clear that the appellant and other police officers had acted illegally, unlawfully and high-handedly. In the complaint, it was stated by the widow of deceased that the accused chased her husband and assaulted him by causing several injuries which resulted in his death. That apart, the eyewitnesses stated that the deceased was assaulted and beaten by the accused police officers. The deceased had not indulged in any illegal activity. He had not done any unlawful act. He had no weapon with him. He was distributing food packets at the polling booth of a particular political party. (Para 70)

The High Court was wholly justified in observing that "it was a merciless beating by a police officer" causing death of a person which could not be said to be an act in discharge of official duty. The High Court was also right in stating that the post-mortem report clearly indicated the nature and extent of injuries on the victim. Other witnesses had given vivid description of the offence committed by the accused persons. The said finding, which is supported by material on record, cannot be said to be based on "no evidence" or otherwise perverse, nor can it be concluded that an error of law has been committed by the High Court which requires to be corrected by the Supreme Court in exercise of discretionary jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution. Hence, no interference is called for against the order of the High Court. (Para 74). Sankaran Moitra v. Sadhna Das, (2006) 4 SCC 584: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 358: AIR 2006 SC 1599.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J.[1] and C.K. Thakker[2] and P.K. Balasubramanyan[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 24-3-2006]

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140; Rizwan Ahmed Javed Shaikh v. Jammal Patel, (2001) 5 SCC 7, applied

Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, (1955) 1 SCR 1177: AIR 1955 SC 287: 1955 Cri LJ 857; Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, (1955) 1 SCR 1302: AIR 1955 SC 309: 1955 Cri LJ 865; Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, (1973) 2 SCC 701: 1973 SCC (Cri) 944; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, (1987) 4 SCC 663: 1988 SCC (Cri) 29; Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432, relied on

Sankaran Moitra v. Sadhana Das, (2003) 4 Cal HN 82, reversed

[2414] — S. 197 — Necessity of previous sanction of Central Government, has to be decided by trial Court from stage to stage on the basis of materials available at a particular stage — Question whether offence committed 'while acting or purporting to act' in the discharge of official duty, not considered. Akhilesh Prasad v. UT, Mizoram, (1981) 2 SCC 150: 1981 SCC (Cri) 337: AIR 1981 SC 806: (1981) 2 SCR 789: 1981 Cri LJ 407.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.D. Koshal and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1981]

[2415] — S. 197 — Sanction — Necessity of — Question to be considered at earlier stage of proceedings — Where material on record insufficient it would be proper to consider question of necessity of sanction after recording some evidence

The want of sanction under S. 197 of the Code is a prohibition against institution of the proceedings, and the applicability of the section must be judged at the earliest stage of the proceedings. It would be proper that the Magistrate considers the question of necessity of sanction after recording some evidence with opportunity to the parties. The court then will be in a better position to come to a conclusion whether on the facts so established prima facie, sanction under S. 197 is necessary or not. Ashok Sahu v. Gokul Saikia, 1990 Supp SCC 41: 1990 SCC (Cri) 611.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-3-1988]

Hori Ram Singh v. Crown, AIR 1939 FC 43: 1939 FCR 159: 40 Cri LJ 468; Sarjoo Prasad v. King Emperor, AIR 1946 FC 25: 1946 FCR 25: 47 Cri LJ 838, approved

[2416] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Plea of bar against cognizance for want of sanction touches jurisdiction of the Court — Hence can be raised at any stage of the proceedings — Accused not required to wait till framing of the charges or cross-examination of prosecution witnesses — He is not debarred from producing relevant documentary materials which can be legally looked into without any formal proof to show that acts were committed in discharge of public duties attracting S. 197 — Such enquiry different from the question whether a prima facie offence made out by the complaint — Magistrate not required to confine himself to the allegations in the complaint — On facts, prima facie alleged acts of respondents attracted S. 197

The legislative mandate engrafted in sub-section (1) of Section 197 debarring a court from taking cognizance of an offence except with a previous sanction of the Government concerned in a case where the acts complained of are alleged to have been committed by a public servant in discharge of his official duty or purporting to be in the discharge of his official duty and such public servant is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government touches the jurisdiction of the court itself. It is a prohibition imposed by the statute from taking cognizance, the accused after appearing before the court on process being issued, by an application indicating that Section 197(1) is attracted merely assists the court to rectify its error where jurisdiction has been exercised which it does not possess. In such a case there should not be any bar for the accused producing the relevant documents and materials which will be ipso facto admissible, for adjudication of the question as to whether in fact Section 197 has any application in the case in hand. The question of sanction can be considered at any stage of the proceedings.

It cannot be said that the accused even though might have really acted in discharge of his official duty for which the complaints have been lodged yet he will have to wait till the stage under sub-section (4) Section 246 is reached or at least till he will be able to bring in relevant materials while cross-examining the prosecution witnesses. On the other hand it would be logical to hold that the matter being one dealing with the jurisdiction of the court to take cognizance, the accused would be entitled to produce the relevant and material documents which can be admitted into evidence without formal proof, for the limited consideration of the court whether the necessary ingredients to attract Section 197 have been established or not. The question of applicability of Section 197 and the consequential ouster of jurisdiction of the court to take cognizance without a valid sanction is genetically different from the plea of the accused that the averments in the complaint do not make out an offence and as such the order of cognizance and/or the criminal proceedings be quashed. Therefore, an accused is not debarred from producing the relevant documentary materials which can be legally looked into without any formal proof, in support of the stand that the acts complained of were committed in exercise of his jurisdiction or purported jurisdiction as a public servant in discharge of his official duty thereby requiring sanction of the appropriate authority.

In the present case considering the facts and circumstances of the case, it prima facie appears that the alleged acts on the part of the respondents were purported to be in the exercise of official duties. Therefore, a case of sanction under Section 197 has been prima facie made out. Whether it was unjustified on the part of the respondents to take recourse to the actions alleged in the complaint or the respondents were guilty of excesses committed by them will be gone into in the trial after the required sanction is obtained on the basis of evidences adduced by the parties. At this stage, such questions are not required to be considered because the accused have not yet led evidence in support of their case on merits. Suresh Kumar Bhikamchand Jain v. Pandey Ajay Bhushan, (1998) 1 SCC 205: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 1998 SC 1524: 1998 Cri LJ 1242.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-11-1997]

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88, distinguished

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all (contd.)

[2417] — S. 197 — Sanction under — Question in this regard can be raised at any stage of the proceedings — Court can go beyond the allegations in the complaint to consider the question — Material on record up to the stage when question of want of sanction was raised, considered — CrPC, 1898, S. 197

The question of sanction under S. 197, Criminal Procedure Code can be raised and considered at any stage of the proceedings. Further, in considering the question whether or not sanction for prosecution was required, it is not necessary for the Court to confine itself to the allegations in the complaint, and it can take into account all the material on the record at the time when the question is raised and falls for consideration.

No copy of the statements of the complainant and the SDM recorded in proceedings preliminary to the issue of process having been furnished before the Court, the contention regarding false allegations in the complaint does not stand.

Although precise and detailed particulars were not given in the complaint, some foundation for the allegation that the goods in question had been misappropriated by the appellants some time after their seizure and before their deposit in the Customs House had been laid during the preliminary enquiry made by the Magistrate. B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939: AIR 1979 SC 1841: 1979 Cri LJ 1367: (1979) 16 ACC 318.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria, P.N. Shinghal and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-1979]

[2418] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of public servant — Held, can be granted at any time before court takes cognizance of the offence — Charge-sheet can be filed even before the sanction

Per K. Ramaswamy, J.

Issuance of the process to the accused to appear before the court is sine qua non of taking cognizance of the offence. The emphasis of S. 197(1) that "no court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction" posits that before taking cognizance of the offence alleged, there must be before the court the prior sanction given by the competent authority. Therefore, at any time before taking cognizance of the offence it is open to the competent authority to grant sanction and the prosecution is entitled to produce the order of sanction. Filing of charge-sheet before the court without sanction per se is not illegal, nor a condition precedent. No evidence had been placed before the Court to come to a different conclusion in this case. Accordingly, it must be held that the High Court committed manifest error of law to quash the charge-sheets on those grounds. State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222: 1992 SCC (Cri) 192: AIR 1991 SC 1260.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh[1] and K. Ramaswamy[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-1991]

[2419] — S. 197 — Sanction under, for prosecution — When necessary — Question as to sanction — Consideration of — Stage for — Held, sanction is required to be obtained when the offence complained of against the public servant is attributable to the discharge of his public duty or has a direct nexus therewith — Sanction not necessary when the offence complained of has nothing to do with the discharge of his duty — Plea relating to want of sanction, though desirably should be considered at an early stage of the proceedings, can be considered at a later stage, even after the witnesses are examined — Cases in which question as to sanction to be taken note of at the outset or at a later stage, indicated — However held, each case to be considered on its own facts and circumstances and no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down in this regard — Offences under Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and IPC — No sanction under S. 197 was necessary to be obtained from the State — Further, valid sanction granted in respect of offences under the 1988 Act — Hence, High Court's order quashing cognizance on ground of absence of sanction by competent authority, held, not proper

Whereas an order of sanction in terms of Section 197 CrPC is required to be obtained when the offence complained of against the public servant is attributable to the discharge of his public duty or has a direct nexus therewith, but the same would not be necessary when the offence complained of has nothing to do with the same. A plea relating to want of sanction although desirably should be considered at an early stage of the proceedings, but the same would not mean that the accused cannot take the said plea or the court cannot consider the same at a later stage. Each case has to be considered on its own facts. Furthermore, there may be cases where the question as to whether the sanction was required to be obtained or not would not be possible to be determined unless some evidence is taken, and in such an event, the said question may have to be considered even after the witnesses are examined. (Para 33)

In a case where ex facie no order of sanction has been issued when it is admittedly a prerequisite for taking cognizance of the offences or where such an order apparently has been passed by the authority not competent therefor, the court may take note thereof at the outset. But where the validity or otherwise of an order of sanction is required to be considered having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case and furthermore when a contention has to be gone into as to whether the act alleged against the accused has any direct nexus with the discharge of his official act, it may be permissible in a given situation for the court to examine the said question at a later stage. (Para 38)

It is added that the Supreme Court in the present case does not intend to lay down a law that only because a contention has been raised by the complainant or the prosecution that the question as regards necessity of obtaining an order of sanction is dependent upon the finding of fact that the nexus between the offences alleged and the official duty will have to be found out upon analysing the evidences brought on record; the same cannot be done at an earlier stage. Each case will have to be considered having regard to the fact situation obtaining therein and no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down therefor. The question as to whether sanction is necessary or not, thus, in an appropriate case, may have to be determined at different stages. There are cases where the question of validity of sanction has been raised at the trial and the courts have passed appropriate orders upon arriving at a conclusion that the order of sanction was defective. (Paras 39, 41 and 40)

The raid and seizure conducted by the accused police officer in the office and godown of the appellant were made on 18-3-1992. Seizure of gas cylinders and the lodgement of the first information report are no doubt acts of official capacity; but undoubtedly the prosecution was withdrawn on the ground that the same was false. It is in the aforementioned context also the question of criminal breach of trust and other allegations made against the accused as also demand and acceptance of a sum of Rs 20,000 by him may have to be viewed. (Para 34)

Thus, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case and keeping in view the decision of the Supreme Court, no order of sanction to prosecute the accused under Section 197 CrPC was necessary to be obtained from the State. Therefore, the High Court was not right in passing the impugned order particularly in view of the fact that a valid order of sanction was granted in relation to the offences committed by the accused under the 1988 Act. (Paras 43 and 44). Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 593: AIR 2006 SC 336: 2005 Cri LJ 5068: (2005) 36 AIC 108 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-2005]

Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, (1955) 1 SCR 1177: AIR 1955 SC 287: 1955 Cri LJ 857; P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234; Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, (1955) 2 SCR 925: AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140; State of H.P. v. M.P. Gupta, (2004) 2 SCC 349: 2004 SCC (Cri) 539; Harihar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1972) 3 SCC 89: 1972 SCC (Cri) 409; N. Bhargavan Pillai v. State of Kerala, 2005 SCC (Cri) 142; State of Orissa v. Ganesh Chandra Jew, (2004) 8 SCC 40: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2104; S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2096; K. Kalimuthu v. State, (2005) 4 SCC 512: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1291; B.S. Sambhu v. T.S. Krishnaswamy, (1983) 1 SCC 11: 1983 SCC (Cri) 125; Om Prakash Gupta v. State of U.P., 1957 SCR 423: AIR 1957 SC 458: 1957 Cri LJ 575; Manohar Nath Kaul v. State of J&K, (1983) 3 SCC 429: 1983 SCC (Cri) 647; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; State of Maharashtra v. Atma Ram, AIR 1966 SC 1786: 1966 Cri LJ 1498; Baijnath Gupta v. State of M.P., (1966) 1 SCR 210: AIR 1966 SC 220: 1966 Cri LJ 179; Amrik Singh v. State of Pepsu, (1955) 1 SCR 1302: AIR 1955 SC 309: 1955 Cri LJ 865; Hori Ram (Dr.) v. Emperor, 1939 FCR 159: AIR 1939 FC 43: 40 Cri LJ 468, followed

State of Karnataka v. C. Nagarajaswamy, (2005) 8 SCC 370; Raj Kishor Roy v. Kamleshwar Pandey, (2002) 6 SCC 543: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1423, relied on

Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500: 2001 SCC (Cri) 18, distinguished on facts

[2420] — S. 197 — Applicability — Plea regarding — Plea that sanction was required to be obtained under S. 197(1) before taking cognizance of offence can be raised at any stage of the proceedings and it need not be raised only when court reaches the stage of framing charge

Previous sanction of the competent authority being a precondition for the court in taking cognizance of the offence if the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused can be said to be an act in discharge of his official duty, the question touches the jurisdiction of the Magistrate in the matter of taking cognizance and, therefore, there is no requirement that an accused should wait for taking such plea till the charges are framed. (Para 7). Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500: 2001 SCC (Cri) 18: AIR 2000 SC 3187.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2000]

Birendra K. Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 498, overruled

Suresh Kumar Bhikamchand Jain v. Pandey Ajay Bhushan, (1998) 1 SCC 205: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1; Ashok Sahu v. Gokul Saikia, 1990 Supp SCC 41: 1990 SCC (Cri) 611; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939, relied on

Distinguished on facts in State of Maharashtra v. Devahari Devasingh Pawar, (2008) 2 SCC 540*

(6) Stage at which question of sanction to be considered/raised — Preliminary enquiry by court as to whether sanction required at all (contd.)

[2421] — Ss. 197, 227 and 228 — Cognizance of offence taken by Magistrate without sanction required under S. 197 — Appellant charged under S. 302 read with S. 34 IPC, raising objections in respect of it before Supreme Court — Such objections, held, could be raised by the appellant when he submits his argument under Ss. 227 and 228 before the Sessions Court after the case is committed to it — Court of Session to entertain the objections after the committal of case to it — No order made as to the release of appellant on bail — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 34. Birendra K. Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 498: 2001 SCC (Cri) 17.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-2000]

overruled in Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500 where the Court said: "the judgment of this Court in Birendra K. Singh case, (2000) 8 SCC 498 has been too widely stated and there is no requirement for the accused to wait till the stage of framing of the charge is reached for raising the contention with regard to the applicability of Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure."

(7) Effect of unavailability of protection under S. 197

[2422] — S. 197 — Unavailability of protection of S. 6 of PC Act, 1947 or 197 CrPC — Effect — Held, the effect is that the accused ceases to be a public servant and loses his protective cover under Section 6 of the PC Act, 1947 or Section 197 CrPC and is open to prosecution without sanction having to be obtained — Also, the Special Judge under the W.B. Special Courts Act, 1949, would cease to have jurisdiction — W.B. Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act, 1949 (21 of 1949), S. 4 and Paras 2 and 3 of Schedule

It is no doubt true that the policy under Section 6 of the PC Act, 1947 is that there should not be unnecessary harassment of a public servant. But if the accused ceases to be a public servant and loses his protective cover under Section 6 of the PC Act, 1947 or Section 197 CrPC and is open to prosecution without sanction having to be obtained, it would also necessarily mean that the Special Judge under the Special Courts Act, 1949, would cease to have jurisdiction over the accused in terms of Section 4 of the Special Courts Act, 1949. (Para 27). State of W.B. v. Shyamadas Banerjee, (2008) 9 SCC 45: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 671: 2008 Cri LJ 4592.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-2008]

(8) Sanctioning authority

[2423] — S. 197 — Competent sanctioning authority under for prosecution of public servant — Authority superior to removing authority whether competent — Where Chief Engineer of a Department is the removing authority under the relevant service rule, held, Chief Minister or Minister concerned not incompetent to give sanction — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6(1)(c) — Constitution of India, Arts. 309, 310 and 311

The pleasure of the President or Governor under Art. 310 as to the tenure of an officer cannot be fettered except by the provisions of Art. 311 and accordingly cannot be fettered by ordinary legislation. Section 6(1)(c) stipulates that removing authority will be the sanctioning authority. In view of Art. 311(1) the removing authority cannot be subordinate in rank to the appointing authority and as such by necessary implication the removing authority may be higher in rank to the appointing authority. Article 311(1) does not require that dismissal or removal must be ordered by the same authority who made the appointment. In view of this an authority superior to the removing authority is competent to give sanction under S. 6(1)(c). Sampuran Singh v. State of Punjab, (1982) 3 SCC 200: 1983 SCC (L&S) 1: 1982 SCC (Cri) 686: AIR 1982 SC 1407: 1982 Cri LJ 1973: (1982) 2 LLJ 281.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.P. Sen, E.S. Venkataramiah and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-1982]

[2424] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Authority competent to grant, and procedure therefor — Whether the Governor of a State (T.N. in this case) was the appropriate authority to grant sanction for prosecution of Chief Minister under S. 197 of the Code and S. 19 of the 1988 Act — If so, whether he could take a decision for granting or refusing sanction only upon the advice of the Council of Ministers excluding the Chief Minister and not upon the basis of his own discretion — Matters referred to Constitution Bench — Constitution of India, Arts. 164 and 163 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19. J. Jayalalitha v. M. Chenna Reddy, (1998) 8 SCC 601.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.P. Bharucha, Faizan Uddin and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-1996]

[2425] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Power of Governor to act independently of or contrary to advice of Council of Ministers — Independent/Discretionary powers of Governor under — Grant of sanction for prosecution of Ministers — Advice of Council of Ministers vitiated due to non-consideration of relevant factors

— Power of Governor to act independently of or contrary to such advice — Lokayukta submitting report holding that there were sufficient grounds for prosecuting two Ministers of Government of State of M.P. under PC Act, 1988 and IPC — Sanction asked for in relation to offence under S. 120-B IPC — Council of Ministers not granting sanction for prosecution on ground that no prima facie case for prosecution had been made out — Governor opining however that available documents and evidence were enough to make out a prima facie case for prosecution and therefore granting sanction under S. 197 CrPC — Held, on the material disclosed by report of Lokayukta it could not have been concluded, at the prima facie stage, that no case was made out — Given how hard it is to prove offence of conspiracy, it was for the court to arrive at a conclusion in respect thereof upon materials placed on record during trial — Such relevant consideration apparently was absent in the mind of Council of Ministers when it passed the order refusing sanction — Hence decision of Council of Ministers was ex facie irrational whereas decision of Governor was not — Further held, doctrine of necessity has no application to facts of the case — Therefore Court ordered to proceed with trial of Ministers — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-B — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 10 — Constitution of India, Art. 163

It is well settled that the exercise of administrative power will stand vitiated if there is a manifest error of record or the exercise of power is arbitrary. Similarly, if the power has been exercised on the non-consideration or non-application of mind to relevant factors the exercise of power will be regarded as manifestly erroneous or the refusal to take into consideration a relevant fact or acting on the basis of irrelevant and extraneous factors not germane to the purpose of arriving at the conclusion would vitiate an administrative order. (Paras 30 and 29)

The office of the Lokayukta was held by a former Judge of the Supreme Court. It is difficult to assume that the said high authority would give a report without any material whatsoever. No law is intended to be laid down in this behalf however. Each case may be judged on its own merits. In this case, on the material disclosed by the report of the Lokayukta it could not have been concluded, at the prima facie stage, that no case was made out. In this case, however, the Lokayukta made a report upon taking into consideration the materials which were placed or received by him. The Lokayukta for the State of Madhya Pradesh admittedly made a detailed inquiry in the matter on a complaint received by him. The inquiry covered a large area, namely, the statutory provisions, the history of the case, orders dated 11-8-1995, 24-2-1997 and 5-3-1997 which were said to have been passed in the teeth of the statutory provisions, the clandestine manner in which the matter was pursued, the notings in the files as also how the accused persons deliberately and knowingly closed their minds and eyes from the realities of the case. The report of the Lokayukta is itself replete with the materials which led him to arrive at the conclusion. (Paras 29 and 28)

When the Council of Ministers takes a decision in exercise of its jurisdiction, it must act fairly and reasonably. It must not only act within the four corners of the statute but also for effectuating the purpose and object for which the statute has been enacted. Respondents 4 in each appeal are to be prosecuted under the Prevention of Corruption Act wherefor no order of sanction is required to be obtained (as they had resigned by the time the Lokayukta had submitted its report). A sanction was asked for and granted only in relation to an offence under Section 120-B of the Penal Code. It is now trite that it may not be possible in a given case even to prove conspiracy by direct evidence. It was for the court to arrive at the conclusion as regards commission of the offence of conspiracy upon the material placed on record of the case during trial which would include the oral testimonies of the witnesses. Such a relevant consideration apparently was absent in the mind of the Council of Ministers when it passed an order refusing to grant sanction. Moreover, the doctrine of necessity has no application to the facts of this case. Therefore the decision of the Council of Ministers was ex facie irrational whereas the decision of the Governor was not. (Paras 29 and 31). M.P. Special Police Establishment v. State of M.P., (2004) 8 SCC 788.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.N. Variava, B.P. Singh, H.K. Sema and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-2004]

[2426] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Power of Governor to act independently of or contrary to advice of Council of Ministers — Duty of Council of Ministers when considering grant of sanction — Independent/Discretionary powers of Governor under — Grant of sanction for prosecution of Ministers — Power of Governor to act independently of or contrary to advice of Council of Ministers — Though normally Governor is required to act on aid and advice of Council of Ministers and not in his discretion, held, there may be situations where exercise of such discretion

(8) Sanctioning authority (contd.)

by himself may be proper — Following situations envisaged: (i) where bias is inherent and/or manifest in the advice, or (ii) in those rare situations where on facts bias becomes apparent, or (iii) where decision of Council of Ministers is shown to be irrational and based on non-consideration of relevant factors, or (iv) if Council of Ministers disables or disentitles itself, or (v) where as a matter of propriety Governor may have to act in his own discretion — Cautioned that if in such situations Governor cannot act in his own discretion there would be a complete breakdown of the rule of law and democracy itself will be at stake inasmuch as it would then be open for Governments to refuse sanction in spite of overwhelming material showing that a prima facie case is made out — Clarified however that Governor would not be sitting in appeal over decision of Council of Ministers — Duty of Council of Ministers when considering grant of sanction for prosecution — Held, is to act fairly and reasonably, not only within four corners of the statute but also for effectuating the purpose and object for which the statute has been enacted — Constitution of India, Art. 163

Respondents 4 (in both these appeals) were Ministers in the Government of M.P. A complaint was made to the Lokayukta against them for having released 7.5 acres of land illegally to its earlier owners even though the same had been acquired by the Indore Development Authority. After investigation the Lokayukta submitted a report holding that there were sufficient grounds for prosecuting the two Ministers under Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and also for the offence of criminal conspiracy punishable under Section 120-B IPC. By the time the report was given the two Ministers had already resigned.

Sanction was applied for from the Council of Ministers for prosecuting the two Ministers. The Council of Ministers held that there was not an iota of material available against both the Ministers from which it could be inferred that they had entered into a criminal conspiracy with anyone. The Council of Ministers thus refused sanction on the ground that no prima facie case had been made out against them. The Governor then considered grant of sanction keeping in view the decision of the Council of Ministers. The Governor opined that the available documents and the evidence were enough to show that a prima facie case for prosecution had been made out. The Governor accordingly granted sanction for prosecution under Section 197 CrPC.

The question that arose before the Supreme Court was whether a Governor can act in his discretion and against the aid and advice of the Council of Ministers in the matter of grant of sanction for prosecution of Ministers for offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act and/or the Penal Code.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

The concept of the Governor acting in his discretion or exercising independent judgment is not alien to the Constitution. The normal rule is that the Governor acts on the aid and advice of the Council of Ministers and not independently or contrary to it. But there are exceptions under which the Governor can act in his own discretion. Some of the exceptions are as set out in Samsher Singh case, (1974) 2 SCC 831, at pp. 848-49, paras 54-56 and p. 885, para 154 [set out in para 12 herein]. However, the exceptions mentioned in the judgment are not exhaustive. Other situations may be situations where by reason of peril to democracy or democratic principles, an action may be compelled which from its nature is not amenable to Ministerial advice. (Para 12)

Undoubtedly, in the matter of grant of sanction to prosecute a Chief Minister or a Minister the Governor is normally required to act on aid and advice of the Council of Ministers and not in his discretion. It is also presumed that a high authority like the Council of Ministers will normally act in a bona fide manner, fairly, honestly and in accordance with law. Where as a matter of propriety the Governor may have to act in his own discretion, or where bias is inherent and/or manifest in the advice of the Council of Ministers or, on those rare occasions where on facts the bias becomes apparent and/or the decision of the Council of Ministers is shown to be irrational and based on non-consideration of relevant factors, the Governor would be right, on the facts of that case, to act in his own discretion and grant sanction. Similar would be the situation if the Council of Ministers disables itself or disentitles itself. If, on these facts and circumstances, the Governor cannot act in his own discretion there would be a complete breakdown of the rule of law and democracy itself will be at stake inasmuch as it would then be open for Governments to refuse sanction in spite of overwhelming material showing that a prima facie case is made out. It would then lead to a situation where people in power may break the law with impunity safe in the knowledge that they will not be prosecuted as the requisite sanction will not be granted. The Governor, however, would not be sitting in appeal over the decision of the Council of Ministers. (Paras 19, 33, 23 and 32)

The Division Bench of the High Court has held that even though the principle in Ramdas Shrinivas Nayak, (1982) 2 SCC 463 may apply to the case of a Chief Minister, it cannot apply to a case where Ministers are sought to be prosecuted. The subtle distinction sought to be made by the Division Bench cannot be appreciated. The question in such cases would not be whether the Council of Ministers would be biased. The question would be whether there is reasonable ground for believing that there is likelihood of apparent bias. Actual bias only would lead to automatic disqualification where the decision-maker is shown to have an interest in the outcome of the case. The principle of real likelihood of bias has now taken a tilt to "real danger of bias" and "suspicion of bias". Bias is likely to operate in a subtle manner. Sometimes the decision-makers concerned may not even be unaware of the extent to which their opinion gets influenced. If the facts and circumstances indicate bias, then the conclusion becomes inescapable. (Paras 14 and 22)

Taking a cue from Antulay, it is possible to contend that a Council of Ministers may not take a fair and impartial decision when their Chief Minister or other members of the Council face prosecution. But the doctrine of "apparent bias", however, may not be applicable in a case where a collective decision is required to be taken under a statute in relation to former Ministers. In a meeting of the Council of Ministers, each member has his own say. There may be different views or opinions. But in a democracy the opinion of the majority would prevail. No material has been placed on record by the appellants to show as to how the Council of Ministers collectively or the members of the Council individually were in any manner whatsoever biased. There is also no authority for the proposition that a bias can be presumed in such a situation. The doctrine of real likelihood of bias would also not be applicable in such a case. The decision was taken collectively by a responsible body in terms of its constitutional functions. To repeat, only in a case of "apparent bias", the exception to the general rule would apply. On the same analogy in the absence of any material brought on record, it may not be possible to hold that the action on the part of the Council of Ministers was actuated by any malice. So far as plea of malice is concerned, the same must be attributed personally against the person concerned and not collectively. Even in such a case the persons against whom malice on fact is alleged must be impleaded as parties. (Paras 23 to 25)

It is well settled that the exercise of administrative power will stand vitiated if there is a manifest error of record or the exercise of power is arbitrary. Similarly, if the power has been exercised on the non-consideration or non-application of mind to relevant factors the exercise of power will be regarded as manifestly erroneous or the refusal to take into consideration a relevant fact or acting on the basis of irrelevant and extraneous factors not germane to the purpose of arriving at the conclusion would vitiate an administrative order. (Paras 30 and 29)

The office of the Lokayukta was held by a former Judge of the Supreme Court. It is difficult to assume that the said high authority would give a report without any material whatsoever. No law is intended to be laid down in this behalf however. Each case may be judged on its own merits. In this case, on the material disclosed by the report of the Lokayukta it could not have been concluded, at the prima facie stage, that no case was made out. In this case, however, the Lokayukta made a report upon taking into consideration the materials which were placed or received by him. The Lokayukta for the State of Madhya Pradesh admittedly made a detailed inquiry in the matter on a complaint received by him. The inquiry covered a large area, namely, the statutory provisions, the history of the case, orders dated 11-8-1995, 24-2-1997 and 5-3-1997 which were said to have been passed in the teeth of the statutory provisions, the clandestine manner in which the matter was pursued, the notings in the files as also how the accused persons deliberately and knowingly closed their minds and eyes from the realities of the case. The report of the Lokayukta is itself replete with the materials which led him to arrive at the conclusion. (Paras 29 and 28)

When the Council of Ministers takes a decision in exercise of its jurisdiction, it must act fairly and reasonably. It must not only act within the four corners of the statute but also for effectuating the purpose and object for which the statute has been enacted. Respondents 4 in each appeal are to be prosecuted under the Prevention of Corruption Act wherefor no order of sanction is required to be obtained (as they had resigned by the time the Lokayukta had submitted its report). A sanction was asked for and granted only in relation to an offence under Section 120-B of the Penal Code. It is now trite that it may not be possible in a given case even to prove conspiracy by direct evidence. It was for the court to arrive at the conclusion as regards commission of the offence of conspiracy upon the material placed on record of the case during trial which would include the oral testimonies of the witnesses. Such a relevant consideration apparently was absent in the mind of the Council of Ministers

(8) Sanctioning authority (contd.)

when it passed an order refusing to grant sanction. Moreover, the doctrine of necessity has no application to the facts of this case. Therefore the decision of the Council of Ministers was ex facie irrational whereas the decision of the Governor was not. (Paras 29 and 31)

In a situation of this nature, the writ court while exercising its jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution as also the Supreme Court under Articles 136 and 142 of the Constitution can pass an appropriate order which would do complete justice to the parties. The High Court unfortunately failed to consider this aspect of the matter. The order of the Governor sanctioning prosecution should be given effect to and that of the Council of Ministers refusing to do so may be set aside. The Court shall now proceed with the prosecution. (Paras 31 and 34). M.P. Special Police Establishment v. State of M.P., (2004) 8 SCC 788.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.N. Variava, B.P. Singh, H.K. Sema and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-2004]

State of Maharashtra v. Ramdas Shrinivas Nayak, (1982) 2 SCC 463: 1982 SCC (Cri) 478, followed

Samsher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1974) 2 SCC 831: 1974 SCC (L&S) 550; Bhuri Nath v. State of J&K, (1997) 2 SCC 745; A.K. Kraipak v. Union of India, (1969) 2 SCC 262; Kirti Deshmankar (Dr.) v. Union of India, (1991) 1 SCC 104: 1991 SCC (L&S) 388: (1991) 15 ATC 693, relied on

V.C. Shukla v. State (Delhi Admn.), 1980 Supp SCC 249: 1980 SCC (Cri) 849; State of Punjab v. V.K. Khanna, (2001) 2 SCC 330: 2001 SCC (L&S) 1010; Kumaon Mandal Vikas Nigam Ltd. v. Girja Shankar Pant, (2001) 1 SCC 182: 2001 SCC (L&S) 189, clarified and relied on

J. Mohapatra and Co. v. State of Orissa, (1984) 4 SCC 103; Institute of Chartered Accountants v. L.K. Ratna, (1986) 4 SCC 537: (1986) 1 ATC 714; Charan Lal Sahu v. Union of India, (1990) 1 SCC 613; Badrinath v. Govt. of T.N., (2000) 8 SCC 395: 2001 SCC (L&S) 13; Election Commission of India v. Dr. Subramaniam Swamy, (1996) 4 SCC 104; State of M.P. v. Dr. Yashwant Trimbak, (1996) 2 SCC 305: 1996 SCC (L&S) 510: (1996) 33 ATC 208, distinguished

[Ed.: See also (2004) 2 SCC 349; (2001) 4 SCC 752; (1995) 2 SCC 437 and (1998) 6 SCC 411]

[2427] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution granted by a person not authorised in law — Validity of — Held, it being without jurisdiction, would be a nullity — PW 37 was not competent to accord sanction for prosecution of respondent — Nothing to show that he was delegated with power to accord sanction — Hence, grant of sanction by him was vitiated in law — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — S. 19 (Paras 26, 22 and 23). State Inspector of Police v. Surya Sankaram Karri, (2006) 7 SCC 172: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 225.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-8-2006]

S.N. Bose v. State of Bihar, (1968) 3 SCR 563: AIR 1968 SC 1292: 1968 Cri LJ 1484; State of Karnataka v. C. Nagarajaswamy, (2005) 8 SCC 370: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 47, relied on

Clarified in CBI v. Edwin Devasahayam, (2007) 12 SCC 139

[2428] — S. 197 — Sanction order — Validity — First sanction order issued by an incompetent authority — Second sanction order issued retrospectively after the cognizance was taken and that too by an incompetent authority — On such facts, held, when Special Judge took cognizance, there was no sanction order under the law authorising him to take cognizance — This was a fundamental error which invalidated the cognizance as being without jurisdiction — Having regard to the gravity of the allegations levelled against the respondent, authority competent under the Rules concerned permitted to issue a fresh sanction order and proceed afresh against the respondent from the stage of taking cognizance of the offence — Goa Shipyard Officers' (Conduct, Discipline and Appeal) Rules, 1979 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — S. 19

The relevant Rules provide that the authority competent to appoint and to remove the respondent from his office is the Board of Directors. But, in the present case, the sanction order dated 2-1-1995 was issued under the signatures of the Company Secretary. There was no reference to the decision/ resolution being passed by the Board of Directors pursuant to which the sanction order was issued under the signatures of the Company Secretary. Further, the second sanction order dated 7-9-1997 issued by the Chairman and Managing Director of the Company also did not refer to any resolution/ decision taken by the Board collectively, pursuant to which the second sanction order was issued. (Paras 8 and 9)

Thus, the first sanction order was issued by an authority that was not a competent authority to have issued such order under the Rules. The second sanction order was also issued by an authority, which was not competent to issue the same under the relevant rules, apart from the fact that the same was issued retrospectively w.e.f. 14-9-1994, which is bad. Therefore, when the Special Judge took cognizance on 29-5-1995, there was no sanction order under the law authorising him to take cognizance. This is a fundamental error which invalidates the cognizance as without jurisdiction. The present is not the case where there has been mere irregularity, error or omission in the order of sanction as required under sub-section (1) of Section 19 of the Act. It goes to the root of the prosecution case. (Paras 12 and 11). State of Goa v. Babu Thomas, (2005) 8 SCC 130: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1995: 2005 Cri LJ 4379.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-2005]

State v. T. Venkatesh Murthy, (2004) 7 SCC 763: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2140; Durga Dass v. State of H.P., (1973) 2 SCC 213: 1973 SCC (Cri) 762, distinguished

Distinguished in Goa Shipyard Ltd. v. Babu Thomas, (2007) 10 SCC 662

[2429] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of employees of Corpn. — Special Officer competent to grant sanction — Sanction granted by the Government itself which appointed the Special Officer not invalid

The High Court was in error in its view that only the Special Officer appointed by the Corpn., when it was superseded, was competent to grant the sanction. It will be noticed that here the sanction had been given by the superior authority, namely the Government itself which appointed the Special Officer. Once the sanction is granted by the superior authority it does not get invalidated. It could be invalid if the sanction had been granted by the authority subordinate to the authority who had to grant the sanction and in that case would have been subject to challenge. State of T.N. v. T. Thulasingam, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 405: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1504: AIR 1995 SC 1314.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1994]

[2430] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of public servant — Appellant while serving as Executive Engineer alleged to have paid Rs 2750 in excess to the contractor in respect of some work — Under the Rules of Business, all cases of defalcation, misappropriation or embezzlement of public funds involving more than Rs 10,000 required to be placed before the Chief Minister and cases involving lesser amount required to be placed before the minister in charge of the department concerned for sanction — Accordingly, the matter initially placed before the Minister of Law who refused to accord sanction after applying his mind to the entire materials — Subsequently, appellant retired in 1994 and only in 1997, the Chief Minister passed order according sanction for his prosecution — Held, no fresh materials were collected subsequent to the earlier order refusing to sanction prosecution and the appropriate authority (Minister of Law) having applied his mind and having passed the order refusing to accord sanction, the subsequent order of Chief Minister according sanction was unjustified and vitiated by non-application of mind — In view of the Rules of Business, neither was there any necessity for the authorities concerned to place the file before the Chief Minister nor had the Chief Minister any occasion to reconsider the matter and pass fresh order sanctioning prosecution particularly when taking into account the loss sustained to the exchequer to the tune of Rs 2750 — That apart, appellant having already retired in 1994, pursuing proceedings against him for a loss of Rs 2750 only were uncalled for (Paras 5 and 6). Gopikant Choudhary v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 53: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-1-2000]

[2431] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of public servants — Conditions for applicability of S. 19, PC Act, 1988 — MP is a public servant but there is no authority competent to remove him from his office — Held, per Agrawal and Anand, JJ. (Ray J, concurring) merely because there is no authority to remove an MP from his office, he does not cease to be a public servant for the purpose of the Act — In absence of authority competent to remove and grant sanction under S. 19(1) there is no limitation on the power of the court to take cognizance of offence under S. 190 CrPC of offences mentioned in S. 19(1) — But till provision is made by Parliament in that regard by suitable amendment in the law, the prosecuting agency, before filing a charge-sheet in respect of an offence punishable under Ss. 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15 of the 1988 Act against an MP in a criminal court, shall obtain the permission of the Chairman of the Rajya Sabha/Speaker of the Lok Sabha, as the case may be — Held, per Bharucha and Rajendra Babu, JJ., S. 19 applicable only to public servant who is removable from his office by a competent authority — Hence, court must try to identify the authority competent to remove the public servant — If court fails to identify the competent authority to remove, the public servant would not be liable to be prosecuted under Ss. 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15 though he would be liable to be prosecuted for any other offence under the Act — If a person is found to be a public servant within the meaning of the definition under S. 2(c), he must be treated as such for the purpose of all the provisions of the Act where the expression is used including for the purposes of the sanction provision and the position cannot change even if it be found that there is no authority competent to remove him from his office — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — S. 19

Per Agrawal and Anand, JJ.

The definition of "public servant" in Section 2(c) of the 1988 Act includes persons who are public servants under that provision though the criterion of removability does not apply to them and there is no single individual authority which is competent to grant sanction for their prosecution under Section 19 of the 1988 Act. In respect of a Member of Parliament the Constitution does not confer on any particular authority the power to remove him. It is no doubt true that the House in exercise of its power of contempt can pass a resolution for expulsion of a Member who is found guilty of breach of privilege and acceptance of bribe by a Member in connection with the business of the House is regarded as breach of privilege. On that basis it may be possible to say that the House has the power to remove a Member who is found to have indulged in bribery and corruption. But in view of the decision in Veeraswami wherein Shetty, J. has said that the legislature while enacting clause (c) of Section 6 of the 1947 Act could not have intended Parliament to be the sanctioning authority, the House cannot be regarded as the authority competent to grant sanction under Section 19(1)(c) of the 1988 Act. On that view of the matter it must be held that there is no authority who can remove a Member of Parliament and who would be competent under clauses (a), (b) or (c) of Section 19(1) of the 1988 Act to grant sanction for his prosecution. This does not, however, lead to the conclusion that he cannot be treated as a "public servant" under Section 2(c)(viii) of the 1988 Act if, on a proper interpretation of the said provision he is found to be a public servant. Since on an interpretation of the provisions of Section 2(c)(viii) of the 1988 Act it has been held that a Member of Parliament is a public servant, a Member of Parliament has to be treated as a public servant for the purpose of the 1988 Act even though there is no authority who can grant sanction for his prosecution under Section 19(1) of the 1988 Act. (Para 93)

(8) Sanctioning authority (contd.)

When there is an authority competent to remove a public servant and to grant sanction for his prosecution under Section 19(1) of the 1988 Act the requirement of sanction precludes a court from taking cognizance of the offences mentioned in Section 19(1) against him in the absence of such sanction, but if there is no authority competent to remove a public servant and to grant sanction for his prosecution under Section 19(1) there is no limitation on the power of the court to take cognizance under Section 190 CrPC of the offences mentioned in Section 19(1) of the 1988 Act. The requirement of sanction under Section 19(1) is intended as a safeguard against criminal prosecution of a public servant on the basis of malicious or frivolous allegations by the interested persons. The object underlying the said requirement is not to condone the commission of an offence by a public servant. The inapplicability of the provisions of Section 19(1) to a public servant would only mean that the intended safeguard was not intended to be made available to him. The rigour of the prohibition contained in sub-section (1) is now reduced by sub-section (3) of Section 19 because under clause (a) of sub-section (3) it is provided that no finding, sentence or order passed by a Special Judge shall be reversed or altered by a court in appeal, confirmation or revision on the ground of absence of, or any error, omission or irregularity in the sanction required under sub-section (1), unless in the opinion of that court, a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned thereby. This would show that the requirement of sanction under sub-section (1) of Section 19 is a matter relating to the procedure and the absence of the sanction does not go to the root of the jurisdiction of the court. It must, therefore, be held that merely because there is no authority which is competent to remove a public servant and to grant sanction for his prosecution under Section 19(1) it cannot be said that a Member of Parliament is outside the purview of the 1988 Act. (Para 95)

In the absence of requirement of previous sanction for initiating proceedings in a court of law against a Member of Parliament in respect of an offence mentioned in Section 19(1) of the 1988 Act the possibility of a Member of Parliament being subjected to criminal prosecution on the basis of malicious or frivolous allegations made by interested persons cannot be excluded. It is hoped that Parliament will provide for an adequate safeguard in that regard by making suitable amendment in the 1988 Act. But till such safeguard is provided, it appears appropriate that protection from being subjected to criminal prosecution on the basis of malicious or frivolous allegations should be available to Members of Parliament. The Chairman of the Rajya Sabha/Speaker of the Lok Sabha by virtue of the position held by them are entrusted with the task of preserving the independence of the Members of the House. In order that Members of Parliament may not be subjected to criminal prosecution on the basis of frivolous or malicious allegations at the hands of interested persons, the prosecuting agency, before filing a charge-sheet in respect of an offence punishable under Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15 of the 1988 Act against a Member of Parliament in a criminal court, shall obtain the permission of the Chairman of the Rajya Sabha/Speaker of the Lok Sabha, as the case may be. (Paras 96 and 97)

Per Ray, J. (concurring)

I respectfully concur with the findings of Mr Justice Agrawal and agree with the reasoning for such findings that since there is no authority competent to grant sanction for the prosecution of a

Member of Parliament under Section 19(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, the court can take cognizance of the offences mentioned in Section 19(1) in the absence of sanction but before filing a charge-sheet in respect of an offence punishable under Sections 7, 10, 11, 12 and 15 of 1988 Act against a Member of Parliament in a criminal court, the prosecuting agency shall obtain the permission of the Chairman of the Rajya Sabha/ Speaker of the Lok Sabha, as the case may be. (Para 99)

Per Bharucha and Rajendra Babu, JJ.

Members of Parliament and the State Legislatures are public servants liable to be prosecuted for offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act but they cannot be prosecuted for offences under Sections 7, 10, 11 and 13 thereof because of want of an authority competent to grant sanction thereto. It is hoped that Parliament will address itself to the task of removing this lacuna with due expedition. (Para 182)

Sanction is not required in respect of all offences covered by the said Act; it is required only in respect of the offences that are punishable under Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15. Secondly, the person charged must be a public servant at the point of time the court is asked to take cognizance; that is the material time for the purposes of the section. Thirdly, the sanction must precede cognizance; it must be prior sanction. Fourthly, and this from the point of view of this judgment is most material, the section covers all public servants. In other words, if any public servant is charged with an offence punishable under the aforesaid sections, the court shall not take cognizance in the absence of sanction. That the section applies to all public servants is also clear from the three clauses of sub-section (1). The question as to whether or not a person is a public servant within the meaning of the statute must be determined having regard to the definition of a public servant contained in the statute. If the person is found to be a public servant within the meaning of the definition, he must be taken to be a public servant for the purposes of all provisions in the statute in which the expression "public servant" occurs. If, therefore, a person is found to satisfy the requirements of the definition of a public servant, he must be treated as a public servant for the purposes of the sanction provision. (Paras 166 and 175)

It is not possible to accept the view that the provisions of Section 19 are applicable only to a public servant who is removable from his office by an authority competent to do so. It is correct to say that Section 19 contemplates that for every public servant there must be an authority competent to remove him from his office and that, therefore, the effort must be to identify that authority. But if no authority can be identified in the case of a public servant or a particular category of public servant, it cannot lead to the conclusion that he is not a public servant or this is not a category of public servant within the meaning of the said Act. The finding that the Members of Parliament are public servants, based upon the definition section, must apply to the phrase "public servant" wherever it occurs in the said Act. It cannot change if it be found that there is no authority competent to remove Members of Parliament from office. Members of Parliament would, then, not be liable to be prosecuted for offences covered by Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15, the condition of prior sanction being incapable of being satisfied, but they would remain liable to prosecution for offences under the said Act other than those covered by Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15. (Paras 167 and 169)

It is clear from Article 101 that the seat of a Member of Parliament becomes vacant immediately upon his becoming subject to the disqualifications mentioned in Article 102, without more. The removal of a Member of Parliament is occasioned by operation of law and is self-operative. Reference to the President under Article 103 is required only if a question arises as to whether a Member of Parliament has earned such disqualification; that is to say, if it is disputed. The President would then have to decide whether the Member of Parliament had become subject to the automatic disqualification contemplated by Article 101. His order would not remove the Member of Parliament from his seat or office but would declare that he stood disqualified. It would operate not with effect from the date upon which it was made but would relate back to the date upon which the disqualification was earned. Without, therefore, having to go into the connotation of the word "removal" in service law, it seems clear that the President cannot be said to be the authority competent to remove a Member of Parliament from his office. (Para 180)

In the light of the aforesaid position it is not necessary to consider the submission that the scheme of the 1988 Act, as compared to the 1947 Act, had undergone an important change by reason of the introduction of sub-section (3) in Section 19. (Para 181). P.V. Narasimha Rao v. State (CBI/SPE), (1998) 4 SCC 626: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1108: AIR 1998 SC 2120.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: S.C. Agrawal[1], G.N. Ray[2], Dr. A.S. Anand[1], S.P. Bharucha[3] and S. Rajendra Babu[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 17-4-1998]

(8) Sanctioning authority (contd.)

K. Veeraswami v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 655: 1991 SCC (Cri) 734, dissenting view overruled

S.A. Venkataraman v. State, AIR 1958 SC 107: 1958 SCR 1040: (1958) 2 LLJ 1; Kihoto Hollohan v. Zachillhu, 1992 Supp (2) SCC 651, relied on

Habibulla Khan v. State of Orissa, 1993 Cri LJ 3604: (1993) 3 Crimes 198, overruled

[2432] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of a Chief Minister — Decision regarding, whether should be taken by Governor himself or on the basis of Council of Ministers' advice — Concession made by the counsel for the Chief Minister before High Court in favour of Governor's individual decision — High Court holding that Governor alone should take the decision — Concession, being in the interest of justice, not allowed to be resiled from in appeal before Supreme Court — In the circumstances held, advice of Council of Ministers, need not be taken by the Governor for taking the decision — S. 6, Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — Constitution of India, Arts. 74 and 163

In the facts and circumstances of the present case, it is clear that when there is to be a prosecution of the Chief Minister, the Governor would, while determining whether sanction for such prosecution should be granted or not under S. 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, as a matter of propriety, necessarily act in his own discretion and not on the advice of the Council of Ministers.

In this case the cause of justice would in no way be advanced by permitting the State to now resile from the concession made before the High Court. On the other hand the concession was made to advance the cause of justice. Therefore, the Supreme Court cannot permit the State to resile from the concession.

The question regarding the High Court's competence to direct the Governor to himself decide the question of sanction under S. 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, no doubt is an important question worthy of serious consideration by the Supreme Court under Art. 136; but in the present case, special leave cannot be granted solely in order to consider this question firstly because the criminal revision application itself has been dismissed by the High Court and secondly — and this is important — There was an express concession made in the High Court. State of Maharashtra v. Ramdas Shrinivas Nayak, (1982) 2 SCC 463: 1982 SCC (Cri) 478: AIR 1982 SC 1249: 1982 Cri LJ 1581.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-7-1982]

[2433] — S. 197 — Authority that may grant sanction — Order sanctioning prosecution — Validity of — Govt. doctor taking bribe to alter autopsy report — Order of Secretary, Medical Education Department, sanctioning prosecution against appellant Doctor — Objection raised against on the ground that the Secretary was lacking authority to remove the appellant from office — Contention also raised that matter be dealt with by Law and Justice Department — Held, provision under S. 6(1)(b) only states that the State Govt. is the competent authority to pass the order of sanction and does not specify any particular officer in this respect — There being no evidence on record to show that the Governor authorised any other officer to pass the order of sanction, held, Secretary was competent to pass the said order — Secretary's competence to act on behalf of Governor having not been challenged in cross-examination, High Court rightly construed the sanction to be accorded by or on behalf of the Governor — Also pursuing the rules of business framed under Art. 166 of the Constitution, Law and Justice Department not competent to deal with the matter concerned — Besides, the High Court rightly held that the order did not suffer from non-application of mind — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 6(1)(b), 5(1)(d) r/w S. 5(2) and Penal Code, 1860, S. 161 — Constitution of India, Art. 166 (Paras 11 to 13). Shivendra Kumar v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 9 SCC 303: 2002 SCC (Cri) 564: AIR 2000 SC 3079.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2000]

[2434] — S. 197 — S. 21 IPC — Minister of a State Government — Held, is a public servant and therefore, entitled to the protection of S. 197(1) — Word "Government" used in S. 197 means the Governor in the case of a Chief Minister or Minister — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 3(60) — Constitution of India, Arts. 164 and 167

The Chief Minister is paid from public exchequer for performing a public duty and is, therefore, a public servant within the meaning of Section 197 of the Code. So also a Minister of a State is paid from its public exchequer. He is paid for doing the duty entrusted to him as a Minister and, therefore, the Minister must also be held to be a public servant. Since he is appointed or dismissed by the Governor, he would fall within the expression "a public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government". By virtue of Section 3(60) of the General Clauses Act, 1897 the expression 'Government' used in Section 197 would mean the Governor in the case of a Chief Minister or a Minister. Therefore, a Minister would be entitled to the protection of Section 197(1) of the Code. R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128: AIR 1996 SC 901: (1996) 1 KLT 250: (1996) 1 KLJ 112.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and S.C. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 5-12-1995]

M. Karunanidhi v. Union of India, (1979) 3 SCC 431: 1979 SCC (Cri) 691, followed

Namdeo Kashinath Aher v. H.G. Vartak, AIR 1970 Bom 385: 1970 Cri LJ 1427: 1970 Mah LJ 662, approved

(9) Sanction/Sanction order if proper — Matters to be considered

[2435] — S. 197 — 'Sanction' — Meaning — Sanction implies application of mind. Mansukhlal Vithaldas Chauhan v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 622: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1784: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1120: AIR 1997 SC 3400: 1997 Cri LJ 4059.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-1997]

[2436] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Requisites of a valid sanction — Independent application of mind to the facts of the case as also material and evidence collected during investigation by the authority competent to grant sanction essential — Sanction issued by an authority on the directions of the High Court, held, was invalid because there was no independent application of mind by that authority — High Court direction had taken away discretion of the authority not to grant sanction and it was left with no choice but to mechanically accord sanction in obedience of the mandamus issued by the High Court — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19(1)

A trap against the appellant a Divisional Accountant in an irrigation project in the State was laid on 4-4-1983 on the complaint of partner of a firm having official dealings with the appellant. The appellant was alleged to have been caught accepting bribe. The Secretary, Gujarat Vigilance Commission, wrote to the Government to grant sanction for prosecution but the Government did not immediately grant sanction. Meanwhile, the partner of the complainant firm filed a petition under Article 226, for a direction to the State of Gujarat and others, to grant sanction for prosecution. The High Court directed the Secretary of the Department in which the appellant was working to accord sanction under the relevant provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act to prosecute the appellant within one month from the receipt of the writ of the Court. In view of these directions of the High Court, sanction was granted and the appellant was prosecuted and convicted under Section 161 IPC and Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. He challenged his conviction on the ground that proceedings before the trial court and the High Court were vitiated because there was no valid sanction for prosecution under Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947.

Held :

The Central or the State Government or any other authority (depending upon the category of the public servant) has the right to consider the facts of each case and to decide whether that public servant is to be prosecuted or not. Since Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, prohibits the Court from taking cognizance of the offences specified therein, it envisages that the Central or the State Government or the other authority, has not only the right to consider the question of grant of sanction, it also has the discretion to grant or not to grant sanction. The sanction is not intended to be, nor is an automatic formality and it is essential that the provisions in regard to sanction should be observed with complete strictness. One of the guiding principles for sanctioning authority is to keep in mind the public interest and, therefore, the protection available under Section 6 to a public servant cannot be said to be absolute. Sanction lifts the bar for prosecution. The grant of sanction is not an idle formality or an acrimonious exercise but a solemn and sacrosanct act which affords protection to government servants against frivolous prosecutions. Sanction is a weapon to ensure discouragement of frivolous and vexatious prosecution and is a safeguard for the innocent but not a shield for the guilty.

The validity of the sanction would, therefore depend upon the material placed before the sanctioning authority and the fact that all the relevant facts, material and evidence have been considered by the sanctioning authority. Consideration implies application of mind. The order of sanction must ex facie disclose that the sanctioning authority had considered the evidence and other material collected during investigation and placed before it. This fact can also be established by extrinsic evidence by placing relevant files before the Court to show that all relevant facts were considered by the sanctioning authority.

The sanctioning authority has to apply its own independent mind for the generation of genuine satisfaction whether prosecution has to be sanctioned or not. The mind of the sanctioning authority should not be under pressure from any quarter nor should any external force be acting upon it to take a decision one way or the other. Since the discretion to grant or not to grant sanction vests absolutely in the sanctioning authority, its discretion should be shown to have not been affected by any extraneous consideration. If it is shown that the sanctioning authority was unable to apply its independent mind for any reason whatsoever or was under an obligation or compulsion or constraint to grant the sanction, the order will be bad for the reason that the discretion of the authority "not to sanction" was taken away and it was compelled to act mechanically to sanction the prosecution.

(9) Sanction/Sanction order if proper — Matters to be considered (contd.)

By issuing a direction to the Secretary (Respondent 7) to grant sanction, the High Court closed all other alternatives to the Secretary and compelled him to proceed only in one direction and to act only in one way, namely, to sanction the appellant's prosecution. The Secretary was not allowed to consider whether it would be feasible to prosecute the appellant; whether the complaint of illegal gratification which was sought to be supported by "trap" was false, and whether the prosecution would be vexatious particularly as it was in the knowledge of the Government that the complainant-firm had been black-listed once and there was a demand for some amount to be paid to the Government by the firm in connection with the contract. The discretion not to sanction the prosecution was thus taken away by the High Court.

The High Court put the Secretary in a piquant situation. While the Act gave him the discretion to sanction or not to sanction the appellant's prosecution, the judgment gave him no choice except to sanction the prosecution as any other decision would have exposed him to an action in contempt for not obeying the mandamus issued by the High Court. The High Court assumed the role of the sanctioning authority, considered the whole matter, formed an opinion that it was a fit case in which sanction should be granted and because it itself could not grant sanction, it directed the Secretary to sanction the prosecution so that the sanction order may be treated to be an order passed by the Secretary and not that of the High Court. This is a classic case where the brand name is changed to give a new colour to the package without changing the contents thereof. In these circumstances, the sanction order cannot but be held to be wholly erroneous having been passed mechanically at the instance of the High Court. Mansukhlal Vithaldas Chauhan v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 622: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1784: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1120: AIR 1997 SC 3400: 1997 Cri LJ 4059.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-1997]

[2437] — S. 197 — Sanction power — Nature and scope — Matters to be considered for valid exercise of the same — Grant of sanction, by reviewing an earlier sanction order — Permissibility — Held, is permissible but serious application of mind on part of the authority concerned as to existence of fresh materials is imperative — Reviewing authority granting sanction (after a change in Government) without any fresh/new material, held, was improper — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 — CrPC, 1973 — S. 197

An FIR was lodged against the respondent under Sections 7 and 13(2), PC Act. By an order dated 15-12-2002, the competent authority refused to grant sanction for prosecution. The matter, however, was placed before the competent authority once again and on or about 14-9-2004 sanction to prosecute the respondent was granted. The High Court by the impugned order dismissed a writ petition thereagainst, holding that the State has no power to review an order granting sanction having exhausted its jurisdiction once.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The respondent is a public servant. The Governor of the State is his appointing authority. He is, therefore, not removable from his office save by and with the sanction of the Government and in that view of the matter if he is accused in any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in discharging of his official duty, grant of prior sanction is imperative in character in terms of Section 197 CrPC. (Para 5)

Although the State in the matter of grant or refusal to grant sanction exercises statutory jurisdiction under Section 197, the same, however, would not mean that power once exercised cannot be exercised once again. For exercising its jurisdiction at a subsequent stage, express power of review in the State may not be necessary as even such a power is administrative in character. (Para 6)

Validity of an order of sanction would depend upon application of mind on the part of the authority concerned and consideration of all the material facts and evidence collected during investigation and placed before it. While granting sanction, the authority cannot take into consideration an irrelevant fact nor can it pass an order on extraneous consideration not germane for passing a statutory order. While passing an order for grant of sanction, serious application of mind on the part of the authority concerned is imperative. (Paras 7 and 6)

In the present case there is no application to show the necessity for reconsideration or review of the earlier order on the basis of the materials placed before the sanctioning authority or otherwise. Such application of mind does not appear from the order of sanction. The High Court in its judgment has clearly held, upon perusing the entire records, that no fresh material was produced. There is also nothing to show as to why reconsideration became necessary. On what premise such a procedure was adopted is not known. (Paras 21 and 7)

Only when a new Government came in, was a request made for reconsideration of the earlier order. It is not a case where fresh materials were placed before the sanctioning authority. The Government sent nine letters for obtaining the clarifications regarding false implications of the respondent, which were not replied to. If the clarification sought for by the Hon'ble Minister had been supplied, the same should have formed a ground for reconsideration of the order. Only a communication was received from the Director, Vigilance Bureau, which according to the High Court, was not a new material. (Paras 14 to 20 and 8). State of Punjab v. Mohd. Iqbal Bhatti, (2009) 17 SCC 92: 2010 Cri LJ 1436: (2010) 4 CTC 458 (SC): (2009) 4 CHN 65 (SC): (2009) 82 AIC 114 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2009]

[2438] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Sanction order — Issuing authority — Conflicting evidence regarding validity of the order — Under-Secretary who was also holding additional charge of Deputy Secretary at the material time claiming to have given the sanction — Secretary of the same Department also deposing that he had granted sanction for prosecution though signature on the order was of the said Under-Secretary as correspondence was usually done by him after passing of orders on file — On the date of issue of sanction, the relevant file was in the Chief Minister's office — It was therefore not clear how the sanction was issued when the relevant file was not available to the Secretary and the Under-Secretary — In view of the inconsistency of facts, the sanction, held, was void ab initio — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6(1) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19(1). Mansukhlal Vithaldas Chauhan v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 622: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1784: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1120: AIR 1997 SC 3400: 1997 Cri LJ 4059.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-1997]

[2439] — S. 197 — Policy and object underlying provisions for grant of sanction — Protection not absolute — Sanctioning authority must keep in mind the public interest and the interest of law while deciding the question of grant of sanction. State v. Krishanchand Khushalchand Jagtiani, (1996) 4 SCC 472: 1996 SCC (Cri) 755: AIR 1996 SC 1910.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Jeevan Reddy and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-1996]

[2440] — S. 197 — Grant or refusal of sanction — Proper mode and manner for — Order of, held, must be preceded by application of mind on the part of the appropriate authority — If the complainant or the accused can demonstrate such an order to be suffering from non-application of mind, the same may be called in question before a competent court of law — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — S. 19 (Para 14). Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 593: AIR 2006 SC 336: 2005 Cri LJ 5068: (2005) 36 AIC 108 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-2005]

[2441] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of public servant — Application of mind — Order granting sanction — An administrative act and hence predecisional opportunity not required to be afforded to the public servant — But there must be proper application of mind to the existence of prima facie evidence of commission of the offence — Facts constituting the offence must be shown on the face of the sanction order — Presumption under S. 114(e) of Evidence Act is raised in favour of an order passed on proper application of mind — Burden lies on accused to rebut the presumption — If presumption is rebutted onus shifts on the prosecution to prove that the sanction was accorded on proper application of mind by the appropriate authority — Held on facts, sanction granted considering case diary, not vitiated by non-application of mind

Per Kuldip Singh, J.

In the present case the investigation was complete on the date of sanction and police reports had been filed before the Magistrate. The sanctioning authority has specifically mentioned in the sanction order that the papers and the case diary were taken into consideration before granting the sanction. Case diary is a complete record of the police investigation. It contains total material in support or otherwise of the allegations. The sanctioning authority having taken the case diary into consideration before the grant of sanction it cannot be said that there was non-application of mind on the part of the sanctioning authority. It is nobody's case that the averment in the sanction order to the effect that case diary was taken into consideration by the competent authority, is incorrect.

(9) Sanction/Sanction order if proper — Matters to be considered (contd.)

The findings of the High Court that no offence is made out against the respondents under the Essential Commodities Act is also based on the appreciation of 'the annexures' and other disputed facts on the record and as such is untenable for the reasons already indicated.

Per K. Ramaswamy, J. (supplementing)

Before granting sanction the authority or the appropriate Government must have before it the necessary report and the material facts which prima facie establish the commission of offence charged for and that the appropriate Government would apply their mind to those facts. The order of sanction is only an administrative act and not a quasi-judicial one and does not involve any lis. Therefore, the order of sanction need not contain detailed reasons in support thereof. But the basic facts that constitute the offence must be apparent on the impugned order and the record must bear out the reasons in that regard. The question of giving an opportunity to the public servant at that stage does not arise. Proper application of mind to the existence of prima facie evidence of the commission of the offence is only a precondition to grant or refuse to grant sanction. When the Government accords sanction, S. 114(e) of the Evidence Act raises presumption that the official acts have been regularly performed. The burden is heavier on the accused to establish the contra to rebut that statutory presumption. Once that is done then it is the duty of the prosecution to produce necessary record to establish that after application of mind and consideration thereof to the subject the grant or refusal to grant sanction was made by the appropriate authority. State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222: 1992 SCC (Cri) 192: AIR 1991 SC 1260.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh[1] and K. Ramaswamy[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-1991]

[2442] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Validity — Held, valid — Sanction to prosecute, alleged to be illegal for non-application of mind — Held on facts, sanction order has been issued in accordance with law — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19

It would not be possible to conclude that the sanction order in the present case was not valid. A perusal of sanction order would show that the sanctioning authority has adverted to all the necessary facts which have been actually proved by the prosecution in the trial. Upon examination of the material facts, the sanctioning authority has certified that it is the authority competent to remove the appellant from the office. It is specifically stated that the statements of the witnesses have been duly examined. Sanction order also states that the other materials such as copy of the FIR as well as the other official documents such as the different mahazars were carefully examined. Upon examination of the statements of the witnesses as also the material on record, the sanctioning authority has duly recorded its satisfaction that the appellant should be prosecuted for the offences, as noticed above. Hence, there is no merit in the submissions of the accused that the sanctioning order to prosecute him was not legal. (Paras 12 to 16). Kootha Perumal v. State, (2011) 1 SCC 491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B. Sudershan Reddy and S.S. Nijjar, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-2010]

Jaswant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 124: 1958 Cri LJ 265, relied on

Basdeo Agarwala v. King Emperor, (1945) 7 FCR 93; Gokulchand Dwarkadas Morarka v. R., (1947-48) 75 IA 30; Yusofalli Mulla Noorbhoy v. R., (1948-49) 76 IA 158, referred to [2443] — S. 197 — Non-application of mind and grant of sanction mechanically by sanctioning authority — Basis of acquittal by High Court — High Court deeply influenced in its decision by the fact that a model sanction order was enclosed with the record sent to the sanctioning authority — Held, acquittal not justified — There was no infirmity in the order granting sanction — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(1)(d) and 5(2) read with S. 161 IPC. State of T.N. v. Damodaran, 1993 Supp (1) SCC 221: 1993 SCC (Cri) 272: AIR 1992 SC 563.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-1991]

(10) Review of Sanction order

See also Section 197, '(9) Sanction/Sanction order if proper — Matters to be considered', above and

'(17) Judicial review of/interference with sanction', below

[2444] — S. 197 — Sanction power — Nature and scope — Matters to be considered for valid exercise of the same — Grant of sanction, by reviewing an earlier sanction order — Permissibility — Held, is permissible but serious application of mind on part of the authority concerned as to existence of fresh materials is imperative — Reviewing authority granting sanction (after a change in Government) without any fresh/new material, held, was improper — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 — CrPC, 1973 — S. 197. State of Punjab v. Mohd. Iqbal Bhatti, (2009) 17 SCC 92: 2010 Cri LJ 1436: (2010) 4 CTC 458: (2009) 4 CHN 65: (2009) 82 AIC 114 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2009]

(11) Hearing/Disclosure of inculpatory material to accused before sanction

[2445] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Sanctioning authority not obliged to grant an opportunity of giving an explanation and hearing to the accused — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — S. 6 (Paras 6 and 7). State Anti-Corruption Bureau, Hyderabad v. P. Suryaprakasam, 1999 SCC (Cri) 373.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1996]

State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222: 1992 SCC (Cri) 192; State of Maharashtra v. Ishwar Piraji Kalpatri, (1996) 1 SCC 542: 1996 SCC (Cri) 150; K. Veeraswami v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 655: 1991 SCC (Cri) 734, followed [2446] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Hearing — Sanctioning authority not obliged to grant an opportunity of giving an explanation and hearing to the accused — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — S. 6 (Paras 6 and 7) . State Anti-Corruption Bureau v. P. Suryaprakasam, (2008) 14 SCC 13.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1996]

State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222: 1992 SCC (Cri) 192; State of Maharashtra v. Ishwar Piraji Kalpatri, (1996) 1 SCC 542: 1996 SCC (Cri) 150; K. Veeraswami v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 655: 1991 SCC (Cri) 734, followed

[2447] — Ss. 197, 154 and 202 — Opportunity of hearing not required at the stage of sanction for prosecution, or filing of FIR or enquiry under S. 202 — Natural justice — Hearing

Section 5 deals only with the decision taken by the Central Govt. to prosecute and until that decision is notified, the prosecution does not start, and the question of an accused being heard at that stage, therefore, does not arise at all.

In cases where the laws requires sanction to be given by the appointing authority before a prosecution can be launched against a government servant, it has never been suggested that the accused must be heard before sanction is accorded. The question of sanction arises at a point of time when there is no danger to the liberty of the subject and the accused at that stage is not in the picture at all. It is only after sanction is accorded that an accused is brought to trial or proceedings are started against him when he is to be heard and can challenge the validity of the sanction. Similarly, when a first information report is filed before a police officer, the law does not require that the officer must hear the accused before recording it or submitting a charge-sheet to the court. Where a complaint is filed before a Magistrate who chooses to hold an inquiry under S. 202 Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 before issuing process or summons to the accused, the accused has got no locus to appear and file his objections to the inquiry at that stage. The right of the accused to be heard comes into existence only when an order summoning the accused is passed by the magistrate under S. 204 of the Code. V.C. Shukla v. State (Delhi Admn.), 1980 Supp SCC 249: 1980 SCC (Cri) 849: AIR 1980 SC 1382 (Judgmen: 1980 Cri LJ 965.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, P.S. Kailasam and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-4-1980]

[2448] — Ss. 197, 207, 169 and 170 — Challenge to sanction for prosecution — Privilege in respect of files relating to grant of sanction and notings of Minister in respect of grant of sanction, until evidence had been led in trial — Power of determination of, by court — Propriety of permitting inspection of said materials on ground that the same had been adverted to in the affidavit filed by the investigating agency, and hence accused had therefor acquired the right of inspection in line with the principle under Or. 11 R. 15 Civil Procedure Code — Freedom of Information Act, 2002, S. 8 — Exemption from disclosure of information — Applicability of S. 8(1)(b) — CPC, 1908, Or. 11 R. 15 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 123 and 124

Disposing of the appeals in the terms below,

Held :

Challenges to sanction for prosecution and maintainability of the writ petition were pending consideration before the High Court. In remitting the matter to the High Court the Supreme Court had requested the High Court to consider the question of maintainability of the writ petition on the same date itself. However, in spite of the specific direction, the High Court failed to comply with it. Accordingly, the order of the High Court dated 21-2-2007 whereby the High Court directed inspection of records of the files relating to the grant of sanction for prosecution to the accused, Respondent 1 prior to the prosecution leading evidence in the trial court and granted inspection of the notings of the Finance Minister in respect of the grant of sanction to the accused also, is set aside. The High Court had permitted inspection on the ground that the materials in question had been adverted to in the affidavit filed by the appellant CBI. (Paras 10, 11, 2 and 4)

Since the writ petition is pending, the High Court is requested to peruse these notings and the observations made by the Finance Minister and thereafter issue appropriate directions to the parties to the action. Since the challenge is pending consideration before the High Court, it is requested to take up both the issues of maintainability and the validity of sanction for prosecution simultaneously and decide the same on merits and in accordance with law and after affording opportunity to the parties to the action, CBI is directed to place the notings and observations made by the Finance Minister in a sealed cover before the Judges of the High Court who hear the writ petition. Respondent 1 will have no right of inspection till the entire file is perused by the High Court and orders issued thereupon. (Paras 12 to 14). CBI v. Ashok Kumar Aggarwal, (2007) 10 SCC 736: (2007) 52 AIC 3 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-3-2007]

(12) Relative scope vis-à-vis S. 6, PC Act, 1947

See also Section 197, '(3) Retirement/Change in post of public servant, etc. — Effect on protection under S. 197', above

[2449] — S. 197 — Accused ceasing to be a public servant on the date of taking cognizance of offences under the PC Act, 1947 — Sanction not necessary — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6

An accused facing prosecution for offences under the PC Act cannot claim any immunity on the ground of want of sanction, if he ceased to be a public servant on the date when the court took cognizance of the said offences. (Para 6). State of Kerala v. V. Padmanabhan Nair, (1999) 5 SCC 690: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1031: AIR 1999 SC 2405: 1999 Cri LJ 3696: (1999) 4 LLN 77.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-1999]

S.A. Venkataraman v. State, AIR 1958 SC 107: 1958 SCR 1040; C.R. Bansi v. State of Maharashtra, (1970) 3 SCC 537: 1970 SCC (Cri) 143; Kalicharan Mahapatra v. State of Orissa, (1998) 6 SCC 411: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1455, followed

[2450] — S. 197 — Precondition for sanction under S. 6, PC Act, 1947 — Held, accused must continue to be a public servant on the date of taking cognizance of offence by court and not on the date of commission of the offence

The relevant date with reference to which a valid sanction is sine qua non for taking cognizance of an offence committed by a public servant as required by S. 6 is the date on which the court is called upon to take cognizance of the offence of which he is accused. If, therefore, when the offence is alleged to have been committed, the accused was a public servant but by the time the court is called upon to take cognizance of the offence committed by him as public servant, he has ceased to be a public servant, no sanction would be necessary for taking cognizance of the offence against him. This approach is in accord with the policy underlying S. 6 in that a public servant is not to be exposed to harassment of a frivolous or speculative prosecution. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1984) 2 SCC 183: 1984 SCC (Cri) 172: AIR 1984 SC 684: 1984 Cri LJ 613: (1984) 1 SLR 619: (1984) 86 Bom LR 365.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: D.A. Desai, R.S. Pathak, O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-1984]

See also K. Karunakaran v. State of Kerala, (2007) 1 SCC 59; Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2007) 1 SCC 49; Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1; Balakrishnan Ravi Menon v. Union of India, (2007) 1 SCC 45

[2451] — S. 197 — Unavailability of protection of S. 6 of PC Act, 1947 or 197 CrPC — Effect — Held, the effect is that the accused ceases to be a public servant and loses his protective cover under Section 6 of the PC Act, 1947 or Section 197 CrPC and is open to prosecution without sanction having to be obtained — Also, the Special Judge under the W.B. Special Courts Act, 1949, would cease to have jurisdiction — W.B. Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act, 1949 (21 of 1949), S. 4 and Paras 2 and 3 of Schedule

It is no doubt true that the policy under Section 6 of the PC Act, 1947 is that there should not be unnecessary harassment of a public servant. But if the accused ceases to be a public servant and loses his protective cover under Section 6 of the PC Act, 1947 or Section 197 CrPC and is open to prosecution without sanction having to be obtained, it would also necessarily mean that the Special Judge under the Special Courts Act, 1949, would cease to have jurisdiction over the accused in terms of Section 4 of the Special Courts Act, 1949. (Para 27). State of W.B. v. Shyamadas Banerjee, (2008) 9 SCC 45: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 671: 2008 Cri LJ 4592.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-2008]

(13) Relative scope vis-à-vis S. 19, PC Act, 1988

See also Section 197, '(3) Retirement/Change in post of public servant, etc. — Effect on protection under S. 197', above

[2452] — S. 197 — Grant of sanction under S. 19, PC Act and S. 197 CrPC — Distinction between — Held, in cases covered under the PC Act, 1988 sanction is of automatic nature and thus factual aspects are of little or no consequence — Conversely, in a case relatable to S. 197 CrPC, the substratum and basic features of the case have to be considered to find out whether the alleged act has any nexus to the discharge of official duties — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19

Section 197 CrPC and Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 operate in conceptually different fields. In cases covered under the 1988 Act, in respect of public servants the sanction is of automatic nature and thus factual aspects are of little or no consequence. Conversely, in a case relatable to Section 197 CrPC, the substratum and basic features of the case have to be considered to find out whether the alleged act has any nexus to the discharge of duties. Position is not so in case of Section 19 of the 1988 Act. (Para 10). Paul Varghese v. State of Kerala, (2007) 14 SCC 783: AIR 2007 SC 2618: (2007) 2 KLT 529.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2007) 1 SCC 49: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 241, relied on [2453] — S. 197 — Contrasted with S. 19 of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Sanction for prosecution where accused has ceased to be public servant — Need for — Held, though not necessary under S. 19 of the 1988 Act, it is necessary under S. 197 of the Code (Para 55). State of M.P. v. Sheetla Sahai, (2009) 8 SCC 617: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 901.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2009]

[2454] — S. 197 — Position obtaining under, in respect of those public servants not holding the same post/office — Contrasted with position under S. 19 — PC Act, 1988 — Sanction for prosecution in case public servant is no longer holding the same post/office during the currency of which the alleged offence was committed — Need for — Significance of the word "is" in S. 19(1) — Position obtaining under S. 19 contrasted with that obtaining under S. 197 CrPC in this regard — Object of immunity conferred under S. 19 — Held, following A.R. Antulay, (1984) 2 SCC 183, there is no need to obtain sanction for prosecution of a person, alleged to have committed offence(s) in the capacity of a public servant, where cognizance of such offence(s) is taken after he had already ceased to hold the office in question, though he may continue to be a public servant in any other capacity at the time of taking cognizance — S. 19(1) is time and offence related — In present case, it being found that public servant in question had ceased to be a public servant since he had ceased to hold the office where the alleged offence was committed, question as to non-application of mind, etc. in grant of sanction had become academic — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19

The relevant date with reference to which a valid sanction is sine qua non for taking cognizance of an offence committed by a public servant as required by Section 19 is the date on which the court is called upon to take cognizance of the offence of which he is accused. (Para 16)

The use of the expression "is" in Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 ("the Act") vis-à-vis the expression "is" or "was" used in Section 197 CrPC, 1973 is indicative of the legislative intent. Though certain changes were incorporated while enacting Section 197 CrPC no corresponding change was made in the 1988 Act. (Paras 10 to 15)

The principle of immunity protects all acts which the public servant has to perform in the exercise of the functions of the Government. The purpose for which they are performed protects these acts from criminal prosecution. However, there is an exception. Where a criminal act is performed under the colour of authority but which in reality is for the public servant's own pleasure or benefit then such acts shall not be protected under the doctrine of State immunity. So where the act performed under the colour of office is for the benefit of the officer or for his own pleasure Section 19(1) will come in. Therefore, Section 19(1) is time and offence related. (Paras 20 and 21)

It was contended that even if the offending act is committed by a public servant in his former capacity and even if such a public servant has not abused his subsequent office still such a public servant needs protection of Section 19(1) of the Act throughout, as long as he continues to be in public employment, and that the judgment of the Supreme Court in R.S. Nayak case, (1984) 2 SCC 183, holding that the subsequent position of the public servant to be unprotected, was erroneous. This contention is clearly untenable as Section 19(1) of the Act is time and offence related. (Paras 23 and 24)

(13) Relative scope vis-à-vis S. 19, PC Act, 1988 (contd.)

Protection to public servants under Section 19(1) has to be confined to the time-related criminal acts performed under the colour or authority for public servant's own pleasure or benefit as categorised under Sections 7, 10, 11, 13 and 15. This is the principle behind the test propounded by the Supreme Court, namely, the test of abuse of office. (Para 26)

So far as the question about the non-application of mind in the sanction or absence of sanction in the present case is concerned, this has been answered in the first question i.e. where the public servant has ceased to be a public servant since he has ceased to hold the office where the alleged offence is supposed to have taken place, the other questions really become academic. (Para 39)

The five clauses contained in Section 13(1) of the 1988 Act represent different types of infraction under which the offence can be said to have been committed. If there is material to show that the alleged offence falls in any of the aforesaid categories, it is not necessary at the stage of filing of the charge-sheet to specify as to which particular clause covers the alleged offence. It is the stand of the respondent State that clauses (a), (b), (d) and (e) are all attracted and not clause (c). Therefore, the sanctioning authority has rightly referred only to Section 13(1) and that does not make the sanction order vulnerable. (Para 46). Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193: AIR 2007 SC 1274: (2007) 51 AIC 623 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1984) 2 SCC 183: 1984 SCC (Cri) 172; S.A. Venkataraman v. State, AIR 1958 SC 107: 1958 Cri LJ 254; P.V. Narasimha Rao v. State (CBI/SPE), (1998) 4 SCC 626: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1108, followed

C.R. Bansi v. State of Maharashtra, (1970) 3 SCC 537: 1971 SCC (Cri) 143; K.S. Dharmadatan v. Central Govt., (1979) 4 SCC 204: 1979 SCC (Cri) 958; Habibulla Khan v. State of Orissa, (1995) 2 SCC 437: 1995 SCC (Cri) 382; Shreekantiah Ramayya Munipalli v. State of Bombay, (1955) 1 SCR 1177: AIR 1955 SC 287: 1955 Cri LJ 857; Balakrishnan Ravi Menon v. Union of India, (2007) 1 SCC 45; Kalicharan Mahapatra v. State of Orissa, (1998) 6 SCC 411: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1455; K.S. Dharmadatan v. Central Govt., (1979) 4 SCC 204: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1958; W. Devis & Sons Ltd. v. Atkins, 1977 ICR 662: (1977) 3 All ER 40, relied on [2455] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution under S. 19, PC Act, 1988 — When not required — Order of compulsory retirement passed against appellant on 10-1-1989 — Order set aside by CAT — Interim order passed by Supreme Court staying order of CAT — During operation of the interim stay, prosecution launched against appellant for offences under S. 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and S. 120-B IPC — Order of CAT ultimately set aside by Supreme Court on 11-1-1994 — Petition filed by appellant before Special Judge claiming that in absence of sanction under S. 19, prosecution could not be proceeded with — Petition dismissed and revision thereagainst also dismissed — Contention raised that effect of interim stay granted by Supreme Court was not that the order of CAT got quashed but was that it remained only inoperative and as such appellant continued to be in service requiring sanction for his prosecution — Held, contention not acceptable — As the order of CAT was not operative, order of compulsory retirement remained in force at the time of launching of prosecution and therefore sanction under S. 19 not required — Moreover, Supreme Court having quashed the order of CAT holding that appellant had been compulsorily retired w.e.f. 10-1-1989, on the day prosecution was launched no sanction was required — Question whether sanction under S. 197 CrPC would be required or not would depend upon facts and circumstances of the case, hence left open (Paras 4 to 9). V.P. Sheth v. State of M.P., (2004) 13 SCC 767.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-2003]

Shree Chamundi Mopeds Ltd. v. Church of South India Trust Assn. CSI Cinod Secretariat, (1992) 3 SCC 1, relied on [2456] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of public servant — When not necessary under PC Act, 1988 — Held, not required when the accused public servant had already retired by the time the court was called upon to take cognizance of the offence — Ranbir Penal Code, 1932 (1989 Smvt.), Ss. 161, 164, 165 and 167-A — J&K Public Servants Prevention of Corruption Act, 1975', Ss. 6, 5(2) and 5(3) (Para 4). State of J&K v. Charan Dass Puri, (1999) 5 SCC 738: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1999]

Kalicharan Mahapatra v. State of Orissa, (1998) 6 SCC 411: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1455, followed

R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128, distinguished

[2457] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution in relation to offences under PC Act and IPC — When sanction accorded amounts to a "composite sanction" — Test to determine — Held, for the sanction order to amount to a composite order there must be an immediate or proximate connection between PC Act and IPC offences for which accused is charged — The test to be applied in such a case would be whether the offences under IPC are also required to be proved in relation to the offences under the PC Act — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — S. 19

The accused R was charged with offences under Sections 409, 167, 218, 419, 420, 465, 463 and 471 IPC and under Section 13(d), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988.

Held :

It is not in dispute that the Deputy Inspector General of Police was the competent authority for grant of sanction as against the respondent R in terms of the provisions of the 1988 Act. The State, thus, could not have interfered with that part of the said order whereby requisite sanction had been granted under the 1988 Act. The contention to the effect that the order of sanction passed by the Deputy Inspector General of Police was a composite one and, thus, the State could cancel the same, is unacceptable. Offences under the Penal Code and offences under the 1988 Act are different and distinct. On the face of the allegations made against R, they do not have any immediate or proximate connection. The test which is required to be applied in such a case is as to whether the offences for one reason or the other punishable under the Penal Code are also required to be proved in relation to offences punishable under the 1988 Act. If the answer to the said question is rendered in the negative, the same test can be applied in relation to a matter of sanction. (Para 12). Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 593: AIR 2006 SC 336: 2005 Cri LJ 5068: (2005) 36 AIC 108 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-2005]

[2458] — S. 197 — Offence committed by a public servant — He is liable to be prosecuted under the PC Act, 1988 even if he has ceased to be a public servant at the time of the trial or during pendency of the prosecution — However no sanction is required if he has ceased to be a public servant at the time of taking cognizance — Merely because under S. 197 of new CrPC requirement of sanction is made applicable to former public servants also it cannot be inferred that no prosecution can be launched against a public servant who ceases to be so subsequently — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 19, 13(2) and 13(1)(e)

A public servant who committed an offence mentioned in the Act, while he was a public servant, can be prosecuted with the sanction contemplated in Section 19 of the Act if he continues to be a public servant when the court takes cognizance of the offence. But if he ceases to be a public servant by that time, the court can take cognizance of the offence without any such sanction. In other words, the public servant who committed the offence while he was a public servant, is liable to be prosecuted whether he continues in office or not at the time of trial or during the pendency of the prosecution.

There is no indication anywhere in the provisions of the Act that an offence committed by a public servant under the Act would vanish off from penal liability at the moment he demits his office as public servant. His being a public servant is necessary when he commits the offence in order to make him liable under the Act. He cannot commit any such offence after he demits his office.

If the interpretation now sought to be placed by the appellant is accepted, it would lead to the absurd position that any public servant could commit the offences under the Act soon before retiring or demitting his office and thus avert any prosecution for it or that when a public servant is prosecuted for an offence under the Act, he can secure an escape by protracting the trial till the date of superannuation.

In Section 197 of the new CrPC the necessity for previous sanction is made applicable to former public servants also by using the words "when any person who is or was a public servant". In spite of bringing such a significant change to Section 197 of the Code in 1973, Parliament was circumspect enough not to change the wording in Section 19 of the Act which deals with sanction. The reason is obvious. The sanction contemplated in Section 197 of the Code concerns a public servant who "is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty", whereas the offences contemplated in the PC Act are those which cannot be treated as acts either directly or even purportedly done in the discharge of his official duties. Parliament must have desired to maintain the distinction and hence the wording in the corresponding provision in the former PC Act was materially imported in the new PC Act, 1988 without any change in spite of the change made in Section 197 of the Code. Kalicharan Mahapatra v. State of Orissa, (1998) 6 SCC 411: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1455: AIR 1998 SC 2595.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas, J. [Date of decision: 4-8-1998]

[2459] — S. 197 — Grant of sanction under S. 19, PC Act, 1988 — Nature of exercise involved — Position contrasted with that obtaining under S. 197 CrPC — Held, in cases covered under S. 19, PC Act, 1988 sanction is of automatic nature and thus factual aspects are of little or no consequence — Conversely, in a case relatable to S. 197 CrPC, the substratum and basic features of the case have to be considered to find out whether the alleged act has any nexus with the discharge of official duties — Reason therefor, explained — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19

(13) Relative scope vis-à-vis S. 19, PC Act, 1988 (contd.)

Section 197 CrPC and Section 19 of the PC Act, 1988 operate in conceptually different fields. In cases covered under the PC Act, 1988 in respect of public servants the sanction is of automatic nature and thus factual aspects are of little or no consequence. Conversely, in a case relatable to Section 197 CrPC, the substratum and basic features of the case have to be considered to find out whether the alleged act has any nexus with the discharge of duties. Position is not so in case of Section 19 of the PC Act, 1988. The reason is obvious. (Para 10). Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2007) 1 SCC 49: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 241: (2007) 1 KLT 47: (2007) 50 AIC 107 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

[2460] — S. 197 — Grant of sanction under S. 197 CrPC and S. 19, Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Distinction between the two — Held, the former is to be granted by the State whereas the latter can be granted also by the authorities specified in S. 19 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 (Para 11). Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 593: AIR 2006 SC 336: 2005 Cri LJ 5068: (2005) 36 AIC 108 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-2005]

(14) Relative scope vis-à-vis other provisions/statutes

[2461] — Ss. 197 and 132 — Difference between sanction under the two provisions

Six significant points of difference need to be highlighted:

(1) The two sanctions are addressed to altogether different persons. While sanction under S. 132 is addressed to the intending complainant, sanction under S. 197 is addressed to the Magistrate presiding over a court.

(2) The two sanctions serve two altogether different purposes. While the sanction under S. 132 clothes the intending complainant with authority to institute a complaint and set the machinery of the criminal court in action, the sanction under S. 197 clothes the court with the jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence. Without the former, the intending complainant cannot trigger the proceedings, without the latter the Magistrate cannot have seisin over the matter or act in the matter.

(3) The absence of sanction in each case visits different persons with different consequences. absence of the former disables the intending complainant whereas absence of the latter disables the court.

(4) The disability operates in two different spheres. Want of sanction under S. 132 renders the complaint invalid. Want of sanction under S. 197 vitiates all the proceedings in the court. For want of the former, the complainant cannot complain, for want of the latter the court cannot try the case.

(5) The sanctioning authority has to address itself to different questions. In regard to a sanction under S. 132, CrPC the question to be answered is whether the intending complainant is a suitable person to be authorized for prosecuting the matter in good faith. In regard to the sanction under S. 197 the question to be answered is which particular court should be empowered to try the case. So also in granting sanction under S. 197 the sanctioning authority has to consider whether or not to exercise the powers under S. 197(4) to specify "the person by whom, the manner in which, and the offence or offences for which" the concerned public servant should be tried and "the court before which the trial is to be held". The authority seized of the matter in the context of sanction under S. 132 does not have to address himself to these questions and in fact has no competence in this behalf.

(6) One is an authority to an individual to 'prosecute' the alleged offender, the other is an authority to 'try' the alleged offender.

Therefore, a sanction under S. 132 is no substitute for a sanction under S. 197. Ram Kumar v. State of Haryana, (1987) 1 SCC 476: 1987 SCC (Cri) 190: AIR 1987 SC 735: 1987 Cri LJ 703.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-1987]

[2462] — S. 197 — Cognizance by Designated TADA Court — Precondition — Sanction of Inspector General of Police or Commissioner of Police — Designated Court under TADA taking cognizance of offence under TADA and convicting the appellant for offences under S. 5 of Explosive Substances Act, 1908 without obtaining previous sanction under S. 20-A(2) — Held, in such situation the Designated Court had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence or to proceed with the trial — TADA (Prevention) Act, 1987, S. 20-A(2)

In absence of previous sanction required by Section 20-A(2) of TADA the Designated Court had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence or to proceed with the trial of the appellant under TADA. The important feature which is to be noted is that the prosecution did not obtain sanction of the Inspector General of Police or of the Commissioner of Police for prosecution of the appellant under TADA at any stage as is required by Section 20-A(2) of TADA. The trial of the appellant before the Designated Court proceeded without such sanction. (Para 8). Harpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2007) 13 SCC 387: AIR 2008 SC 743.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-12-2007]

Rambhai Nathabhai Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 744: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1169, relied on

[2463] — S. 197 — Designated Court has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence without a valid sanction — Sanction is granted to the prosecuting agency to prosecute a particular person under TADA and not to the Designated Court to take cognizance of an offence — TADA, 1987, S. 20-A(2)

Taking cognizance is the act which the Designated Court has to perform and granting sanction is an act which the sanctioning authority has to perform. Latter is a condition precedent for the former. Sanction contemplated in the sub-section is the permission to prosecute a particular person for the offence or offences under TADA. Sanction is not granted to the Designated Court to take cognizance of the offence, but it is granted to the prosecuting agency to approach the court concerned for enabling it to take cognizance of the offence and to proceed to trial against the persons arraigned in the report. Thus a valid sanction is sine qua non for enabling the prosecuting agency to approach the court in order to enable the court to take cognizance of the offence under TADA as disclosed in the report. The corollary is that, if there was no valid sanction the Designated Court gets no jurisdiction to try a case against any person mentioned in the report as the court is forbidden from taking cognizance of the offence without such sanction. If the Designated Court has taken cognizance of the offence without a valid sanction, such action is without jurisdiction and any proceedings adopted thereunder will also be without jurisdiction. Rambhai Nathabhai Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 744: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1169: AIR 1997 SC 3475: 1997 Cri LJ 4086.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-1997]

Held to be per incuriam in Prakash Kumar v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 2 SCC 409*

[2464] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution of the President, executive authority or any member of a Panchayat — Held, if a person ceases to hold any of the said office on retirement or otherwise, no sanction is required for his prosecution — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 — Kerala Panchayats Act, 1960 (32 of 1960), S. 122(1)

Under Section 122(1) sanction to prosecute the President, executive authority or members of a Panchayat is necessary for prosecution of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. If a person ceases to hold the above office on retirement or otherwise no sanction for prosecution is necessary. The petitioner who retired from the service could not claim protection under this section as he ceased to hold the post under the Panchayat. (Paras 9 and 12). State of Kerala v. M.M. Manikantan Nair, (2001) 4 SCC 752: 2001 SCC (Cri) 808: AIR 2001 SC 2145: 2001 Cri LJ 2346.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2001]

State of Kerala v. V. Padmanabhan Nair, (1999) 5 SCC 690: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1031; R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (1996) 1 SCC 478: 1996 SCC (Cri) 128, relied on

[2465] — S. 197 — Prosecution of STO — Prior sanction of State Govt. required under S. 48 of M.P. General Sales Tax Act — Requirements are absolute — Raid conducted by STO (Appellant 2) under S. 29 — According to respondent, in order to extract illegal gratification and to pressurise them, the STO conducted illegal search and seizure by misusing the office and also raised heavy demands of tax and penalty and got revocation of the sales tax registration certificate — Respondent also alleged that the STO lodged a report under S. 353 IPC with police resulting in his prosecution but he was later acquitted and that only on the basis of alleged fact that respondent had prevented the officials to make search and had abused the STO and his subordinates, S. 353 IPC was invoked — Held, STO having acted in discharge of duties entrusted under the Act, S. 48 attracted — M.P. General Sales Tax Act, 1958 (2 of 1959), S. 48

It was contended by the respondents that the cause of action as has been shown in the plaint was based on malicious prosecution on the basis of the report of the STO under Section 353 IPC and, therefore, the question of seeking permission under Section 48 of the Act does not arise.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The language of Section 197 CrPC is somewhat different from that used in Section 48 of the M.P. General Sales Tax Act, 1958. Section 48 of the Act relates to acts done or intended to be done under the Act. Further sub-section (1-a) of Section 48 provides that no officer or servant of the State Government would be liable in respect of any such act referred to in sub-section (1) done in good faith in the course of execution of duty imposed on him or discharge of function entrusted to him by or under the Act, and the power relates both to civil and criminal proceedings. Undisputedly the raid was purportedly conducted under Section 29 of the Act. It is to be noted that the requirements are absolute in terms of Section 48 of the Act. It was highlighted by counsel for the respondent that a bare perusal of the order of acquittal passed shows that the acquittal was purportedly recorded on the basis of findings that the accused prevented the officials to make search and he abused the Sales Tax Officer and his subordinates. Only on the basis of alleged abuse and threat to him, Section 353 IPC was invoked. The reasoning related to non- recording of reasons before the search. Correctness of such a view is open to doubt but that has really no relevance so far as present dispute is concerned. Undisputedly the acts done were in discharge of duties entrusted under the Act. That being so the trial court was justified in holding that Section 48 of the Act is clearly applicable. The High Court has not considered the relevant provisions of law in the proper perspective. The judgment of the High Court is accordingly set aside. (Para 14) . State of M.P. v. Bachha Lal, (2007) 6 SCC 52: (2007) 56 AIC 253 (SC).

(14) Relative scope vis-à-vis other provisions/statutes (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-6-2007]

[Ed.: The decision though supported by the statute does raise the question: What is the remedy for a citizen against misuse of power in purported discharge of official duties?]

[2466] — Ss. 197 and 190(1)(b) & (c) — Requirement of sanction for prosecution under S. 279(1) IT Act — Object of such sanction and procedure for grant thereof, restated — Affording prior opportunity, held, not necessary — However, on facts held, such opportunity was given — Income Tax Act, 1961, S. 279(1) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, S. 20

Per curiam

In the order passed by the CIT granting sanction under Section 279(1) of the Act, it is mentioned that in response to the show-cause notice as to why the provisions of Sections 276-C, 277 read with Section 278 should not be invoked, the assessee filed its explanation. It is further mentioned that the explanation offered by the assessee Company was not satisfactory. The respondents have not disputed the correctness of that statement. The High Court has misread that order and erred in quashing the proceedings. (Para 4)

There are provisions similar to Section 279 of the Act, in many other statutes which put an embargo on the power of the court to take cognizance of the offence except with the previous sanction of the competent authority in the statute like Section 197 of CrPC, Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act or Section 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. The Magistrate can take cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(b) CrPC in the former case if the police, after investigation, submits a charge-sheet and in the latter case under Section 190(1)(c) CrPC. It is in order to protect persons from unnecessary prosecution and consequent harassment that a provision for sanction is made. The sanction to prosecute is undoubtedly an important matter and it constitutes a condition precedent to the institution of the prosecution. It is desirable that the facts should be referred to on the face of the sanction, but this is not essential. If the facts constituting the offence charged are not shown on the face of the sanction, the prosecution must, in the course of the trial, prove by extraneous evidence that those facts were placed before the sanctioning authority and the authority after applying his mind to the relevant facts had accorded the sanction. The authority giving the sanction should prima facie consider the evidence and all other attending circumstances before he comes to a conclusion that the prosecution in the circumstances be sanctioned or forbidden. But he is not required to hold any inquiry to satisfy himself as to the truth of facts alleged. An order of sanction, by itself, does not have the effect of a conviction or imposing a penalty causing any injury of any kind on the accused. The accused will get full opportunity to defend himself in the trial and the trial will take place in accordance with the procedure established by law. The grant of sanction is purely an administrative act and affording of opportunity of hearing to the accused is not contemplated at that stage. The legal position is, therefore, clear that no opportunity of hearing was required to be afforded to the respondents before grant of sanction. (Paras 5, 7, 8, 8.1, 25 and 53). Asstt. Commr. v. Velliappa Textiles Ltd., (2003) 11 SCC 405: (2003) 263 ITR 550.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu^{3}, B.N. Srikrishna^{2} and G.P. Mathur^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-9-2003]

Supdt. of Police (CBI) v. Deepak Chowdhary, (1995) 6 SCC 225: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1095, followed

P.V. Pai v. R.L. Rinawma, ILR 1993 Kant 709, overruled on this point

[2467] — Ss. 197 and 482 — Bar of prior sanction — Applicability — Appellant, an Assistant Commissioner of Commercial Tax passed assessment order after inspecting the business premises and after giving adequate opportunity to the proprietor to file explanation — No explanation filed and instead a criminal complaint filed against the appellant for offences under Ss. 448, 380, 384 and 506 IPC — Petition filed under S. 482 CrPC dismissed by High Court — Held, facts clearly prove that there was abuse of process of law since S. 37 of the Andhra Pradesh General Sales Act provides protection of acts done in good faith and makes previous sanction of State Government mandatory — Andhra Pradesh General Sales Tax Act, 1957 (6 of 1957), Ss. 37, 27 and 28

The appellant, at the relevant time was working as Assistant Commissioner of Commercial Taxes. He along with his subordinate staff went to the business premises belonging to Respondent 2 for carrying out an inspection during business hours. The premises were registered business premises of M/s RF whose proprietor was the son of Respondent 2. In the same business premises, the documents and business stocks relating to KSB were also noticed. During the inspection, the son of Respondent 2 along with one KS, said to be one of the partners of KSB was available.

A statement of inspection was recorded by the appellant on a request of the son of Respondent 2 and KS on their business letter pad. The statement was written by the son of Respondent 2 and KS on their own, wherein they duly declared that till the date of such inspection, they had not written any of the books of accounts relating to their business and that they did not even give the returns for the year 1993-1994. The stock book was signed and returned. No cash was recovered. Thereafter the matter was taken up and best-judgment assessment was completed.

After a period of three months after the inspection, Respondent 2 herein who was not the owner of the business filed a complaint for alleged commission of offences punishable under Sections 448, 380, 384 and 506 of the Penal Code, 1860 (in short "IPC") before the Judicial Magistrate, First Class stating that the appellant along with his subordinate, had taken away the bill books, chequebooks, records and also Indira Vikas Patras (for short "IVPs") worth Rs 2 lakhs forcibly without giving any acknowledgment and without conducting panchnama, intimidating his son and forcibly taking the signatures of his son on white papers with an intention to extract Rs 3 lakhs.

The above complaint was referred by the Magistrate to the police which after enquiry filed a final report stating that the complaint itself was a false complaint. However, the police report was objected to by the complainant as wrong and incorrect and that it is without any proper investigation. Without giving any reasons whatsoever and without recording any defect in the final report of the police and without any sufficient additional materials, the said objection was taken into cognizance and the Magistrate issued notice and process to the appellant and his subordinate and the officials were asked to appear before the court for trial of offences under Sections 448, 380, 384 and 506 IPC.

A petition under Section 482 CrPC was filed before the High Court praying for quashing of the proceedings. It was pointed out that the said complaint itself was false and in any case process ought not to have been issued since there was specific bar contained under Section 37 of the Andhra Pradesh General Sales Tax Act, 1957 (in short "the Act") read with Section 197 CrPC. The High Court dismissed the petition under Section 482 CrPC.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Section 37 like Section 197 CrPC aims at preventing vexatious prosecution and proceedings against public servants. Section 37 puts embargo on institution of suits, prosecution or other proceedings against any officer or any servant of the State Government for any act done or purported to be done under the Act without previous sanction of the State Government. There is a further embargo i.e. no such suit, prosecution or proceeding shall be instituted after the expiry of six months from the date of the act complained of. Sub-section (2) affords protection to the officer referred to above in respect of an act if the same was done in good faith in the course of execution of duties imposed or the discharge of functions entrusted by or under the Act. (Paras 20 and 21)

"Good faith" according to the definition in the General Clauses Act means a thing, which is in fact done honestly whether it is done negligently or not. Anything done with due care and attention which is not mala fide is presumed to have been done in "good faith". Section 197 CrPC provides for protection to public servants in discharge of official duties. There is a need to balance between protection to officers and protection to citizens. (Paras 22 to 24)

(14) Relative scope vis-à-vis other provisions/statutes (contd.)

As the factual scenario goes to show the proceedings were nothing but abuse of the process of law. In view of what is stated in Section 37 of the Act and the ratio in Bhajan Lal case, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335 the appeal deserves to be allowed. (Paras 27 and 28). Goondla Venkateswarlu v. State of A.P., (2008) 9 SCC 613: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 829: (2008) 230 ELT 202.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2008]

Rakesh Kumar Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 557: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 432; State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426, followed

Madhav Rao Jivaji Rao Scindia v. Union of India, (1971) 1 SCC 85; Madhavrao Narayanrao Patwardhan v. Ram Krishna Govind Bhanu, AIR 1958 SC 767: 1959 SCR 564, relied on

[2468] — S. 197 — Scope of S. 64(3), Kerala Police Act, 1960 — Provision different from S. 197(1) CrPC — While S. 64(3) imposes absolute ban against taking cognizance of offence, S. 197(1) CrPC does not impose any absolute ban — Expressions offence committed by a police officer "on account of any act done in pursuance of any duty" in S. 64(3) and "any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty" in S. 197(1) CrPC — Distinction — Expression used in S. 197(1) CrPC is of wider import — Kerala Police Act, 1960 (5 of 1961), S. 64(3)

The context envisaged in Section 197(1) CrPC or the purpose of providing a filter therein is demonstrably different from the object of Section 64(3) of the KP Act. Section 197(1) CrPC does not impose any absolute ban against taking cognizance of the offence, but it only says that the sanction contemplated therein is a condition precedent for taking such cognizance. It obviously is for preventing public servants from being subjected to frivolous prosecutions for discharging their official duties. On the other hand, Section 64(3) of the KP Act incorporates an absolute ban against taking cognizance of the offences of the type mentioned therein on the expiry of the period specified therein. (Para 16)

That apart the words used in Section 197(1) CrPC for qualifying the offence are seemingly wider. The commission of an offence, while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty is of a wider radius when compared with an offence committed on account of an act done in pursuance of any duty or authority. In the latter, the act done itself should be an exercise in discharge of his duty or authority and that act should amount to an offence. It is not enough that the act complained of was only purported to be in exercise of his duty though it may be sufficient under the former. So the scope under Section 64(3) of the KP Act is much narrower than the amplitude of Section 197(1) CrPC for a public servant to claim protection. (Paras 17 and 18). P.P. Unnikrishnan v. Puttiyottil Alikutty, (2000) 8 SCC 131: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1460: AIR 2000 SC 2952.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-9-2000]

K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195, distinguished

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44: 1956 Cri LJ 140: (1955) 2 SCR 925; H.H.B. Gill v. R., AIR 1948 PC 128: 49 Cri LJ 503; Pukhraj v. State of Rajasthan, (1973) 2 SCC 701: 1973 SCC (Cri) 944, relied on

P.P. Unnikrishnan v. Puttiyottil Alikutty, 1999 Cri LJ 4261 (Ker), affirmed

(15) Quashment of proceedings for want of sanction

See also CrPC, 1973 Section 482 p. 1260 in Vol. 2

[2469] — Ss. 197 and 482 — Application for quashing of FIR for want of sanction prior to finding as to whether acts done were in the capacity of official duty — Prematurity of — Proceeding against appellant and others for offences punishable under S. 120-B r/w S. 420 IPC and Ss. 11, 12, and 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(d), PC Act — Appellant by filing S. 482 CrPC petition taking stand that being the Chairman and MD of Indian Bank he was an employee connected with the affairs of the Union in terms of S. 197(1)(a) — Appellant-accused further disputing his direct involvement in the sanction of credit facility — No finding as to whether acts done were in the capacity of official duty having been made, held, the matter should be left open to be decided later — Dismissal of quashment petition by High Court, upheld — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-B r/w S. 420 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 11, 12 and 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(d) (Paras 20, 21 and 23). M. Gopalakrishnan v. State, (2009) 3 SCC 681.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-2009]

P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234; Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193, relied on

Mohd. Hadi Raja v. State of Bihar, (1998) 5 SCC 91: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1265, referred to

[2470] — S. 197 — Quashing of complaint on the ground that sanction under S. 197 CrPC not obtained — In certain cases, depending on the nature of the acts complained of, the complaint cannot be quashed at the initial stage itself — Question of sanction can be raised at any time after the cognizance of offence is taken, maybe even at the time of conclusion of trial — Where respondent police officer falsely implicated the appellant and his brother by showing recovery of illegal weapon and cartridges from them because the appellant did not pay anything out of his earnings to him, held, High Court erred in quashing the complaint on the ground that even if these facts were true then also the case would come within the purview of S. 197 — In cases like the present one, question whether accused acted in the course of performance of his duties and/or whether the defence was pretended or fanciful could only be examined during the course of trial after giving an opportunity to both the parties to establish their case — On facts, question of sanction in the instant case left open to be decided in the main judgment after the conclusion of trial

There can be no dispute on the point that the bar under Section 197 CrPC is mandatory where the act has been done by the public servant in the course of his service or in the discharge of his duty. But, under the said section, no protection has been granted to the public servant if the act complained of is not in connection with the discharge of his duty or in exercise of his duty. (Paras 7 and 10)

However, in certain cases, depending on the nature of the acts complained of, the complaint cannot be quashed at the initial stage itself. (Para 9)

In P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, the Supreme Court held that the question of sanction under Section 197 of the Code can be raised at any time after the cognizance; maybe immediately after cognizance or framing of charge or even at the time of conclusion of trial and after conviction as well. In the present case the 1st respondent had falsely implicated the appellant and his brother in order to teach them a lesson for not paying anything to him. The complaint was that the 1st respondent had brought an illegal weapon and cartridges and falsely shown them to have been recovered from the appellant and his brother. The High Court was not right in saying that even if these facts are true then also the case would come within the purview of Section 197 CrPC. The question whether these acts were committed and/or whether the 1st respondent acted in discharge of his duties could not have been decided in this summary fashion. This is the type of case where the prosecution must be given an opportunity to establish its case by evidence and an opportunity must be given to the defence to establish that he had been acting in the official course of his duty. The question whether the 1st respondent acted in the course of performance of duties and/or whether the defence is pretended or fanciful can only be examined during the course of trial. Therefore, in this case the question of sanction should be left open to be decided in the main judgment which may be delivered upon conclusion of trial. (Paras 8 and 11). Raj Kishor Roy v. Kamleshwar Pandey, (2002) 6 SCC 543: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1423: AIR 2002 SC 2861.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2002]

P.P. Unnikrishnan v. Puttiyottil Alikutty, (2000) 8 SCC 131: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1460; P.K. Pradhan v. State of Sikkim, (2001) 6 SCC 704: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1234, relied on

Matajog Dobey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44: (1955) 2 SCR 925: 1956 Cri LJ 140, limited to its facts and relied on

[2471] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Quashment of — When permissible — Accused being charged for offences under IPC and Prevention of Corruption Act (PC Act) — Entire sanction quashed by State where competent authority specified in PC Act granted sanction under PC Act and also under S. 197 CrPC for offences under IPC, wherefor the State was the competent authority — Propriety of — Held, said quashment by State not proper — State could not have interfered with that part of the order whereby requisite sanction was granted under PC Act — Plea that said sanction was a composite one and, thus, State could cancel the same, held, not sustainable — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 6

The first respondent R, who was a Sub-Inspector at the relevant time, lodged an FIR under the Essential Commodities Act against the agency of the son of the appellant. In that FIR it was alleged that on an inspection made in the office and the godown of the agency, several irregularities were found and some gas cylinders were found to have been sold in black market. The appellant in a letter addressed to the Inspector General of Police alleged that the case registered was false, that while seizing the cylinders, R misappropriated 24 cylinders and that R had demanded and taken a sum of Rs 20,000 in cash from the appellant by way of illegal gratification by putting pressure and the said amount was paid to him in order to avoid maltreatment at his hands. The prosecution against the agency was found to be false and a final report under Section 173 CrPC was submitted for cancellation of the case which was accepted on 11-8-1993.

On the basis of the said allegations contained in the appellant's letter, an FIR was lodged. R was charged with offences under Sections 409, 167, 218, 419, 420, 465, 463 and 471 IPC and under Section 13(d), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. However, upon investigation an untraced report was sent to the Court of Special Judge, who did not agree therewith and by an order dated 23-5-1998 opined that the statements of the witnesses recorded during investigation supported the case of the complainant and the matter required judicial verdict. The Special Judge, therefore, directed the investigating officer to obtain sanction for prosecution against R and submit a final report. The said order was challenged in revision wherein it was observed that no cognizance could be taken by the Special Judge without obtaining proper sanction and it would be open to the sanctioning authority to consider the same. In the meanwhile, R was promoted as Inspector. The Deputy Inspector General of Police issued an order granting sanction under Section 197 CrPC and under Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 so that the competent court could take legal action against R. However, the said order of sanction was withdrawn by the State vide order dated 10-12-1999. The State observed that under Section 197 CrPC only the Government was competent to accord prosecution sanction. Therefore, the prosecution accorded by the Deputy Inspector General of Police was cancelled by the State. Thereafter, the Special Judge observed that sanction was required only under Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, and not under Section 197 CrPC. Even otherwise, the sanction had already been granted by the competent authority. Thus, it was held that there being sanction and statements of the witnesses supporting the case of the complainant, it was desirable that the judicial verdict should come. Therefore, the Special Judge by an order dated 18-4-2000 directed the investigating officer to submit a final report within one month.

(15) Quashment of proceedings for want of sanction (contd.)

The aforesaid judgment was challenged before the High Court. The High Court vide order dated 23-7-2001 set aside the time-bound directions of the Special Judge. The investigating agency was given liberty to continue the investigation and proceed in accordance with law.

Thereafter, a charge-sheet was filed and cognizance of the offence was taken. R filed an application under Section 482 CrPC for quashing of FIR and subsequent proceedings. The High Court observed that (i) the said order dated 23-7-2001 attained finality and, thus, any contention contrary thereto or inconsistent therewith would amount to reviewing thereof which was impermissible in law; (ii) the State having refused to grant a sanction and as the accusations made against R related to discharge of his duties as investigating officer, sanction of prosecution was mandatory; (iii) the first information report could not be quashed as it could not be said that the allegations made therein did not disclose any offence against him. Thus, the High Court held that the order taking cognizance and summoning R without sanction of the competent authority was liable to be quashed. Hence the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Sanction required under Section 197 CrPC and sanction required under the 1988 Act stand on different footings. Whereas sanction under the Penal Code in terms of the Code of Criminal Procedure is required to be granted by the State; under the 1988 Act it can be granted also by the authorities specified in Section 19 thereof. (Para 11)

It is not in dispute that the Deputy Inspector General of Police was the competent authority for grant of sanction as against the respondent R in terms of the provisions of the 1988 Act. The State, thus, could not have interfered with that part of the said order whereby requisite sanction had been granted under the 1988 Act. The contention to the effect that the order of sanction passed by the Deputy Inspector General of Police was a composite one and, thus, the State could cancel the same, is unacceptable. Offences under the Penal Code and offences under the 1988 Act are different and distinct. On the face of the allegations made against R, they do not have any immediate or proximate connection. The test which is required to be applied in such a case is as to whether the offences for one reason or the other punishable under the Penal Code are also required to be proved in relation to offences punishable under the 1988 Act. If the answer to the said question is rendered in the negative, the same test can be applied in relation to a matter of sanction. (Para 12)

The High Court in its impugned order, however, does not appear to have taken that aspect of the matter into consideration. It failed to make a distinction between an order of sanction required for prosecuting a person for commission of an offence under the Penal Code and an order of sanction required for commission of an offence under the 1988 Act. (Para 13). Romesh Lal Jain v. Naginder Singh Rana, (2006) 1 SCC 294: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 593: AIR 2006 SC 336: 2005 Cri LJ 5068: (2005) 36 AIC 108 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-2005]

Naginder Singh Rana v. State of Punjab, 2002 Cri LJ 3124 (P&H), reversed

[2472] — Ss. 197, 220, 221, 227, 239 and 245 — Necessity of sanction for prosecution found to not exist for some charges and unclear for others — Piecemeal discharge or quashment of charges if warranted (Para 16). State of Maharashtra v. Devahari Devasingh Pawar, (2008) 2 SCC 540: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 502: AIR 2008 SC 1375: 2008 Cri LJ 1593.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2008]

(16) Invalid/void/improper sanction — When material to overturn conviction

[2473] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Absence or invalidity of, held, becomes immaterial once the unchallenged trial has ended in conviction — Effort to save the public servant from frivolous or vindictive or mala fide prosecution becomes meaningless if on trial he is in fact found guilty. CBI v. V.K. Sehgal, (1999) 8 SCC 501: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1494: AIR 1999 SC 3706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1999]

Kalpnath Rai v. State (through CBI), (1997) 8 SCC 732: 1998 SCC (Cri) 134, relied on [2474] — Ss. 197 and 465 — Want of valid sanction for prosecution — Condition precedent for reversal of conviction, in appeal on the ground of — After recording the finding of error or irregularity in the sanction, the appellate court (High Court in this case), held, should have decided: (i) whether the same had occasioned a failure of justice; and (ii) whether the objection regarding the validity of sanction had been taken before the trial court — Having not done so, acquittal of the convict by the appellate court on the ground of want of a valid sanction for prosecution, held, wholly unjustified — Penal Code, 1860, S. 161 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(2) & 5(1)(d). State of Orissa v. Mrutunjaya Panda, (1998) 2 SCC 414: 1998 SCC (Cri) 644: AIR 1998 SC 715: 1998 Cri LJ 782.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee, S.P. Kurdukar and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-1998]

[2475] — S. 197 — Sanction for prosecution — Void sanction — Remission of the case back to the sanctioning authority — When not warranted — Held, after a lapse of fourteen years it would not be just and fair to direct initiation of fresh proceedings from the stage of reconsideration by the sanctioning authority and to expose the appellant to a fresh round of litigation for an indefinitely long period — Further held, right to life under Article 21 philosophises early end of criminal proceedings through a speedy trial. Mansukhlal Vithaldas Chauhan v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 622: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1784: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1120: AIR 1997 SC 3400: 1997 Cri LJ 4059.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-1997]

(17) Judicial review of/Interference with sanction

[2476] — S. 197 — Sanction — Judicial review of — Scope — Held, an order refusing to grant sanction may attract judicial review by the superior courts

The legality and/or validity of the order granting sanction would be subject to review by the criminal courts. An order refusing to grant sanction may attract judicial review by the superior courts. It is also well settled that the superior courts cannot direct the sanctioning authority either to grant sanction or not to do so. The source of power of an authority passing an order of sanction must also be considered. The authority concerned cannot also pass an order of sanction subject to ratification of a higher authority. (Paras 6 and 7). State of Punjab v. Mohd. Iqbal Bhatti, (2009) 17 SCC 92: 2010 Cri LJ 1436: (2010) 4 CTC 458: (2009) 4 CHN 65: (2009) 82 AIC 114 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2009]

Mansukhlal Vithaldas Chauhan v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 622: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1784: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1120; State v. Dr. R.C. Anand, (2004) 4 SCC 615: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1380, relied on

[2477] — S. 197 — Issue of orders and directions by High Court under, at premature stage — Writ petition filed by Uttarakhand Sangharsh Samity for directions to State authorities in connection with confrontation between the agitators and the administration which resulted in human rights violation (death, injuries and molestation of women) — Held, High Court was not justified in going into the question of sanction for prosecution of the public servants involved in the offences in such writ petition — High Court was also not justified in issuing directions regarding territorial jurisdiction of court and venue of trial — Constitution of India — Art. 226

It was not necessary to decide the question regarding the offences to be included in the charge which may be framed against the accused persons because that work has to be done by the Sessions Judges concerned after hearing both sides, as provided under Section 228 of the Code. The appellants can raise their arguments regarding what

(17) Judicial review of/Interference with sanction (contd.)

offences can be included in the charge at the appropriate stage. (Para 23)

The question of necessity of sanction need be considered by the Sessions Judge if and when raised by the accused. The High Court should not have embarked upon a discussion regarding sanction at such a premature stage, that too in the writ petition filed by the Samity. If the finding of the High Court is that no sanction is required such a finding has to be treated as bad mainly because that question has to be decided after taking into account various considerations including the fact situation in each case. (Para 24)

The jurisdiction of the Court can be decided on the factual foundation in each case. The High Court should not have pre-empted the Court before which each case would come up in the normal course, to determine the question of jurisdiction, if it is raised by any of the parties. It is difficult for the Supreme Court to comprehend what the learned Judges would have meant by "Special Court" to be established by the State Government. There is no suggestion in the impugned judgment as to what are the offences alleged to have been committed by the officials under any special enactment. The aforesaid direction (extracted above) if allowed to remain in force would create only confusion and provide room for procrastination of the trials. (Para 25). A.K. Singh v. Uttarakhand Jan Morcha, (1999) 4 SCC 476: 1999 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1999 SC 2193.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, D.P. Mohapatra and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1999]

[2478] — S. 197 — Police atrocities — Direction issued by High Court to State Government to grant sanction under S. 197 CrPC — Adequacy and validity of — Interim compensation awarded — Nature of — Interpreting the direction given by High Court in respect of sanction under S. 197 CrPC, Supreme Court finding it not necessary to consider the question whether it was open to High Court to direct the Govt. to grant sanction under S. 197 CrPC in any given situation — Without expressing any opinion on interim compensation awarded by High Court, held, High Court's direction in this regard would not be construed as its finding — Question of grant of compensation arises after the liability on the delinquent officers is fixed by the trial court — Constitution of India — Art. 226. State of Punjab v. Vinod Kumar, (2000) 9 SCC 742: 2001 SCC (Cri) 695.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, D.P. Mohapatra and R.C. Lahoti, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-2000]

[2479] — Ss. 197, 190 and 173 — Sanction for prosecution subsequent to investigation directed by Supreme Court — Apprehension that prosecuting agencies would not pursue matter (due to prevailing political dispensation) — Effect — PIL relating to protection of cultural heritage of India (Taj Mahal) and surrounding ecology — Taj Corridor Scam case involving the Chief Minister — Maintainability — Certain criminal/corruption matters affecting monument in question directed to be investigated by CBI by this Bench in previous orders — Thereupon authority concerned not granting sanction for prosecution — Scope of interference therewith by this Ecology PIL Bench seized of the said matter — Apprehension that prosecuting agencies would not pursue matter (due to prevailing political dispensation) — Effect — Held, jurisdiction of writ court is only to see that proper criminal investigation is carried out — It cannot take over functions of the Magistrate or interfere with the Magistrate's functions — Once a final report has been filed in terms of S. 173 CrPC, it is the Magistrate alone who can take an appropriate decision in the matter, which would be subject to judicial review — Possibility of prosecuting agencies not approaching the higher forum against Magistrate's order by itself would not confer jurisdiction on this Ecology PIL Bench to step in — In case of such an eventuality however, an independent PIL could be filed — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 — Constitution of India — Arts. 32, 49 and 51-A(g)

A public interest litigation (PIL) had been entertained by the Supreme Court in the writ petition out of which this interim application had arisen. The said PIL had been entertained with a view to ensure proper maintenance of the cultural heritage of India as also the ecology in the surrounding areas i.e. Taj Mahal and its environs, and the Court had been passing orders in the said writ petition from time to time. The question that arose before the Supreme Court in this interim application was whether the Bench seized of the said PIL (PIL Bench) should consider the correctness of an order passed by the Governor of the State where the cultural heritage of India and the ecology were being threatened i.e. the State of U.P. refusing to grant sanction for prosecution of Chief Minister Mayawati and the Environment Minister of that State for alleged criminal offences committed during an earlier tenure as Chief Minister and Minister, related to the threats to Taj Mahal and its environs.

It was submitted in support of the application that the task of protection of cultural heritage having been undertaken by the Supreme Court and keeping in view the provisions of Article 49 of the Constitution, the Court should interfere in the matter and set aside the order of the Governor of U.P.

refusing to accord sanction for prosecution keeping in view the political scenario extant at the time of filing of in the country, as CBI may not show any further interest in the matter at all.

Dismissing the application,

Held :

While entertaining a public interest litigation in a given case, the Supreme Court may exercise a jurisdiction to set aside the decision of a constitutional authority, but this application does not concern such a situation. (Para 14)

In exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 32 and having regard to Article 49 and Article 51-A(g) of the Constitution, the Supreme Court while entertaining the Taj Corridor Scam public interest litigation at the instance of the writ petitioner had been taking all steps which have been thought necessary and proper in the matter. No doubt, a first information report has been lodged at the instance of the Supreme Court. Yet again the Supreme Court thought it fit to issue requisite directions in Taj Corridor Scam case, (2007) 1 SCC 110, directing the Special Judge to apply its mind on the materials collected during investigation by CBI into Taj Corridor Scam and pass appropriate orders thereupon. The Supreme Court has been exercising its jurisdiction in public interest. It has been exercising its jurisdiction to issue a writ of continuous mandamus. (Para 8)

The parameters within which the Supreme Court should function in the field of crime detection and crime punishment are well defined. Unless a proper investigation is made, followed by a proper prosecution under the general law applicable to such investigation, the rule of law will lose its significance. Therefore, the judiciary may step in where it finds the actions on the part of the legislature or the executive are illegal or unconstitutional but the same by itself would not mean that public interest litigation, in a case of this nature, should be converted into an adversarial litigation. (Paras 9 to 11)

The jurisdiction of the Court to issue a writ of continuous mandamus is only to see that proper investigation is carried out. Once the Court satisfies itself that a proper investigation has been carried out, it would not venture to take over the functions of the Magistrate or pass any order which would interfere with the Magistrate's judicial functions. The constitutional scheme of this country envisages a dispute resolution mechanism with an independent and impartial tribunal. No authority, save and except a superior court in the hierarchy of judiciary, can issue any direction which otherwise takes away the discretionary jurisdiction of any court of law. Once a final report has been filed in terms of Section 173(1) CrPC, it is the Magistrate and Magistrate alone who can take an appropriate decision in the matter one way or the other. If he errs while passing a judicial order, the same may be a subject-matter of appeal or judicial review. (Paras 9 to 11)

There may be a possibility of the prosecuting agencies not approaching the higher forum against an order passed by the Magistrate, but the same by itself would not confer a jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to step in. A judicial order passed by a Magistrate may be right or wrong, but having regard to the hierarchy of the courts, the matter which would fall for consideration before the higher court should not be a subject-matter of a decision of this PIL Bench. In an unlikely event of the interested parties in not questioning such orders before the higher forum, an independent public interest litigation may be filed. Instances are not unknown where the Supreme Court has entertained public interest litigation in cases involving similar question under Article 32 of the Constitution. (Paras 9 to 11)

Though the Supreme Court may exercise its jurisdiction for the protection of the cultural heritage and the ecology and environment; but then in discharge of the said duty, the Supreme Court should not take upon itself the task of determining the guilt or otherwise of an individual involved in the criminal proceeding. It should not embark upon an enquiry in regard to the allegations of criminal misconduct so as to form an opinion one way or the other so as to prima facie determine guilt of a person or otherwise. Any direction which could be issued has already been issued in Taj Corridor Scam case, (2007) 1 SCC 110. This PIL Bench need not go further than what it has already directed in the said judgment to go into the correctness or otherwise of the order of the Governor. If no sanction of the Governor was required or if he has committed an error in passing the said order, the appropriate court would be entitled to deal therewith, but not this PIL Bench. (Paras 12 and 14). M.C. Mehta v. Union of India, (2008) 1 SCC 407: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 216: AIR 2008 SC 180: (2007) 6 All LJ 627: (2007) 60 AIC 215 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 360: (2008) 1 CHN 27 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.B. Sinha, S.H. Kapadia and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-10-2007]

Vineet Narain v. Union of India, (1998) 1 SCC 226: 1998 SCC (Cri) 307; Rajiv Ranjan Singh 'Lalan' (VIII) v. Union of India, (2006) 6 SCC 613: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 125; Union of India v. Prakash P. Hinduja, (2003) 6 SCC 195: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1314, relied on

(18) Discharge of official duty by members of Armed Forces — Ss. 197(2), (3) or (3-A)

[2480] — S. 197(2) — Central Reserve Police Force falls within the expression 'Armed Forces of the Union' under — CrPC, 1898, S. 197(2) — Central Reserve Police Force Act, 1949, S. 3(1) — Constitution of India, Schedule VII, List I, Entry 2. Akhilesh Prasad v. UT, Mizoram, (1981) 2 SCC 150: 1981 SCC (Cri) 337: AIR 1981 SC 806: (1981) 2 SCR 789: 1981 Cri LJ 407.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.D. Koshal and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1981]

[2481] — Ss. 197(2) & (3) and 132 — Sanction to prosecute accorded by appropriate Government under S. 132 does not amount to sanction to take cognizance of offence under S. 197 — Even if sanction under S. 132 accorded Court cannot take cognizance of offence in absence of sanction under S. 197. Ram Kumar v. State of Haryana, (1987) 1 SCC 476: 1987 SCC (Cri) 190: AIR 1987 SC 735: 1987 Cri LJ 703.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-1987]

— S. 197(3) See Ss. 197(2) & (3) and 132

[2482] — S. 197(3) — Notification under, directing that provisions of sub-section (2) shall apply to police officers, as defined in Bombay Police Act, charged with maintenance of public order — Expression "public order" — Meaning of — In the context should be understood in the wider sense so as to include law and order also, unlike the narrower meaning ascribed in the context of preventive detention — Police officers do discharge duties relating to maintenance of public order — Finding in each case, whether a particular act of a police officer pertained to maintenance of public order or not is not a correct approach for determining applicability of the notification — By virtue of the notification, all public officers as defined in Bombay Police Act, save the excepted categories, if any specified in the notification, would be entitled to protection of sub-section (2) if the offence alleged had been committed "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty"

Pursuant to complaint lodged by one F against the appellants alleging that they had gathered dangerous weapons and abducted and assaulted him, the police registered offences punishable under Sections 142, 144, 147, 148, 365, 368, 324/149 IPC against the appellants and commenced investigation. Respondent 1, a Sub-Inspector of Police along with other policemen put up the appellants in police lock-up at about 8.30 p.m. on 28-3-1986. Next day at about 2 a.m. they were shifted to another police station and were placed there in the lock-up. Next day i.e. on 30-3-1986 the appellants were produced before a Magistrate who ordered them to be produced before the regular court on 31-3-1986. Later on they were released on bail. On 16-7-1986 the appellant filed a complaint before the Metropolitan Magistrate impleading the respondent police officers complaining of offences under Sections 220, 342 IPC and Sections 147(c), (d) and 148 of the Bombay Police Act, 1951. The Magistrate in the enquiry held under Section 202 CrPC recorded the statement of the complainant and one witness, took cognizance under Sections 220 and 342 IPC and Sections 147 and 148 of the Bombay Police Act and directed the accused to be summoned. The accused-respondents appeared before the learned Magistrate and raised an objection as to the maintainability of the complaint under Section 197(2) CrPC relying on a notification dated 2-6-1979 which was as follows:

> "No. CRPO/78/9845/POL-3
>
> In exercise of the power conferred by sub-section (3) of Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (2 of 1974), the Government of Maharashtra hereby directs that the provisions of sub-section (2) of that section shall apply to the following categories of the members of the force in the State charged with the maintenance of public order wherever they may be serving, namely:
>
> (1) all police officers as defined in the Bombay Police Act, 1951 (Bom 22 of 1951), other than the Special or Additional Police Officers appointed under Section 21 or 22 of that Act;
>
> (2) all Reserve Police Officers as defined in the Bombay State Reserve Police Force Act, 1951 (Bom 38 of 1951)."

The Magistrate formed an opinion that the complaint could not have been filed without the requisite sanction and therefore directed the accused-respondents to be discharged. The appellants preferred a petition under Section 482 CrPC and Article 226 of the Constitution before the High Court of Bombay which was dismissed. The appellants then filed the present appeal by special leave. It was submitted before the Supreme Court on behalf of the appellants that in order to claim protection under the notification it is necessary that the accused must be a police officer as defined in the Bombay Police Act, 1951 and must be charged with the maintenance of public order at the relevant time. In other words, if a police officer is discharging a duty referable to law and order only as distinguished from "the maintenance of public order" he cannot claim protection under the notification. In the case at hand the police officers had arrested the appellants, kept them in confinement and assaulted them which are acts referable at the most to the duty of a police officer related to "maintenance of law and order" but not "the maintenance of public order" and therefore the benefit of the notification is not available to the respondents. Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The submission confuses the issue as to applicability of the notification with the span of protective umbrella or the purview or compass of sub-section (2) of Section 197 of the Code. The person on whom the protection is sought to be conferred by the State Government notification is to be determined by reading the notification and once it is found that the State Government notification applies to a member of the force which the accused is, the scope, purview or compass of the protection has to be determined by reading sub-section (2) of Section 197 of the Code i.e. by asking a question whether the act alleged to be an offence was done or purported to have been done in the discharge of the official duty of the accused. Such official duty need not necessarily be one related to the maintenance of public order. The accused-respondents are undisputedly members of Bombay Police Force governed by the Bombay Police Act, 1951. It is an empty truism to state that the members of the police force are persons charged with the maintenance of public order. This is the general duty of every member of the police force, styled as "police officer" in the Bombay Police Act. The phrase "maintenance of public order" in the present context need not be assigned a narrow meaning as is assigned to it in preventive detention matters. The police officers do discharge duties relating to maintenance of public order in their wider sense. Therefore, the members of Bombay Police Force are the persons to whom the notification issued under Section 197(3) of the Code applies. (Paras 9, 10, 12 and 13)

The real test to be applied to attract the applicability of Section 197(3) is whether the act which is done by a public officer and is alleged to constitute an offence was done by the public officer whilst acting in his official capacity though what he did was neither his duty nor his right to do as such public officer. The act complained of may be in exercise of the duty or in the absence of such duty or in dereliction of the duty; if the act complained of is done while acting as a public officer and in the course of the same transaction in which the official duty was performed or purported to be performed, the public officer would be protected. (Para 15). Rizwan Ahmed Javed Shaikh v. Jammal Patel, (2001) 5 SCC 7: AIR 2001 SC 2198: 2001 Cri LJ 2897.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2001]

Bhikhaji Vaghaji v. L.K. Barot, (1981) 22 Guj LR 956: 1981 Guj LH 157, approved

Jethmal v. Khusal Singh, 1984 RLW 545: 1984 RLR 786; K.K.S. Mohd. v. Sasi, 1985 KLJ 403, overruled

Madhu Limaye v. S.D.M., Monghyr, (1970) 3 SCC 746: AIR 1971 SC 2486; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939: AIR 1979 SC 1841, relied on [2483] — S. 197(3) — Provisions of sub-section (2) applicable to all members of Delhi Police Force in view of notification issued under sub-section (3) — Constitution of India, Art. 239(1) — Noti. No. S.C. 183(E), dated March 20, 1974 issued under Art. 239(1) and Noti. F. 10/77/78-HP-II, dated April 7, 1980. Balbir Singh v. D.N. Kadian, (1986) 1 SCC 410: 1986 SCC (Cri) 80: AIR 1986 SC 345: 1986 Cri LJ 314: (1986) 1 PLR 296.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-12-1985]

[2484] — Ss. 197(5) and (6) [as ins. by Assam Amendment Act, 1983 (3 of 1984)] — Requirement of sanction from Government for prosecuting public servant — Effect of Assam Repealing Act, repealing Assam Amendment Act, on vested or accrued right of accused to be discharged, if any — Appellant-accused and co-accused, police personnel, involved in a case related to death of 7 alleged miscreants — Sanction to prosecute appellant-accused refused in police case, however, granted in complaint case without taking into consideration the certificate granted previously by Government under S. 197(6)(i) that appellant-accused and co-accused were acting in discharge of their official duty — Appellant's prayer for quashing proceedings, refused by High Court — Sustainability — Held, once such a certificate is given, court has no other option but to dismiss the complaint — Under S. 197(6)(ii), accused derives a vested or accrued right to be discharged as soon as said certificate is issued — However, said right is brought into effect only when the same is actually communicated — Herein, presumption is that State did send said communication — Further, by reason of S. 3, Assam Repealing Act, right of accused, accrued to him to be discharged, is not taken away — When the Act is repealed, S. 6, Assam General Clauses Act, subject to just exception, shall come into force — State in enacting Repealing Act, did not have any intention to deprive a person of his accrued or vested right — Moreover, doctrine of eclipse has no application — By its application, a vested or accrued right cannot be taken away — Therefore, impugned judgment, held, unsustainable — Hence, set aside — Criminal Procedure Code (Assam Repealing) Act, 1986 (6 of 1986), S. 3 — Assam General Clauses Act, 1915 (2 of 1915), S. 6 (Paras 19, 13, 16, 20, 18, 29 and 23). Mohan Raj v. Dimbeswari Saikia, (2007) 15 SCC 115.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-11-2006]

State of Punjab v. Mohar Singh, AIR 1955 SC 84: 1955 Cri LJ 254: (1955) 1 SCR 893; Pannalal Bansilal Pitti v. State of A.P., (1996) 2 SCC 498; Milkfood Ltd. v. GMC Ice Cream (P) Ltd., (2004) 7 SCC 288; Pitta Naveen Kumar v. Raja Narasaiah Zangiti, (2006) 10 SCC 261: (2007) 1 SCC (L&S) 92; U.P. Raghavendra Acharya v. State of Karnataka, (2006) 9 SCC 630: 2006 SCC (L&S) 1948; Saurabh Chaudri (Dr.) v. Union of India, (2004) 5 SCC 618; Prafulla Kumar Das v. State of Orissa, (2003) 11 SCC 614: 2004 SCC (L&S) 121; Bombay Dyeing & Mfg. Co. Ltd. (3) v. Bombay Environmental Action Group, (2006) 3 SCC 434; Nathi Devi v. Radha Devi Gupta, (2005) 2 SCC 271; Lalit Mohan Pandey v. Pooran Singh, (2004) 6 SCC 626; Indian Handicrafts Emporium v. Union of India, (2003) 7 SCC 589; Balram Kumawat v. Union of India, (2003) 7 SCC 628, relied on

State of Punjab v. Khemi Ram, (1969) 3 SCC 28, considered

G.P. Singh: Principles of Statutory Interpretation, 10th Edn., 2006, p. 631, relied on

— S. 198 See also Ss. 198, 198-B & 199, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1075 et seq. in Vol.2

— S. 198 See also Ss. 155(4), 157 and 198

See also Ss. 156 and 198

See also Ss. 157 to 172 and 198

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193 and 195 to 199 & 204

See also Ss. 195 to 199

[2485] — S. 198 — Cognizance of offence of bigamy under S. 494 IPC is taken only on complaint of person aggrieved as specified in S. 198 CrPC— Therefore, held, person having right to make complaint would have to be identified on basis of the personal law applicable to the complainant and respondent accused

S and the respondent underwent a Hindu marriage in 1984. In May 1992 the respondent informed S that he had converted to Islam and that he intended to remarry; he advised S to agree to a divorce by mutual consent. S contended that her husband's conversion was entirely fraudulent, carried out with the sole aim of solemnising a second marriage; she contended that he had no real faith in Islam, that the conversion was not even remotely connected to a spiritual quest and that it was not an exercise of the freedom of religion guaranteed under the Constitution. She pointed out that there was no change in his way of living at all since the conversion. He had not even changed his name. She submitted documents including the birth certificate of his child from the second marriage, copies of relevant entries of the electoral list and an application for a visa to enter Bangladesh, all showing the respondent's name as "G.C. Ghosh" and "Hindu" as his religion. The second wife was entered as "Vanita Ghosh" in all the documents and also described as "Hindu".

In view of the pleadings in S's petition, the Court formulated the following question: "In order to avoid the clutches of S. 17 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, if a person renounces his 'Hindu' religion and converts to another religion and marries a second time, what would be the effect on his criminal liability?"

Held :

Per curiam:

Since taking of cognizance of the offence under Section 494 is limited to the complaints made by the persons specified in Section 198 CrPC, it is obvious that the person making the complaint would have to be decided in terms of the personal law applicable to the complainant and the respondent (accused), since mere conversion does not dissolve the marriage automatically and they continue to be "husband and wife". (Para 25). Lily Thomas v. Union of India, (2000) 6 SCC 224: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1056: AIR 2000 SC 1650: 2000 Cri LJ 2433.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Saghir Ahmad[1] and R.P. Sethi[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2000]

Bhaurao Shankar Lokhande v. State of Maharashtra, (1965) 2 SCR 837: AIR 1965 SC 1564; Kanwal Ram v. H.P. Admn., AIR 1966 SC 614: (1966) 1 SCR 539: 1966 Cri LJ 472; Priya Bala Ghosh v. Suresh Chandra Ghosh, (1971) 1 SCC 864: 1971 SCC (Cri) 362; Gopal Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1979) 2 SCC 170, relied upon [2486] — Ss. 198(1) proviso (c) and 482 — Sustainability of prosecution under S. 494 IPC — Statement of subsequent wife — Relevance — Complaint against husband for offence of bigamy filed by father of subsequent wife allegedly on her behalf but against her express desire stated in her sworn written statement — She was a major when she married of her own free will and that she was living happily and peacefully thereafter — Initiation of prosecution in such circumstances, held, was improper — Magistrate was not justified in taking cognizance of the said offence — Since husband and his wife staying together happily, further prosecution would only harass the accused — Hence, proceedings quashed — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 494 and 420 (Para 4). Manish Das (Dr.) v. State of U.P., (2006) 6 SCC 536: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 113.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-2006]

[2487] — S. 198(2) — Provision disentitling wife to file complaint against her husband for the offence of adultery under S. 497, IPC, held, not discriminatory and unconstitutional — Provision meant to promote social good — Penal Code, 1860, S. 497 — Constitution of India, Arts. 14 and 32

Section 497, IPC and S. 198(1) r/w S. 198(2), CrPC constitute a legislative packet to deal with the offence committed by an outsider to the matrimonial unit. The community punishes such an 'outsider' subject to the rider that the erring 'man' alone can be punished and not the erring woman. The law does not envisage the punishment of any of the spouses at the instance of each other. A husband is not permitted to prosecute his disloyal wife because the wife is not treated as an offender in the eye of the law. The wife is also not so permitted as S. 198(1) r/w S. 198(2) does not permit her to do so. In the ultimate analysis the law has meted out even-handed justice to both of them in the matter of prosecuting each other or securing the incarceration of each other. The philosophy underlying the scheme of these provisions appears to be that as between the husband and the wife social goodwill be promoted by permitting them to 'make up' or 'break up' the matrimonial tie rather than to draw each other to the criminal court. Thus no discrimination has been practised in circumscribing the scope of S. 198(2) and fashioning it so that the right to prosecute the adulterer is restricted to the husband of the adulteress but has not been extended to the wife of the adulterer. Section 198(2), CrPC is, therefore, not vulnerable to the charge of hostile discrimination against a woman. V. Revathi v. Union of India, (1988) 2 SCC 72: 1988 SCC (Cri) 308: AIR 1988 SC 835: (1988) 1 KLT 771: (1988) 2 HLR 39: (1988) 1 Punj LR 649.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-2-1988]

Sowmithri Vishnu v. Union of India, 1985 Supp SCC 137: 1985 SCC (Cri) 325, relied on

— S. 198-A See Ss. 190, 198-A, 209, 239, 240, 242 and 323

— S. 199 See also Ss. 198-B and 199, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1076 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 199 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193 and 195 to 199 & 204

See also Ss. 195 to 199

See also Ss. 257, 199 and 482

[2488] — S. 199 — Complaint — Proper person — Defamation — Plea that imputation being against father of the complainant, the father ought to have made the complaint — Not tenable when the same imputation was against the complainant also (Para 3). Ram Swarup v. Mohd. Javed Razack, (2005) 10 SCC 393: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1549: AIR 2005 SC 2005: 2005 Cri LJ 1725.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-2005]

[2489] — S. 199 — Requirement of taking cognizance of offence of defamation only upon receiving complaint by a person aggrieved — Object of, held, is to discourage filing of frivolous complaints — Penal Code, 1860, S. 499

In respect of the offence of defamation, Section 199 CrPC mandates that the Magistrate can take cognizance of the offence only upon receiving a complaint by a person who is aggrieved. This limitation on the power to take cognizance of defamation serves the rational purpose of discouraging the filing of frivolous complaints which would otherwise clog the Magistrates' Courts. In the given facts of the present case, the complainants cannot be properly described as "persons aggrieved" within the meaning of Section 199(1) CrPC as there was no specific legal injury caused to any of them. (Para 37). S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and Deepak Verma and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2010]

[2490] — S. 199 — Defamation — Locus standi to file complaint — "Some person aggrieved by the offence" — Even if the libellous imputations are not made directly against a person but he has reasons to feel hurt on account of the same, he has locus standi to file a complaint — Where defamatory publications are made against a private limited company, its Director can file the complaint — Penal Code, 1860, S. 499, Expln. 2

The collocation of the words "by some persons aggrieved" in Section 199 definitely indicates that the complainant need not necessarily be the defamed person himself. Whether the complainant has reason to feel hurt on account of the publication is a matter to be determined by the court depending upon the facts of each case. If a company is described as engaging itself in nefarious activities, its impact would certainly fall on every Director of the company and hence he can legitimately feel the pinch of it. Similarly, if a firm is described in a publication as carrying on offensive trade, every working partner of the firm can reasonably be expected to feel aggrieved by it. As the hospital against which imputations were published in the present case is a private limited company, it is too far-fetched to rule out any one of its Directors, feeling aggrieved on account of pejoratives hurled at the Company. (Para 13). John Thomas v. K. Jagadeesan (Dr.), (2001) 6 SCC 30: 2001 SCC (Cri) 974: AIR 2001 SC 2651: (2001) 106 Comp Cas 619.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-7-2001]

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88, distinguished

[2491] — S. 199(1) — Defamation — Acts prima facie not amounting to defamation — Complaint of such acts if mala fide — Determination of — Accused in response to survey conducted by news magazine on subject of sexual habits of people residing in big cities, making a statement endorsing in general premarital sex and posing a question as to whether people in Tamil Nadu were not aware of incidence of sex or premarital sex — Statement not directed at any individual or even at a company or association or collection of persons — Such statement, held, did not constitute prima facie case of defamation of Tamil-speaking women — Moreover, complainants not having suffered any specific legal injury by said statement, held, were not "persons aggrieved" within the meaning of S. 199(1) CrPC, 1973 — Hence, complaints filed by them, held, mala fide — More so when most of them were associated with a particular political party — Penal Code, 1860, S. 499. S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and Deepak Verma and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2010]

— S. 199(2) See also Ss. 397, 401, 204 and 199(2)

[2492] — S. 199(2) — "Public servant" — Chief Minister or Minister, held, is a public servant — Expression "in the pay of the Government" — Meaning of — Contextual construction and dictionary meaning resorted to — Constitution of India, Arts. 52(1), 164 and 167 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 21(12)

Although the first part of S. 21(12)(a), Indian Penal Code, viz., 'in the service of the Government' signifies a relationship of master and servant where the employer employs the employee on the basis of a salary or remuneration, the second limb 'in the pay of the Government' is of a much wider amplitude so as to include within its ambit even public servant who may not be a regular employee receiving salary from his master. The expression 'in the pay of' connotes that a person is getting salary, compensation, wages or any amount of money.

Reference to Arts. 52(1), 164 and 167 makes it clear that a Minister is appointed or dismissed by the Governor and is, therefore, subordinate to him whatever be the nature and status of his constitutional functions. Moreover the holder of a public office such as the Chief Minister is a public servant in respect of whom the Constitution provides that he will get his salary from the Government Treasury so long as he holds his office on account of the public service that he discharges. The salary given to the Chief Minister is coterminus with his office and is not paid like other constitutional functionaries such as the President and the Speaker. These facts, therefore, point to the only conclusion that the Chief Minister is in the pay of the Government and is, therefore, a public servant within the meaning of S. 21(12) of the Penal Code.

Section 199(2), Criminal Procedure Code also supports the above conclusion inasmuch as the use of the words "other public servants" following "a Minister of the Union or of a State" clearly show that a Minister would also be a public servant. M. Karunanidhi v. Union of India, (1979) 3 SCC 431: 1979 SCC (Cri) 691: AIR 1979 SC 898: 1979 Cri LJ 773.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and P.N. Bhagwati, N.L. Untwalia, S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-1979]

— Ch. XV See Ss. 256, 249, 2(y) and Ch. XV

See also S. 378(4) and Ch. XV

See also S. 482 and Ch. XV

— S. 200 See also S. 220, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1096 in Vol. 2

— S. 200 See Ss. 154, 190, 195, 196, 197 and 200

See also Ss. 154, 190 and 200

See also Ss. 154(1), 154(2), 154(3), 157(1), 190(1)(a) and 200

See also Ss. 154(3) & 36, 156(3), 200 and 482

See also Ss. 156 & 157 and 190 & 200 to 203

See also Ss. 156 & 157 and 190, 200, 203

See also Ss. 156, 190 and 200

See also Ss. 156(3), 157(1) proviso (b) & (2), 190, 200 and 154

See also Ss. 156(3), 173(8), 190, 200 and 204

See also Ss. 156(3), 190 and 200

See also Ss. 156(3), 190(1), 200 and 4

See also Ss. 156(3) and 200

See also Ss. 173, 190(1)(b), 156(3), 200, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 173, 200 and 2(d) Expln.

See also Ss. 173(2), 169, 190, 200 and 203

See also Ss. 190, 154, 173 and 200

See also Ss. 190, 154, 173, 200 and 204

See also Ss. 190, 173, 200 and 202

See also Ss. 190, 173(2), 169, 200, 202 and 204

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 200 and 157

See also Ss. 190 and 200 to 203, 154 and 156

See also Ss. 190 & 200 to 203 and 156 & 157

See also Ss. 190 (Ch. XIV), 200, 202 (Ch. XV) and 204 (Ch. XVI)

See also Ss. 190, 200, 202 and 482

See also Ss. 190, 200, 203 and 156 & 157

See also Ss. 190, 200, 204 and 156(3)

See also Ss. 190, 200, 204, 173 and 482

See also Ss. 190(1), 173(2), 169, 200 and 202

See also Ss. 190(1) and 200 & 154, 156

See also Ss. 190(1) & 200 and 204

See also Ss. 190(1)(a) & (b) and 173(2), 200 & 202

See also Ss. 190(1)(a) and 200

See also Ss. 190(1)(a) & 200 and 173

See also Ss. 190(1)(a), 200 and 204

See also Ss. 190(1)(a), 200, 204, 173 and 482

See also Ss. 190(1)(b), 200, 202 and 204

See also Ss. 190(1)(b) & 204, 200, 156(3), 468 and 401

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 204, 190(1)(a) and 200

See also Ss. 204, 200 and 190

See also Ss. 204, 200 and 202

See also Ss. 204, 200, 202, 203 and 482

See also Ss. 204, 200 and 482

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202 and 200

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200, 239 and 362 & 482

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200 and 482

See also Ss. 256 and 200

See also Ss. 397, 401, 91, 311 and 200

See also Ss. 397 & 401 and Ss. 156(3) & 200

See also Ss. 475, 190, 200 to 204

See also Ss. 482 and 2(d), 154, 155 and 190, 200

See also Ss. 482, 190 and 200

See also Ss. 482, 200 and 196

See also Ss. 482, 200, 202, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 482, 204, 200 and 202

[2493] — S. 200 — Examination of complainant — Object of — Held, is to satisfy itself about the existence of a prima facie case against the person accused of the offence and to ensure that such person is not harassed by false and vexatious complaints by issue of process — Further held, where the proprietor of the proprietary concern has personal knowledge of the transaction and the proprietor has signed the complaint, he has to be examined under S. 200 — But where the attorney holder of the complainant is in charge of the business of the complainant payee and the attorney holder alone is personally aware of the transactions, and the complaint is signed by the attorney holder on behalf of the complainant payee, then such attorney holder is to be examined as complainant — Moreover, where the cheque is drawn in the name of the proprietor of a proprietary concern, but an employee of such concern (who is not an attorney holder) has knowledge of the transaction, the payee as complainant and the employee who has knowledge of the transaction, may both have to be examined (Paras 14, 15 and 16). Shankar Finance & Investments v. State of A.P., (2008) 8 SCC 536: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 558.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-6-2008]

Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521; Janki Vashdeo Bhojwani v. Indusind Bank Ltd., (2005) 2 SCC 217, relied on [2494] — S. 200 — Statutory requirements under — Held, the complainant is bound to make statements on oath as to how the offence was committed and how the accused persons were responsible therefor — In the event of frivolous or mala fide prosecution of the accused, the court may direct registration of case against the complainant for the same — Accused would also be entitled to file a suit for damages — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138, 139 and 141 (Para 7). Sabitha Ramamurthy v. R.B.S. Channabasavaradhya, (2006) 10 SCC 581: AIR 2006 SC 3086: 2006 Cri LJ 4602.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-9-2006]

[2495] — Ss. 200 and 202 — Court has discretion either to issue process after examining complaint and witnesses, if any, or to hold inquiry or direct investigation

Upon a complaint being received and the court records the verification, it is open to the court to apply its mind to the facts disclosed and to judicially determine whether process should or should not be issued. It is not a condition precedent to the issue of process that the court of necessity must hold the inquiry as envisaged by S. 202 or direct investigation as therein contemplated. The power to take cognizance without holding inquiry or directing investigation is implicit in S. 202 when it says that the Magistrate may "if he thinks fit, postpone the issue of process against the accused and either inquire into the case himself or direct an investigation to be made by a police officer..., for the purpose of deciding whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding". Therefore, the matter is left to the judicial discretion of the court whether on examining the complainant and the witnesses if any as contemplated by S. 200 to issue process or to postpone the issue of process. This discretion which the court enjoys cannot be circumscribed or denied by making it mandatory upon the court either to hold the inquiry or direct investigation. Such an approach would be contrary to the statutory provision. Therefore, there is no merit in the contention that by entertaining a private complaint, the purpose of speedy trial would be thwarted or that a pre-process safeguard would be denied. A.R. Antulay v. Ramdas Sriniwas Nayak, (1984) 2 SCC 500: 1984 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 1984 SC 718: 1984 Cri LJ 647: 1984 Bom LR 228.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: D.A. Desai, R.S. Pathak, O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-1984]

[2496] — Ss. 200 & 202 (Ch. IV), 156(3), 190(1)(b) and 173 — Cognizance taken by Magistrate or merely direction for investigation given — Determination of (Paras 15 to 24)

The Magistrate only ordered investigation under Section 156(3) CrPC. The Magistrate perused the complaint without examining the merits of the claim that there is sufficient ground for proceeding or not and directed the police officer concerned for investigation under Section 156(3) CrPC. As rightly observed by the Single Judge of the High Court, the Magistrate did not bring into motion the machinery of Chapter XV CrPC. He did not examine the complainant or his witnesses under Section 200 CrPC which is the first step in the procedure prescribed under the said Chapter. The question of taking the next step of the procedure envisaged in Section 202 did not arise. Instead of taking cognizance of the offence, the Magistrate has merely allowed the application filed by the complainant/SEPCO under Section 156(3) CrPC and sent the same along with its annexure for investigation by the police officer concerned. (Para 22)

To proceed under Section 156(3) CrPC, what is required is a bare reading of the complaint and if it discloses a cognizable offence, then the Magistrate instead of applying his mind to the complaint for deciding whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding, may direct the police for investigation. In the case on hand, the Single Judge and the Division Bench of the High Court rightly pointed out that the Magistrate did not apply his mind to the complaint for deciding whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding and, therefore, the Magistrate has not committed any illegality in directing the police for investigation. As a matter of fact, even after receipt of a report under Section 173, the Magistrate under Section 190(1)(b) may or may not take cognizance of offence. In other words, he is not bound to take cognizance upon submission of the police report by the investigating officer, hence, by directing the police to file charge-sheet or final report and to hold investigation, it cannot be construed that the Magistrate has exceeded his power as provided in Section 156(3). (Para 23). Srinivas Gundluri v. SEPCO Electric Power Construction Corpn., (2010) 8 SCC 206.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Anil R. Dave, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-2010]

Devarapalli Lakshminarayana Reddy v. V. Narayana Reddy, (1976) 3 SCC 252: 1976 SCC (Cri) 380; Tula Ram v. Kishore Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 459: 1977 SCC (Cri) 621, relied on

Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia v. Sambhajirao Chandrojirao Angre, (1988) 1 SCC 692: 1988 SCC (Cri) 234, distinguished on facts

Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521, cited

[2497] — Ss. 200 and 202 to 204 — Duty of Magistrate under S. 200, restated — Words "sufficient ground" occurring in S. 203, held, mean the satisfaction that a prima facie case is made out and not that there is sufficient ground for conviction

In case of a complaint under Section 200 CrPC a Magistrate can take cognizance of the offence made out and then has to examine the complainant and his witnesses, if any, to ascertain whether a prima facie case is made out against the accused to issue process so that the issue of process is prevented on a complaint which is either false or vexatious or intended only to harass. Such examination is provided in order to find out whether there is or not sufficient ground for proceeding. The words "sufficient ground" used under Section 203 have to be construed to mean the satisfaction that a prima facie case is made out against the accused and not sufficient ground for the purpose of conviction. (Para 15). S.W. Palanitkar v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 241: 2002 SCC (Cri) 129: AIR 2001 SC 2960: 2002 Cri LJ 548.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-10-2001]

[2498] — S. 200 — Mandatory examination of complainant — Object of — Exemption of public servant from — Rationale behind, explained

The object of Section 200 CrPC requiring the complainant and witnesses to be examined, is to find out whether there are sufficient grounds for proceeding against the accused and to prevent issue of process on complaints which are false or vexatious or intended to harass the persons arrayed as accused. Where the complainant is a public servant or court, clause (a) of the proviso to Section 200 CrPC raises an implied statutory presumption that the complaint has been made responsibly and bona fide and not falsely or vexatiously. On account of such implied presumption, where the complainant is a public servant, the statute exempts examination of the complainant and the witnesses, before issuing process. (Para 12). National Small Industries Corpn. Ltd. v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 1 SCC 407.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-2008]

[2499] — Ss. 200, 204, 244(1), 244(2), 245 and 246(1) — Complaint on behalf of court — Examination of complainant — Official complaint filed by Registrar General of High Court — Held, neither was any affidavit required nor complainant required to be examined on oath — Further held, Magistrate could at this stage also discharge accused under S. 245(2) by recording reasons

Since this was a complaint made by the court, there is no question of there being any examination of the complainant or his witnesses on oath. The Magistrate simply issued the process under Section 204 CrPC. The Magistrate could have proceeded under Section 245(2) CrPC, on the basis of the discharge application and discharged him. However, he would have been required to give reasons for discharging at that stage, when no evidence or no material, whatsoever, was available with him, excepting a bare complaint. (Paras 33, 34, 38 and 40). Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 14 SCC 115: AIR 2009 SC 2282: 2009 Cri LJ 2824.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2009]

[2500] — Ss. 200 to 204 and 154(3) — Remand by Supreme Court — Order of forum below not clear — Order of Magistrate (that was set aside by High Court) was not clear as to nature of action taken by Magistrate on a complaint against police inaction — Three alternative actions against police inaction can be taken as per Minu Kumari case, (2006) 4 SCC 359 — Either Magistrate can take cognizance, or direct police investigation or may even dismiss the complaint case based on the guidelines laid down in Minu Kumari case — Since the order of the Magistrate was not very clear and High Court had also not dealt with it, case remanded to trial court to decide the matter afresh as per the directions contained in Minu Kumari case — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 420, 465, 467, 468 and 120-B — Constitution of India, Arts. 136 and 141 (Paras 12 and 11). Ketankumar Babulal Patel v. Kesarben Jesangji, (2008) 14 SCC 605.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-2008]

Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 310, relied on [2501] — S. 200 — Accused has no right to be heard at this stage or cross-examine the witnesses. State of H.P. v. Surinder Mohan, (2000) 2 SCC 396: 2000 SCC (Cri) 400: AIR 2000 SC 1862: 2000 Cri LJ 1429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-2000]

[2502] — Ss. 200, 190(1)(a), 204, 300 and 482 — Second complaint on same facts — Circumstances in which it is maintainable, stated — Appellant lodged FIR against respondent alleging therein that the sale deed and acknowledgement purported to have been executed by him were forged and fabricated documents — On being not satisfied with the investigation carried out by the police, appellant filed a criminal complaint in that matter — IO concluded that the dispute between the parties was a civil dispute and that it was appellant who executed the acknowledgement — Case disposal report based on said conclusion, accepted by the Magistrate — Complaint case also closed — Another complaint filed by appellant whereupon summons issued to respondent — High Court holding that having regard to the police report and the dismissal of the protest petition filed by the appellant, a fresh complaint on the selfsame allegations was barred — Setting aside the High Court's order, held on facts, matter was liable to be remitted back to the Magistrate for the purpose of arriving at a finding as to whether any case for cognizance of the alleged offence had been made out or not

It is settled law that there is no statutory bar in filing a second complaint on the same facts. In a case where a previous complaint is dismissed without assigning any reasons, the Magistrate under Section 204 CrPC may take cognizance of an offence and issue process if there is sufficient ground for proceeding. But the second complaint on the same facts could be entertained only in exceptional circumstances, namely, where the previous order was passed on an incomplete record or on a misunderstanding of the nature of complaint or it was manifestly absurd, unjust or where new facts which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been brought on record in the previous proceedings, have been adduced. The second complaint could be dismissed after a decision has been given against the complainant in previous matter upon a full consideration of his case. (Para 19)

In the present case, the matter should have been remitted back to the Magistrate for the purpose of arriving at a finding as to whether any case for cognizance of the alleged offence had been made out or not. (Para 19). Mahesh Chand v. B. Janardhan Reddy, (2003) 1 SCC 734: 2003 SCC (Cri) 425: AIR 2003 SC 702.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, D.M. Dharmadhikari and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-12-2002]

Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876: 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770; Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. Kali Singh, (1977) 1 SCC 57: 1977 SCC (Cri) 33, relied on

Munilal Thakur v. Nawal Kishore Thakur, 1985 Cri LJ 437: 1984 Pat LJR 774; District Manager, Food Corporation of India v. Jayashankar Mund, 1989 Cri LJ 1578: (1989) 67 Cut LT 426, considered and distinguished

[2503] — Ss. 200, 190, 204, 300 and 482 — Second complaint petition on same facts and similar allegations — Maintainability of — Following the decision in Mahesh Chand case, (2003) 1 SCC 734, circumstances in which a second complaint petition could be filed, stated — In the present case, a complaint petition filed by respondent rejected by a reasoned order — A revision application filed thereagainst also dismissed — Respondent filing another application under S. 156(3) CrPC alleging selfsame facts on which the first complaint rejected — Held, in the facts of the case, a second complaint petition could not have been filed — Hence, it was not a fit case where cognizance of offence could have been taken or any summons could have been issued

Respondent 3 filed a complaint petition in the Court of the ACJM, under Sections 420, 462, 467, 468 and 471 IPC, contending that the will dated 1-8-2002 purported to have been executed by T in favour of his daughter was a forged and fabricated document. The ACJM, dismissed the said complaint petition. A revision application was filed thereagainst by Respondent 3 which was dismissed. Respondent 3 thereafter filed another application under Section 156(3) CrPC making similar allegations. However, in the said complaint petition even the execution of the bainamas was alleged to be fraudulent acts on the part of the respondent-accused. The ACJM by his order issued summons. The appellants filed an application under Section 482 CrPC which has been dismissed. The High Court in its judgment refused to go into the merits of the matter that the defence of the accused cannot be considered at that stage and they can raise all contentions at the time of framing of the charges.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

A complaint petition filed by the third respondent has been rejected. A revision application filed thereagainst has also been dismissed. The order dated 2-4-2003 of the learned ACJM is not a cryptic one. Reasons have been assigned in support thereof. In a situation of this nature, a second complaint petition could not have been filed. The Supreme Court in Mahesh Chand case, (2003) 1 SCC 734 itself held that the second complaint can lie only on fresh facts and/or if a special case is made out therefor. The second complaint petition filed by the third respondent does not disclose any such exceptional case. It reiterated the same allegations as were made in the first complaint petition. No fresh fact was brought to the notice of the court. The core contention raised in both the complaint petitions was alleged execution of a forged will by T. It was not a fit case where cognizance of the offence could have been taken or any summons could have been issued. (Paras 13 and 18 to 20). Hira Lal v. State of U.P., (2009) 11 SCC 89: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1247: AIR 2009 SC 2380: 2009 Cri LJ 2849: (2009) 4 All LJ 520: (2009) 78 AIC 134 (SC): (2009) 2 APLJ 42 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-4-2009]

Mahesh Chand v. B. Janardhan Reddy, (2003) 1 SCC 734: 2003 SCC (Cri) 425, followed

State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426; Pratibha Rani v. Suraj Kumar, (1985) 2 SCC 370: 1985 SCC (Cri) 180; R. Kalyani v. Janak C. Mehta, (2009) 1 SCC 516: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 567, relied on [2504] — Ss. 200, 190 and 202 to 204 — Second complaint, on dismissal of first complaint on merit, which dismissal had attained finality, on identical facts — Maintainability — Held, though there is no statutory bar to filing second complaint on same facts, but same can be entertained only in exceptional circumstances enumerated in Pramatha Nath Talukdar case, AIR 1962 SC 876 — In the instant case, second complaint was on almost identical facts raised in first complaint, which was dismissed on merit — Hence, second complaint not maintainable — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 120-B and 426 (Paras 14 to 21). Poonam Chand Jain v. Fazru, (2010) 2 SCC 631.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.S. Singhvi and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-1-2010]

Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770; Jatinder Singh v. Ranjit Kaur, (2001) 2 SCC 570: 2001 SCC (Cri) 354; Mahesh Chand v. B. Janardhan Reddy, (2003) 1 SCC 734: 2003 SCC (Cri) 425; Hira Lal v. State of U.P., (2009) 11 SCC 89: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1247, discussed and applied

[Ed.: See also Poonam Chand Jain v. Fazru, (2004) 13 SCC 269.]

[2505] — Ss. 200, 203, 202, 190, 204(1) and 362 — Filing of second complaint on same cause of action and between same parties, when earlier complaint dismissed for non-filing of process fees, but not on merits — Maintainability — Held, even if a complaint is dismissed under S. 203, a second complaint would still lie under exceptional circumstances e.g. where previous order was passed on an incomplete record or on misunderstanding of nature of complaint or it was manifestly absurd, unjust, fallacious or false or where new facts, which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been brought on record in a previous proceeding, have been adduced — Although prayer for recalling order of dismissal would not be maintainable before Magistrate in view of S. 362, but such is not the case here — Herein, neither was complaint dismissed on merits nor at stage of S. 203, but was dismissed for failure of complainant to put in process fees for effecting service — In fact, only on being satisfied of prima facie case, Magistrate issued process on complaint — Therefore, held, in absence of any provision in CrPC barring a second complaint being filed on same allegation, there would be no bar to a second complaint being filed on same facts, if first complaint did not result in conviction or acquittal or even discharge of accused, and if dismissal was not on merits but on account of a default by complainant — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420/34 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 22 and 19 (Paras 23 to 29)

In the instant case, the complainant (Respondent 2) filed a complaint on 1-7-1999 against the petitioner under Sections 420/34 IPC, on allegations of payment having been received by him to perform certain favours for the complainant's son-in-law by making use of his official position, on which process was issued by the trial court, which matter is still pending.

Another complaint was filed by Respondent 2 on 8-4-2002 under the provisions of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, against the petitioner, which was entertained by trial court and process was issued. However, this complaint came to be dismissed on 24-7-2003, for non-filing of the process fees. An application filed by the complainant on 18-9-2003, for recall of the order dated 24-7-2003, was dismissed. Thereafter, yet another complaint was filed by Respondent 2 on 29-9-2003, on the same grounds, under the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, on which process was issued on 8-1-2004.

The petitioner filed two criminal revision cases for quashing the aforesaid complaints dated 1-7-1999 and 29-9-2003, before the High Court, which were dismissed by a common judgment and order. The same is assailed in present special leave petitions.

As far as the first complaint dated 1-7-1999 under Sections 420/34 IPC was concerned, the petitioner did not seriously question the order of the High Court rejecting the petitioner's prayer for quashing the same. He confined his case mainly to the complaint dated 29-9-2003, wherein the trial court took cognizance and issued process under the provisions of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, despite an earlier complaint on the same ground and on the same set of facts having been dismissed earlier for non-filing of the process fees.

Dismissing the special leave petitions, the Supreme Court held as above. Ranvir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2009) 9 SCC 642.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-2009]

Jatinder Singh v. Ranjit Kaur, (2001) 2 SCC 570: 2001 SCC (Cri) 354; Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876, followed [2506] — Ss. 200, 203, 204 and 245 — Second complaint on same facts after dismissal of first one — Maintainability — Decision by High Court that second complaint maintainable and further observation that if the accused had any grievance they could seek review of the summoning order with a view to get discharged in view of the provision of S. 245 CrPC — Legality of — Earlier decisions by Supreme Court laying down that second complaint maintainable only in exceptional circumstances, namely, where the previous order was passed on an incomplete record or on a misunderstanding of the nature of the complaint or it was manifestly absurd, unjust or where new facts which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been brought on record in the previous proceedings, have been adduced — Held, High Court had not considered the legality of the order directing issuance of process in second complaint keeping in view the law laid down by the Supreme Court — Correctness of the law laid down in K.M. Mathew case, (1992) 1 SCC 217 doubted — Matter remitted to High Court to record positive findings on the relevant issues (Paras 6 to 12 and 14). Poonam Chand Jain v. Fazru, (2004) 13 SCC 269: 2005 SCC (Cri) 190: AIR 2005 SC 38: 2005 Cri LJ 100.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2004]

Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876: 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770; Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. Kali Singh, (1977) 1 SCC 57: 1977 SCC (Cri) 33; Mahesh Chand v. B. Janardhan Reddy, (2003) 1 SCC 734: 2003 SCC (Cri) 425; Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927, relied on

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88, held, overruled

[2507] — Ss. 200, 204 and 190 — Mere expectation of success in a pending proceeding cannot bar a criminal prosecution if ingredients of the offence charged are prima facie fulfilled. P. Jayappan v. S.K. Perumal, Ist ITO, 1984 Supp SCC 437: AIR 1984 SC 1693: 1984 Tax LR 1197: (1984) 149 ITR 696.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-1984]

[2508] — S. 200 — Industrial unit of a company itself responsible for causing technical defect of not impleading the main accused company in the complaint — It is not open to the Chairman, Vice-Chairman, MD etc. of the company to later challenge the prosecution against them on ground of such defect in the complaint. U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Modi Distillery, (1987) 3 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 632: AIR 1988 SC 1128.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-1987]

[2509] — Ss. 200, 203 and 204 — Complaint — Remedy of arbitration, held, no bar to criminal prosecution — Agreement in relation to commercial transaction containing an arbitration clause — Criminal prosecution for breach of such contract, if such breach even prima facie constituted a criminal offence, held, not barred merely because of the presence of the arbitration clause in the agreement — Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996, Ss. 7 and 8 — Availability of the remedy of arbitration in case of breach of agreement, held, no bar to criminal prosecution if such breach constitutes a criminal offence even prima facie — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 405, 406 and 420

For the alleged breach of the agreement in relation to commercial transaction, it is open to Respondent 2 to proceed against the appellants for his redressal for recovery of money by way of damages for the loss caused, if any. Merely because there is an arbitration clause in the agreement, that cannot prevent criminal prosecution against the accused if an act constituting a criminal offence is made out even prima facie. (Para 22). S.W. Palanitkar v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 241: 2002 SCC (Cri) 129: AIR 2001 SC 2960: 2002 Cri LJ 548.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-10-2001]

Trisuns Chemical Industry v. Rajesh Agarwal, (1999) 8 SCC 686: 2000 SCC (Cri) 47, followed

[2510] — Ss. 200, 202, 203 and 204 — Complaint under by stockist against his principals — Earlier notice claiming payment of Rs 15 lakhs — Issuance of summons, if on facts proper — Neither the complaint nor the statement of witnesses showing that any property was entrusted to any of the accused or that the accused had domain over any property of the complainant which the accused converted to their own use — In such circumstances, the ingredients of S. 405, held, were not even prima facie satisfied — Hence, the Magistrate was in serious error in issuing process — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 405 and 406

Under an agreement dated 21-2-1995, Appellant 1 (the Company) appointed Respondent 2 as its consignment stockist subject to certain terms and conditions. The agreement remained in operation up to 31-3-1997. On 3-10-1997, Respondent 2 served a notice on Appellant 1 requesting him to pay a certain amount or in the alternative refer the dispute to arbitration under the arbitration clause contained in the agreement. The notice went in vain. Thereafter, Respondent 2 filed a complaint against the appellants under Sections 406, 420 and 120-B IPC alleging that the appellants, in connivance of each other, had committed the offences of criminal breach of trust and cheating against him. The Magistrate issued summons against the appellants. The appellants filed before the High Court a petition under Section 482 CrPC for quashing the said order of the Magistrate. The High Court dismissed that petition. The appellants contended that the essential ingredients of Sections 405, 415 and 120-B IPC had not been satisfied and, therefore, the Magistrate erred in issuing the process. They added that High Court also failed to exercise its jurisdiction under Section 482 IPC to correct that error. They added that at any rate no case was made out against Appellants 1 to 6 and 8. Partly allowing the appeal

In the present case, there is nothing either in the complaint and/or in the sworn statements of the complainant and the witnesses that any property was entrusted to any of the appellants at all or the appellants had domain over any of the properties of Respondent 2 which they dishonestly converted to their own use so as to satisfy the ingredients of Section 405 IPC punishable under Section 406 IPC. Further, the agreement also did not require entrustment of any property to the appellants. Taking the complaint and the statements of the witnesses as they are, it cannot be said even prima facie that the appellants committed any offence punishable under Section 406 IPC, since the ingredients of that offence were not satisfied. Hence the Magistrate committed a serious error in issuing process against the appellants for the said offence. (Para 20). S.W. Palanitkar v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 241: 2002 SCC (Cri) 129: AIR 2001 SC 2960: 2002 Cri LJ 548.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-10-2001]

Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521; Nagawwa v. Veeranna Shivalingappa Konjalgi, (1976) 3 SCC 736: 1976 SCC (Cri) 507; Punjab National Bank v. Surendra Prasad Sinha, 1993 Supp (1) SCC 499: 1993 SCC (Cri) 149, followed

[2511] — S. 200 — Complaint for dishonour of cheque — Complainant — Who is, in case of incorporeal body — In proceedings by whom and how represented — Held, "complainant" is not defined under CrPC — NI Act requires a complaint to be made by the payee or by the holder in due course — Procedure relating to initiation of proceedings, trial and disposal of such complaints, is governed by the Code — If the payee is a company, necessarily the complaint should be filed in the name of the company — S. 142 of the NI Act does not specify who should represent the company, if a company is the complainant — A company can be represented by an employee or even by a non-employee authorised and empowered to represent the company either by a resolution or by a power of attorney — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 142 and 138

The term "complainant" is not defined under CrPC. Section 142 of the NI Act requires a complaint under Section 138 of that Act to be made by the payee (or by the holder in due course). It is thus evident that in a complaint relating to dishonour of a cheque (which has not been endorsed by the payee in favour of anyone), it is the payee alone who can be the complainant. The NI Act only provides that dishonour of a cheque would be an offence and the manner of taking cognizance of offences punishable under Section 138 of that Act. However, the procedure relating to initiation of proceedings, trial and disposal of such complaints, is governed by the Code. Section 200 CrPC requires that the Magistrate, on taking cognizance of an offence on complaint, shall examine upon oath the complainant and the witnesses present and the substance of such examination shall be reduced to writing and shall be signed by the complainant and the witnesses. The requirement of Section 142 of the NI Act that the payee should be the complainant, is met if the complaint is in the name of the payee. If the payee is a company, necessarily the complaint should be filed in the name of the company. Section 142 of the NI Act does not specify who should represent the company, if a company is the complainant. A company can be represented by an employee or even by a non-employee authorised and empowered to represent the company either by a resolution or by a power of attorney. (Para 14)

Section 138 of the NI Act mandates that the payee alone, whether a corporeal person or incorporeal person, shall be the complainant. Section 200 CrPC contemplates only a corporeal person being a complainant. It mandatorily requires the examination of the complainant and the sworn statement being signed by the complainant. If the payee is a company, an incorporeal body, the said incorporeal body can alone be the complainant. The mandatory requirement of Section 200 CrPC is that a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence on complaint, shall examine upon oath the complainant and that the substance of such examination reduced to writing shall be signed by the complainant. An incorporeal body can obviously neither give evidence nor sign the deposition. If literal interpretation is applied, it would lead to an impossibility as an incorporeal body is incapable of being examined. A harmonious and purposive interpretation of Section 142 of the NI Act and Section 200 CrPC becomes necessary. Section 142 only requires that the complaint should be in the name of the payee. Where the complainant is a company, who will represent the company and how the company will be represented in such proceedings, is not governed by the Code but by the relevant law relating to companies. Section 200 CrPC mandatorily requires an examination of the complainant; and where the complainant is an incorporeal body, evidently only an employee or representative can be examined on its behalf. As a result, the company becomes a de jure complainant and its employee or other representative, representing it in the criminal proceedings, becomes the de facto complainant. Thus in every complaint, where the complainant is an incorporeal body, there is a complainant-de jure, and a complainant-de facto. Where the complainant is an incorporeal body represented by one of its employees, the employee who is a public servant is the de facto complainant and in signing and presenting the complaint, he acts in the discharge of his official duties. Therefore, it follows that in such cases, the exemption under clause (a) of the first proviso to Section 200 CrPC will be available. (Paras 15 and 16)

When in a complaint in regard to dishonour of a cheque issued in favour of a company or corporation, for the purpose of Section 142 of the NI Act, the company will be the complainant, and for purposes of Section 200 CrPC, its employee who represents the company or corporation, will be the de facto complainant. In such a complaint, the de jure complainant, namely, the company or corporation will remain the same but the de facto complainant (employee) representing such de jure complainant can change, from time to time. And if the de facto complainant is a public servant, the benefit of exemption under clause (a) of the proviso to Section 200 CrPC will be available, even though the complaint is made in the name of a company or corporation. (Para 19)

Thus, the answer to the question raised is: where an incorporeal body is the payee and the employee who represents such incorporeal body in the complaint is a public servant, he being the de facto complainant, clause (a) of the proviso to Section 200 CrPC will be attracted and consequently, the Magistrate need not examine the complainant and the witnesses. Summoning order of the Magistrate stands restored. (Paras 20 and 21). National Small Industries Corpn. Ltd. v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 1 SCC 407.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-2008]

Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, (1998) 1 SCC 687: 1998 SCC (Cri) 475; MCD v. Jagdish Lal, (1969) 3 SCC 389, relied on

[2512] — S. 200 — Filing of complaint by payee alone under — Mandatory examination of complainant under CrPC — Incorporeal person — Examination of — Method — Held, if a literal interpretation is applied, it would lead to an impossibility as an incorporeal body is incapable of being examined — A harmonious and purposive interpretation of S. 142 of NI Act and S. 200 of the Code becomes necessary — S. 200 of the Code mandatorily requires an examination of the complainant; and where the complainant is an incorporeal body, evidently only an employee or representative can be examined on its behalf — Company becomes a de jure complainant and its employee or other representative, representing it in the criminal proceedings, becomes the de facto complainant — Where the complainant is an incorporeal body represented by one of its employees, the employee who is a public servant is the de facto complainant and in signing and presenting the complaint, he acts in the discharge of his official duties — In such cases, the exemption under clause (a) of the first proviso to S. 200 of the Code will be available — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138

The appellant a "government company" lodged a complaint against the second respondent Company alleging that they had issued a cheque drawn in favour of the appellant towards discharge of its liability, which was dishonoured when presented for payment. The appellant prayed for summoning and punishing the second respondent and its Directors (Respondents 3 and 4). The Metropolitan Magistrate took cognizance and summoned the accused but did not examine the complainant and its witnesses, under Section 200 CrPC as he held that as the complaint was filed by a public servant in discharge of his public duties; his examination was dispensed with. The respondents challenged the summoning order on the basis that as the complainant was a government company and not a public servant, the exemption under clause (a) of the proviso to Section 200 CrPC was not available; and that the Magistrate could not have dispensed with the mandatory requirement of examining the complainant on oath, under Section 200 CrPC. The High Court accepted this contention and allowed the petition and quashed the summoning order.

The appellant has thus filed the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The object of Section 200 CrPC requiring the complainant and witnesses to be examined, is to find out whether there are sufficient grounds for proceeding against the accused and to prevent issue of process on complaints which are false or vexatious or intended to harass the persons arrayed as accused. Where the complainant is a public servant or court, clause (a) of the proviso to Section 200 CrPC raises an implied statutory presumption that the complaint has been made responsibly and bona fide and not falsely or vexatiously. On account of such implied presumption, where the complainant is a public servant, the statute exempts examination of the complainant and the witnesses, before issuing process. (Para 12)

When an employee of a government company or statutory corporation, who is a public servant, acts or purports to act in the discharge of his official duties, it necessarily refers to doing acts done or duties discharged by such public servant, for and on behalf of his employer, namely, the government company/statutory corporation. Any complaint by a public servant (if he happens to be an employee of a government company) acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties, can only be in regard to the transactions or affairs of the employer company. When an offence is committed in regard to a transaction of the government company, it will be illogical to say that a complaint regarding such offence, if made by an employee acting for and on behalf of the company will have the benefit of exemption under clause (a) of the proviso to Section 200 CrPC, but a complaint in regard to very same offence, if made in the name of the company represented by the said employee, will not have the benefit of such exemption. (Para 13)

The term "public servant" is not defined in the Code of Criminal Procedure. However, Section 2(y) CrPC provides that words and expressions used but not defined in the Code will have the meaning assigned to them under the Penal Code, 1860. Having regard to the aforesaid definition, it is clear that the appellant which is a government company is not a "public servant", but every employee of the appellant is a "public servant". (Para 11). National Small Industries Corpn. Ltd. v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 1 SCC 407.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-2008]

Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, (1998) 1 SCC 687: 1998 SCC (Cri) 475; MCD v. Jagdish Lal, (1969) 3 SCC 389, relied on

[2513] — Ss. 200 and 203 — Complaint offshoot of dismissal of ejectment suit and appeals filed by the complainant against the present appellants — But no allegation made in the complaint against the appellants — Held, proceedings against the appellants on the basis of such complaint would be abuse of process of the court. Nathi Rai v. State of U.P., (1981) 3 SCC 575: 1981 SCC (Cri) 757.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-1981]

[2514] — Ss. 200 proviso (a) and 190 — Cognizance of an offence upon complaint — Examination of complainant — Necessity of — Complaint in writing made by Deputy Chief Controller of Imports and Exports in respect of offences under IPC and Imports and Exports (Control) Act — The said complainant was a public servant who had filed the complaint in discharge of his official duty — Therefore, in view of S. 200 proviso (a), held, the Magistrate was fully justified in taking cognizance of the offences without recording the statement of the said complainant — Penal Code, 1860, S. 21, Twelfth clause (Para 11). Chief Controller of Imports & Exports v. Roshanlal Agarwal, (2003) 4 SCC 139: 2003 SCC (Cri) 788: AIR 2003 SC 1900: 2003 Cri LJ 1698: (2003) 155 ELT 216.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2003]

[2515] — Ss. 200 proviso (a) and 204 — Complaint filed by Dy. Chief Controller of Imports and Exports under, against a company and its MD — Clear allegations made in the complaint that MD committed the offence acting on behalf of the licensee company — Since the company by itself could not act and had acted through the MD, held, the complaint against the MD could not be quashed on ground that offence under S. 5, Import and Export (Control) Act, 1947 must be principally done by licensee — If allegations prima facie established the offence, issue of process against the MD not vitiated by non-application of mind — Import and Export (Control) Act, 1947, S. 5. T.J. Stephen v. Parle Bottling Co. (P) Ltd., 1988 Supp SCC 458: 1988 SCC (Cri) 690: AIR 1988 SC 994: (1988) 16 ECC 185: (1988) 64 Comp Cas 151.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-1988]

[2516] — Ss. 200 proviso (a) and 204 — Complaint filed by public servant — If facts alleged in the complaint prima facie show commission of offence, held, complaint cannot be quashed in absence of statement of witnesses or copies of documents etc. — Records of investigation are not evidence in such case — Issue of process in the circumstances not vitiated by non-application of mind — Import and Export (Control) Act, 1947, S. 5. T.J. Stephen v. Parle Bottling Co. (P) Ltd., 1988 Supp SCC 458: 1988 SCC (Cri) 690: AIR 1988 SC 994: (1988) 16 ECC 185: (1988) 64 Comp Cas 151.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-1988]

— S. 200 first proviso See also Ss. 482 and 200 first proviso, 190(1)(a) & 204

[2517] — S. 200 first proviso (a) — Complaint for dishonour of cheque under S. 138, NI Act, 1881 — Complainant government company or statutory corporation — Complaint filed by officer on behalf of — Mandatory examination

dispensed with by Magistrate — Whether deemed to be "public servant in the discharge of his official duties" — Availability of exemption from examination — Held, when an employee of a government company or statutory corporation, who is a public servant, acts or purports to act in the discharge of his official duties, it necessarily refers to doing acts done or duties discharged by such public servant, for and on behalf of his employer, namely, the government company/statutory corporation — When an offence is committed in regard to a transaction of the government company, it will be illogical to say that a complaint regarding such offence, if made by an employee acting for and on behalf of the company, will have the benefit of exemption under S. 200 first proviso (a), but a complaint in regard to very same offence, if made in the name of the company represented by the said employee, will not have the benefit of such exemption — Where the complainant is an incorporeal body represented by one of its employees, the employee who is a public servant is the de facto complainant and in signing and presenting the complaint, he acts in the discharge of his official duties — Exemption under clause (a) of the first proviso to S. 200 will be available — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 142 and 138 — Complaint on behalf of government company or statutory corporation — Exemption to officer filing the complaint from examination under S. 200 CrPC, 1973. National Small Industries Corpn. Ltd. v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 1 SCC 407.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-2008]

Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, (1998) 1 SCC 687: 1998 SCC (Cri) 475; MCD v. Jagdish Lal, (1969) 3 SCC 389, relied on

— S. 201 See Ss. 70 and 201 to 204

See also Ss. 156 & 157 and 190 & 200 to 203

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190 and 200 to 203, 154 and 156

See also Ss. 190 & 200 to 203 and 156 & 157

See also Ss. 200 to 204 and 154(3)

See also Ss. 204, 201 to 203 and 70

See also Ss. 475, 190, 200 to 204

[2518] — Ss. 201, 203 and 173 — Case registered under Ss. 161 and 165 IPC and S. 5(2) of Prevention of Corruption Act — Held, offences exclusively triable by a Special Court — When police submitted cancellation report under S. 173 CrPC before Magistrate, the Magistrate had no power to pass order discharging the accused on the basis of that report — Magistrate should have instead forwarded the report to the Special Judge — Hence, Magistrate's order set aside directing him to transmit all the papers along with the cancellation report to the Special Judge having jurisdiction — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — Ss. 6(1) and 5(2) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 161 and 165 — Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1952 — S. 7(1). Sampat Singh v. State of Haryana, (1993) 1 SCC 561: 1993 SCC (Cri) 376.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-1992]

A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 Supp (1) SCR 1: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372, followed

K. Siva Kanchi Reddy v. State of A.P., 1991 APLJ 1, approved

— S. 202 (Ch. XV) See Ss. 190 (Ch. XIV), 200, 202 (Ch. XV) and 204 (Ch. XVI)

— S. 202 See also S. 202, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1080 et seq. in Vol. 2

See also Ss. 155 to 159, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 998 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 202 See Ss. 70 and 201 to 204

See also Ss. 156 & 157 and 190 & 200 to 203

See also Ss. 156 and 202

See also Ss. 156(3) and 202

See also Ss. 190, 173, 200 and 202

See also Ss. 190, 173(2), 169, 200, 202 and 204

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190 and 200 to 203, 154 and 156

See also Ss. 190 & 200 to 203 and 156 & 157

See also Ss. 190, 200, 202 and 482

See also Ss. 190(1), 173(2), 169, 200 and 202

See also Ss. 190(1)(a) & (b) and 173(2), 200 & 202

See also Ss. 190(1)(b), 200, 202 and 204

See also Ss. 197, 154 and 202

See also Ss. 200 to 204 and 154(3)

See also Ss. 200 and 202

See also Ss. 200, 202, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 203 and 202

See also Ss. 204, 200 and 202

See also Ss. 204, 200, 202, 203 and 482

See also Ss. 204, 201 to 203 and 70

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202 and 200

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200, 239 and 362 & 482

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200 and 482

See also Ss. 300, 319, 202 and 203

See also Ss. 303, 300, 202 and 319
See also Ss. 475, 190, 200 to 204
See also Ss. 482, 200, 202, 203 and 204
See also Ss. 482 and 202
See also Ss. 482 and 202, 203 & 245
See also Ss. 482, 204, 200 and 202

[2519] — S. 202 — Enquiry under — Accused has no locus standi and is not entitled to be heard on the question whether the process should be issued against him or not. Nagawwa v. V.S. Konjalgi, (1976) 3 SCC 736: 1976 SCC (Cri) 507: AIR 1976 SC 1947: 1976 Cri LJ 1533.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-4-1976]

Distinguished in Prabha Mathur v. Pramod Aggarwal, (2008) 9 SCC 469*

[2520] — S. 202 [as amended by Act 25 of 2005 w.e.f. 23-6-2006] — Enquiry before issue of process under, held, is mandatory (w.e.f. 23-6-2006) — Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 2005, S. 19 (Paras 2 to 4). K.T. Joseph v. State of Kerala, (2009) 15 SCC 199: (2009) 2 KLT 873: (2009) 80 AIC 151 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-2009]

[2521] — S. 202 — Inquiry under — Nature of and standard of scrutiny of evidence therein — Per Shah, J., such inquiry, held, is a limited one and the standard of Magistrate's scrutiny of the evidence is not the same as that applied while framing charges. Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230: 2000 SCC (Cri) 379: AIR 2000 SC 637: 2000 Cri LJ 930: (2000) 1 KLT 494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas[2] and M.B. Shah[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

[2522] — S. 202 — Magistrate, after examining the complainant and his witnesses, finding that matter requiring further probe — Hence, directing police to investigate the matter — Thereafter on submission of police report hearing the matter afresh and directing issue of summons — Validity of said action taken by Magistrate — Challenge to, on the ground that having once taken cognizance and proceeded to hold the inquiry under S. 202 CrPC the Magistrate could not have referred the matter for investigation by police at all and he should have proceeded in the matter himself — Rejecting the challenge, held, procedure adopted by the Magistrate was perfectly in order — Proceedings before the Magistrate, restored

It is clear from a perusal of the order made by the learned Magistrate that he has not done anything other than to comply with the provisions of Section 202(1) proviso (b) CrPC. The procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate is perfectly in order. (Para 4). Bhagat Ram v. Surinder Kumar, (2004) 11 SCC 622.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, B.N. Agrawal and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-2004]

Suresh Chand Jain v. State of M.P., (2001) 2 SCC 628: 2001 SCC (Cri) 377, distinguished on facts

[2523] — S. 202 — Object and scope of inquiry under — The object, held, is to ascertain whether there is a prima facie case against the accused — At that stage the Magistrate examines whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding with the matter and not whether there is sufficient ground for conviction

The expression "cognizance" has not been defined in CrPC. But the word (cognizance) is of indefinite import. It has no esoteric or mystic significance in criminal law. It merely means "become aware of" and when used with reference to a court or a Judge, it connotes "to take notice of judicially". It indicates the point when a court or a Magistrate takes judicial notice of an offence with a view to initiating proceedings in respect of such offence said to have been committed by someone. (Para 19)

"Taking cognizance" does not involve any formal action of any kind. It occurs as soon as a Magistrate applies his mind to the suspected commission of an offence. Cognizance is taken prior to commencement of criminal proceedings. Taking of cognizance is thus a sine qua non or condition precedent for holding a valid trial. Cognizance is taken of an offence and not of an offender. Whether or not a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence depends on the facts and circumstances of each case and no rule of universal application can be laid down as to when a Magistrate can be said to have taken cognizance. (Para 20)

The underlying object of the inquiry under Section 202 is to ascertain whether there is prima facie case against the accused. It thus allows a Magistrate to form an opinion whether the process should or should not be issued. The scope of inquiry under Section 202 is extremely limited. At that stage, what a Magistrate is called upon to see is whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding with the matter and not whether there is sufficient ground for conviction of the accused. (Para 22)

Chapter XVI (Commencement of proceedings before Magistrates) containing Section 204, whereunder process can be issued, will apply only after cognizance of an offence has been taken by a

Magistrate under Chapter XIV containing Section 190 which empowers a Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence in certain circumstances. (Paras 23 and 21)

Thus, from the scheme of CrPC it is clear that "Initiation of proceedings", dealt with in Chapter XIV, is different from "Commencement of proceedings" covered by Chapter XVI. For commencement of proceedings, there must be initiation of proceedings. In other words, initiation of proceedings must precede commencement of proceedings. Without initiation of proceedings under Chapter XIV, there cannot be commencement of proceedings before a Magistrate under Chapter XVI. The High Court was not right in equating initiation of proceedings under Chapter XIV with commencement of proceedings under Chapter XVI. (Para 24). Chief Enforcement Officer v. Videocon International Ltd., (2008) 2 SCC 492: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 471: AIR 2008 SC 1213: 2008 Cri LJ 1636.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-1-2008]

R.R. Chari v. State of U.P., AIR 1951 SC 207: 1951 SCR 312; Narayandas Bhagwandas Madhavdas v. State of W.B., AIR 1959 SC 1118: (1960) 1 SCR 93; Ajit Kumar Palit v. State of W.B., AIR 1963 SC 765: 1963 Supp (1) SCR 953; Hareram Satpathy v. Tikaram Agarwala, (1978) 4 SCC 58: 1978 SCC (Cri) 496; Gopal Das Sindhi v. State of Assam, AIR 1961 SC 986; Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521; Darshan Singh Ram Kishan v. State of Maharashtra, (1971) 2 SCC 654: 1971 SCC (Cri) 628; Devarapalli Lakshminarayana Reddy v. V. Narayana Reddy, (1976) 3 SCC 252: 1976 SCC (Cri) 380; M.L. Sethi v. R.P. Kapur, AIR 1967 SC 528: (1967) 1 SCR 520, relied on

Supdt. & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. Abani Kumar Banerjee, AIR 1950 Cal 437, approved

[2524] — S. 202 — Scope of inquiry under — Accused has no right to participate and cross-examine any prosecution witness

The scope of inquiry under Section 202 CrPC is a very limited one and that is to find out whether there are sufficient grounds for proceeding against the accused who has no right to participate therein much less a right to cross-examine any witness examined by the prosecution, but he may remain present only with a view to be informed of what is going on. As during the course of inquiry under Section 202 CrPC an accused has no right much less opportunity to cross-examine a prosecution witness, statement of such a witness recorded during the course of the inquiry is not admissible in evidence under Section 33 of the Evidence Act and, consequently, the same cannot form the basis of conviction of an accused. (Paras 9 and 10). Sashi Jena v. Khadal Swain, (2004) 4 SCC 236: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1077: AIR 2004 SC 1492: 2004 Cri LJ 1394: (2004) 15 AIC 19 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-2-2004]

Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 397, relied on

Distinguished in Prabha Mathur v. Pramod Aggarwal, (2008) 9 SCC 469

[2525] — Ss. 202, 190 and 173 — Complaint case — Magistrate not accepting final form submitted by the police which investigated the matter on the basis of the FIR, held, can still take cognizance of the complaint under S. 202 — Gopal Vijay Verma case, (1982) 3 SCC 510, affirmed. Kishore Kumar Gyanchandani v. G.D. Mehrotra, AIR 2002 SC 483.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, S.N. Phukan and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-2001]

[2526] — Ss. 202, 190 and 204 — No additional material placed on record after investigation directed under — However IO reporting that prima facie case made out — Cognizance if permissible — Officer making investigation under S. 202 merely reporting that prima facie case made out against the accused, but neither mentioning details of the investigation, nor referring to the statements of witnesses examined, nor producing any document — Magistrate, having no additional material before him except what was already existing at the time of making the investigation order, held, not justified in taking cognizance of the case and ordering issue of process only on the basis of the opinion expressed by the officer. Mohd. Ataullah v. Ram Saran Mahto, (1981) 2 SCC 266: 1981 SCC (Cri) 419: AIR 1981 SC 1155: 1981 Cri LJ 616.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-1981]

[2527] — Ss. 202 and 203 — Issue of process — When not proper — Ingredients of the offence under Ss. 405 and 406 IPC — Where the accused company supplied to its consignment stockist goods in a quantity less than that postulated in the agreement but there was no entrustment of any property to the company or any of the other accused persons at all nor had the accused persons domain over any property of the complaint consignment stockist which the accused persons might have dishonestly converted to their own use, held, the ingredients of the offence punishable under Section 406 were not satisfied — Hence, in such a case, the Magistrate ought not to have issued process — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 405 and 406. S.W. Palanitkar v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 241: 2002 SCC (Cri) 129: AIR 2001 SC 2960: 2002 Cri LJ 548.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-10-2001]

[2528] — Ss. 202 and 245 — Mere pendency of a civil suit would not be a bar to institute or proceed with a criminal complaint. Maratt Rubber Ltd. v. J.K. Marattukalam, (2000) 9 SCC 547: 2001 SCC (Cri) 646.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-2000]

[2529] — Ss. 202 and 482 — Scope of inquiry by High Court under S. 202 — Court must be satisfied, on evidence adduced by prosecution, about existence of a prima facie case for regular trial — Where on a complaint filed alleging bigamy, CJM on being prima facie satisfied that offence of bigamy under S. 494 and Ss. 494/109 IPC made out, issued process to respondents, held, High Court under S. 482 CrPC not justified in quashing the proceedings by taking the view that there was no allegation in the complaint about first and second marriages by performance of religious rites

The scope of enquiry under S. 202 is extremely restricted only to finding out the truth or otherwise of the allegations made in the complaint in order to determine whether process should issue or not under S. 204 of the Code or whether the complaint should be dismissed by resorting to S. 203 of the Code on the footing that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding on the basis of the statements of the complainant and of his witnesses, if any. But the enquiry at that stage does not partake the character of a full-dress trial which can only take place after process is issued under S. 204 of the Code calling upon the proposed accused to answer the accusation made against him for adjudging the guilt or otherwise of the said accused person. Further, the question whether the evidence is adequate for supporting the conviction can be determined only at the trial and not at the stage of the enquiry contemplated under S. 202 of the Code. Thus during the course of the enquiry under S. 202 of the Code, the enquiry officer has to satisfy himself simply on the evidence adduced by the prosecution whether prima facie case has been made out so as to put the proposed accused on a regular trial and that no detailed enquiry is called for during the course of such enquiry.

In the present case the High Court exceeded the scope of the enquiry contemplated under S. 202 of the Code and has gone into the question of sufficiency of evidence for conviction of the offence of bigamy.

The submission that the first marriage having been celebrated in accordance with the custom dispensing with the requisite ceremonies and usage applicable to the parties, the alleged first marriage should be held to have been not proved in the eye of the law is not available to be raised before the Supreme Court because that could be determined only at the stage of trial of the case. Mohinder Singh v. Gulwant Singh, (1992) 2 SCC 213: 1992 SCC (Cri) 361: AIR 1992 SC 1894.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian, M. Fathima Beevi and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-1991]

Vadilal Panchal v. Dattatraya Dulaji Ghadigaonker, AIR 1960 SC 1113: (1961) 1 SCR 1: 1960 Cri LJ 1499; Pramatha Nath Taluqdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, 1962 Supp 2 SCR 297: AIR 1962 SC 876: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770, relied on

State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, (1977) 2 SCC 699: 1977 SCC (Cri) 404, distinguished

[2530] — S. 202 — All the three pre-requisites under S. 33 second proviso, Evidence Act, 1872 must be satisfied to attract S. 33 — Accused's "right and opportunity to cross-examine" in first proceeding — Statement of prosecution witness recorded during course of inquiry under S. 202 CrPC — Since the accused had no right and opportunity to cross-examine any prosecution witness at the stage of inquiry under S. 202 CrPC, held, such statement would not be relevant and admissible under S. 33 in later stage of the proceedings before trial court so as to form basis of his conviction — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 34 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 33 second proviso

Under Section 33 of the Evidence Act, evidence given by a witness in a judicial proceeding or before any person authorized to take it is admissible for the purpose of proving in a subsequent judicial proceeding or in a later stage of the same judicial proceeding, the truth of the facts which it stated in its evidence given in earlier judicial proceeding or earlier stage of the same judicial proceeding; but under proviso there are three prerequisites for making the said evidence admissible in subsequent proceeding or later stage of the same proceeding and they are: (i) that the earlier proceeding was between the same parties; (ii) that the adverse party in the first proceeding had the right and opportunity to cross-examine; and (iii) that the questions in issue in both the proceedings were substantially the same. In the absence of any of these three prerequisites, Section 33 of the Act would not be attracted. (Para 8). Sashi Jena v. Khadal Swain, (2004) 4 SCC 236: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1077: AIR 2004 SC 1492: 2004 Cri LJ 1394: (2004) 15 AIC 19 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-2-2004]

V.M. Mathew v. V.S. Sharma, (1995) 6 SCC 122, relied on [2531] — S. 202 — Statement of prosecution witness recorded during course of inquiry under S. 202 CrPC cannot be proved under S. 157, Evidence Act, 1872 to corroborate evidence of other witnesses examined during trial — Previous statement of a particular witness can be used to corroborate only his own evidence during trial and not evidence of other witnesses — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 157 (Para 11). Sashi Jena v. Khadal Swain, (2004) 4 SCC 236: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1077: AIR 2004 SC 1492: 2004 Cri LJ 1394: (2004) 15 AIC 19 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-2-2004]

Moti Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1964 SC 900: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 727, relied on [2532] — S. 202 — On a complaint regarding offence under Ss. 7(1)/16(1)(a), Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Magistrate holding enquiry under S. 202, CrPC — Act containing inter alia specific allegation that Sales Managers of Delhi branch of a company having its factory at Bombay were in charge of and responsible for conduct of the company's business at Delhi — Held, the allegation constitutes a prima facie case against the Sales Managers and therefore, Magistrate not justified in dismissing the complaint against them while issuing summons against the company and other accused — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 17, 7(1) & 16(1)(a). State (Delhi Admn.) v. I.K. Nangia, (1980) 1 SCC 258: 1980 SCC (Cri) 220: AIR 1979 SC 1977: 1980 Cri LJ 834: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 343.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-1979]

[2533] — S. 202 — Application, scope and implications of S. 22 TOHO — Whether a bar to applicability of S. 202 CrPC — Transplantation of Human Organs Act, 1994, S. 22

A case was lodged against the appellants (medical practitioners) in the police station for offences under IPC and Transplantation of Human Organs Act, 1994 (TOHO). The matter was transferred to CBI and it lodged a fresh FIR on 8-2-2008. A-2 was arrested on 10-2-2008 and produced before the Magistrate on 11-2-2008. A-1 surrendered on 17-2-2008 and was produced before the Magistrate on 18-2-2008. Government authorisation was accorded under Section 22 TOHO vide order dated 11-4-2008. A complaint was filed by CBI before the Magistrate for taking cognizance against the appellant medical practitioners for commission of the offences under Section 120-B r/w Sections 326, 342, 417, 465, 473, 506 and 307 IPC and Sections 18, 19 and 20, Transplantation of Human Organs Act, 1994 (TOHO).

Applicability of Section 167(2) CrPC for cognizance taken by the Magistrate under Section 22 TOHO was the question involved in this appeal. A-2 filed a bail application under Section 167(2) CrPC on 9-5-2008. The High Court by the impugned order held that as the complaint was filed within 90 days, even if the Magistrate had delayed in taking cognizance, the petitioners were not entitled to protection under Section 167(2) CrPC.

Dismissing the appeals,

Held :

Section 167(2) CrPC would not apply to provisions under TOHO. Ordinarily although in terms of CrPC, CBI upon completion of investigation and upon obtaining remand of the accused from time to time, was required to file a police report, it was precluded from doing so by reason of the provisions contained in Section 22 TOHO. Section 22 TOHO prohibits taking of cognizance except on a complaint made by an appropriate authority. By reason of Section 22 TOHO, Section 173(2) CrPC by implication is necessarily not applicable. Thus when the question of submitting a report in terms of Section 173(2) would not arise, Section 167(2) CrPC would also not be attracted. (Paras 32 and 25 to 28)

It is one thing to say that the court could take recourse to the procedure laid down in Section 202 CrPC or even reject the complaint but then only because such a course of action could be resorted to by the Magistrate, the same, by itself, would not lead to a conclusion that the complaint petition should have been treated to be a police report; the logical corollary whereof being to invoke the provisions of Section 167(2) CrPC. (Para 29)

Even assuming for the sake of argument that Section 167(2) CrPC requires filing of a report within 90 days and the complaint petition having been filed within the said period, the requirements thereof stood satisfied. Appellant 2 having been arrested on 10-2-2008 and Appellant 1 having surrendered on 17-2-2008 as also the complaint petition having been filed on 29-4-2008, the requirement of Section 167(2) stood satisfied. Only because the court itself took a long time in taking cognizance of the offence i.e. after the expiry of the period of 90 days, the same would not mean that any new right would be created in favour of the appellants thereby. (Paras 32 and 33)

A distinction between a remand of an accused at pre-cognizance stage vis-à-vis the post-cognizance stage is apparent. Whereas the remand to custody at a pre-cognizance stage is to be made in terms of Section 167(2) CrPC, an order of remand of an accused at post-cognizance stage can be effected only in terms of Section 309(2) thereof. (Para 34). Jeewan Kumar Raut v. CBI, (2009) 7 SCC 526: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 475: (2009) 80 AIC 243 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-7-2009]

Madhu Bala v. Suresh Kumar, (1997) 8 SCC 476: 1998 SCC (Cri) 111; Dinesh Dalmia v. CBI, (2007) 8 SCC 770: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 36, Sanjay Dutt v. State, (1994) 5 SCC 410: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1433; Mithabhai Pashabhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 6 SCC 332: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 1047, relied on

Moosakoya v. State of Kerala, 2008 Cri LJ 2388 (Ker), approved

[2534] — S. 202 — Issuance of process in respect of alleged offence under S. 10, CMR Act, 1929 without holding preliminary inquiry under S. 202 CrPC — Legality — Issuance of summons merely on the basis of the complaint and a sworn statement made by the complainant, held, illegal — However, liberty granted to the Magistrate to conduct afresh the statutory preliminary inquiry and on being satisfied prima facie as to the justification for issue of process, to proceed against the accused persons — Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929, S. 10 (Paras 4 and 5). Muzaffar Ali Sajjad v. State of A.P., (2004) 4 SCC 764: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1399: (2004) 3 Mah LJ 496: (2004) 3 MPLJ 334.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-3-2004]

— Ss. 202 and 156(3) See also Ss. 155 to 159, pp. 998 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 202(1) See also Ss. 167, 202(1), 204, 273 Expln. and 319

[2535] — Ss. 202(1) and 156(3) — Distinction between — Complaint disclosing on offence exclusively triable by Court of Session — Request by magistrate to police to further investigate under S. 156(3) not improper when no cognizance of the offence taken — S. 156(3) independent of S. 202

When a magistrate receives a complaint, he is not bound to take cognizance if the facts alleged in the complaint disclose the commission of an offence. The magistrate has discretion in the matter. If on a reading of the complaint he finds that the allegations therein disclose a cognizable offence and the forwarding of the complaint to the police for investigation under S. 156(3) will be conducive to justice and save the valuable time of the magistrate from being wasted in enquiring into a matter which was primarily the duty of the police to investigate, he will be justified in adopting that course as an alternative to taking cognizance of the offence himself.

Now whether the magistrate has or has not taken cognizance of the offence will depend on the circumstances of the particular case including the mode in which the case is sought to be instituted, and the nature of the preliminary action if any, taken by the magistrate. Broadly speaking when on receiving a complaint, the magistrate applies his mind for the purposes of proceeding under S. 200 and the succeeding sections in Chapter XV of the Code of 1973, he is said to have taken cognizance of the offence within the meaning of S. 190(1)(a). If, instead of proceeding under Chapter XV, he has in the judicial exercise of his discretion, taken action of some other kind, such as issuing a search warrant for the purpose of investigation, or ordering investigation by the police under S. 156(3), he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of any offence.

The position under the Code of 1898 with regard to the powers of a magistrate having jurisdiction, to send a complaint disclosing a cognizable offence — whether or not triable exclusively by the Court of Session — to the police for investigation under S. 156(3), remains unchanged under the Code of 1973. The distinction between a police investigation ordered under S. 156(3) and the one directed under S. 202, has also been maintained under the new Code; but a rider has been clamped by the first proviso to S. 202(1) that if it appears to the magistrate that an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session has been committed, he shall not make any direction for investigation.

The power to order police investigation under S. 156(3) is different from the power to direct investigation conferred by S. 202(1). The two operate in distinct spheres at different stages. The first is exercisable at the pre-cognizance stage, the second at the post-cognizance stage when the magistrate is in seisin of the case.

Therefore in the case of a complaint regarding the commission of a cognizable offence, the power under S. 156(3) can be invoked by the magistrate before he takes cognizance of the offence under S. 190(1)(a). But if he once takes such cognizance and embarks upon the procedure embodied in Chapter XV he is not competent to switch back to the pre-cognizance stage and avail of S. 156(3). Devarapally Lakshminarayana Reddy v. V. Narayana Reddy, (1976) 3 SCC 252: 1976 SCC (Cri) 380: AIR 1976 SC 1672: 1976 Cri LJ 1361.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria, P.N. Shinghal and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1976]

[2536] — S. 202(2) proviso — Appellant along with co-accused committed to the Court of Session for trial — Appellant discharged at the time of framing of charges and trial proceeded against the co-accused — On conclusion of the trial entire trial held void ab initio and the case remanded to the Magistrate for a fresh commitment against both the accused — Held, order of discharge passed in favour of the appellant having not been challenged by the State, Sessions Judge was not justified in directing a fresh trial of the appellant also. M. Babu v. State of Kerala, 1998 SCC (Cri) 1355.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-11-1996]

[2537] — S. 202(2) proviso — Determination of legislative intent behind — Proper course — Per Thomas, J., placement of the proviso below S. 202(2) and not below S. 200, held, not the only criterion for the said purpose — Indications can be gathered from other connected provisions for taking a contrary view — Taking into consideration Ss. 204, 208 and 41st Report of Law Commission, the said proviso, held, mandatory. Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230: 2000 SCC (Cri) 379: AIR 2000 SC 637: 2000 Cri LJ 930: (2000) 1 KLT 494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas^{2} and M.B. Shah^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

[2538] — Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465 — Provision in proviso to S. 202(2) requiring the Magistrate to hold inquiry in cases exclusively triable by Sessions Court — Nature of the said provision — Per Shah, J., is discretionary and omission to follow it would not vitiate further trial unless it is established that prejudice was caused to the accused — Per Thomas, J., is mandatory but omission to follow it is not by itself vitiative of the proceedings and if objection is raised at a belated stage, decision has to be taken in the light of S. 465 CrPC — In the instant case since the objection was raised only at the stage of arguments after the Sessions Court had recorded the evidence of prosecution witnesses and also the statements of the accused under S. 313, both the Judges holding bad the High Court's direction to the Magistrate to conduct afresh the inquiry and thereafter to recommit the case to Sessions Court — Hence, Supreme Court directing the Sessions Court to complete the hearing and dispose of the case on merits — Kerala Abkari Act, 1077 (NE 1 of 1077), Ss. 57-A and 56(b)

The Excise Inspector filed a complaint under Sections 57-A and 56(b) of the Kerala Abkari Act before a Judicial Magistrate on 16-11-1989. In the list of witnesses appended to the complaint names of ten persons were included. As the offences were exclusively triable by the Court of Session, the Magistrate committed the case to the Court of Session on 26-5-1990 albeit without examining any witness. Neither at the time of commencement of proceedings in the Sessions Court in 1993 nor when charges were framed on 2-9-1996 nor even thereafter the accused raised any objection that the order of committal was wrong due to non-examination of any witness in the committal court. After the witnesses had been examined and the accused had been questioned under Section 313 CrPC certain witnesses were recalled by the Sessions Court and after their examination further statements of the accused under Section 313 CrPC were recorded. Thereafter the accused examined the defence witnesses. Even at that stage no objection as to the validity of the committal order was raised by the accused. Hence, the Sessions Court passed over to the next stage envisaged in Section 233 CrPC and directed the accused to enter upon his defence. The accused availed themselves of that opportunity and examined four witnesses on the defence side. It was when arguments were being heard that the defence counsel raised the objections that the Magistrate erred in not following the procedure prescribed in the proviso to Section 202(2) CrPC before passing the committal order. The Sessions Judge made a reference to the High Court under Section 395(2) CrPC while the accused filed a criminal revision petition against the reference. The High Court heard both the matters together and directed the Magistrate to conduct a fresh inquiry in terms of the proviso to Section 202(2) by examining all the witnesses and thereafter to commit the case to the Sessions Court. Challenging that order the accused-appellants contended that the proviso to Section 202(2) CrPC was mandatory and that therefore, the High Court ought to have rather discharged them. Setting aside the High Court's order and remitting the matter to the Sessions Court unanimously but differing in their views in respect of the mandatory or discretionary nature of the proviso to Section 202, the members of a two-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court

Held :

Per Shah, J.

Under Section 200 read with Section 202 CrPC, it is only at the discretion of the Magistrate to decide whether to hold an inquiry or not before issue of process to the accused. In view of the provisions of Sections 200, 203 and 204, the question of complying with the proviso to Section 202(2) would arise only in cases where the Magistrate before taking cognizance of the case decides to hold the inquiry and further decides to take evidence of witnesses on oath. But the object and purpose of holding inquiry or investigation under Section 202 is to find out whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused or not and that holding of inquiry or investigation is not an indispensable course before the issue of process against the accused or dismissal of the complaint. It is an enabling provision to form an opinion as to whether or not process should be issued and to remove from the Magistrate's mind any hesitation that he may have felt upon the mere perusal of the complaint and the consideration of the complainant's evidence on oath. (Paras 7 and 10)

Further, the inquiry under Section 202 is of a limited nature. Firstly, to find out whether there is a prima facie case for issuing process against the person accused of the offence in the complaint and secondly, to prevent the issue of process in the complaint which is either false or vexatious or intended only to harass such a person. At that stage, the evidence is not to be meticulously appreciated, as the limited purpose is to find out "whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused". The standard to be adopted by the Magistrate in scrutinising the evidence is also not the same as the one which is to be kept in view at the stage of framing charges. At the stage of inquiry under Section 202 CrPC the accused has no right to intervene and it is the duty of the Magistrate while making an inquiry to elicit all facts not merely with a view to protect the interests of an absent accused person, but also with a view to bring to book a person or persons against whom grave allegations are made. (Para 11)

Therefore, it is apparent that the High Court erred in holding that there was breach of the mandatory provisions of the proviso to Section 202(2) CrPC and that the committal order was vitiated. The High Court failed to consider the proviso to Section 200, particularly proviso (a) to the said section and also the fact that inquiry under Section 202 is discretionary for deciding whether to issue process (under Section 204) or to dismiss the complaint (under Section 203). Under Section 200, on receipt of the complaint, the Magistrate can take cognizance and issue process to the accused. If the case is exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, he is required to commit the case to the Court of Session. (Para 13)

In cases where an inquiry is held, failure to comply with the statutory direction to examine all the witnesses would not vitiate further proceeding in all cases for the reasons, inter alia, that in view of Section 465 CrPC it would also depend upon the facts of each case depending upon the prejudice caused to the accused by non-compliance with the said proviso (Section 465), and that the person complaining of such irregularity should raise objection at the earliest stage and he should point out how prejudice was caused or was likely to be caused by not following the proviso. If he fails to raise such objection at the earliest stage, he is precluded from raising such objection later. (Paras 16 and 20)

It is no doubt true that by the use of the word "shall", it appears that the language used in the proviso is of a mandatory nature. At the same time, it is a procedural law and it is to be read in the context of Section 200 which enables the Magistrate to issue process without holding any inquiry and that inquiry under Section 202 is itself a discretionary one, giving the option to examine or not to examine witnesses on oath. Hence, the proviso to Section 202(2) is required to be read accordingly. Normally, the procedure prescribed therein should be followed, but non-observance of the said procedure may not vitiate further proceedings in all cases. A case where a complaint is filed not by the public servant and where the offence is exclusively triable by the Court of Session, the Magistrate should follow the proviso to Section 202(2) and call upon the complainant to produce all his witnesses and examine them on oath. However, in a case where a complaint is filed by a public servant after holding an inquiry and recording the statements, question of recording of such evidence may not arise. Hence, compliance with the proviso by the Magistrate in all sessions triable cases is not a must and would not vitiate further trial unless prejudice caused to the accused is established. (Para 17)

Further, the aforesaid interpretation would be in consonance with Chapter XXXV CrPC (Ss. 460 to 466), which deals with irregularities in the proceedings, which may or may not vitiate the proceedings. Sections 460 and 461 provide which irregularities would or would not vitiate the proceedings. In these sections, there is no mention of Section 202. Moreover in view of the provisions of Section 465, during inquiry under Section 202 when the Magistrate examines the witnesses on oath, as far as possible the proviso is to be complied with but the mandate is not absolute. (Para 18)

Moreover, this part of holding an inquiry is a procedural one and, therefore, even what is regarded as mandatory traditionally may, perhaps, have to be moderated into wholesome directions to be complied with in time or in extended time. (Para 19)

The High Court failed to notice the provisions of Section 465 CrPC as the objection with regard to such error, omission or irregularity in the committal order was required to be raised at the earliest stage. After the committal order in the case, the trial was almost over as the evidence of the prosecution witnesses was recorded by the Sessions Court, statements of the accused under Section 313 of the Code were also recorded, thereafter witnesses were recalled and examined, further statements were recorded and only at the stage of arguments the contention with regard to the so-called irregularity was raised, which was upheld by the Sessions Court and the High Court. In the background of these facts, it has to be held that holding of a fresh inquiry under Section 202 and thereafter committing the case again to the Sessions Court would be unnecessary. Therefore the Sessions Court should complete the hearing and dispose of the case on merits. (Paras 21 and 22)

Per Thomas, J. (partly concurring)

From Section 202(2) CrPC it may appear, prima facie, that the question of examining all witnesses would arise only when the Magistrate opts to hold an 'inquiry, otherwise not. In order to determine whether the provision in the proviso is mandatory or discretionary, if one goes by the placement of the proviso, one might say that the inquiry was not a must. Nonetheless the placement of the proviso is not the only criterion in discerning the legislative intent. Indications can be gathered from other connected provisions for taking a contrary view. (Paras 35 and 36)

Three categories of documents are mentioned in Section 208 the copies of which the Magistrate, who proceeds from the stage in Section 204, has to supply to the accused free of cost (in a complaint case involving an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session). As the words used here are "shall furnish", it is almost a compelling duty on the Magistrate to supply the said documents to the accused. The Magistrate cannot comply with the requirements of Section 208 where he failed to examine the witnesses before issuing the process to the accused. So the intention is not to indicate that the inquiry is only optional in the cases mentioned in Section 208. (Paras 38 and 39)

Moreover, Section 209 CrPC enjoins on the Magistrate to commit the case to the Court of Session after complying with the provisions in Section 208 of the Code. In the Sessions Court a Public Prosecutor alone can conduct prosecution, whether the case was instituted on a police report or on a complaint. Section 226 requires the Public Prosecutor to open his case in the court by stating the evidence by which he proposes to prove the guilt of the accused. If a case instituted on a complaint is committed to the Court of Session without complying with the requirements in clause (i) of Section 208, it would not be possible for the Public Prosecutor to know in advance what evidence he can adduce to prove the guilt of the accused. If no inquiry under Section 202 is to be conducted a Magistrate who decides to proceed only on the averments contained in the complaint filed by a public servant (who is not a witness to the core allegation) and such a case is committed to the Court of Session, its inevitable consequence would be that the Sessions Judge would have to axe down the case at the stage of Section 226 itself. (Paras 40 and 41)

The Supreme Court has already taken the stand that it would be advantageous to look into the deliberations made in the legislature, the objects and reasons for the enactments including recommendations of the Law Commission for the purpose of discerning the legislative idea behind inclusion of any particular provision. (Para 45)

Regarding Section 202 CrPC, Parliament has taken the cue from the Law Commission recommendation and introduced all the parameters in accordance with the recommendations contained in the 41st Report of the Law Commission. That is yet another factor which lends support to the interpretation given herein. (Para 46)

Thus, the proviso to Section 202(2) is not merely to confer a discretion on the Magistrate, but imposes a compelling duty on him to perform in such cases; albeit the Magistrate in such a situation is not obliged to examine the witnesses who could not be produced by the complainant when asked to produce such witnesses. (Para 47)

In the instant case, the stage had passed long ago for the accused or the prosecution to have raised objections that the committal order was vitiated due to non-examination of witnesses before the Magistrate issued process to the accused. Even if there was any such omission before process was issued, in view of Section 465 CrPC, the accused cannot raise such an objection for the first time at the fag end of a long-drawn trial in the Sessions Court. (Para 28)

When the accused had chosen not to raise objection on the premise of omission to examine witnesses before process was issued by the Magistrate, it must be taken that they had no grievance that such omission had occasioned failure of justice. Even if they had taken such objection after committal of the case to the Sessions Court there was no need to turn the switchboard backwards as there is no scope for believing that such omission had occasioned failure of justice. This is because no evidence of any witness would be used in the trial court unless such witness was examined in the trial court and the accused is afforded reasonable opportunity to cross-examine him. (Paras 31 and 48)

Therefore the impugned order passed by the High Court is to be set aside and the Sessions Judge is to be directed to dispose of the case on merits. (Para 49). Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230: 2000 SCC (Cri) 379: AIR 2000 SC 637: 2000 Cri LJ 930: (2000) 1 KLT 494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas^{2} and M.B. Shah^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

Ranjit Singh v. State of Pepsu (now Punjab), AIR 1959 SC 843: 1959 Cri LJ 1124; State of Punjab v. Shamlal Murari, (1976) 1 SCC 719: 1976 SCC (L&S) 118, followed

Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 397: (1964) 1 SCR 639; Vadilal Panchal v. Dattatraya Dulaji Ghadigaonkar, AIR 1960 SC 1113: 1960 Cri LJ 1499: (1961) 1 SCR 1; Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770: 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297; Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521; Mohinder Singh v. Gulwant Singh, (1992) 2 SCC 213: 1992 SCC (Cri) 361; Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, 1980 Supp SCC 499: 1981 SCC (Cri) 438; Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 190: 1976 SCC (Cri) 546; Mithilesh Kumari v. Prem Behari Khare, (1989) 2 SCC 95; Kalpnath Rai v. State, (1997) 8 SCC 732, relied on

Moideenkutty Haji v. Kunhikoya, (1987) 1 KLT 635: 1987 Cri LJ 1106 (FB), considered

M. Govindaraja Pillai v. Thangavelu Pillai, 1983 Cri LJ 917: 1983 MLW (Cri) 23 (Mad), partly approved and partly overruled

[2539] — S. 202(2) proviso and Ss. 200 to 210, 226, 227 and 465 — Non-examination of some witnesses cited in protest petition-cum-complaint — Effect — Word "shall" occurring in S. 202(2) proviso — Effect — Held, said occurrence of word "shall" is prima facie indicative of mandatory character of S. 202(2) proviso — However, non-examination of any or some of the witnesses cited by complainant is, by itself, not sufficient to denude Magistrate of jurisdiction to take cognizance and issue process provided he is satisfied that prima facie case is made out for doing so — Word "all" appearing in S. 202(2) proviso is qualified by word "his" which implies that complainant is not bound to examine all witnesses named in the complaint or whose names are disclosed in response to order passed by the Magistrate — Only those witnesses are required to be examined whom complainant considers material to make out prima facie case for issue of process — Choice being of complainant, he may choose not to examine other witnesses — Consequence of such non-examination is to be considered at trial and not at the stage of issuing process when Magistrate is not required to enter into detailed discussions on merits of case — Magistrate has only to see whether there exists sufficient ground for proceeding against accused — Hence, High Court erred in directing CJM to conduct further enquiry and pass fresh order in terms of S. 202(2) proviso (Paras 22 to 33). Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.S. Singhvi and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-7-2010]

Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230: 2000 SCC (Cri) 379, relied on

Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 500: 2001 SCC (Cri) 18, considered

Ranjit Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1959 SC 843: 1959 Cri LJ 1124; Moideenkutty Haji v. Kunhikoya, (1987) 1 KLT 635; M. Govindaraja Pillai v. Thangavelu Pillai, 1983 Cri LJ 917 (Mad), referred to

Birendra K. Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 498: 2001 SCC (Cri) 17, held, overruled

[2540] — S. 202(2) proviso — Provisions, held, mandatory. Birendra K. Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 498: 2001 SCC (Cri) 17.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-2000]

Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230, followed

[2541] — Ss. 202(2) proviso, 209 and 465 — Complaint case — Order of Magistrate committing the case to Sessions Court without holding inquiry under the proviso to S. 202(2) — Objection against such omission, held, should be taken at the earliest — If taken at a later stage decision should be taken keeping in view the provisions of S. 465. Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230: 2000 SCC (Cri) 379: AIR 2000 SC 637: 2000 Cri LJ 930: (2000) 1 KLT 494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas^{2} and M.B. Shah^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

— S. 203 See also S. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1082 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 203 See Ss. 2(d), 203 and 204
See also Ss. 4(2) r/w 190, 203 and 204
See also Ss. 70 and 201 to 204
See also Ss. 156 & 157 and 190 & 200 to 203
See also Ss. 156 & 157 and 190, 200 & 203
See also Ss. 173, 190(1)(b), 156(3), 200, 203 and 204
See also Ss. 173(2), (8), 190 and 203
See also Ss. 173(2), 169, 190, 200 and 203
See also Ss. 173(2), 169 and 203 & 190(1)
See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250
See also Ss. 190 and 200 to 203, 154 and 156
See also Ss. 190 & 200 to 203 and 156 & 157
See also Ss. 190, 200, 203 and 156 & 157
See also Ss. 200, 202, 203 and 204
See also Ss. 200 and 203
See also Ss. 200, 203 and 204
See also Ss. 200 to 204 and 154(3)
See also Ss. 200, 203, 204 and 245
See also Ss. 201, 203 and 173
See also Ss. 202 and 203

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 204, 200, 202, 203 and 482

See also Ss. 204, 201 to 203 and 70

See also Ss. 204 and 203

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202 and 200

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200, 239 and 362 & 482

See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200 and 482

See also Ss. 204, 203, 227, 228 and 190

See also Ss. 300, 319, 202 and 203

See also Ss. 475, 190, 200 to 204

See also Ss. 482, 190, 203, 211, 227, 239 and 245

See also Ss. 482, 200, 202, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 482 and 202, 203 & 245

See also Ss. 482, 203 and 227

See also Ss. 482, 203, 227 and 245

[2542] — S. 203 — Dismissal of complaint by Magistrate vide a cryptic and non-speaking order — Interference with, by High Court — Proper mode and approach in relation to — Held, the High Court should have remitted the case to the Magistrate for re-decision with a direction to apply his mind and decide the matter in accordance with law — It should not have proceeded to determine as to whether a case under the relevant provisions of IPC was made out against the appellants or not — Thus, the order of High Court directing the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offences, issue process and proceed with the trial, not sustainable — Matter remitted to Magistrate for fresh decision with a direction to pass a speaking order (Paras 6 to 8). Maikaal Fibres Ltd. v. ICICI Bank Ltd., (2005) 12 SCC 229.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-2005]

[2543] — Ss. 203, 173(1) and 190(1) — Recording of reasons — Police report submitted before Magistrate recommending discharge of accused — Complainant raising objection that case for taking cognizance made out — While rejecting such objection, court must record reasons — In absence of reasons, order of the court liable to be set aside

Since at the time of taking cognizance the Court has to exercise its judicial discretion it necessarily follows that if in a given case — as the present one — the complainant, as the person aggrieved, raises objections to the acceptance of a police report which recommends discharge of the accused and seeks to satisfy the Court that a case for taking cognizance was made out, but the Court overrules such objections, it is just and desirable that the reasons therefor be recorded. Necessity to give reasons which disclose proper appreciation of the issues before the Court needs no emphasis. Reasons introduce clarity and minimise chances of arbitrariness. That necessarily means that recording of reasons will not be necessary when the Court accepts such police report without any demur from the complainant. As the order of the Magistrate in the instant case does not contain any reason whatsoever, even though it was passed after hearing the objections of the complainant, it has got to be set aside. (Para 28). Rupan Deol Bajaj v. Kanwar Pal Singh Gill, (1995) 6 SCC 194: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1059: AIR 1996 SC 309.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-1995]

Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, (1985) 2 SCC 537: 1985 SCC (Cri) 267, relied on [2544] — Ss. 203, 204 and 209 — "Sufficient ground" — Import of — Held, means satisfaction that a prima facie case is made out against the accused and not sufficient ground for securing his conviction (Para 18). Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.S. Singhvi and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-7-2010]

Ramgopal Ganpatrai Ruia v. State of Bombay, AIR 1958 SC 97: 1958 Cri LJ 244: 1958 SCR 618; Vadilal Panchal v. Dattatraya Dulaji Ghadigaonkar, AIR 1960 SC 1113: 1960 Cri LJ 1499: (1961) 1 SCR 1; Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 397: (1964) 1 SCR 639; Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521; Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, 1980 Supp SCC 499: 1981 SCC (Cri) 438; Mohinder Singh v. Gulwant Singh, (1992) 2 SCC 213: 1992 SCC (Cri) 361; Chief Enforcement Officer v. Videocon International Ltd., (2008) 2 SCC 492: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 471, relied on

[2545] — Ss. 203, 204, 209 and 227 — In a case exclusively triable by Sessions Court, Magistrate at the stage of Ss. 203 and 204 has only to see if a prima facie case is made out against the accused — However, if instead, the Magistrate passes an order by meticulously appreciating the evidence, he merely commits an irregularity by exceeding his powers — In absence of any gross miscarriage of justice Supreme Court will not interfere with such order under Art. 136

At the stage of Ss. 203 and 204 in a case exclusively triable by the Court of Session, all that the Magistrate has to do is to see whether on a cursory perusal of the complaint and the evidence recorded during the preliminary inquiry under Ss. 200 and 202 there is prima facie evidence in support of the charge levelled against the accused. All that he has to see is whether or not there is 'sufficient ground for proceeding' against the accused. If there is prima facie evidence, that will be a sufficient ground for issuing process to the accused and committing them for trial to the Court of Session. The standard to be adopted by the Magistrate in scrutinising the evidence is not the same as the one which is to be kept in view at the stage of framing charges. At this stage of S. 203 and 204, the Magistrate is not to weigh the evidence meticulously as if he were the trial court.

However, where the Magistrate does not lack inherent jurisdiction to pass the order, he, in meticulously appreciating the evidence, only oversteps the limits of his direction and commits only an irregularity, if not illegality, in the exercise of his jurisdiction. Where the error committed by the Magistrate has not occasioned a gross failure of justice, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the impugned orders of the courts below in the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction under Art. 136 of the Constitution. Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, 1980 Supp SCC 499: 1981 SCC (Cri) 438: AIR 1980 SC 1780: 1980 Cri LJ 1271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-8-1980]

[2546] — Ss. 203 and 202 — Dismissal of complaint not on merits but on default of complainant to be present in court — Held, no bar for the complainant to file a fresh complaint on the same facts

Under Section 202 of the Code a Magistrate conducts an inquiry before issuing the process to the accused, for the purpose of determining whether "there is sufficient ground for proceeding". Section 203 of the Code empowers him to dismiss a complaint after holding such inquiry if he is of the opinion that "there is no sufficient ground for proceeding". In that event he has to record the reasons as to why he held that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding, though he need not write an elaborate order. But there is no provision in the Code or in any other statute which debars a complainant from preferring a second complaint on the same allegations if the first complaint did not result in a conviction or acquittal or even discharge. If the dismissal of the complaint was not on merit but on default of the complainant to be present, there is no bar in the complainant moving the Magistrate again with a second complaint on the same facts. But if the dismissal of the complaint under Section 203 of the Code was on merits the position could be different. When a Magistrate conducts an inquiry under Section 202 of the Code and dismisses the complaint on merits, a second complaint on the same facts cannot be made unless there are very exceptional circumstances. Even so, a second complaint is permissible depending upon how the complaint happened to be dismissed at the first instance. (Paras 10, 9 and 12)

There is no force in the contention that the complainant lacked bona fides as she suppressed the fact of dismissal of the first complaint when the second complaint was filed before the same Magistrate who dismissed the first complaint, and that too was done within a short interval. Even otherwise, nothing would turn out from the mere fact that the complaint did not contain an averment that the first complaint was dismissed for default. (Para 13)

As in this case the Magistrate did not consider the materials on record when he dismissed the first complaint, instead the said course was adopted by him only as a consequence of the default of the complainant presenting herself when the case was called, there is no reason to shut the door before her once and for all. (Para 14). Jatinder Singh v. Ranjit Kaur, (2001) 2 SCC 570: 2001 SCC (Cri) 354: AIR 2001 SC 784.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. T. Thomas and R. P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-1-2001]

Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 397; Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770, relied on [2547] — Ss. 203 and 482 — Application under S. 203 for review of order of subordinate criminal court, held, not maintainable — Proper course would be invocation of S. 482 (Para 22). N.K. Sharma v. Abhimanyu, (2005) 13 SCC 213: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 135: AIR 2005 SC 4303: 2005 Cri LJ 4529: (2005) 4 KLT 738.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2005]

Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927, relied on

Followed in Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140

— Ch. XVI See S. 319 and Ch. XVI

— S. 204 (Ch. XVI) See Ss. 190 (Ch. XIV), 200, 202 (Ch. XV) and 204 (Ch. XVI)

— S. 204 See also S. 204, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p.1084 in Vol. 2

— S. 204 See Ss. 2(d), 203 and 204

See also Ss. 4(2) r/w 190, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 70 and 201 to 204

See also Ss. 73, 167, 204, 82, 83 and 155

See also Ss. 156(3), 173(8), 190, 200 and 204

See also Ss. 167, 202(1), 204, 273 Expln. and 319

See also Ss. 167(5) (as amended by S. 4 of W.B. Act 24 of 1988), 436, 437, 204, 205, 206 and 161

See also Ss. 173, 190(1)(b), 156(3), 200, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 190, 154, 173, 200 and 204

See also Ss. 190, 173(2), 169, 200, 202 and 204

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193 and 195 to 199 & 204

See also Ss. 190, 200, 204 and 156(3)

See also Ss. 190, 200, 204, 173 and 482

See also Ss. 190, 204, 173(2), 154, 162 and 319

See also Ss. 190(1) & 200 and 204

See also Ss. 190(1)(a), 200 and 204

See also Ss. 190(1)(a), 200, 204, 173 and 482

See also Ss. 190(1)(b), 200, 202 and 204

See also Ss. 190(1)(b) & 204, 200, 156(3), 468 and 401

See also Ss. 200, 190(1)(a), 204, 300 and 482

See also Ss. 200 to 204 and 154(3)

See also Ss. 200, 202, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 200, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 200, 203, 204 and 245

See also Ss. 200, 204 and 190

See also Ss. 200 proviso (a) and 204

See also Ss. 202, 190 and 204

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 203, 204, 209 and 227

See also Ss. 227, 193, 204, 211

See also Ss. 319, 154, 156, 173, 190, 204, 209

See also Ss. 319 and 204

See also Ss. 397, 401, 204 and 199(2)

See also Ss. 397(2), 190 and 204

See also Ss. 397(2) and 204

See also Ss. 399 and 204

See also Ss. 401, 397 and 204

See also Ss. 401(2), 402, 204 and 482

See also Ss. 475, 190, 200 to 204

See also Ss. 482, 156, 190(1)(b) & 204

See also Ss. 482, 190 & 204

See also Ss. 482, 190(1) & 204

See also Ss. 482, 190(1), 204, 233 & 243

See also Ss. 482, 190(1)(b), 204, 173, 169 and 362

See also Ss. 482 and 200 first proviso, 190(1)(a) & 204

See also Ss. 482, 200, 202, 203 and 204

See also Ss. 482 & 204

See also Ss. 482, 204, 200 and 202

See also Ss. 482, 204 and 205

[2548] — S. 204 — Adverse observations — No notice — Impacting issue of process — Permissibility — Natural justice — Adverse observations imputing mens rea and commission of offence by a party — Need to issue notice prior to making of — Held, such observations could not be made against appellants without issuing notice to them — High Court order had the effect of virtually directing lower court to issue process to appellants — Held, this was not permissible without giving opportunity of show cause to appellants — Allahabad High Court Rules, 1952, Ch. XXII R. 2 — Constitution of India, Arts. 226 and 227

There was a dispute between the appellants and the respondents relating to transfer of certain property. The respondents filed a criminal case against the appellants under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 read with Sections 34 and 120-B IPC. The complaint was dismissed by lower courts on the ground that the matter was of civil nature and there was no ground for proceeding criminally against the appellants. However, the High Court set aside the orders of lower courts and issued certain directions which virtually had the effect of compelling the trial court to issue process to the appellants. The High Court while doing so did not issue any notice to the appellants though the appellants were arrayed as the respondents in the criminal writ petition. While setting aside the orders of lower courts, the High Court also made certain observations imputing criminal intention on the part of the appellants, and also observed that it was a "clear case of cheating".

Question was whether the High Court should have done this without issuing notice to the appellants and affording them opportunity of making their submissions. It was argued on behalf of the respondents that the appellants had no locus standi till summons or process was issued to them, and therefore the High Court, prior to this stage, could issue appropriate directions to lower court without affording any opportunity to the appellants.

Rejecting this argument and allowing the appeal,

Held:

The complainants approached the High Court by joining the appellants as the respondents. Writ petitions were not dismissed in limine. Notices ought to have been issued to the appellants under Rule 2 of Chapter XXII of the Allahabad High Court Rules, 1952, before the writ petitions were heard and finally decided. Even otherwise, issue of notice to the appellants was necessary and was in consonance with the principles of natural justice and fair play. (Para 20)

Observations regarding mens rea and "clear case of cheating" could not have been made without issuing notice to the appellants, and without affording opportunity of being heard. Though final direction to the trial court was to hold further inquiry and to make appropriate order, yet in view of observations made by the High Court, no option has been left with the trial court but to issue process. It is thus a case of fait accompli. The High Court could not have set aside the judgments of lower courts and could not have made the observations against the appellants without observing principles of natural justice. (Paras 22 to 24). Prabha Mathur v. Pramod Aggarwal, (2008) 9 SCC 469: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 787: (2008) 4 KLT 385.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2008]

Nagawwa v. Veeranna Shivalingappa Konjalgi, (1976) 3 SCC 736: 1976 SCC (Cri) 507; Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430: (1964) 1 SCR 639; Sashi Jena v. Khadal Swain, (2004) 4 SCC 236: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1077, distinguished

[2549] — S. 204 — Before issuing summons court should insist upon strict compliance with the statutory requirements (Para 7). Sabitha Ramamurthy v. R.B.S. Channaba- savaradhya, (2006) 10 SCC 581: AIR 2006 SC 3086: 2006 Cri LJ 4602.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-9-2006]

Monaben Ketanbhai Shah v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 7 SCC 15: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1857; Katta Sujatha v. Fertilizers & Chemicals Travancore Ltd., (2002) 7 SCC 655: 2003 SCC (Cri) 151; S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, (2005) 8 SCC 89: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975, followed

K.P.G. Nair v. Jindal Menthol India Ltd., (2001) 10 SCC 218: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1038, relied on

[2550] — S. 204 — Issue of process — Concept of

When it is said that court issues process, it means the court has taken cognizance of the offence and has decided to initiate the proceedings and as a visible manifestation of taking cognizance, process is issued which means that the accused is called upon to appear before the court. This may either take the form of a summons or a warrant, as the case may be. A.R. Antulay v. Ramdas Sriniwas Nayak, (1984) 2 SCC 500: 1984 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 1984 SC 718: 1984 Cri LJ 647: 1984 Bom LR 228.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: D.A. Desai, R.S. Pathak, O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-1984]

[2551] — S. 204 — Issue of process — Need for detailed order, if any — Held, there is no legal requirement for trial court to pass a detailed order while issuing process, whether summons or warrant, under S. 204 — Further, where Sessions Judge has doubts as to propriety of process issued by Magistrate, held, he ought to look into the complaint to form his own opinion instead of relegating the work to the trial Magistrate. U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Mohan Meakins Ltd., (2000) 3 SCC 745: AIR 2000 SC 1456: 2000 Cri LJ 1799: 2000 All LJ 872.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-2000]

[2552] — S. 204 — Issue of process — Recording of reasons by the Magistrate at this stage, held, not required (Para 10). Jagdish Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2004) 4 SCC 432: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1294: AIR 2004 SC 1734.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-3-2004]

[2553] — S. 204 — Issue of process — Whether offence made out and what defences are open to him, not to be considered at this stage

Whether the offence has been made out, whether he is liable and what are the defences open to him are not matters at this stage for consideration. It is for the learned Magistrate to proceed with the trial and to deal with according to law. Anil Saran v. State of Bihar, (1995) 6 SCC 142: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1051: AIR 1996 SC 204.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-8-1995]

[2554] — S. 204 — Summoning of accused — Order must show that Magistrate applied his mind to the facts of the case and law applicable thereto — He should carefully scrutinise the evidence brought on record and may himself put questions to the complainant and his witnesses to find out the allegations

Summoning of an accused in a criminal case is a serious matter. Criminal law cannot be set into motion as a matter of course. It is not that the complainant has to bring only two witnesses to support his allegations in the complaint to have the criminal law set into motion. The order of the Magistrate summoning the accused must reflect that he has applied his mind to the facts of the case and the law applicable thereto. He has to examine the nature of allegations made in the complaint and the evidence both oral and documentary in support thereof and would that be sufficient for the complainant to succeed in bringing charge home to the accused. It is not that the Magistrate is a silent spectator at the time of recording of preliminary evidence before summoning of the accused. The Magistrate has to carefully scrutinise the evidence brought on record and may even himself put questions to the complainant and his witnesses to elicit answers to find out the truthfulness of the allegations or otherwise and then examine if any offence is prima facie committed by all or any of the accused. Pepsi Foods Ltd. v. Special Judicial Magistrate, (1998) 5 SCC 749: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1400: AIR 1998 SC 128: 1998 Cri LJ 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Sujata V. Manohar and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-11-1998]

Limited by Everest Advertising (P) Ltd. v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2007) 5 SCC 54

[2555] — S. 204 — Order issuing process — Nature of — Whether an interim order — Question not gone into (Para 17). Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927: (2004) 113 DLT 356: (2004) 4 Mah LJ 274: (2004) 3 KLT 382: (2004) 4 MPLJ 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2004]

[2556] — Ss. 204, 70, 72, 73, 78 and 79 — Non-bailable warrant (NBW) — Issuance of, when justified — Duty of court in such cases — Held, courts should be extremely careful before issuing non-bailable warrants as issuance of these warrants involves interference with personal liberty — Enumerating the circumstances in which NBW should be issued, further held, though there cannot be any straitjacket formula for issuance of warrants, generally issuance of NBW should be avoided unless the accused is charged with a heinous crime and it is feared that he is likely to tamper or destroy the evidence or is likely to evade the process of law — Since personal liberty is paramount, courts cautioned that at the first and the second instance they must refrain from issuing NBWs — If the court is of the opinion that a summons will be sufficient in getting the appearance of the accused in the court, the summons or the bailable warrants should be preferred — Constitution of India, Art. 21

The issuance of non-bailable warrants involves interference with personal liberty. Arrest and imprisonment mean deprivation of the most precious right of an individual. Therefore, the courts have to be extremely careful before issuing non-bailable warrants. (Para 51)

Just as liberty is precious for an individual so is the interest of the society in maintaining law and order. Both are extremely important for the survival of a civilised society. Sometimes in the larger interest of the public and the State it becomes absolutely imperative to curtail freedom of an individual for a certain period, only then the non-bailable warrants should be issued. (Para 52)

Non-bailable warrant should be issued to bring a person to court when summons or bailable warrants would be unlikely to have the desired result. This could be when: it is reasonable to believe that the person will not voluntarily appear in court; or the police authorities are unable to find the person to serve him with a summons; or it is considered that the person could harm someone if not placed into custody immediately. There cannot be any straitjacket formula for issuance of warrants but as a general rule, unless an accused is charged with the commission of an offence of a heinous crime and it is feared that he is likely to tamper or destroy the evidence or is likely to evade the process of law, issuance of non-bailable warrants should be avoided. (Paras 53 and 56)

Since personal liberty is paramount, courts are cautioned that at the first and second instance they must refrain from issuing non-bailable warrants. As far as possible, if the court is of the opinion that a summons will suffice in getting the appearance of the accused in the court, the summons or the bailable warrants should be preferred. (Paras 55 and 54). Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 12 SCC 1: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 259: AIR 2008 SC 251: (2007) 144 DLT 257: (2008) 1 All LJ 40.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-10-2007]

Omwati v. State of U.P., (2004) 4 SCC 425: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1287; State of U.P. v. Poosu, (1976) 3 SCC 1: 1976 SCC (Cri) 368, relied on

[2557] — Ss. 204, 70, 72, 73, 78 and 79 — Power to issue warrants — Exercise of — Mode of — Held, said power being discretionary must be exercised judiciously with extreme care and caution — Court should properly balance both personal liberty and societal interest before issuing warrants — Warrants should never be issued without proper scrutiny of facts and complete application of mind — Court must carefully examine whether the criminal complaint/FIR has not been filed with an oblique motive

The power of issuing warrants being discretionary must be exercised judiciously with extreme care and caution. The court should properly balance both personal liberty and societal interest before issuing warrants. The warrants either bailable or non-bailable should never be issued without proper scrutiny of facts and complete application of mind, due to the extremely serious consequences and ramifications which ensue on issuance of warrants. The court must very carefully examine whether the criminal complaint or FIR has not been filed with an oblique motive. (Paras 56, 57 and 54). Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 12 SCC 1: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 259: AIR 2008 SC 251: (2007) 144 DLT 257: (2008) 1 All LJ 40.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-10-2007]

Omwati v. State of U.P., (2004) 4 SCC 425: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1287; State of U.P. v. Poosu, (1976) 3 SCC 1: 1976 SCC (Cri) 368, relied on

[2558] — Ss. 204, 190(1)(a) and 200 — Power to issue bailable warrant, non-bailable warrant or summons in complaint cases — Stages for — Held, in complaint cases, at the first instance the court should direct service of summons — At the second instance it should issue bailable warrant — And then at the third instance, on being satisfied that the accused is avoiding court's proceeding intentionally, it should resort to issuance of non-bailable warrant (Para 55). Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 12 SCC 1: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 259: AIR 2008 SC 251: (2007) 144 DLT 257: (2008) 1 All LJ 40.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-10-2007]

[2559] — Ss. 204, 200 and 190 — Issue of process — Court should be circumspect and judicious in its approach — Process should not be an instrument of oppression and harassment — Court on consideration of facts and circumstances should be satisfied that accused legally responsible for the offence charged — Frivolous complaint — Bank loan — Default in repayment — Amount due adjusted by Bank in terms of security bond from the FDR pledged by guarantor — Complaint lodged by the guarantor alleging commission of offences under Ss. 409, 109 and 114 IPC impleading Chairman, M.D. of the Bank by name as also several other officers — Held, complaint an abuse of process of the court to harass the Bank authorities — Magistrate not justified in issuing process without applying mind to existence of prima facie case against the accused

The judicial process should not be an instrument of oppression or needless harassment. There lies responsibility and duty on the Magistracy to find whether the concerned accused should be legally responsible for the offence charged for. Only on satisfying that the law casts liability or creates offence against the juristic person or the persons impleaded then only process would be issued. At that stage the court would be circumspect and judicious in exercising discretion and should take all the relevant facts and circumstances into consideration before issuing process lest it would be an instrument in the hands of the private complaint as vendetta to harass the persons needlessly. Vindication of majesty of justice and maintenance of law and order in the society are the prime objects of criminal justice but it would not be the means to wreak personal vengeance. Considered from any angle the respondent had abused the process and laid complaint against all the appellants without any prima facie case to harass them for vendetta. Punjab National Bank v. Surendra Prasad Sinha, 1993 Supp (1) SCC 499: 1993 SCC (Cri) 149: AIR 1992 SC 1815: (1993) 1 An WR 104 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and B.P. Jeevan Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-4-1992]

[2560] — Ss. 204, 200 and 202 — Issue of process — Condition precedent for — Held, is the satisfaction of the Magistrate either by examination of complainant and witnesses under S. 200 or by inquiry contemplated under S. 202 that there is sufficient ground for proceeding with the complaint — There is no requirement of hearing the summoned accused at any of the above stages

The accused-appellant, after issuance of summons against him by the trial Magistrate, filed an application purported to be under Section 203 CrPC before the said Magistrate. The Magistrate after hearing the parties recalled the said summons. The order of the Magistrate recalling the summons was challenged in revision petition before the High Court on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to recall the said summons. The High Court allowed the revision petition. Hence the present appeal by the accused.

The present matter was directed to be placed before a three-Judge Bench in view of the doubt regarding correctness of the law laid down by the Supreme Court in K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217, wherein it was held that it was open to the court issuing summons to recall the same on being satisfied that the issuance of summons was not in accordance with law.

Dismissing the appeal and expressing disagreement with the law laid down in Mathew case,

Held :

A condition precedent for issuing process under Section 204 is the satisfaction of the Magistrate, either by examination of the complainant and the witnesses or by the inquiry contemplated under Section 202 that there is sufficient ground for proceeding with the complaint. In none of these stages the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 has provided for hearing the summoned accused, because this is only a preliminary stage and the stage of hearing of the accused would only arise at a subsequent stage provided for in the latter provisions in the Code. The only stage of dismissal of the complaint arises under Section 203 CrPC at which stage the accused has no role to play, therefore, the question of the accused on receipt of summons approaching the court and making an application for dismissal of the complaint under Section 203 CrPC for a reconsideration of the material available on record is impermissible because by then Section 203 is already over and the Magistrate has proceeded further to Section 204 stage. (Para 14). Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927: (2004) 113 DLT 356: (2004) 4 Mah LJ 274: (2004) 3 KLT 382: (2004) 4 MPLJ 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2004]

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88, overruled

[2561] — Ss. 204, 203, 227, 228 and 190 — Magistrate to issue process where there is strong suspicion about commission of offence by the accused — Magistrate holding enquiry under S. 202 on a complaint regarding offence under Ss. 7(i)/16(1)(a) — Food Adulteration Act containing inter alia specific allegation that Sales Managers of Delhi branch of a company having its factory at Bombay were in charge of and responsible for conduct of the company's business at Delhi — Held, the allegation constitutes a prima facie case against the Sales Managers and, therefore, Magistrate not justified in dismissing the complaint against them while issuing summons against the company and other accused. State (Delhi Admn.) v. I.K. Nangia, (1980) 1 SCC 258: 1980 SCC (Cri) 220: AIR 1979 SC 1977: 1980 Cri LJ 834: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 343.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-1979]

[2562] — Ss. 204 and 87 — Issue of warrants on alleged payment of bribe — Charge-sheet filed and warrant issued against the President of India, the Hon'ble the Chief Justice of India, a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court and the President of the Supreme Court Bar Association — Allegation that summons issued pursuant to payment of bribes at the instance of a journalist who wanted to show corruption in the lower judiciary — Notices issued to the offending Metropolitan Magistrate who issued the summons and the advocates through whom the bribe paid — Matter handed over to the CBI to investigate. Vijay Shekhar v. Union of India, (2004) 3 SCC 263: 2004 SCC (Cri) 811.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.N. Khare, C.J. and S.B. Sinha and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2004]

[2563] — Ss. 204 and 167 — Reasoned order not needed while issuing process, remanding the accused to custody and passing over to next stages in trial — It would burden the trial courts with extra work and add to delay in disposal of cases

If there is no legal requirement that the trial court should write an order showing the reasons for framing a charge, there is no need to further burden the already burdened trial courts with such extra work. The time has reached to adopt all possible measures to expedite the court procedures and to chalk out measures to avert all roadblocks causing avoidable delays. If a Magistrate is to write detailed orders at different stages merely because the counsel would address arguments at all stages, the snail-paced progress of proceedings in trial courts would further be slowed down. A detailed order may be passed for culminating the proceedings before them, but it is quite unnecessary to write detailed orders at other stages, such as issuing process, remanding the accused to custody, framing of charges, passing over to next stages in the trial. (Para 12). Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303: AIR 2000 SC 522: 2000 Cri LJ 746.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2000]

[2564] — Ss. 204 and 190(1)(a) — Issue of process by the Magistrate — Necessary considerations required therein, explained — Further held, the Magistrate is not required to record reasons at the stage of issuing the process to the accused — Thus, on facts, the High Court erred in holding that the Magistrate did not apply his judicial mind before taking cognizance of the offences in question

In the instant case, the learned Magistrate passed the order stating that: "Cognizance taken. Register the case. Issue summons to the accused." The High Court held that the order passed by the Special Court taking cognizance of the offence did not show that the learned Magistrate had even perused the complaint or that he had applied his judicial mind before taking cognizance of the offences.

Held:

In determining the question whether any process is to be issued or not, what the Magistrate has to be satisfied is whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding and not whether there is sufficient ground for conviction. Whether the evidence is adequate for supporting the conviction can be determined only at the trial and not at the stage of inquiry. At the stage of issuing the process to the accused, the Magistrate is not required to record reasons. (Para 9)

Thus, the order passed by the learned Magistrate could not be faulted on the ground given by the High Court. (Para 10). Chief Controller of Imports & Exports v. Roshanlal Agarwal, (2003) 4 SCC 139: 2003 SCC (Cri) 788: AIR 2003 SC 1900: 2003 Cri LJ 1698: (2003) 155 ELT 216.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2003]

U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Mohan Meakins Ltd., (2000) 3 SCC 745; Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303, relied on [2565] — Ss. 204 and 195(1)(a) — Issue of process — Suspension of proceedings — Controversy relating to election of Board of Directors of an education society registered under Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 — Order of Judicial Magistrate issuing process under S. 463 r/w S. 34 IPC, against appellants on the private complaint alleging that appellants got affixed bogus/fake signature/thumb impressions of members of the educational institution to show that a resolution was passed to set up a new executive body wherein Accused 1 assumed post of Executive President and that the accused got a "no-objection certificate" for deleting their names from Managing Committee — However, matter was pending before Assistant Charity Commissioner who was to determine validity or otherwise of change report submitted by appellants — In the proceeding relating to the confirmation or otherwise of the change report a contention had been raised that the documents on the basis of which the report had been submitted had been forged and fabricated by the appellants — In all probability that question would also arise for consideration by the authority — In the facts and circumstances of the case, held, in the interest of justice and for a fair trial the proceedings in the criminal case should remain suspended till the proceeding pending before the Assistant Charity Commissioner is disposed of by him — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 177, 181, 193, 406, 465, 474 r/w S. 34 (Paras 10 and 11). Tukaram Annaba Chavan v. Machindra Yeshwant Patil, (2001) 3 SCC 33: 2001 SCC (Cri) 430: AIR 2001 SC 994: 2001 Cri LJ 1164.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-2-2001]

[2566] — Ss. 204 and 203 — Issue of process — Necessary considerations prior to — Dismissal of complaint before issuing process — Condition for — Held, before issuing the process the Magistrate has to apply his mind and see whether the complaint contains material/ground to proceed against the accused — Where allegations in complaint or charge-sheet do not constitute an offence against the accused, the complaint is liable to be dismissed — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138 and 141

It is settled law that at the time of issuing of the process the Magistrate is required to see only the allegations in the complaint and where allegations in the complaint or the charge-sheet do not constitute an offence against a person, the complaint is liable to be dismissed. Section 203 CrPC empowers a Magistrate to dismiss a complaint without even issuing a process. It uses the words "after considering" and "the Magistrate is of opinion that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding". These words suggest that the Magistrate has to apply his mind to a complaint at the initial stage itself and see whether a case is made out against the accused persons before issuing process to them on the basis of the complaint. For applying his mind and forming an opinion as to whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding, a complaint must make out a prima facie case to proceed. This, in other words, means that a complaint must contain material to enable the Magistrate to make up his mind for issuing process. If this were not the requirement, consequences could be far-reaching. If a Magistrate had to issue process in every case, the burden of work before the Magistrate as well as the harassment caused to the respondents to whom process is issued would be tremendous. Even Section 204 CrPC starts with the words "if in the opinion of the Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence there is sufficient ground for proceeding". The words "sufficient ground for proceeding" again suggest that ground should be made out in the complaint for proceeding against the respondent. (Para 5). S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, (2005) 8 SCC 89: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975: AIR 2005 SC 3512: (2005) 127 Comp Cas 563: (2005) 123 DLT 275: (2005) 4 KLT 209: (2005) 4 Mah LJ 731.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, Arun Kumar and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2005]

Distinguished on facts in Som Mittal v. Govt. of Karnataka, (2008) 3 SCC 753*

[2567] — Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200, 239 and 362 & 482 — Issuance of process under S. 204 — Nature of — Remedy available against — Review, reconsideration or recall of, by Magistrate — Discharge from summons case — Permissibility — Held, issuance of process under S. 204 is a preliminary step in trial contemplated in Ch. 20 (Ss. 251 to 259) CrPC, and is therefore an interlocutory order — Same cannot be reviewed, reconsidered or recalled by the Magistrate, there being no provision therefor in the Code — Only remedy available to an aggrieved accused is the extraordinary remedy under S. 482 and not by way of application to recall the summons or to seek discharge, the latter not being contemplated in trial of a summons case — Adalat Prasad case, (2004) 7 SCC 338, affirmed

The issuance of process under Section 204 is a preliminary step in the stage of trial contemplated in Chapter 20 CrPC. Such an order made at a preliminary stage being an interlocutory order, the same cannot be reviewed or reconsidered by the Magistrate, there being no provision under CrPC for review of an order by the same court. Hence, it is impermissible for the Magistrate to reconsider his decision to issue process in the absence of any specific provision to recall such order. It is true that the case of Adalat Prasad, (2004) 7 SCC 338, pertained to a warrant case whereas Mathew case, (1992) 1 SCC 217, pertained to a summons case. To this extent, there is some difference in the two cases, but that does not, in any manner, make the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Adalat Prasad case bad law. (Paras 14 and 12). Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 13 SCC 324: 2005 SCC (Cri) 242: AIR 2004 SC 4711: 2004 Cri LJ 4609: (2005) 1 Mah LJ 626.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

Followed in Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140*

[2568] — Ss. 204 and 200 — Cancellation of order of summons by High Court on ground that the said order was passed after examining only two witnesses and the complainant — Validity — Submission by appellant that he had examined all the relevant witnesses including eyewitnesses, Police Constable, who took him to the hospital for examination of the injuries and the Medical Officer who examined him — Held, in view of such submission, impugned order of High Court unsustainable (Paras 4 and 6). Babu Ram Sharma v. State of U.P., (2009) 16 SCC 326.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-2002]

Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230: 2000 SCC (Cri) 379, relied on [2569] — Ss. 204, 200 and 202 — Issue of process — Conditions precedent for — Hearing to accused, if contemplated — Held, following Adalat Prasad case, (2004) 7 SCC 338, summoned accused has no right to lead evidence in defence at the stage of framing charge. Suresh Kumar Tekriwal v. State of Jharkhand, (2005) 12 SCC 278.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2005]

Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927, followed [2570] — Ss. 204, 228 and 240 — Right of accused to produce any documents or evidence in defence at the stage of issuance of process or at the stage of framing of charge, if any — Held, the accused has no such right — Magistrate cannot be asked to look into the documents produced by an accused at that stage (Para 7). S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, (2005) 8 SCC 89: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975: AIR 2005 SC 3512: (2005) 127 Comp Cas 563: (2005) 123 DLT 275: (2005) 4 KLT 209: (2005) 4 Mah LJ 731.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, Arun Kumar and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2005]

State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on

[2571] — Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200 and 482 — Power of court to recall process issued against an accused — Held, in absence of such power being conferred by the Code, court has no power to recall the process issued — Observation in Mathew case, (1992) 1 SCC 217 that for recalling an erroneous order, no specific provision of law is required held, runs counter to the scheme of the Code which has not provided for review and prohibits interference at interlocutory stages

It is true that if a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence, issues process without there being any allegation against the accused or any material implicating the accused or in contravention of provisions of Sections 200 and 202, the order of the Magistrate may be vitiated, but then the relief an aggrieved accused can obtain at that stage is not by invoking Section 203 CrPC because the Code does not contemplate a review of an order. Hence in the absence of any review power or inherent power with the subordinate criminal courts, the remedy lies in invoking Section 482 CrPC. The view of the Supreme Court in Mathew case, (1992) 1 SCC 217 that no specific provision is required for recalling an erroneous order, amounting to one without jurisdiction, does not lay down the correct law. (Paras 15 and 16). Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927: (2004) 113 DLT 356: (2004) 4 Mah LJ 274: (2004) 3 KLT 382: (2004) 4 MPLJ 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2004]

Followed in Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140

[2572] — Ss. 204 & 203, 202 and 200 — Power of court to recall process issued against the accused — Reiterated, in the absence of such power expressly bestowed by the Code, court has no power to recall the process issued

It is clear and well settled that once an order is passed by a competent court issuing summons or process, it cannot be recalled. In absence of express provision in the Code, the court has no power to recall the process issued. In the instant case, the Magistrate ordered to join Respondent 2 as an accused on applications filed by the appellant and summons was issued to him. A revision filed by the State against that order was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge. The Judicial Magistrate, on the facts and in the circumstances, was right in dismissing recall application filed by Respondent 2. The Revisional Court, however, was not correct to hold that the Magistrate had power to recall the earlier order passed by him. The Additional Sessions Judge ought to have considered the material fact in its proper perspective that the order passed by the Magistrate was legal and proper and because of that, the revision filed against that order by the State was also dismissed by the Revisional Court. (Paras 41 and 44 to 46)

If the act of taking cognizance, issuance of process or joining of an innocent person as an accused is totally uncalled for or ex facie bad in law, it is open to the aggrieved party to invoke inherent jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 482 CrPC. If the High Court is satisfied that the order passed by the Magistrate was illegal, improper or arbitrary, it can exercise inherent powers and quash criminal proceedings initiated against the party. But that power is independent and has nothing to do with recalling of an earlier order by the court which passed it. (Para 48). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927; Nilamani Routray v. Bennett Coleman & Co. Ltd., (1998) 8 SCC 594: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1551; Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 13 SCC 324: 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; N.K. Sharma v. Abhimanyu, (2005) 13 SCC 213: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 135; Everest Advertising (P) Ltd. v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2007) 5 SCC 54: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 444, followed

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88, held overruled

[2573] — S. 204 — Whether Court has power to recall the process issued against an accused and drop the proceedings — In view of contrary view expressed in K.M. Mathew case matter directed to be placed before a Bench of three Judges. Nilamani Routray v. Bennett Coleman & Co. Ltd., (1998) 8 SCC 594: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1551.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-1-1996]

Matter finally decided in Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338 which overruled (1992) 1 SCC 217

Followed in Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140

[2574] — Ss. 204, 200, 202, 203 and 482 — Summons — Recall of, after issuing, held, is beyond the jurisdiction of Magistrate — Further held, Magistrate does not have and therefore, cannot exercise any inherent jurisdiction

Summons were issued by the learned Magistrate by reason of an order. He recalled the said order. He did not have any jurisdiction in that behalf. A Magistrate does not have and, thus, cannot exercise any inherent jurisdiction. (Para 10). Everest Advertising (P) Ltd. v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2007) 5 SCC 54: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 444: AIR 2007 SC 1650: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 32: 2007 Cri LJ 2442: (2007) 6 Mah LJ 49: (2007) 3 KLT 821.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927; Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 13 SCC 324: 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; N.K. Sharma v. Abhimanyu, (2005) 13 SCC 213: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 135, followed

Followed in Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140

[2575] — S. 204 — Even after issue of process in summons case accused can plead absence of any triable case against him and Magistrate, on being satisfied on reconsideration of the complaint, has discretionary power to order dropping of the proceedings against the accused instead of proceeding under Chapter XX — Order dropping the proceedings is an interim order which can be varied or recalled — Complaint lodged against Chief Editor of a newspaper alleging offences under Ss. 500 r/w 34 on the basis of presumption under S. 7 of Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867 — Magistrate on examination of the complainant on oath, taking the complaint on file and issuing summons to the accused — Accused Chief Editor on entering appearance pleading not guilty on ground that no allegation had been made that he was responsible for selection of the news item and publication thereof — While Chief Editor responsible for general policy of the newspaper, Editors based at different centres of publication of the newspaper responsible for selection and publication of news items — Having regard to absence of positive averments against the accused in the complaint, held, Magistrate justified in dropping proceedings against him

The appellant is the Chief Editor of a daily newspaper. He is responsible for general policy of the daily. Separate editions of the newspaper are published from different centres. At each of these centres, there is a separate Editor who is responsible for selection and publication of the news items. Respondent 2, an advocate, being aggrieved by a news item published in the daily, lodged a complaint before Magistrate against the Chief Editor, the Printer and Publisher of the newspaper alleging commission of offence under Ss. 500/34 IPC. The Magistrate examined the complainant on oath, took the complaint on file and issued summons to the accused. The Chief Editor on appearance requested the Magistrate to drop the proceedings against him on the ground that there was no allegation that he was responsible for selection and publication of the news item or that he had perused the material or edited before its publication or that it was published with his consent or knowledge. The Magistrate accepted the plea and directed that the complaint so far as it related to the Chief Editor could not be proceeded with. The High Court allowed the revision preferred by the complainant against the order of the Magistrate. Allowing the appeal of the Chief Editor

Held :

Section 204 of the Code indicates that the proceedings before the Magistrate commences upon taking cognizance of the offence and the issue of summons to the accused. When the accused enters appearance in response to the summons, the Magistrate has to take proceedings under Chapter XX of the Code. But the need to try the accused arises when there is allegation in the complaint that the accused has committed the crime. If there is no allegation in the complaint involving the accused in the commission of the crime, it is implied that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed against the accused. It is open to the accused to plead before the Magistrate that the process against him ought not to have been issued. The Magistrate may drop the proceedings if he is satisfied on reconsideration of the complaint that there is no offence for which the accused could be tried. It is his judicial discretion. No specific provision is required for the Magistrate to drop the proceedings or rescind the process. The order issuing the process is an interim order and not a judgment. It can be varied or recalled. The fact that the process has already been issued is no bar to drop the proceedings if the complaint on the very face of it does not disclose any offence against the accused.

Section 7 of the Press and Registration of Books Act raises the presumption in respect of a person who is named as the Editor and printed as such on every copy of the newspaper. The Act does not recognise any other legal entity for raising the presumption. Even if the name of the Chief Editor is printed in the newspaper, there is no presumption against him under S. 7 of the Act.

In the instant case there is no averment against the Chief Editor except the motive attributed to him. Even the motive alleged is general and vague. For a Magistrate to take cognizance of the offence as against the Chief Editor, there must be positive averments in the complaint of knowledge of the objectionable character of the matter. The complaint in the instant case does not contain any such allegation. In the absence of such allegation, the Magistrate was justified in directing that the complaint so far as it relates to the Chief Editor could not be proceeded with. To ask the Chief Editor to undergo the trial of the case merely on the ground of the issue of process would be oppressive. No person should be tried without a prima facie case. K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88: AIR 1992 SC 2206: (1992) 1 KLT 1: (1992) 1 MWN (Cr) 36: (1992) 2 Punj LR 35

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-1991]

Overruled in Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338

Held overruled in Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 13 SCC 324: 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; Poonam Chand Jain v. Fazru, (2004) 13 SCC 269: 2005 SCC (Cri) 190 and Everest Advertising (P) Ltd. v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2007) 5 SCC 54; Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140

[2576] — Ss. 204 and 397 — Summons issued by Magistrate to accused — Quashment — Sessions Court in revision as well as High Court not justified in quashing the Magistrate's order — Magistrate could discharge or acquit the accused if no offence made out. Khacheru Singh v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 218: 1982 SCC (Cri) 696: AIR 1982 SC 784(2): 1982 Cri LJ 629(2).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.D. Koshal and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-1981]

[2577] — Ss. 204, 406 and 482 — Quashing criminal proceedings — Summoning order issued by CJM against appellant and 3 others in connection with offence under S. 406 IPC — Miscellaneous criminal application filed by A-1 and A-2 challenging that order dismissed by High Court — SLP also dismissed by Supreme Court — Thereafter appellant challenging the summoning order in revision before Addl. Sessions Judge — Additional Sessions Judge after examining the facts in detail and taking note of the fact that similar petition by Accused 1 and 2 was dismissed by the High Court and the special leave petition filed against that order of the High Court was also dismissed, not interfering with the order issuing summons — High Court taking note that it was only after two years (in fact it was more than 3 years) of dismissal of challenge by A-1 and A-2, the appellant filed revision before Addl. Sessions Judge and having regard to all the facts and circumstances, considering it inappropriate to interdict the proceedings — Held, there was no illegality in the order of the High Court — It is not appropriate, at this stage, to examine the facts to find out whether prima facie case under Section 406 IPC is made out to issue a summons against the appellant — Constitution of India, Art. 226 (Para 5). Narender Kumar Jain v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 10 SCC 322: 2000 SCC (Cri) 85: AIR 1999 SC 3218: 1999 Cri LJ 4075.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Venkataswami and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-8-1999]

[2578] — S. 204 — Lapse of very long time — Effect — Held, no reason to absolve the accused (here under Environment Protection Act) from trial (17 years in this case) — On the other hand, is a good reason for expediting the trial — Environment (Protection) Act, 1986, S. 16. U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Mohan Meakins Ltd., (2000) 3 SCC 745: AIR 2000 SC 1456: 2000 Cri LJ 1799: 2000 All LJ 872.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-2000]

[2579] — S. 204 — Offence under S. 304 IPC — Invocation of — Ingredients to be satisfied for, reiterated — Death of deceased F within half an hour after he was administered 3 injections by appellant medical practitioner — Neither could it be said that the death of F had been caused by doing the act of giving injections with intention to cause his death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death nor was it possible to think that the purported act was done with the knowledge that in all probability, it would result into the death of F — Hence, held, the act in question did not fall under S. 304 IPC — No summons could have been issued against the appellant in relation to the alleged offence — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304

Summons were issued against the appellant medical practitioner in relation to the commission of offences punishable under Sections 304, 504 and 506 IPC. The case of Respondent 2 complainant was that due to pain in the body of his father F, he was brought to the clinic of the appellant for treatment. The appellant administered three injections to F. Within half an hour, F died. The appellant asked the complainant to remove the dead body of F immediately and also threatened the complainant not to take any action against him.

It was further alleged that when the complainant went to the police station to lodge a report against the appellant, the police refused to register any case. Hence, a criminal complaint was filed before the Magistrate concerned alleging the said facts. According to the complainant, the appellant also took out a revolver and threatened him to withdraw the complaint otherwise he would kill him.

An order was passed by the Magistrate under Section 156(3) CrPC, directing investigation in the matter by the police authorities. The police submitted a final report under Section 169 CrPC stating therein that no offence had been committed by the appellant. The complainant filed a protest petition stating that the final report submitted by the police should not be accepted and the case be decided in accordance with law. After perusing the complaint and recording statements under Section 200 CrPC, the Magistrate observed that the allegation of the complainant was supported by eyewitnesses. The Court also noted that newspaper reports revealed that the Chief Medical Officer and District Collector passed orders pursuant to which the clinic of the appellant was closed. The Magistrate, therefore, opined that there was sufficient evidence to call upon the accused as to what he had to say in the case. In the revision petition, the High Court confirmed the said order. Hence, the present appeal.

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

Before Section 304 IPC can be invoked, the ingredients which must be satisfied are: (i) the death of the person must have been caused; (ii) such death must have been caused by the act of the accused by causing bodily injury; (iii) there must be an intention on the part of the accused (a) to cause death; or (b) to cause such bodily injury which is likely to cause death (Part I); or (iv) there must be knowledge on the part of the accused that the bodily injury is such that it is likely to cause death (Part II). (Para 22)

By no stretch of imagination, can it be said that the appellant while administering injections to deceased F committed an offence punishable under Section 304 IPC. It can never be said that the death of F had been caused by the appellant by doing the act of giving injections with intention to cause his death or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. Likewise, it is impossible to think that the purported act has been done by the appellant with the knowledge that in all probability, it would result into the death of F. Even if the averments made in the complaint are accepted in their entirety, the act in question of giving injections to the deceased would not fall within the mischief of Section 304 IPC. Therefore, no process could have been issued against the appellant for commission of an offence punishable under the said section. (Paras 27, 28 and 38). Mahadev Prasad Kaushik v. State of U.P., (2008) 14 SCC 479.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2008]

[2580] — Ss. 204, 200 and 482 — Issue of process — Prerequisites as to — Issuance of summons in relation to offences under Ss. 504 and 506 IPC, in absence of any reference or prima facie finding as to alleged threat in impugned order, held, not justified — Proceedings initiated in relation to those offences, quashed — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 504 and 506

In the order passed by the Magistrate, there is no whisper about the threat alleged to have been given by the appellant to the complainant nor the Magistrate recorded even a prima facie finding as to such threat. The High Court also, in the impugned order, does not refer to such intimidation. On the contrary, the High Court observed that the allegations were sufficient to summon the appellant for causing death of F under Section 304 IPC. Thus, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, no summons could have been issued to the appellant for the commission of offences punishable under Sections 504 and 506 IPC. Hence, the proceedings initiated against the appellant for the offences punishable under Sections 504 and 506 IPC are quashed. (Paras 18, 19 and 38). Mahadev Prasad Kaushik v. State of U.P., (2008) 14 SCC 479.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2008]

[2581] — S. 204 — Causing death by negligence — Summons that can be issued — Summons under S. 304-A, IPC — Death of F within half an hour after the appellant medical practitioner administered 3 injections to him — F was taken to clinic of appellant for treatment as he had pain in his body — Ailment of F prima facie was not of such a serious nature which would result in death during his treatment — Considering the facts and circumstances, held, although no summons could have been issued against the appellant for offence under S. 304 IPC, summons ought to have been issued against him for offence under S. 304-A IPC — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-A

On the facts of the case, ailment of F prima facie could not be said to be of such a serious nature which would result in death during his treatment. The allegation of the complainant which has been corroborated by the statements of other eyewitnesses is that immediately after administration of three injections, the colour of the body of F turned into blue and within half an hour he died. In these facts and circumstances, although no summons could have been issued by the trial court against the appellant for an offence punishable under Section 304 IPC, summons for an offence under Section 304-A IPC ought to have been issued. (Paras 37, 35 and 38). Mahadev Prasad Kaushik v. State of U.P., (2008) 14 SCC 479.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2008]

Khusaldas Pammandas (Dr.) v. State of M.P., AIR 1960 MP 50, approved

Jacob Mathew v. State of Punjab, (2005) 6 SCC 1: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1369; State of Punjab v. Shiv Ram, (2005) 7 SCC 1, clarified and relied on

[2582] — S. 204 — Issue of process — Water (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Act, 1974 — Ss. 47, 24 and 43 — Offence by company of pollution of streams and rivers by trade effluents — During stage of issuing process, held, what has to be looked at is whether there are allegations in the complaint on the basis of which Managers or Directors of the company can also be proceeded against, when the company is alleged to be guilty of the offence — Appellant Pollution Control Board initiating proceedings in 1983 against respondent liquor-processing Company for continually discharging pollutants into

River Gomti and raising pollution level beyond permissible limits — Complaint alleging that Company Directors and Managers, who were included in array of accused, were responsible for the contamination of the river water — Trial court issuing process against accused — In review jurisdiction Sessions Court quashing the order of issuing process on the reasoning that no specific role had been assigned to any of such Managers or Directors — Held, High Court erred in upholding the order of the Sessions Court and holding that appellant Board had not shown that the Directors were in charge of or responsible to the Company for the conduct of its business

The pollution of the River Gomti, in Lucknow reached impermissible levels as the result of the continuous discharge into it of trade effluents from an industrial unit of the respondent liquor-manufacturing Company. In 1983 the appellant Pollution Control Board initiated proceedings against the Company under Sections 47, 24 and 43 of the Water (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Act, 1974. The trial court issued process at the first instance. The Sessions Court, however, quashed the trial court's order on the ground that it was not a speaking order. The CJM then passed a detailed order on 25-4-1984, again issuing process to the accused. On 25-8-1984 the Sessions Court in revision quashed this order also, holding that no specific role had been assigned in the complaint to the Directors and Managers in the discharge of the pollutant effluents. The averments in the complaint clearly referred to the discharge and resulting rise in pollution levels of the river water; also detailed were the results of the analysis, by the Industrial Toxicology Research Centre, Lucknow, of samples of the trade effluents collected from the drain "just outside the plant inside the factory" and from the irrigation plant which pumped the effluents into the Gomti. The results clearly showed that the norms laid down regarding river water had been violated. The complaint unambiguously stated that the Chairman, Managing Director and Directors of the Company were responsible for the pollution of the river.

The appellant Board then filed a revision petition before the High Court, which confirmed the order of the Sessions Court fifteen years later on 27-7-1999, holding that the Directors had not been shown to have been in charge of or responsible to the Company for the conduct of its business.

Allowing the appeal by the Board,

Held :

In the complaint filed by the appellant before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, the Company (M/s Mohan Meakins Ltd.) has been arrayed as the first accused and the other persons who were arrayed as Accused 2 to 10 were described as the Directors of the said Company. The 11th person arrayed in the complaint as accused is described as the Manager of the Company. The averments in the complaint show that the Distillery Unit of the Company at Daliganj, Lucknow, has been discharging noxious trade effluents into River Gomti and causing continuous pollution of the river. It was further averred in the complaint that on 19-9-1982, samples of trade effluents were collected by the officers empowered in this behalf, from the drain "just outside the plant inside the factory", and from the irrigation plant out of which the effluents were pumped into the river. When the samples were analysed in the Industrial Toxicology Research Centre, Lucknow, it was revealed that the quality of effluents was beyond the standard laid down for the purpose. (Para 10)

Where an offence under the Act has been committed by a company every person who was in charge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of the business of the company is also made guilty of the offence by the statutory creation. Any director, manager or other officer of the company, who has consented to or connived in the commission of the said offence, is made liable for the punishment of the offence. This is clearly discernible from Section 47 of the Act. (Para 11)

In this context what is to be looked at during the stage of issuing process is whether there are allegations in the complaint by which the Managers or Directors of the Company can also be proceeded against, when the Company is alleged to be guilty of the offence. (Para 12)

The Sessions Judge was in error for quashing the process at the first round merely on the ground that the Chief Judicial Magistrate had not passed a speaking order. (Para 5)

The Supreme Court has earlier pointed out that the legislature has stressed the need to record reasons in certain situations such as dismissal of a complaint without issuing process. There is no such legal requirement imposed on a Magistrate for passing detailed order while issuing summons. (Para 6)

It was unfortunate that the Sessions Judge himself did not look into the complaint at that stage to form his own opinion whether process could have been issued by the Chief Judicial Magistrate on the basis of the averments contained in the complaint. Instead the Sessions Judge relegated the work to the trial Magistrate for doing the exercise over again. (Para 7)

A lapse of a long period cannot be a reason to absolve the respondents from the trial. It must reach its logical culmination. Courts cannot afford to lightly deal with cases involving pollution of air and water. The message must go to all concerned. The courts will share the parliamentary concern on the escalating pollution level of our environment. Those who discharge noxious polluting effluents into streams may be unconcerned about the enormity of the injury which it inflicts on the public health at large, the irreparable impairment it causes on the aquatic organisms, the deleteriousness it imposes on the life and health of animals. So the courts should not deal with the prosecution for offences under the Act in a casual or routine manner. Parliamentary concern in the matter is adequately reflected in strengthening the measures prescribed by the statute. The court has no justification for ignoring the seriousness of the subject. (Para 13). U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Mohan Meakins Ltd., (2000) 3 SCC 745: AIR 2000 SC 1456: 2000 Cri LJ 1799: 2000 All LJ 872.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-2000]

Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303, followed

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; MCD v. Purshotam Dass Jhunjunwala, (1983) 1 SCC 9: 1983 SCC (Cri) 123, distinguished

[2583] — Ss. 204, 190(1)(a) and 178 — Absence of jurisdiction to issue summons — Dishonour of cheques — Cheques issued by accused at place AJ where he resided — Subsequent statement of accused that he issued fabricated cheques knowingly with an intention to cheat the complainant and grab his money, was allegedly also made at place AJ — Hence held, the Magistrate at place RP (where the complainant resided) had no jurisdiction to issue the summons as there was nothing on record to show that any part of cause of action arose within its jurisdiction — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 405, 406, 409, 415, 420 and 417

Whereas the accused is a resident of the district AJ, the complainant is a resident of the district RP. Cheques were admittedly issued by the accused at his place. There is nothing on record to show that any part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the court concerned. Even if the alleged statements had been made by the accused, the same admittedly had been made only at the place where the accused resides. The Magistrate at place RP, therefore, had no jurisdiction to issue the summons. (Para 16). Vir Prakash Sharma v. Anil Kumar Agarwal, (2007) 7 SCC 373: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 370: 2007 Cri LJ 3735: (2007) 57 AIC 32 (SC): (2007) 5 All LJ 321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-8-2007]

Mosaraf Hossain Khan v. Bhagheeratha Engg. Ltd., (2006) 3 SCC 658: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 98, relied on

[2584] — Ss. 204, 201 to 203 and 70 — Framing of charges and arrest of doctors for criminal medical negligence — Prosecution of — Guidelines for, laid down — Prosecution of criminal offences against doctors — Detailed guidelines laid down to protect interest of doctors, and to save them from unwarranted and malicious proceedings — Rationale for, discussed in detail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-A, 88, 92 and 93

The investigating officer and the private complainant cannot always be supposed to have knowledge of medical science so as to determine whether the act of the accused medical professional amounts to a rash or negligent act within the domain of criminal law under Section 304-A IPC. The criminal process once initiated subjects the medical professional to serious embarrassment and sometimes harassment. He has to seek bail to escape arrest, which may or may not be granted to him. At the end he may be exonerated by acquittal or discharge but the loss which he has suffered to his reputation cannot be compensated by any standards. Many a complainant prefer recourse to criminal process as a tool for pressurising the medical professional for extracting uncalled for or unjust compensation. Such malicious proceedings have to be guarded against. The service which the medical profession renders to human beings is probably the noblest of all, and hence there is a need for protecting doctors from frivolous or unjust prosecutions. (Paras 50 and 51)

Statutory rules or executive instructions incorporating certain guidelines need to be framed and issued by the Government of India and/or the State Governments in consultation with the Medical Council of India. So long as it is not done, the following guidelines will be in force which shall govern the prosecution of doctors for offences of which criminal rashness or criminal negligence is an ingredient. A private complaint may not be entertained unless the complainant has produced prima facie evidence before the court in the form of a credible opinion given by another competent doctor to support the charge of rashness or negligence on the part of the accused doctor. The investigating officer should, before proceeding against the doctor accused of rash or negligent act or omission, obtain an independent and competent medical opinion preferably from a doctor in government service, qualified in that branch of medical practice who can normally be expected to give an impartial and unbiased opinion applying the Bolam test, (1957) 2 All ER 118, at p. 121 D-F [set out in para 19 herein], to the facts collected in the investigation. A doctor accused of rashness or negligence, may not be arrested in a routine manner (simply because a charge has been levelled against him). Unless his arrest is necessary for furthering the investigation or for collecting evidence or unless the investigating officer feels satisfied that the doctor proceeded against would not make himself available to face the prosecution unless arrested, the arrest may be withheld. (Para 52). Jacob Mathew v. State of Punjab, (2005) 6 SCC 1: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1369: AIR 2005 SC 3180: (2005) 3 CPR 70 (SC): (2005) 122 DLT 83: (2005) 3 CPJ 9 (II) (SC): 2005 Cri LJ 3710.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2005]

— S. 205 See also S. 205, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1084 in Vol. 2

— S. 205 See Ss. 167(5) [as amended by S. 4 of W.B. Act 24 of 1988], 436, 437, 204, 205, 206 and 161

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 251 and 205

See also Ss. 302 and 205

See also Ss. 302, 205 and 2(q)

See also Ss. 303 and 2(q), 205, 273

See also Ss. 317 and 205

See also Ss. 317 and 273, 251 & 205

See also Ss. 482, 204 and 205

[2585] — S. 205 — Dispensing with personal attendance of accused — Application for — Necessary considerations while dealing with — Held, court has to consider whether any useful purpose would be served by requiring the personal attendance of the accused or whether progress of the trial is likely to be hampered on account of his absence — Supreme Court directing the trial court to take needful action accordingly, in the instant case — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Para 13). S.V. Muzumdar v. Gujarat State Fertilizer Co. Ltd., (2005) 4 SCC 173: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1020: AIR 2005 SC 2436: (2005) 3 MPLJ 271: (2005) 3 Guj LR 2052: (2005) 125 Comp Cas 188: (2005) 3 Mah LJ 754.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2005]

[2586] — Ss. 205, 204 and 482 — Issue of process — Manner of exercise of discretionary jurisdiction by Magistrate — Power of High Court regarding exemption from personal attendance of accused — Limitations on High Court's inherent jurisdiction under S. 482 — High Court citing reasons of old age, sex, etc. as valid grounds for exemption from personal attendance of accused in terms of S. 205 and accordingly directing Magistrate to consider the same — Legality — Held, it was improper of High Court to pass said direction — It is ordinarily for Magistrate to consider the matter — Magistrate must exercise jurisdiction under Ss. 205/204 in a fair and judicious manner (Paras 32, 34, 41, 43 and 44)

It is ordinarily for the Magistrate to consider as to whether a case for grant of bail has been made out or not, the High Court, therefore, may not be correct in observing, that valid grounds exist for granting bail to the petitioners. Similarly, the High Court should not have, for all intent and purport, issued the direction for grant of exemption from personal appearance. Such a matter undoubtedly shall be left for consideration before the Magistrate. The Magistrate is expected to exercise his jurisdiction in a fair and judicious manner. The impugned directions are set aside and the matters are remitted to the High Court for consideration of the application filed before it by the parties afresh on merit. (Paras 43 and 44)

The jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 482 is limited. It can interfere with an order of summoning an accused by the Magistrate inter alia in the event if a finding is arrived at that the accused were being prosecuted mala fide and/or even if the allegations contained in the FIR are given face value and taken to be correct in their entirety, no case has been made out for taking cognizance of the offence. It is furthermore made clear that the parties hereto may approach the High Court in Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 518 of 2008. Allegations of mala fide made against the State may also be gone into. The High Court can pass any such interim order as it may think fit and proper. (Paras 32, 34 and 41). Manoj Narain Agrawal v. Shashi Agrawal, (2009) 6 SCC 385.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-4-2009]

Arun Shankar Shukla v. State of U.P., (1999) 6 SCC 146: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1076; Hamida v. Rashid, (2008) 1 SCC 474: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 234; State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426; Ruchi Agarwal v. Amit Kumar Agrawal, (2005) 3 SCC 299: 2005 SCC (Cri) 719, relied on [2587] — S. 205 — Proceedings for offences under Ss. 376, 417 and 506 IPC — Dispensation of personal attendance on ground of accused being social worker and known to the village people untenable — Accused directed to appear before the trial court on all hearings — In extreme and exceptional circumstances his personal attendance on any particular hearing may be dispensed with — However, accused must make his appearance before the trial court on all the hearings when material witnesses are examined. Lily Begum v. Joy Chandra Nagbanshi, (1994) 2 SCC 39: 1994 SCC (Cri) 303.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and R.M. Sahai, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-1993]

[2588] — Ss. 205, 206 and 382 — Filing of vakalatnama without an affidavit — Effect — Held, the same can still constitute a statement of the person filing the vakalatnama — Civil Procedure Code, 1908, Or. 3 R. 4 and Or. 12 R. 1 (Para 16). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 2006 SC 1367: (2006) 2 KLT 350: 2006 Cri LJ 1694: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

[2589] — Ss. 205 and 313 — Power of High Court under — Approach to be followed in exercise of such power — Held, while it is true that power of superintendence conferred on High Court under Art. 227 is both administrative and judicial, but such power is to be exercised sparingly and only in appropriate cases, in order to keep subordinate courts within bounds of their authority — In any event, power of superintendence cannot be exercised to influence subordinate judiciary to pass any order or judgment in a particular manner — Herein, High Court exceeded its jurisdiction under Art. 227, by laying down general directions for lower courts, regarding dispensing with personal attendance of accused and personal examination of accused by court, which were inconsistent with clear language of Ss. 205 and 313 CrPC — Constitution of India — Art. 227 (Paras 13, 14 and 21). TGN Kumar v. State of Kerala, (2011) 2 SCC 772.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, A.K. Ganguly and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-1-2011]

Jasbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 8 SCC 294: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 470; Trimbak Gangadhar Telang v. Ramchandra Ganesh Bhide, (1977) 2 SCC 437; Mohd. Yunus v. Mohd. Mustaqim, (1983) 4 SCC 566; State v. Navjot Sandhu, (2003) 6 SCC 641: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1545, affirmed

[2590] — Ss. 205 and 313 — Personal appearance of accused dispensed with by trial court — After conclusion of trial accused directed to appear personally for recording statement under S. 313 — In view of accused's statement before Supreme Court that he would not make any statement under S. 313 and would not raise any question of prejudice, if any, caused to him due to non-examination under S. 313 at any subsequent stage of trial, appeal or revision, accused-appellant's request for exemption from personal appearance before trial court for recording statement under S. 313 accepted and directions issued accordingly. Chandu Lal Chandraker v. Puran Mal, 1988 Supp SCC 570: 1988 SCC (Cri) 907: AIR 1988 SC 2163.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Singh and M.H. Kania, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-1988]

Held per incuriam in Keya Mukherjee v. Magma Leasing Ltd., (2008) 8 SCC 447

[2591] — Ss. 205 and 317 — Personal appearance — Exemption from — Criminal proceedings against women — Trial court directed to exempt them from personal appearance subject to certain conditions (Para 7). R. Annapurna v. Ramadugu Anantha Krishna Sastry, (2002) 10 SCC 401.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-8-2000]

[2592] — S. 205 — Offences by companies — Personal attendance of accused Directors before Magistrate during criminal trial — Issuance of direction to trial court to dispense with, refused — Further held, trial court could be approached for that purpose — Income Tax Act, 1961, Ss. 276-B and 278-B

It would not be appropriate to issue a direction as sought in the last submission of the appellants. However, if such a prayer is made by the appellants, the court would consider the prayer in its proper perspective and will pass an appropriate order. (Para 53). Madhumilan Syntex Ltd. v. Union of India, (2007) 11 SCC 297: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 143: AIR 2007 SC 1481: (2007) 210 ELT 484: (2007) 290 ITR 199.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-2007]

[2593] — Ss. 205 and 313 — Dispensing with personal attendance of accused and personal examination of accused by court — General directions by High Court, for lower courts, regarding — Requirement of recording "specific reasons" by Magistrate for deviating therefrom — Propriety — Held, such requirement is tantamount to putting fetters on jurisdiction of Magistrate, which is not warranted in law — Impugned order containing such directions, set aside (Para 20). TGN Kumar v. State of Kerala, (2011) 2 SCC 772.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, A.K. Ganguly and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-1-2011]

Madhu Limaye v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 551: 1978 SCC (Cri) 10, relied on [2594] — Ss. 205 and 482 — Dispensing with personal attendance of accused — Considerations for — Duties of Magistrate enumerated — Discretion of Magistrate under S. 205, held, cannot be circumscribed by laying down any general direction — While considering application under S. 205, Magistrate has to bear in mind nature of case as also conduct of person summoned — He shall examine whether any useful purpose would be served by requiring personal attendance of accused or whether progress of trial is likely to be hampered on account of his absence — Therefore, satisfaction, whether or not an accused deserves to be exempted from personal attendance, has to be of Magistrate, who is the master of court insofar as progress of trial is concerned and none else — However, order of Magistrate should be such, which does not result in unnecessary harassment to accused and at the same time does not cause any prejudice to complainant — Court must ensure that exemption from personal appearance granted to accused is not abused to delay trial — In instant case, general direction by High Court to all criminal courts, particularly in cases involving offence under S. 138, NI Act, as also in all other cases involving offences which are technical in nature and do not involve any moral turpitude, that only summons under S. 205 shall be issued by courts at first instance, is clearly erroneous, inasmuch as discretion of Magistrate under S. 205 cannot be circumscribed by laying down any general directions in that behalf — Hence, impugned order containing aforesaid general direction to lower courts, set aside — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138 and 143 to 145 — Blanket direction by High Court dispensing with personal appearance of accused in S. 138, NI Act cases, set aside (Paras 7 to 11 and 22). TGN Kumar v. State of Kerala, (2011) 2 SCC 772.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, A.K. Ganguly and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-1-2011]

Bhaskar Industries Ltd. v. Bhiwani Denim & Apparels Ltd., (2001) 7 SCC 401: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1254; S.V. Muzumdar v. Gujarat State Fertilizer Co. Ltd., (2005) 4 SCC 173: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1020; Manoj Narain Agrawal v. Shashi Agrawal, (2009) 6 SCC 385: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 1096, affirmed

Saseendran Nair v. General Manager, (1996) 2 KLT 482; Kerala SRTC v. Abdul Latheef, (2005) 3 KLT 955; Raman Nair v. State of Kerala, (1999) 3 KLT 714; Noorjahan v. Moideen, (2000) 2 KLT 756; Helen Rubber Industries v. State of Kerala, 1972 KLT 794, referred to

Jain Babu v. Joseph, (2008) 4 KLT 16, reversed

[2595] — S. 205 — Dispensing with personal attendance of accused — Proceedings under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — Considering the nature of the controversy, held, in case application in terms of S. 205 was filed, the trial court would dispense with the personal attendance of the petitioners — But, if any attempt was made to prolong the proceedings by taking advantage with the said order, it would be open to the court to pass such order as was felt necessary (Para 3). Gajanand Goyal v. Asiya Begum, (2005) 12 SCC 331.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2005]

[2596] — S. 205 — Dispensing with personal attendance of accused — Held, permissible if application for dispensing with personal attendance is made before Special Court — Water (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Act, 1974, Ss. 47, 44, 25 and 26

If Respondent 1 applies for dispensing with his personal presence in the court, after making the first appearance, the Special Court can exempt him from continuing to appear in the court by imposing any condition which the court deems fit. (Para 42). U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Dr. Bhupendra Kumar Modi, (2009) 2 SCC 147.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and P. Sathasivam, J. [Date of decision: 12-12-2008]

— S. 205(1) See Ss. 313(1)(b) proviso and 2(w) & (x), 205(1) and 317

— S. 206 See Ss. 167(5) [as amended by S. 4 of W.B. Act 24 of 1988], 436, 437, 204, 205, 206 and 161

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 205, 206 and 382

— S. 207 See Ss. 161, 162, 91, 172 and 207

See also Ss. 161, 172, 173(6) and 207

See also Ss. 161 and 207

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 197, 207, 169 and 170

See also Ss. 363(5) and 207

[2597] — S. 207 — Presumption as to the supply of copy of a document to accused — Drawn by High Court merely on the ground that the said document was mentioned in charge-sheet — Said document not produced during the trial and proved according to law — In the absence of anyone affirming the correctness of the contents of the said document, held, presumption drawn by High Court not proper (Para 7). Jitendra v. State of M.P., (2004) 10 SCC 562: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2028: AIR 2003 SC 4236: 2003 Cri LJ 4985.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2003]

[2598] — Ss. 207, 208, 161 and 438 — Police papers (documents) — Object of supply of, to accused — Stage(s) at which to be supplied — Which documents to be supplied — Effect of unauthorised access to case diary — Held, object of supply of the said documents is to enable the accused to defend himself properly — Non-supply of is not necessarily prejudicial to the accused — At the stage the bail applications were heard by the High Court, legally accused could not have been in a position to have access to the same — Therefore the courts should take serious note when the accused or the informant refers to the case diary to buttress a stand — Natural justice — Supply of documents

Sections 207 and 208 CrPC Code deal with documents which are commonly known as police papers, which are to be supplied to the accused to make the accused aware of the materials which are sought to be utilised against him. The object is to enable the accused to defend himself properly. The idea behind the supply of copies is to put him on notice of what he has to meet at the trial. Non-supply is not necessarily prejudicial to the accused. The court has to give a definite finding about the prejudice or otherwise. The papers which are to be supplied to the accused have been statutorily prescribed. Both the accused and the informant referred to several portions in the case diary. At the stage the bail applications were heard by the High Court, legally they could not have been in a position to have access to the same. (Paras 11, 12, 13 and 14)

When the parties make reference to the supervision notes, the inevitable conclusion is that they have unauthorised access to the official records. The courts should take serious note when the accused or the informant refers to the case diary to buttress a stand. (Paras 13 and 14). Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 2008 SC 218: (2008) 1 KLT 839.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-2007]

[2599] — Ss. 207, 208 and 209 — Submission that evidence of each witness must be put to accused — Held, only circumstances need to be put to accused and not entire testimony (Paras 270 to 273). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-2010]

State of Punjab v. Swaran Singh, (2005) 6 SCC 101: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1359, relied on

Ranvir Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2009) 6 SCC 595: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 92; Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468: 1953 Cri LJ 1933, distinguished

[2600] — Ss. 207, 209, 309, 170, 190 and 2(g) — Where case instituted upon police report exclusively triable by Session Court, held, Magistrate has jurisdiction and power to remand the accused to custody under S. 309(2) any time from the time the accused is produced before him along with the police report till the order committing the accused to the Sessions Court is made under S. 209 — Magistrate's function under S. 207 read with S. 209 is judicial and in the nature of 'inquiry' within the meaning of S. 2(g)

The statutory obligation imposed by S. 207 read with S. 209 on the Magistrate to furnish free of costs copies of documents is a judicial obligation. Section 207 is cast in a mandatory language. No order committing the accused to the Court of Session can be made under S. 209 unless the Magistrate fully complies with the provisions of S. 207. And if it is shown that the copies of relevant documents or some of them are not supplied, the matter will have to be adjourned to get the copies prepared and supplied to the accused. This is implicit in S. 207 r/w S. 209. The Magistrate can proceed to commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session only after he judicially discharges the function imposed upon him by S. 207. This conclusion is fortified by the provisions contained in Chapter XVIII.

The Magistrate's function under S. 207 is not a trial but something other than a trial and being judicial function it would necessarily be an enquiry. The making of an order committing the accused to the Court of Session will equally be a stage in the enquiry and the enquiry culminates in making the order of commitment. Thus, from the time the accused appears or is produced before the Magistrate with the police report under S. 170 and the Magistrate proceeds to enquire whether S. 207 has been complied with and then proceeds to commit the accused to the Court of Session, the proceeding before the Magistrate would be an inquiry as contemplated by S. 2(g). That being so, S. 309 would enable the Magistrate to remand the accused to the custody till the inquiry to be made is complete. State of U.P. v. Lakshmi Brahman, (1983) 2 SCC 372: 1983 SCC (Cri) 489: AIR 1983 SC 439: 1983 Cri LJ 839: 1983 ALJ 419.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-3-1983]

[2601] — Ss. 207, 208, 161, 162, 91 & 243 r/w S. 173 — Right of accused to receive documents/statements submitted before court — Scope — Held, said right is absolute — Liberty of accused cannot be interfered with except by "due process of law" which includes fairness in trial — Documents submitted before court should be disclosed giving accused fair chance of defence, particularly when non-production or non-disclosure of such document would affect administration of criminal justice and defence of accused prejudicially — Accused has a statutory right to confront witnesses with statements recorded under S. 161 — He can also move an application for production of any record or witness in support of his case — Constitution of India, Article 21 (Paras 190 to 222). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-2010]

R. v. Ward (Judith), (1993) 1 WLR 619: (1993) 2 All ER 577 (CA); R. v. Preston, (1994) 2 AC 130: (1993) 3 WLR 891: (1993) 4 All ER 638 (HL), distinguished [2602] — Ss. 207, 238, 228 & 240 and S. 227 — Framing of charge — Non-compliance with S. 207 — Whether Magistrate has jurisdiction to recall his order — Whether the non-compliance rendered framing of the charge void — Whether that violated concept of fair and speedy trial under Art. 21 — Held, once charges have been framed and accused pleads not guilty, Magistrate is required to proceed with the trial to its logical end — Magistrate has no power under the Code to discharge the accused — He can, thereafter either convict or acquit the accused — Further held, submissions advanced with regard to denial of natural justice and a fair and speedy trial as contemplated under Art. 21 of the Constitution, have no application whatsoever to the instant case (Paras 2, 6 and 17). Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609: 2008 Cri LJ 3540.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-2008]

Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, (1979) 2 SCC 179: 1979 SCC (Cri) 405; State of A.P. v. Golconda Linga Swamy, (2004) 6 SCC 522: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1805; State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415, followed

Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, held overruled

P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 830; Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93; Dhananjay Kumar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2006 Cri LJ 3873 (Raj), distinguished [2603] — Ss. 207 and 154 — Non-production of report despite being summoned — Effect — Applicability — Written report made by deceased's father to the police, which was the first contemporaneous document putting on record the true facts pertaining to the incident not produced by the prosecution despite direction by the Sessions Court for its production — Held, raised a doubt against the prosecution case — Accused entitled to benefit of doubt — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114 Ill. (g) (Paras 5, 6 and 7). Sk. Meheboob v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 10 SCC 387: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1544: AIR 2005 SC 1805: 2005 Cri LJ 2136.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-2005]

[2604] — Ss. 207 and 208 — Non-supply of copies of record — Normally where material evidence is necessary the case is adjourned to enable the party to get the entire record prepared — However, where evidence is not material for the purpose of the case the court can refuse to adjourn the case — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. XX-E R. 1(v). State of Gujarat v. Anirudhsing, (1997) 6 SCC 514: 1997 SCC (Cri) 946: AIR 1997 SC 2780: 1997 Cri LJ 3397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-1997]

[2605] — Ss. 207 and 208 — Papers to be supplied to accused — Notes of supervision of supervisory police officers — Held, are not part of papers supplied to accused in terms of Ss. 207 and 208 — Only those documents need to be supplied which are sought to be utilised against him — Non-supply of documents not necessarily prejudicial to the accused — A definite finding about prejudice or otherwise is required to be given by the court — Supervision notes should not be supplied to accused, nor can they be referred to by accused nor can they be taken into account by court if reference thereof is made before any court — Notes of supervision cannot be utilised by prosecution as a piece of material or evidence against the accused — Directions issued to ensure confidentiality of supervision notes

The supervision notes are not a part of the papers which are supplied to the accused. Moreover, the informant is not entitled to the copy of the supervision notes. The supervision notes are recorded by the supervising officer. The documents in terms of Sections 207 and 208 are supplied to make the accused aware of the materials which are sought to be utilised against him. The object is to enable the accused to defend himself properly. The idea behind the supply of copies is to put him on notice of what he has to meet at the trial. Non-supply is not necessarily prejudicial to the accused. The court has to give a definite finding about the prejudice or otherwise. The supervision notes cannot be utilised by the prosecution as a piece of material or evidence against the accused. At the same time the accused cannot make any reference to them for any purpose. If any reference is made before any court to the supervision notes, they are not to be taken note of by the court concerned. As many instances have come to light when the parties, as in the present case, make reference to the supervision notes, the inevitable conclusion is that they have unauthorised access to the official records. Therefore the Chief Secretary of each State and Union Territory and the Director General of Police concerned are directed to ensure that the supervision notes are not made available to any person and to ensure that confidentiality of the supervision notes is protected. If it comes to light that any official is involved in enabling any person to get the same, appropriate action should be taken against such official. Due care and caution should be taken to see that while supplying police papers supervision notes are not given. (Para 27). Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435: AIR 2005 SC 498: (2004) 115 DLT 517: (2005) 2 Guj LR 1096: (2005) 1 KLT 748: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 534.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2004]

Noor Khan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1964 SC 286: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 167: (1964) 4 SCR 521; Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1918, relied on [2606] — Ss. 207 and 311 — Contempt petition filed before Supreme Court against prosecution agency (Administrator, Delhi Administration, I.G. Police and D.C. Police) on ground of non-compliance with Supreme Court's directions to "take every steps and summon every witnesses and have the case disposed of" — But the stage of summoning the witnesses did not reach as final orders could not be passed on the applications made on behalf of the petitioners under Ss. 207 and 311, CrPC as a result of which charge could not be framed — Moreover, D.C. Police concerned was transferred to a different place even prior to issuance of the directions by Supreme Court — Held, no case for initiating proceedings for contempt made out — Contempt of Courts Act, 1971, S. 2(b). Diwan Naubat Rai v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1989) 1 SCC 297: 1989 SCC (Cri) 142: AIR 1989 SC 542: 1989 Cri LJ 802.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and N.D. Ojha, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-1988]

— S. 208 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 207 and 208

See also Ss. 207, 208, 161 and 438

[2607] — S. 208 — Non-supply of documents — Held, not necessarily prejudicial to the accused — Court should give a definite finding about the prejudice or otherwise (Para 27). Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1918: AIR 2003 SC 4567.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2003]

Noor Khan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1964 SC 286: (1964) 4 SCR 521: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 167, relied on [2608] — S. 208 — Provision requiring the Magistrate to furnish to the accused, free of cost, a copy of the documents specified therein — Nature of — Per Thomas, J., is mandatory. Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230: 2000 SCC (Cri) 379: AIR 2000 SC 637: 2000 Cri LJ 930: (2000) 1 KLT 494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas[2] and M.B. Shah[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

— S. 209 See Ss. 167, 209 and 309

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 198-A, 209, 239, 240, 242 and 323

See also Ss. 190(1), 209, 216 and 223

See also Ss. 193, 209 and 319

See also Ss. 196, 190, 193 and 209

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 209 and 465

See also Ss. 203, 204, 209 and 227

See also Ss. 207, 209, 309, 170, 190 and 2(g)

See also Ss. 227 and 209

See also Ss. 227, 228 and 209

See also Ss. 319, 154, 156, 173, 190, 204, 209

See also Ss. 319 and 190, 193 & 209

See also Ss. 319, 193 and 209

See also Ss. 323 and 209

[2609] — S. 209 — Committing Magistrate performs judicial function. Rajender Kumar Jain v. State, (1980) 3 SCC 435: 1980 SCC (Cri) 757: AIR 1980 SC 1510: 1980 Cri LJ 1084: (1980) 17 ACC 201.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1980]

[2610] — S. 209 — On committal, the restriction on the Court of Session to take cognizance of an offence as a court of original jurisdiction gets lifted

On the Magistrate committing the case under S. 209 to the Court of Session the bar of S. 193 is lifted thereby investing the Court of Session complete and unfettered jurisdiction of the court of original jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence which would include the summoning of the person or persons whose complicity in the commission of the crime can prima facie be gathered from the material available on record. Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470: 1993 Cri LJ 1700: (1993) 1 Crimes 494: (1993) 1 BLJR 309.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1993]

[2611] — Ss. 209, 193, 26 and 306 — Committal to Sessions cannot be stayed for the purpose of cross-examination etc. except in case of approvers — Change in the scheme under the new Code — Committal court no longer required to find a prima facie case before committal — Function is now non-discretionary — Plea for further time for inspection of records etc., on facts, disallowed

In view of the changes made in respect of committal proceedings by the new Code, it is no longer open to the committal Court to launch on a process of satisfying itself that a prima facie case has been made out on the merits. The jurisdiction once vested in him under the earlier Code but has been eliminated now under the present Code. Therefore, to hold that he can go into the merits even for a prima facie satisfaction is to frustrate Parliament's purpose in remoulding S. 207-A (old Code) into its present non-discretionary shape. Expedition was intended by this change and this will be defeated successfully if interpretatively it is held that a dress rehearsal of a trial before the Magistrate is in order. The narrow inspection hole through which the committing Magistrate has to look at the case limits him merely to ascertain whether the case, as disclosed by the police report, appears to the Magistrate to show an offence triable solely by the Court of Session. Assuming the facts to be correct as stated in the police report, if the offence is plainly one under S. 201, Indian Penal Code (an offence triable by Sessions Court only), the Magistrate has simply to commit for trial before the Court of Session. If, by error, a wrong section of the Penal Code is quoted, he may look into that aspect. Even if made-up facts unsupported by any material are reported by the police and a sessions offence is made to appear, it is perfectly open to the Sessions Court under S. 227, Criminal Procedure Code to discharge the accused. The grievance on this count is unfounded. Sanjay Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 2 SCC 39: 1978 SCC (Cri) 172: AIR 1978 SC 514: 1978 Cri LJ 642: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 320: (1978) 2 SCR 861.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-1978]

[2612] — Ss. 209, 319, 2(g), 227 and 228 — Magistrate has no jurisdiction, while committing a case under S. 209 to associate another person as accused in exercise of power under S. 319 or under any other provision — Consequently the Court of Session in purported exercise of revisional power cannot obligate the Magistrate to do so — Proceeding under S. 209 before a Magistrate is not an inquiry and material before him is not evidence — On committal the Court of Session can exercise jurisdiction under S. 319 and add a new accused on the basis of evidence recorded by it — However, Court of Session must provide the accused the necessary safeguards envisaged under S. 319(4) particularly when expressions on merit have been extensively made by the Magistrate, the Court of Session and the High Court

When after concluding the investigation the police submitted papers before the Chief Judicial Magistrate the first informant made an application requiring the Magistrate to exercise his powers to summon the appellant so as to send him to stand trial alongside the accused sent up by the police, before the Court of Session. The Chief Judicial Magistrate dismissed the application of the first informant which led to a revision petition by the first informant before the Court of Session. The Court of Session allowed the revision petition and directed the Chief Judicial Magistrate to issue warrant of arrest of the appellant to face trial. The appellant moved the High Court under Section 482 CrPC praying for quashing of the orders of the Court of Session but the same was dismissed. Allowing the appeal by special leave

Held :

Sub-section (1) of Section 319 makes it clear that it operates in an ongoing inquiry into, or trial of, an offence. In order to apply Section 319, it is thus essential that the need to proceed against the person other than the accused, appearing to be guilty of offence, arises only on evidence recorded in the course of any inquiry or trial. Proceedings before a Magistrate under Section 209 CrPC are patently not trial proceedings and were never considered so at any point of time historically. Before the amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the present form, commitment proceedings had the essential attributes of an inquiry and were termed as such. If proceedings under Section 209 CrPC continue to be an inquiry, Section 319 CrPC would be obviously attracted.

Under the new Code the functions left to be performed by the Magistrate, such as granting copies, preparing the records, notifying the public prosecutor etc. are thus preliminary or ministerial in nature. The role of the Magistrate thus is only to see that the package sent to the Court of Session is in order, so that it can proceed straightaway with the trial and that nothing is lacking in content, as per requirements of Sections 207 and 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Such proceedings thus do not fall squarely within the ambit of 'inquiry' as defined in Section 2(g) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore it would be legitimate to conclude that the Magistrate at the stage of Section 209 CrPC is forbidden to apply his mind to the merit of the matter and determine as to whether any accused need be added or subtracted to face trial before the Court of Session.

In stricto sensu, Section 319 of the Code cannot be invoked in a case where no evidence had been led at a trial, wherefrom it can be said that the accused, other than the one facing trial, appears to have been involved in the commission of the crime.

Addition of an accused by summoning or resummoning a discharged accused, and that too without hearing the accused, has only been permitted in the manner provided by Section 319 CrPC on evidence adduced during the course of trial, and in no other way.

The power under Section 209 CrPC to summon a new offender was not vested with a Magistrate on the plain reading of its text as well as proceedings before him not being an 'inquiry' and material before him not being 'evidence'. When such power was not so vested, his refusal to exercise it cannot be corrected by a Court of Revision, which may be the Court of Session itself awaiting the case on commitment, merely on the specious ground that the Court of Session can, in any event, summon the accused to stand trial, along with the accused meant to be committed for trial before it. Presently it is plain that the stage for employment of Section 319 CrPC has not arrived. The order of the Court of Session requiring the Magistrate to arrest and logically commit the appellant along with the accused proposed to be committed to stand trial before it, is patently illegal and beyond jurisdiction. Since the Magistrate has no such power to add a person as accused under Section 319 CrPC when handling a matter under Section 209 CrPC, the Court of Session, in purported exercise of revisional powers cannot obligate it to do so. When the case comes after commitment to the Court of Session and evidence is recorded, it may then in exercise of its powers under Section 319 CrPC on the basis of the evidence recorded by it, if circumstances warranting, proceed against the appellant, summon him for the purpose, to stand trial along with the accused committed, providing him the necessary safeguards envisaged under sub-section (4) of Section 319. Such course is all the more necessary in the instant case when expressions on merit have extensively been made in the orders of the Magistrate, the Court of Session and that of the High Court. Any other course would cause serious prejudice to the appellant. Raj Kishore Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1996) 4 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 772: AIR 1996 SC 1931.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-1996]

State of U.P. v. Lakshmi Brahman, (1983) 2 SCC 372: 1983 SCC (Cri) 489: AIR 1983 SC 439, held per incuriam

Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470; Nisar v. State of U.P., (1995) 2 SCC 23: 1995 SCC (Cri) 306, doubted

[2613] — Ss. 209 and 26 and Sch. I — Committal to Sessions Court is ordered by Magistrate when offence is exclusively triable by that court — Where accused charged under S. 307 IPC for inflicting several injuries on complainant, but doctor opining that all the injuries were of simple nature, held, Magistrate did not err in trying the case instead of committing it to Sessions Court. Rizwan v. Waqar Ahmad, 1993 Supp (2) SCC 121: 1993 SCC (Cri) 455.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1992]

[2614] — Ss. 209, 323 and 465(1) — Committal proceedings — Effect of not following procedure — Held, is only an irregularity covered by S. 465(1) — Remedial measures are possible where objection is taken at the earliest occasion

It is an uphill task for the accused in this case to show that failure of justice had in fact occasioned merely because the specified Sessions Court took cognizance of the offences without the case being committed to it. The normal and correct procedure, of course, is that the case should have been committed to the Special Court because that court being essentially a Court of Session can take cognizance of any offence only then. But if a specified Sessions Court, on the basis of the legal position then felt to be correct on account of a decision adopted by the High Court, had chosen to take cognizance without a committal order, what is the disadvantage of the accused in following the said course? (Para 17)

After enactment of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1973, the committal court, in police charge-sheeted cases, cannot examine any witness at all. The Magistrate in such cases has only to commit the cases involving offences exclusively triable by the Court of Session. Therefore, after commencement of the 1973 Code it is not possible for an accused to raise a contention that skipping committal proceedings had deprived him of the opportunity to cross-examine witnesses in the committal court and that had caused prejudice to his defence. (Para 18)

There is no substance in the contention that Section 465 is restricted to any findings, sentence or order passed by "a court of competent jurisdiction" and that a Special Court under the SC/ST Act which is essentially a Sessions Court would have remained incompetent until the case is committed to it. The expression "a court of competent jurisdiction" envisaged in Section 465 is to denote a validly constituted court conferred with jurisdiction to try the offence or offences. Such a court will not get denuded of its competence to try the case on account of any procedural lapse and the competence would remain unaffected by the non-compliance with the procedural requirement. The inability to take cognizance of an offence without a committal order does not mean that a duly constituted court became an incompetent court for all purposes. If an objection was raised in that court at the earliest occasion on the ground that the case should have been committed by a Magistrate, the same specified court has to exercise a jurisdiction either for sending the records to a Magistrate for adopting committal proceedings or return the police report to the Public Prosecutor or the police for presentation before the Magistrate. Even this could be done only because the court has competence to deal with the case. Sometimes that court may have to hear arguments to decide that preliminary issue. (Paras 19 and 21)

The bar against taking cognizance of certain offences or by certain courts cannot govern the question whether the court concerned is "a court of competent jurisdiction", e.g. courts are debarred from taking cognizance of certain offences without sanction of certain authorities. If a court took cognizance of such offences, which were later found to be without valid sanction, it would not become the test or standard for deciding whether that court was "a court of competent jurisdiction". It is now well settled that if the question of sanction was not raised at the earliest opportunity the proceedings would remain unaffected on account of want of sanction. This is another example to show that the condition precedent for taking cognizance is not the standard to determine whether the court concerned is "a court of competent jurisdiction". (Para 22). State of M.P. v. Bhooraji, (2001) 7 SCC 679: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1373: AIR 2001 SC 3372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-8-2001]

Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358, relied on

H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196: 1955 Cri LJ 526; Ballabhdas Agarwala v. J.C. Chakravarty, AIR 1960 SC 576: 1960 Cri LJ 752, distinguished

[2615] — S. 209 — Invocation of S. 18, TADA — Stage for — Held, not true that words "after taking cognizance" employed in S. 18, TADA would include any stage of trial including the stage when the judgment is to be delivered — Said section would be attracted only at the stage where the Designated Court takes cognizance of offence i.e. after the investigation is complete and charge-sheet is filed — S. 18 distinguished from S. 209 CrPC — TADA, 1987, S. 18

It is contended that the words "after taking cognizance" employed in Section 18 of the Act would include any stage of trial including the stage when the judgment is to be delivered. This submission is misconceived. If it ought to have been the intention of the legislature they could have said so. The legislature deliberately uses the words "after taking cognizance of any offence" to mean that Section 18 would be attracted only at the stage where the Designated Court takes cognizance of offence i.e. after the investigation is complete and charge-sheet is filed. The provisions of Section 209 CrPC on which the counsel for the appellants sought to rely are not in pari materia with Section 18. In Section 209 CrPC the words "after taking cognizance" are absent conspicuously. Section 18 is a filtered provision. The section is attracted only at a stage the Designated Court takes cognizance of the offence. It is at the stage of taking cognizance, the Designated Court is expected to scan the documents and evidence collected therewith. If the Designated Court is of the opinion that the offence is not triable by it, it shall then, notwithstanding that it has no jurisdiction to try such offence, transfer the case for the trial of such offence to any court having jurisdiction under the Code and the court to which the case is transferred may proceed with the trial of the offence as if it had taken cognizance of the offence. There is no ambiguity in the language used in Section 18. If the submissions of the counsel for the appellant are accepted, it would amount to reading something into the statute which is not there. (Para 42). Prakash Kumar v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 2 SCC 409: 2005 SCC (Cri) 518: AIR 2005 SC 1075: 2005 Cri LJ 929.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and B.N. Agrawal, H.K. Sema, G.P. Mathur and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-2005]

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899, relied on

— S. 209(b) See Ss. 437, 441(3) and 209(b)

— S. 210 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 401(3), 378 and 210

See also Ss. 482 and 154, 211 & 210

[2616] — S. 210 — Cross-cases — Procedure to be adopted by the trial court in the event of — Held, the cross-cases should be tried together by the same court irrespective of the nature of the offences involved — Further held, the rationale behind this is to avoid conflicting judgments over the same incident — Duty of the investigating officer in situation of cross-cases, explained

The cross-cases should be tried together by the same court irrespective of the nature of the offence involved. The rationale behind this is to avoid the conflicting judgments over the same incident because if cross-cases are allowed to be tried by two courts separately there is likelihood of conflicting judgments. (Para 8)

In the instant case, the investigating officer submitted the challan against both the parties. Both the complaints cannot be said to be right. Either one of them must be false. In such a situation, legal obligation is cast upon the investigating officer to make an endeavour to find out the truth and to cull out the truth from falsehood. Unfortunately, the investigating officer has failed to discharge the obligation, resulting in grave miscarriage of justice. (Para 8)

Thus, when the investigating officer submitted the challan on the basis of the complaint lodged by the accused M in respect of the same incident, it would have been just, fair and proper to decide both the cases together by the same court. (Para 8). State of M.P. v. Mishrilal, (2003) 9 SCC 426: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1829: AIR 2003 SC 4089: 2003 Cri LJ 2312.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-2003]

Nathi Lal v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 145: 1990 SCC (Cri) 638, followed

[2617] — S. 210 — Procedure to be followed when there is complaint case and police investigation in respect of same offence — Magistrate to stop proceeding in the complaint case and call for police report, whereafter he is to take up the matter together — Held, non-compliance with the provisions of Section 210 CrPC, is not ipso facto fatal to the prosecution unless error, omission or irregularity has also caused failure of justice — While determining the said fact regard should be had to the fact whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage in the proceedings — In the instant case, complaint was alleged to have been filed before Magistrate after police failed to take any action on complainant's report — But police records not produced to substantiate the claim — Hence, appellant held to be prejudiced (Paras 13 and 14). Dilawar Singh v. State of Delhi, (2007) 12 SCC 641: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 330: AIR 2007 SC 3234: 2007 Cri LJ 4709.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-9-2007]

Mohd. Yousuf v. Afaq Jahan, (2006) 1 SCC 627: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 460, relied on [2618] — S. 210 — Provision under, regarding stay of complaint case where there is complaint case and police investigation in respect of same offence — Object and conditions to be satisfied for invocation of — Restated — In the present case no contention regarding the said conditions raised before High Court — Magistrate proceeded with complaint on being satisfied with the materials placed on record — No illegality therein — Further, High Court in an earlier order observed that S. 210 could not arrest the proceedings of complaint case as the basic tenor of the said case and police investigation was different — SLP against the said order already dismissed by Supreme Court — On these facts, held (per C.K. Thakker, J.), S. 210 not attracted to the present case

Per Thakker, J.

Section 210 CrPC has no application to the facts of the case on hand. (Para 75)

A bare reading of the above provision makes it clear that during an inquiry or trial relating to a complaint case, if it is brought to the notice of the Magistrate that an investigation by the police is in progress in respect of the same offence, he shall stay the proceedings of the complaint case and call for the record of the police officer conducting the investigation. (Para 76)

The object of Section 210 is threefold:

(i) it is intended to ensure that private complaints do not interfere with the course of justice;

(ii) it prevents harassment to the accused twice; and

(iii) it obviates anomalies which might arise from taking cognizance of the same offence more than once. (Para 77)

Before Section 210 can be invoked, the following conditions must be satisfied.

(i) there must be a complaint pending for inquiry or trial;

(ii) investigation by the police must be in progress in relation to the same offence;

(iii) a report must have been made by the police officer under Section 173; and

(iv) the Magistrate must have taken cognizance of an offence against a person who is accused in the complaint case. (Para 79)

In the impugned order passed by the High Court, no such contention appears to have been raised by the appellant. On the basis of the complaint filed by the complainant and on being satisfied on the material placed on record, the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate had proceeded with the case which cannot be said to be illegal. (Para 80)

It may also be stated here that the High Court in its order dated 20-6-2003 considered this contention and observed that Section 210 could not arrest the proceedings initiated by the complainant, since the "basic tenor of the two cases was different". The special leave petition against the order of the High Court was dismissed by the Supreme Court on 28-7-2003. Even this ground, therefore, cannot take the case of the appellant anywhere. (Para 81). Sankaran Moitra v. Sadhna Das, (2006) 4 SCC 584: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 358: AIR 2006 SC 1599.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J.[1] and C.K. Thakker[2] and P.K. Balasubramanyan[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 24-3-2006]

[2619] — Ss. 210 and 223 — Complaint case against three persons in respect of same offence for which police challan filed only against one person — Cases cannot be consolidated and tried together — Evidence be recorded separately in both cases unless witnesses common and they be tried one after another — Principles laid down in Harjinder Singh case be followed. Manikandan v. Pandian, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 648: 1990 SCC (Cri) 203.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-1989]

[2620] — S. 210 — Complaint case and police case in respect of same offence — Cases consolidated and tried together — Two sets of witnesses produced — Trial court and High Court taking two conflicting views — Version given by two sets of eyewitnesses contradicting each other — Held, benefit of the same should go to the accused. Hardip Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 183: 1994 SCC (Cri) 384.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-1993]

[2621] — Ss. 210(1) & (3) and 482 — Complaint case and police case — Quashing of complaint case — Complaint filed under S. 200 — FIR also filed in respect of the same case and police making investigation pursuant thereto — Magistrate in the complaint case taking cognizance finding sufficient reasons to proceed against two accused persons under S. 304-A IPC and directing issuance of summons — In the police case, police filing final form under S. 173 and the complainant appearing and protesting before the Magistrate — High Court on being moved under S. 482 quashing the complaint proceedings on ground that Magistrate had erred in not staying the complaint proceedings under S. 210(1) — Held, in view of S. 210(3), High Court committed serious error in quashing the complaint merely because of Magistrate's failure to stay the complaint case (Paras 4 and 5). R.K. Khanna v. State, (2003) 11 SCC 758.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U. C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-11-2000]

[2622] — S. 210(1) — Applicability — Cognizance of offence under Wild Life (Protection) Act, 1972 — Complaint lodged against accused-respondents by competent officer alleging commission of offence under S. 9(1) r/w S. 51 1972 Act for killing elephant and removing its tusks — Held, cognizance of the offence against the accused can be taken under S. 55 1972 Act notwithstanding pendency of police investigation for offence under Ss. 447, 429 and 379 IPC r/w Ss. 54 and 39 of the 1972 Act against the same accused for the same act — S. 210(1) CrPC, 1973 inapplicable — Wild Life (Protection) Act, 1972, Ss. 55, 51, 2(16), 2(36) and 9(1)

Cognizance of offence under S. 55 of the Act can be taken by a court only on the complaint of the officer mentioned in S. 55. Even if the jurisdictional police purported to register a case for an alleged offence against the Act, S. 210(1) would not be attracted as cognizance of such an offence can only be taken on the complaint of the officer mentioned in that section. Even where a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence instituted otherwise than on a police report and an investigation by the police is in progress in relation to the same offence, the two cases do not lose their separate identities. The section seeks to obviate the anomalies that might arise from taking cognizance of the same offence more than once. But, where, as here, cognizance can be taken only in one way and that on the complaint of a particular statutory functionary, there is no scope or occasion for taking cognizance more than once and, accordingly, S. 210 has no role to play. State of Bihar v. Murad Ali Khan, (1988) 4 SCC 655: 1989 SCC (Cri) 27: AIR 1989 SC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-10-1988]

[2623] — Ss. 210(2) & (3), 223, 300 and 482 — Clubbing and consolidating two cases — When permissible — Complaint case and case arising out of police investigation in respect of same offence — None of accused in said two cases common — Accused in one of the cases witnesses in the other and vice versa — Prosecution versions in the two cases were materially different, contradictory and mutually exclusive — Held, clubbing of such cases was not permissible — Such cases may be ordered to be tried together but not consolidated — Evidence is to be recorded separately in both cases — They should be disposed of simultaneously so that procedure does not infringe provisions of Art. 20(2) of the Constitution r/w S. 300 CrPC — Further held, trial court shall proceed to hear two cases simultaneously, but separately, and dispose of the same simultaneously — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 147, 323 and 302 (Paras 12, 18 and 27 to 32)

Although it will appear from Section 210 CrPC that the Magistrate may try two cases arising out of a police report and a private complaint together, the same contemplates a situation where having taken cognizance of an offence in respect of an accused in a complaint case, in a separate police investigation such a person is again made an accused, then the Magistrate may inquire into or try together the complaint case and the case arising out of the police report as if both the cases were instituted on a police report. That, however, is not the fact situation in the instant case, since the accused are different in the two separate proceedings and the situation has, in fact, arisen where prejudice in all possibility is likely to be caused in a single trial where a person is both an accused and a witness in view of the two separate proceedings out of which the trial arises. (Para 28)

The versions in the complaint case and the police report are totally different, though arising out of the same incident. This is a case where the two trials should be held simultaneously but not as a single trial. (Para 29)

The facts of the case also warrant that the two trials should be conducted by the same Presiding Officer in order to avoid conflict of decisions. (Para 30). Pal v. State of U.P., (2010) 10 SCC 123: (2010) 4 UPLJ 58.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-2010]

Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1985) 1 SCC 422: 1985 SCC (Cri) 93; Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, 1980 Supp SCC 499: 1981 SCC (Cri) 438, followed

Khetrabasi Samual v. State of Orissa, (1969) 2 SCC 571; Dilawar Singh v. State of Delhi, (2007) 12 SCC 641: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 330, referred to

— S. 210(3) See Ss. 210(1) & (3) and 482

— Ch. XVII (Ss. 211 to 224) See S. 2(b) and Ch. XVII (Ss. 211 to 224)

— S. 211 See also S. 221, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1096 in Vol. 2

— S. 211 See Ss. 154, 156, 173(2) & (8) and 211

See also Ss. 190, 211 and 228
See also Ss. 215, 211, 465 and 464
See also Ss. 216 and 211
See also Ss. 216, 211 and 215
See also Ss. 227, 193, 204, 211
See also Ss. 228 and 211
See also Ss. 238 to 240 and 211
See also Ss. 240(1), 246(1) and 211
See also Ss. 464, 211 and 216
See also Ss. 464, 211, 216 and 228
See also Ss. 482 and 154, 211 & 210
See also Ss. 482, 190, 203, 211, 227, 239 and 245
See also Ss. 482, 211, 215 and 216

[2624] — Ss. 211 to 224 — Chapter XVII — Charge — Validity — Held, it is the allegations that are material and not the proof that is material for establishing the validity of the charge. Bhagwan Das Jagdish Chander v. Delhi Admn., (1975) 1 SCC 866: 1975 SCC (Cri) 410: AIR 1975 SC 1309: 1975 Cri LJ 1091.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.H. Beg[1], A. Alagiriswami[2] and N.L. Untwalia[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 25-3-1975]

[2625] — Chs. XVII and XVIII — Framing of appropriate/correct charge — Need of, stressed — Benefit of doubt when may be given — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 25 and 27

An unidentified body with firearm injury on the forehead on the left eye was detected by the police and an FIR was lodged. There were 26 accused.

The appellant-Accused 1 was convicted for commission of offences punishable under Sections 302, etc. In the absence of any direct evidence, the conviction was based solely on circumstantial evidence. The bullet taken out by the doctor from the dead body of the deceased was fired from the revolver recovered nine months later at the instance of Accused 1. The revolver was kept and concealed in such a place that knowledge of the same could not be attributed to any person other than Accused 1. The opinion of ballistic expert was that the bullet removed from the deceased could only be fired from the revolver recovered from the appellant-Accused 1's house. The appellant could not offer any satisfactory account/explanation as to how he came to be in possession of the said revolver (weapon). On this basis Sessions Court held that Accused 1 fired a shot from his revolver on the deceased. The shot hit on the vital part i.e. head. Under the circumstances, the Sessions Judge held that Accused 1 intended to cause a fatal injury to the vital part of the deceased, which was later on found sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause his death. Thus, the act of Accused 1 was held by Sessions Judge to be punishable under Section 302 IPC. The impugned judgment of the Division Bench of the High Court confirmed the conviction and sentence imposed by the Sessions Judge.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Proper charges should have been framed. The murder of the deceased as alleged to have been committed by all the accused persons by hatching a conspiracy was not proved. But the accused was charged with Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC and also under Section 302 read with 120-B IPC. (Paras 25 and 37)

The trial court while framing charges should have been more careful. It is a matter of serious concern that despite the recovery of weapon, the appellant had not been charged for commission of offence punishable under Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act. The helplessness expressed by the trial Judge in this behalf may be noticed. (Para 39). Abdulwahab Abdulmajid Baloch v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 11 SCC 625: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1507: (2009) 2 Guj LR 1426.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.B. Sinha, B. Sudershan Reddy and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-2009]

[2626] — S. 211 — Charge-sheet — Object of — Should not prejudice the accused — Non-compliance with the Rules alleged — All details mentioned in the charge-sheet and trial continued in which accused participated — Even though the tentative charge-sheet was not signed, the final charge-sheet was duly signed — Held, accused was not prejudiced and charge-sheet valid. Major G.S. Sodhi v. Union of India, (1991) 2 SCC 382: 1991 SCC (Cri) 357: AIR 1991 SC 1617: (1991) 1 LLN 365: 1991 Cri LJ 1947.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

[2627] — S. 211 — Charge-sheet — Must be filed if there is sufficient material — Minor irregularities or inconsistencies in respect of charge-sheet not significant. Major G.S. Sodhi v. Union of India, (1991) 2 SCC 382: 1991 SCC (Cri) 357: AIR 1991 SC 1617: (1991) 1 LLN 365: 1991 Cri LJ 1947.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

[2628] — S. 211 — At the stage of framing of charges, meticulous consideration of evidence and materials by court not required — Where both trial court which framed the charges as well as High Court briefly surveyed the evidence adduced and High Court after perusing statement of witnesses under S. 161 satisfied itself that the charges were not groundless, held, Supreme Court's interference not called for — Constitution of India, Article 136. Mohd. Akbar Dar v. State of J&K, 1981 Supp SCC 80: 1982 SCC (Cri) 148: AIR 1981 SC 1548: 1981 Cri LJ 1135.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-1-1981]

[2629] — Ss. 211 and 154 — Framing of charges — Even if a wrong section is mentioned in the FIR, that does not prevent the court from framing appropriate charges — Thus, mentioning of a particular section in the FIR is not by itself conclusive

The mentioning of a particular section in the FIR is not by itself conclusive as it is for the court to frame charges having regard to the material on record. Even if a wrong section is mentioned in the FIR, that does not prevent the court from framing appropriate charges. (Para 23). CBI v. Tapan Kumar Singh, (2003) 6 SCC 175: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1305: AIR 2003 SC 4140: 2003 Cri LJ 2322.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2003]

[2630] — Ss. 211 and 240 — Framing of charges — Court should not undertake detailed analysis and evaluation of material at that stage — It has only to find whether the material adduced by prosecution was sufficient to proceed further — In case of offence under S. 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(e) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 it is not necessary that charge can be framed only on failure of public servant to explain the excess or surplus assets — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(e)

At the stage of framing charge the court should not enter upon a process of evaluating the evidence by deciding its worth or credibility. The limited exercise during that stage is to find out whether the materials offered by the prosecution to be adduced as evidence is sufficient for the court to proceed further. No doubt the prosecution has to establish that the pecuniary assets acquired by the public servant are disproportionately larger than his known sources of income and then it is for the public servant to account for such excess. The offence becomes complete on the failure of the public servant to account for or explain such excess. It does not mean that the court could not frame charge until the public servant fails to explain the excess or surplus pointed out to be the wealth or assets of the public servant concerned. This exercise can be completed only in the trial. In the present case the materials which the prosecution enumerated are sufficient to frame the charge for the offence under Section 13(2) read with Section 13(1)(e) of the Act. (Paras 21, 23 and 22). State v. S. Bangarappa, (2001) 1 SCC 369: 2001 SCC (Cri) 152: AIR 2001 SC 222: 2001 Cri LJ 111.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-11-2000]

Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303; State of M.P. v. Dr. Krishna Chandra Saksena, (1996) 11 SCC 439: 1997 SCC (Cri) 35; M. Krishna Reddy v. State Dy. Supdt. of Police, Hyderabad, (1992) 4 SCC 45: 1992 SCC (Cri) 801; P. Nallammal v. State, (1999) 6 SCC 559: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1133; K. Veeraswami v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 655: 1991 SCC (Cri) 734; State of Maharashtra v. Ishwar Piraji Kalpatri, (1996) 1 SCC 542: 1996 SCC (Cri) 150, relied on

S. Bangarappa v. State by CBI, (2000) 3 Kant LJ 432, reversed

[2631] — S. 211 — Accused convicted under S. 302 IPC — Conviction under Ss. 307/34 IPC also in connection with same murder improper. Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 65: 1994 SCC (Cri) 226: AIR 1993 SC 2448: 1993 Cri LJ 2886.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.B. Sawant and S. Mohan, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-1993]

[2632] — S. 211 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Ss. 7, 13(2) r/w S. 13(1) — New Plea — Suspicion regarding framing of proper charges/manipulation of framed charges, raised before the Supreme Court for the first time — Held, the appropriate forum in such case would have been the trial court — The appellant having failed to raise the issue either before the trial court or the first appellate court, cannot be permitted to agitate it in the Supreme Court (Para 8). Varada Rama Mohana Rao v. State of A.P., (2004) 4 SCC 427: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1289.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-3-2004]

[2633] — S. 211 — Supreme Court's interference not called for at the stage of framing of charges. Dhanraj Jain v. B.N. Biswas, 1984 Supp SCC 646: 1983 SCC (Cri) 394.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-1983]

[2634] — Ss. 211, 213, 214, 216 and 223 — Reading of the charge — Charge clearly that of conspiracy to cheat by impersonation, though only conspiracy to cheat mentioned — Accused could not have been misled about charge. Yash Pal Mittal v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 540: 1978 SCC (Cri) 5: AIR 1977 SC 2433: 1978 Cri LJ 189.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.K. Goswami, N.L. Untwalia and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-11-1977]

See for details 'Penal Code, 1860', Ss. 419, 120A & 120B

[2635] — Ss. 211, 215 and 221 — Framing of alternative charges — Effect — Trial court framing charges under Ss. 302/34 IPC and in the alternative under Ss. 304-B/34 IPC besides under Ss. 498-A/34 IPC — Held, effect of framing of alternative charges varies from case to case — In absence of any grievance being raised by the appellants on that behalf at any stage of trial and in absence of any prejudice being caused to them appellants prohibited from raising the same before the Supreme Court (Paras 35 to 38). Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 283: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 715: AIR 2006 SC 3221: 2006 Cri LJ 4646: (2006) 47 AIC 600 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2006]

Soni Devrajbhai Babubhai v. State of Gujarat, (1991) 4 SCC 298: 1991 SCC (Cri) 959; Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358, distinguished [2636] — Ss. 211, 215, 216, 218, 221 and 464 — Framing of charge — Error/Omission in — Effect, if any in present case — No charge framed under S. 34 IPC — Conviction of appellant-accused by High Court with the aid of S. 34, if permissible — Whether non-framing of charge fatal to prosecution — Held, absence of charge under one or other or various heads of criminal liability for the offence cannot be said to be by itself prejudicial to accused — Before conviction for substantive offence without charge can be set aside, case of prejudice to accused will have to be made out — Hence, submission of appellants for acquittal on aforesaid ground of non-framing of charge under S. 34, unsustainable — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 34 (Paras 41, 45 and 47). Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-2010]

Malhu Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2002) 5 SCC 724: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1190; Dhaneswar Mahakud v. State of Orissa, (2006) 9 SCC 307: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 505; Annareddy Sambasiva Reddy v. State of A.P., (2009) 12 SCC 546: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 630, relied on

Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 364: 1953 Cri LJ 1465, clarified on this point

[2637] — Ss. 211 and 215 — After framing charge for offence under Ss. 302/149, accused cannot be convicted for substantive offence under Ss. 302 simpliciter. Subran v. State of Kerala, (1993) 3 SCC 32: 1993 SCC (Cri) 583: 1993 Cri LJ 1387: (1993) 2 Crimes 15.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.N. Venkatachaliah, C.J. and B.P. Jeevan Reddy and Dr. A.S. Anand, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-2-1993]

[2638] — Ss. 211 & 215 and 464 & 465 — Errors and omissions in charge — Charge under S. 148 IPC — Allegation that accused were members of unlawful assembly but common object of the assembly not mentioned in the charge — Besides, charge under S. 302 IPC simpliciter framed against all the accused persons but convicted with the aid of S. 149 — Point not raised in courts below — In their examination under S. 313 accused persons specifically told of their having committed offences under Ss. 148 and 302/149 IPC — Held, in the circumstances, no prejudice caused to the accused and therefore, trial not vitiated. State of A.P. v. Thakkidiram Reddy, (1998) 6 SCC 554: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1488: AIR 1998 SC 2702.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-8-1998]

[2639] — Ss. 211, 212, 215 & Ills. (e) & (d) thereto and S. 464 — Framing of charge — Error/Omission in — Charge for offence against Y but conviction for offence against X — Permissibility — Prejudice caused to accused, occasioning failure of justice — New trial, after proper framing of charge, directed — Appellant-accused came into house of P at night, touched/caught hand of her sleeping daughter-in-law S, and when S raised an alarm, he ran away — But, appellant charged with having trespassed into house of P with intent to assault P and having assaulted her by outraging her modesty — However, appellant convicted on ground that though he did not assault or outrage modesty of P, he had outraged modesty of S, also present at time of alleged incident — Held, when appellant defended himself in regard to aforesaid charge and concentrated on proving that said charges were not true vis-à-vis P, he cannot be convicted for having assaulted and outraging modesty of someone else, namely, S — Appellant was clearly misled by error in charge which caused prejudice to appellant, thereby occasioning failure of justice — Therefore, direction for new trial after charging appellant with offence of outraging modesty of S, issued — Hence, conviction of appellant set aside and matter remitted to trial court with aforesaid direction — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 452 and 354

In the instant case, the charge was that the appellant committed trespass into the house of P for assaulting P, and assaulted the said P and outraged her modesty. The accused concentrated his cross-examination with reference to the said charge and elicited answers showing that he did not assault or outrage the modesty of P. He did not try to challenge the evidence let in to show that he had tried to outrage the modesty of S (P's daughter-in-law), as he was not charged with such an offence. The evidence of PWs 1 and 2 (P and S) was that the appellant did not touch or tease or abuse P. Their evidence was that he touched/caught the hand of S and when she raised an alarm he ran away. When the charge was that the accused attempted to commit trespass into the house of P with intent to outrage the modesty of P, the conclusion of the appellate court and the High Court that there was no failure of justice if he is punished for the offence of having assaulted S and outraging her modesty, is opposed to principles of fair play and natural justice embodied in Sections 211, 212, 215 and 464 CrPC. (Para 19)

When the accused is charged with having entered the house of P and assaulted the said P with intent to outrage her modesty and when the accused defended himself in regard to the said charge and concentrated on proving that the said charges were not true, he cannot be convicted for having assaulted and outraging the modesty of someone else, namely, S. The accused did not have any opportunity to meet or defend himself against the charge that he assaulted S and outraged her modesty. Nor did he proceed with his defence on the understanding that he was being charged with having committed the offence with reference to S. One of the fundamental principles of justice is that an accused should know what is the charge against him so that he can build his defence in regard to that charge. An accused cannot be punished for committing an offence against Y when he is charged with having committed the offence against X and the entire defence of the accused was with reference to charge of having committed offence against X. (Para 20)

Applying the guidance offered by Illustration (e) under Section 215 CrPC, as contrasted from Illustration (d) under that section, and legal principles evolved by the Supreme Court, the position will be as follows: If S alone had been present at the house at the time of the incident and the accused had assaulted and outraged the modesty of the said S, but in the charge the name of the victim had been erroneously mentioned, say as S or P (though there was no person by such name), and the inquiry exclusively referred to the assault and outraging the modesty of S, the court could infer that the accused was not misled and the error in the charge was immaterial. On the other hand, if two persons were present in the house at the time of the incident, namely, P and S and the accused is charged with trespassing into the house of P, and assaulting and outraging the modesty of the said P, and the witnesses refer only to the assault and outraging the modesty of S, the court will have to infer that the accused was prejudiced, if the accused had solely concentrated and focused his defence and entire cross-examination to show that he did not commit the offences against P. (Para 22)

The court having charged the accused with the offence of having trespassed into the house of P with the intent to assault her and having further charged him for having assaulted the said P by outraging her modesty, convicts him on the ground that though he did not assault or outrage the modesty of P, he had outraged the modesty of S, that would lead to failure of justice. There was a material error in the charge as it violated the requirement of Section 212(1) CrPC, that the charge shall contain particulars as to the person against whom the offence was committed. (Para 23)

There were two women present at the house at the time of the alleged incident, namely, P and her daughter-in-law S. In view of the specific charge, the accused concentrated on showing that the charge was false. He did not attempt to meet the case made out in the trial that the offence was against S. The accused was thus clearly misled by the error in the charge which caused prejudice to the accused thereby occasioning failure of justice. Therefore, there should be a new trial after charging him with the offence of outraging the modesty of S. (Para 24)

Hence, the conviction of the accused is set aside and the matter is remitted to the trial court with a direction for a new trial after framing a charge by substituting the words "her daughter-in-law S" for the words "abovenamed P", in the second part of the charge. (Para 25). Main Pal v. State of Haryana, (2010) 10 SCC 130: AIR 2010 SC 3292: 2010 Cri LJ 4450: (2010) 94 AIC 9: (2010) 4 UPLJ 14.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-9-2010]

State of H.P. v. Gita Ram, (2000) 7 SCC 452: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1390, distinguished on facts

[2640] — Ss. 211 and 216 — Charge — Quashing of — Supreme Court cannot convert itself into a trial court to consider whether there was evidence or not justifying framing of charges. Raghubir Singh v. State of Bihar, (1986) 4 SCC 481: 1986 SCC (Cri) 511: AIR 1987 SC 149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-1986]

[2641] — Ss. 211 and 313 — Framing of charge and examination of accused under S. 313 CrPC — Duty of court — Role of Judge — Laxity, especially in State of Bihar — Strongly deprecated and High Court concerned directed to take corrective measures — Directed that a copy of this order be placed before the Hon'ble Judge of the Patna High Court, in charge of the State's Judicial Academy (Paras 14 and 26). Sajjan Sharma v. State of Bihar, (2011) 2 SCC 206.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Aftab Alam and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-2011]

[2642] — Ss. 211 and 223 — Framing of charge — Confession of an accused, who has been discharged, is not admissible against a co-accused — Court not justified in taking into consideration such confession for framing charges against the co-accused on ground that the prosecution could examine him as a witness for establishing the facts disclosed in his confession — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 30 — TADA, 1987, Ss. 3(3), 3(4) and 14

Under Section 30 of the Evidence Act, 1872, a confession of an accused is relevant and admissible against a co-accused if both are jointly facing trial for the same offence. Where the accused has been discharged from the case and would not be facing trial with the co-accused his confession cannot be used against the co-accused. In the instant case the Designated Court decided to rely upon the confession on the specious ground that the prosecution was not in any way precluded from examining him as a witness in the trial for establishing the facts disclosed in his confession. This was a perverse approach of the Designated Court while dealing with the question of framing charges. At that stage, the court is required to confine its attention to only those materials collected during investigation which can be legally translated into evidence and not upon further evidence (dehors those materials) that the prosecution may adduce in the trial which would commence only after the charges are framed and the accused denies the charges. Suresh Budharmal Kalani v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 7 SCC 337: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1625: AIR 1998 SC 3258.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-9-1998]

[2643] — Ss. 211 to 213, 215 and 313 — Care to be taken in framing of and questioning of accused — Consequence of improper/incorrect framing of charge — Appellants charged for causing death by setting deceased on fire after pouring kerosene oil on her — Such charge framed despite medical evidence that death was due to smothering and burns on deceased's person were post-mortem — While examining accused persons under S. 313 CrPC, two questions put to them which supported their defence rather requiring them to "explain circumstances appearing in evidence against" them — Such casual approach in framing charge and questioning the accused under S. 313, deprecated — Conviction set aside

In the post-mortem report also the doctor, PW 7 has categorically stated that the death was due to smothering. The evidence of the doctor clearly shows that the burns were not ante-mortem in nature and were post-mortem. This part of the evidence of the doctor has not been shaken. In fact, it is dismaying to find that the charges were framed on totally unfounded premises and even in the examination under Section 313 of the Code, with reference to the evidence of PW 7 it was stated that the death was due to smothering. If that be so, the question of the accused persons having caused the death by burning does not arise. Such casual framing of charge and examination under Section 313 of the Code is a disturbing feature. (Paras 14 to 16). Basavaraja v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 9 SCC 329: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 767.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, V.S. Sirpurkar and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-2008]

[2644] — Ss. 211, 215 and 228 — Defect in charge — Effect — Held, mere defect in language, or in narration, or in form of charge, would not render conviction bad, if accused had not been prejudiced thereby (Para 34). Mohd. Ankoos v. High Court of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 94.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-2009]

[2645] — Ss. 211 and 217 — Charge — Need for specificity in — Need for correction by court on appreciation of evidence — Accused charged under S. 302 IPC substantively and also with aid of S. 149 — A-2 inflicting blows with sharp-edged weapon, while A-1 assaulting deceased with lathi on head — High Court without discussing any of these aspects merely confirming their conviction under S. 302 with aid of S. 149 — Held, High Court ought to have given a specific finding — Appellants had come together, abused the deceased and thereafter acted along with each other — Hence, they were liable to be convicted under S. 302, not with aid of S. 149 but S. 34 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 r/w Ss. 149/34 (Paras 40 and 41). Murli v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 9 SCC 417: (2009) 81 AIC 43 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-8-2009]

— S. 211(4) See Ss. 464, 218 and 211(4)

— S. 212 See also S. 222, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1097 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 212 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 211 to 213, 215 and 313

[2646] — Ss. 212 & 213 — Undue Influence — Specific pleading with full particulars regards undue influence necessary — Ss. 123 and 83(1)(c), Representation of the People Act, 1951, CPC, Or. 6 R.4

In order that a pleading may be sufficient to make out a case of undue influence, it must set out full particulars of it under the provisions of S. 83(1)(c) of the Act which may be compared with Or. 6 R. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The said provisions of the Act read with S. 123(2) makes it obligatory on a party setting up a case of corrupt practice by exercise of under influence as suggested, to give full particulars thereof by stating inter alia who attempted to induce electors to believe that voting for a particular person would render them objects of divine displeasure or spiritual censure and in what manner such attempts were made.

The real charge in para 4(c) of the petition in that the pamphlet complained of misled the electors by false statements. Such a pleading falls far short of an allegation of undue influence by an attempt to make electors exercise their franchise in a particular manner. Para 4(c) does not even mention Muslim voters and does not contain any averment to the effect that they were sought to be influenced by the opinion of the religious heads. Lakhi Prasad v. Nathmal Dokania, AIR 1969 SC 583, 585: (1969) 2 SCR 41,43-44: 1969 BLJR 612: 1969 MPWR 458.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M. Hidayatullah, C.J. and G.K. Mitter, J. [Date of decision: 6-9-1968]

[2647] — Ss. 212, 215 and 464 — Framing of charge — Principles relating to, summarised

Principles relating to Sections 212, 215 and 464 CrPC can be summarised as follows:

(i) The object of framing a charge is to enable an accused to have a clear idea of what he is being tried for and of the essential facts that he has to meet. The charge must also contain the particulars of date, time, place and person against whom the offence was committed, as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(ii) The accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy, the exact nature of the charge against him, and unless he has such knowledge, his defence will be prejudiced. Where an accused is charged with having committed offence against one person but on the evidence led, he is convicted for committing offence against another person, without a charge being framed in respect of it, the accused will be prejudiced, resulting in a failure of justice. But there will be no prejudice or failure of justice where there was an error in the charge and the accused was aware of the error. Such knowledge can be inferred from the defence, that is, if the [illegible] the accused showed that he was defending himself against the real and actual charge and not the erroneous charge.

(iii) In judging a question of prejudice, as of guilt, the courts must act with a broad vision and look to the substance and not to the technicalities, and their main concern should be to see whether the accused had a fair trial, whether he knew what he was being tried for, whether the main facts sought to be established against him were explained to him fairly and clearly, and whether he was given a full and fair chance to defend himself. (Paras 12 to 17). Main Pal v. State of Haryana, (2010) 10 SCC 130: AIR 2010 SC 3292: 2010 Cri LJ 4450: (2010) 94 AIC 9: (2010) 4 UPLJ 14.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-9-2010]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116: 1956 Cri LJ 291; Gurbachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 623: 1957 Cri LJ 1009; Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358; State of W.B. v. Laisal Haque, (1989) 3 SCC 166: 1989 SCC (Cri) 513; State of A.P. v. Thakkidiram Reddy, (1998) 6 SCC 554: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1488; Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1592; Dumpala Chandra Reddy v. Nimakayala Balireddy, (2008) 8 SCC 339: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 493; Sanichar Sahni v. State of Bihar, (2009) 7 SCC 198: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 347, relied on

[2648] — Ss. 212 and 240 — Persons against whom charge may be framed — Company contravening order made under S. 3, Essential Commodities Act, 1955 — Persons who may be prosecuted jointly or severally — Held, the persons in charge, or the officers of the company or the company itself may be prosecuted jointly or severally for contravention of such order — Further held, there is no statutory compulsion that the person in charge or an officer of the company may not be prosecuted unless he be ranged alongside the company itself — Directors of company seeking to have the charge for violation of the order against themselves quashed, on ground that the Production Manager, one T alone was liable to be proceeded against — Held, the High Court was not justified in quashing the charge framed as far as the said Directors were concerned — Essential Commodities Act, 1955, Ss. 10 and 3

Allowing the appeal to the extent below,

Held :

If the contravention of the order made under Section 3 is by a company, the persons who may be held guilty and punished are: (1) the company itself, (2) every person who, at the time the contravention was committed, was in charge of, and was responsible to, the company for the conduct of the business of the company, whom for short shall be described as the person in charge of the company, and (3) any director, manager, secretary or other officer of the company with whose consent or connivance or because of neglect attributable to whom the offence has been committed, whom for short shall be described as an officer of the company. Any one or more or all of them may be prosecuted and punished. The company alone may be prosecuted. The person in charge only may be prosecuted. The conniving officer may individually be prosecuted. One, some or all may be prosecuted. There is no statutory compulsion that the person in charge or an officer of the company may not be prosecuted unless he be ranged alongside the company itself. Naturally, before the person in charge or an officer of the company is held guilty in that capacity it must be established that there has been a contravention of the order by the company. (Para 7)

Therefore the High Court was not justified in quashing the charge framed so far as the present respondents were concerned. (Para 14). State of Punjab v. Kasturi Lal, (2004) 12 SCC 195: AIR 2004 SC 4087: 2004 Cri LJ 3866.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-7-2004]

Sheoratan Agarwal v. State of M.P., (1984) 4 SCC 352: 1984 SCC (Cri) 620, relied on

[Ed.: See also (2003) 11 SCC 405 and (2004) 6 SCC 531 on the controversy regarding requirement of mens rea against persons in charge of the company: See also five-Judge Bench decision in Standard Chartered Bank v. Directorate of Enforcement, (2005) 4 SCC 530]

— S. 213 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 211 to 213, 215 and 313
See also Ss. 211, 213, 214, 216 and 223
See also Ss. 212 & 213

[2649] — Ss. 213, 231 and 232 — Charge not stating the circumstances under which the offence committed — Held on facts, the charge vague — No evidence produced to prove the charge even when oral evidence was adduced — Held, accused should be acquitted — Penal Code, 1860, S. 467. Hasan Ali v. State of M.P., (1983) 2 SCC 66: 1983 SCC (Cri) 340: AIR 1983 SC 352(2): 1983 Cri LJ 691(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-1983]

— S. 214 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 211, 213, 214, 216 and 223

—S. 215 See also S. 225, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1099 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 215 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 211 to 213, 215 and 313
See also Ss. 211 and 215
See also Ss. 211, 215 and 221
See also Ss. 211 & 215 and 464 & 465
See also Ss. 216, 211 and 215
See also Ss. 221, 215 and 218
See also Ss. 221, 218 and 215
See also Ss. 221 & 218 and 215 & 464
See also Ss. 235 to 215
See also Ss. 464 & 215, 386, 399 and 401
See also Ss. 464, 216, 221 and 215
See also Ss. 464, 222, 215 and 216
See also Ss. 482, 211, 215 and 216

[2650] — S. 215 — Absence of charge under S. 34 IPC — Held, not fatal by itself unless prejudice to the accused established — Penal Code, 1860, S. 34

The legality of conviction by applying Section 34 IPC in the absence of such charge was held to be not fatal by itself. Before conviction for a substantive offence without a charge can be set aside, prejudice will have to be established. (Para 21). Anil Sharma v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 5 SCC 679: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1706: AIR 2004 SC 2294: 2004 Cri LJ 2527.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-2004]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116: 1956 Cri LJ 291; Dhanna v. State of M.P., (1996) 10 SCC 79: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1192: AIR 1996 SC 2478, relied on [2651] — Ss. 215, 216, 218, 221 and 464 — Absence of charge under S. 149 IPC — Effect — Absence of charge under S. 149 — Conviction with aid of S. 149 — Sustainability — Submission that in absence of specific charge under S. 149, accused persons cannot be convicted under S. 302 r/w S. 149 as S. 149 creates a distinct and separate offence — On facts held, non-framing of charge under S. 149, on face of charges framed against appellants would not vitiate their conviction in absence of any prejudice caused to them — Appellants had assembled together armed with axes and sickle and were parties to assault on D-1 & D-2 and in inflicting grievous injuries on three others — Penal Code, 1860, S. 149 [Ss. 302/149 and 307/149] and S. 148. Annareddy Sambasiva Reddy v. State of A.P., (2009) 12 SCC 546: AIR 2009 SC 2661: (2009) 78 AIC 222 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-2009]

[2652] — S. 215 — Accused not put on trial on proper charge under S. 2(ia)(f) or (1) of Prevention of Food Adulteration Act — Possibility that he was prejudiced in his defence because of ambiguity, held, cannot be ruled out — Accused, therefore, cannot be convicted under Ss. 7 and 16 of that Act, even though his offence under S. 2(ia)(f) was proved — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 2(ia)(f), 7 and 16. MCD v. Ram Sarup, (1980) 1 SCC 580: 1980 SCC (Cri) 137: AIR 1980 SC 174.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria, P.N. Shinghal and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-8-1979]

[2653] — S. 215 — Technical defect immaterial if no prejudice caused. Chaturdas Bhagwandas Patel v. State of Gujarat, (1976) 3 SCC 46: 1976 SCC (Cri) 351: AIR 1976 SC 1497: (1976) 3 SCR 1052: 1976 Cri LJ 1180.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-4-1976]

[2654] — Ss. 215, 173, 220 and 228 — Charge-sheet and police report — Nature of police report — Information supplied in police report and description of how the various offences were made out on the facts in charge-sheet — Detail, specificity and clarity required — Duty of court at stage of framing charge, reiterated — Penal Code, 1860, S. 72

A plea has been taken that charge-sheet is a bundle of confusions and no definite material is placed on record to substantiate the allegation of commission of any offence. This assertion has been adequately refuted by the respondent State with regard to various definite materials indicating commission of offence, which have been pointed out. (Para 40)

The report in terms of Section 173 CrPC is in the nature of information to the Magistrate. Statutory requirement is complied with if the requisite information is given. It purports to be an opinion and therefore elaborate details are not necessary. Mere non-description of the offences in detail is really not material. (Paras 43 and 44)

It would not be desirable to analyse minutely the materials at the stage when the charge is framed. At this stage the court is primarily concerned with the question as to whether a charge is to be framed in respect of any offence and whether prima facie there appears existence of any material and not the sufficiency of the materials. Therefore, the appellants' stand that the charge-sheet does not refer to any particular material cannot be accepted, more particularly, in view of the specific materials referred to by the respondent State. (Para 45). Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193: AIR 2007 SC 1274: (2007) 51 AIC 623 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

K. Veeraswami v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 655: 1991 SCC (Cri) 734, relied on

[2655] — Ss. 215, 211, 465 and 464 — Word "illegality" — Meaning of — Appellants charged under Ss. 148 and 302 r/w S. 149, IPC, but convicted under S. 302 r/w S. 34 — Whether the irregularity amounts to an illegality and vitiates the trial — "Illegality" meaning of in this context — Trial when vitiated — Test — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 225, 221, 537 and 535

The Code does not use the word 'illegality', nor defines 'irregularity' and illegality can only mean an incurable illegality, incurable because of prejudice leading to a failure of justice.

The object of the charge is to give the accused notice of the matter he is charged with and does not touch jurisdiction. If, therefore, the necessary information is conveyed to him in other ways and there is no prejudice, the trial is not invalidated by the mere fact that the charge was not formally reduced to writing. The essential part of this part of the law is not any technical formula of words but the reality, whether the matter was explained to the accused and whether he understood what he was being tried for. Bhoor Singh v. State of Punjab, (1974) 4 SCC 754: 1974 SCC (Cri) 664: AIR 1974 SC 1256: 1974 Cri LJ 929.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-1974]

[2656] — Ss. 215, 221 and 464 — Error, omission in charge — Determination of question of prejudice — Test of Slaney's case applied

In judging a question of prejudice, as of guilt, the courts must act with a broad vision and look to the substance and not to the technicalities, and their main concern should be to see whether the accused had a fair trial, whether he knew what he was being tried for, whether the main facts sought to be established against him were explained to him fairly and clearly, and whether he was given a full and fair chance to defend himself. That test is clearly fulfilled in the facts and circumstances of the present case. The principles laid down in Slaney case have throughout been followed by this Court. State of W.B. v. Laisal Haque, (1989) 3 SCC 166: 1989 SCC (Cri) 513: AIR 1989 SC 129: 1989 Cri LJ 865.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-9-1988]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116: (1955) 2 SCR 1140: 1956 Cri LJ 291, followed [2657] — Ss. 215 and 465 — Charges — Defects in, alleged — Powers of Reference Court are wide — What has to be seen is whether there was any irregularity in the charge which prejudiced the accused — TADA, 1987, S. 11 (Per Wadhwa, J.) (Para 540). State v. Nalini, (1999) 5 SCC 253: 1999 SCC (Cri) 691: AIR 1999 SC 2640: 1999 Cri LJ 3124.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[1], D.P. Wadhwa[2] and S.S.M. Quadri[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1999]

[2658] — Ss. 215, 220 and 221 — Defect in charge — Effect — No prejudice caused to accused nor question argued before trial court — Accused charged for conspiracy but convicted for offence under S. 302 RPC simpliciter — Held, the way appellant had worked in success of the conspiracy, handled guns and accompanied two other assailants to house of deceased and manner in which the plan was executed amply prove that his conviction under S. 302 RPC was justifiable — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 simpliciter and S. 120-B r/w S. 302 — Ranbir Penal Code, 1989 Smvt., S. 302 simpliciter and S. 120-B r/w S. 302 (Paras 76, 14 and 17). Mohd. Ayub Dar v. State of J&K, (2010) 9 SCC 312: AIR 2010 SC 2864: (2010) 93 AIC 88.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-7-2010]

[2659] — Ss. 215, 216, 218, 221 & 222 — Charges framed only under Ss. 415 & 420 IPC — No charge framed under S. 409, though offence, if any, was that under S. 409 — Effect

Appellant was a Branch Manager of State Bank of India. He and some of his colleagues were prosecuted under Sections 415 and 420 read with Section 120-B IPC, and Section 13(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, for permitting discounting of local cheques to some customers of the Bank. Accused 4 and 5 were bank officials while Accused 1 to 3 were private parties having account with the Bank.

The issues involved were whether the bank officials and the customers had entered into criminal conspiracy to commit the offence of cheating against the Bank under Sections 415 and 420 IPC, and whether the accused persons had obtained any illegitimate advantage, warranting punishment under the Prevention of Corruption Act.

Trial court convicted the accused persons. High Court upheld their conviction. The Supreme Court however took note of the fact that there was no evidence on record to prove that there was an intention to cheat the Bank. On the other hand, there was evidence on record that appellant had stopped cheque discounting facility and he had resumed it only after verbal instructions from a superior officer, PW 20. Moreover, the bank officials appeared to have acted in the overall interest of the Bank for the purpose of promoting its business, though there might have been some irregularity in doing so.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

One of the ingredients of cheating, as defined in Section 415 IPC, is existence of an intention to cheat at the time of making initial promise or existence thereof from the very beginning of formation of contract. The complainant is required to show that the accused had fraudulent or dishonest intention at the time of making promise or representation. Even in a case where allegations are made in regard to failure on the part of the accused to keep his promise, in absence of a culpable intention at the time of making initial promise being absent, no offence under Section 420 IPC can be said to have been made out. (Paras 41 and 42)

The offence, if any, was committed under Section 409 IPC but the accused persons have not been charged under Section 409 IPC; even Accused 1 to 3 have not been charged for entering into a conspiracy with Accused 4, 5 and 6 in respect of commission of offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act. It is in the aforementioned situation, the judgment of conviction and sentence cannot be upheld. (Para 51)

The conclusions can be summarised as follows:

(a) The prosecution did not lay down any foundational facts to arrive at a finding of dishonest intention on the part of the appellants, nor has any such finding has been arrived at by the trial court or the High Court.

(b) The circumstances which were considered sufficient to bring home the charges against the appellants were: the cheques of Accused 1, 2 and 3 were discounted after purchasing cheques; cheques were deposited after a gap of one to four days; only later were the amounts deposited in the account, which circumstances are not sufficient to hold the appellants guilty for commission of offence under Section 420 IPC as all the actions on the part of the bank officers were in consonance with the long-standing banking practice.

(c) Accused 4 had taken care of having adequate security to ensure that the bank does not suffer any loss, the gain if any was caused to the bank.

(d) The appellants acted on instructions by the higher authority.

(e) The prosecution evidence does not establish any conspiracy on their part vis-à-vis Accused 1, 2 and 3. (Para 55). S.V.L. Murthy v. State, (2009) 6 SCC 77.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2009]

Hira Lal Hari Lal Bhagwati v. CBI, (2003) 5 SCC 257: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1121; Indian Oil Corpn. v. NEPC India Ltd., (2006) 6 SCC 736: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 188; Vir Prakash Sharma v. Anil Kumar Agarwal, (2007) 7 SCC 373: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 370; All Cargo Movers (India) (P) Ltd. v. Dhanesh Badarmal Jain, (2007) 14 SCC 776: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 947; R. Kalyani v. Janak C. Mehta, (2009) 1 SCC 516: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 567; Sharon Michael v. State of T.N., (2009) 3 SCC 375: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 103, relied on [2660] — Ss. 215, 216, 218, 221 and 464 — Framing of charge — Failure to frame proper charge — Interference, if warranted — Need to show real prejudice — Held, unless accused is able to establish that defect(s) in framing charge(s) has caused real prejudice to him; that he was not informed as to what was the real case against him; or that he could not defend himself properly, no interference is required on mere technicalities (Paras 42 to 44 and 46). Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-2010]

State of A.P. v. Thakkidiram Reddy, (1998) 6 SCC 554: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1488; Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116: 1956 Cri LJ 291; Gurpreet Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 12 SCC 615: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 191; Ramji Singh v. State of Bihar, (2001) 9 SCC 528: 2002 SCC (Cri) 760; Sanichar Sahni v. State of Bihar, (2009) 7 SCC 198: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 347, relied on [2661] — Ss. 215, 222, 464 and 173 — In police report as well as in charge-sheet while co-accused assigned the substantive role and charged under Ss. 302 and 326, appellant charged with the aid of S. 34 for both the offences — But at the trial, contrary to the charge-sheet appellant confronted with evidence accusing him of the substantive charge under Ss. 302 and 326 whereas the co-accused assigned liability under S. 34 — Co-accused later acquitted by High Court — Several infirmities found in trial of appellant — Held, prejudice cannot be ruled out and trial not fair. Pratap Singh v. State of Haryana, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 409: 1991 SCC (Cri) 699.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1990]

[2662] — S. 215 — Applicability to domestic enquiries in labour matters — Omission to frame charge — Enquiry if vitiated — Analogy of S. 215 CrPC, 1973 employed — Even though the charge of extortion was not included in the charge-memo, this act was specifically alleged by the management before the Labour Court and was specifically denied by the workmen, and the parties had led evidence in regard thereto, therefore, held, it could not be said that the workmen were misled or prejudiced by the omission — However, in light of Laxmi Devi case, AIR 1957 SC 7, no conclusive view expressed — Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, S. 11

In the statements filed by the management before the Labour Court, this act of extortion is specifically alleged and in the reply-statement of the workmen, the same is specifically denied and parties have led evidence in regard to their respective cases on the question of extortion, therefore, it cannot be said that the workmen were misled or prejudiced by the omission to mention the charge of extortion nor can they contend that the said omission has occasioned a failure of justice. However, in light of Laxmi Devi case, AIR 1957 SC 7, the matter is left at that. (Paras 21, 16 and 17). Krishnakali Tea Estate v. Akhil Bharatiya Chah Mazdoor Sangh, (2004) 8 SCC 200: 2004 SCC (L&S) 1067: (2004) 103 FLR 273.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2004]

Laxmi Devi Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Nand Kishore Singh, (1956) 2 LLJ 439: AIR 1957 SC 7: 1956 SCR 746, considered

[2663] — Ss. 215 and 228 — Framing of charge-sheet with respect to offences under various clauses of S. 13(1), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Necessity to mention each clause — Sanction order — Detail necessary with respect to the offences alleged — Held, sanctioning authority is not required to separately specify each of the offences against the accused public servant — This is required to be done at the stage of framing of charge — In present case, most of the offences under various clauses of S. 13(1) alleged to have been committed, it was sufficient for sanction order to mention only S. 13(1) — It was not necessary to have mentioned each separate clause thereof which was attracted — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 19 and 13

The sanctioning authority is not required to separately specify each of the offences against the accused public servant. This is required to be done at the stage of framing of charge. The law requires that before the sanctioning authority materials must be placed so that the sanctioning authority can apply its mind and take a decision. Whether there is an application of mind or not would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case and there cannot be any generalised guidelines in that regard. (Para 47). Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193: AIR 2007 SC 1274: (2007) 51 AIC 623 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

— S. 216 See also Ss. 227 to 232, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1102 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 216 See Ss. 190(1), 209, 216 and 223
See also Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 211, 213, 214, 216 and 223
See also Ss. 211 and 216
See also Ss. 222 and 216
See also Ss. 227, 228, 216 and 221
See also Ss. 228 and 216
See also Ss. 464, 211 and 216
See also Ss. 464, 211, 216 and 228
See also Ss. 464, 216, 221 and 215
See also Ss. 464, 222, 215 and 216
See also Ss. 482, 211, 215 and 216
See also Ss. 482, 311, 391, 173(8), 216 and 24

[2664] — S. 216 — Addition of charge relating to dowry death [S. 304-B, IPC] during trial — Death certificate already filed indicating probable cause of death to be cardio-respiratory failure due to acute respiratory failure — Production of another death certificate by prosecution which was issued by same doctor indicating a different cause of death — Objection raised against, by accused — Matter relating to production of subsequent certifi- cate kept in abeyance to be decided after examination of doctor — However, on the same date, trial court allowing application filed for addition of charge under S. 304-B — Presence of certain chemicals in viscera was noted by trial court — Effect of, was to be considered in the background of both the certificates, in case the latter certificate was taken on record — Hence held, it would be proper for trial court to defer the question of framing charge under S. 304-B after examination of the doctor and relevance of the subsequent certificate and its acceptability — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B

There is no quarrel with the proposition that the charge can be altered at any stage. But the question is whether in view of the order passed on the same date the order relating to alteration of charge has been passed by the trial court. The trial court itself noted that as per the first certificate the cause of death was cardio-respiratory failure due to acute respiratory failure. It, however, noted that some chemicals were noted in the viscera. The effect of the presence of those chemicals has necessarily to be considered in the background of both the certificates, in case the latter certificate is taken on record. That being so, it would be proper for the trial court to defer the question of framing charge under Section 304-B after examination of the doctor and relevance of the subsequent certificate and its acceptability. (Para 7). Ishwarchand Amichand Govadia v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 10 SCC 322: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 554.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Lokeshwar Singh Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-10-2006]

[2665] — S. 216 — Addition or alteration of charge during trial — Held, permissible if the court is satisfied that it is necessary to do so

If during trial the trial court on a consideration of broad probabilities of the case based upon total effect of the evidence and documents produced is satisfied that any addition or alteration of the charge is necessary, it is free to do so, and there can be no legal bar to appropriately act as the exigencies of the case warrant or necessitate. (Para 10). Hasanbhai Valibhai Qureshi v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 5 SCC 347: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1603: AIR 2004 SC 2078: 2004 Cri LJ 2018: (2004) 3 Mah LJ 1074: (2004) 3 MPLJ 593.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-4-2004]

Kantilal Chandulal Mehta v. State of Maharashtra, (1969) 3 SCC 166: 1970 SCC (Cri) 19: AIR 1970 SC 359, relied on

[2666] — S. 216 — Application under for alteration of or addition to charge — Held, not maintainable against persons who have already been discharged of all the charges — 'Alter or add to'

'Add to any charge' means the addition of a new charge. An alteration of a charge means changing or variation of an existing charge or making of a different charge. Under S. 216 CrPC addition to and alteration of a charge or charges implies one or more existing charge or charges. When the appellants 4 and 5 were discharged of all the charges and no charge existed against them, an application under S. 216 was not maintainable in their case. The Magistrate in his order did not say that he was proceeding suo motu against them. However, in cases of appellants 1 to 3 against whom the charge under S. 427 IPC was already in existence there could arise the question of addition to or alteration of the charge. The Magistrate therefore while disposing of the application under S. 216 CrPC had no jurisdiction to frame charges against appellants 4 and 5.

Thus the APP's application under S. 216, insofar as the appellants 1 to 3 were concerned, could be dealt with under S. 216. Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1990) 4 SCC 580: 1990 SCC (Cri) 650: AIR 1990 SC 2158: (1990) 3 Crimes 120.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Saikia and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-1990]

[2667] — S. 216 — Charges can be altered at any stage subsequent to the framing of charges (Para 16). Naresh Giri v. State of M.P., (2008) 1 SCC 791: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 324: (2007) 4 KLT 1115.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-11-2007]

[2668] — S. 216 — Covers cases instituted on a private complaint. Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1990) 4 SCC 580: 1990 SCC (Cri) 650: AIR 1990 SC 2158: (1990) 3 Crimes 120.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Saikia and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-1990]

[2669] — Ss. 216, 217 and 465 — Alteration or addition to a charge — Effect — Court has discretion to direct a new trial — But unless there is a specific order to that effect it cannot be presumed that a new trial has commenced after addition or alteration of charges — No direction for new trial can be given unless proceeding with the trial is likely to prejudice the accused or the prosecution — Even if there was any irregularity in continuation of the trial after framing of the additional charges, judgment not open to be set aside in the absence of failure of justice

On a combined reading of Sections 216 and 217 it is evident that after an alteration or addition of the charge the interest of the prosecution and the accused has to be safeguarded by permitting them to further examine or cross-examine the witness already examined, as the case may be, and by affording them an opportunity to call other witnesses. It is undoubtedly true that discretion has been given to the court to direct a new trial after addition or alteration of any charge, but it does not mean that every such addition or alteration in the charge which has been read over and explained to the accused would lead to inevitable inference that the court has directed a new trial for them. It, therefore, follows that unless the court passes a specific order and directs a new trial it cannot be presumed that a new trial has commenced only because an alteration or addition to a charge which has been read over and explained to the accused has been made. Any such direction given by the court has to be judged on the touchstone of prejudice to the accused or the prosecution. (Para 23)

In the instant case after the addition of charges the prosecution expressly stated that they did not want to further examine the four witnesses already examined but they were willing to produce them if the accused so wanted. The accused, however, did not avail of this opportunity in accordance with Section 217 of the Code and, therefore, it is too late in the day for them to raise a grievance on that score. Even if there was any irregularity in the continuation of the trial against the appellants after the additional charges were framed the court would not be justified in setting aside the impugned judgment on that ground alone for there is not an iota of material on record wherefrom it can be said that a failure of justice has occasioned thereby. To put it differently in such a case Section 465 of the Code would have squarely applied. (Para 23). Ranbir Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1995) 4 SCC 392: 1995 SCC (Cri) 728: AIR 1995 SC 1219: 1995 Cri LJ 2665.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-3-1995]

[2670] — Ss. 216 and 211 — Charge framed under S. 149, but not under S. 34 — Conviction applying S. 34 in such a case, held, valid — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 34 and 149 (Paras 17 and 18). Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203: 2005 SCC (Cri) 127: AIR 2004 SC 4570: 2004 Cri LJ 3328.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2004]

Masalti v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 202: (1965) 1 Cri LJ 226; Lalji v. State of U.P., (1989) 1 SCC 437: 1989 SCC (Cri) 211; State of U.P. v. Dan Singh, (1997) 3 SCC 747: 1997 SCC (Cri) 469, relied on [2671] — S. 216 — Supreme Court under Art. 136 finding that the charge under Ss. 147 and 149 IPC, was not proper — If at all S. 34 IPC could be invoked — Matter remanded to Magistrate for framing a proper charge — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 149 and 34. Prabhu Dayal Agarwal v. Murari Lal Agarwal, (1982) 3 SCC 367(1): 1983 SCC (Cri) 48(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-1981]

[2672] — S. 216 — Non-framing of charge under S. 34 IPC — Maintainability of conviction under the said section — Inference regarding common intention if could be drawn in absence of evidence of pre-concert of minds — Appellants charged and convicted by trial court under S. 302 IPC — High Court in appeal convicting appellants under S. 302 r/w S. 34 — Held, common intention could be gathered from the facts and circumstances of the case — Despite there being no evidence of pre-concert of minds, where it is evident from the sequence of events that the intention of the appellants was not to cause injury alone but to kill the deceased, their conviction under S. 34 could not be interfered with merely on the ground of non-framing of charge under S. 34 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 34 and 302

It is true that the two injuries, which proved to be fatal, were not specifically attributed to either of the accused. The common intention can be formed at the spot. At times, it is difficult to get direct evidence of preconcert of minds. The common intention can be gathered from the circumstances and the manner in which assault is carried out. The manner in which assault was carried out leaves no doubt that the appellants had come with the intention to kill the deceased. Their intention was not to cause injuries alone. The continuance of causing of injuries in spite of the intervention of PW 4 and refusal to give water, when the deceased asked for it, shows the predetermined mind of the accused that they had come with the intention to kill the deceased. Although there is no evidence of prior meeting of minds, the sequence of events which unfolded during the course of occurrence clearly indicates the predetermined minds of the accused persons to kill the deceased. (Para 16). Ramji Singh v. State of Bihar, (2001) 9 SCC 528: AIR 2001 SC 3853.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2001]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116: 1956 Cri LJ 291; Dhanna v. State of M.P., (1996) 10 SCC 79: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1192: AIR 1996 SC 2478, followed

[Ed.: See also (1969) 3 SCC 717; AIR 1958 SC 672; AIR 1956 SC 400]

[2673] — Ss. 216, 211 and 215 — Addition of charge by appellate court — When permissible — Conviction under S. 123 IPC on failure to frame charge under, though charges framed under Ss. 121 and 121-A IPC — Propriety of — Held, proper — Fact that there was no charge against accused Shaukat under S. 123 does not in any way result in prejudice to him because charge of waging war and other allied offences were subject-matter of the charges — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 123, 121 and 121-A

Having known about the plans of Afzal in collaborating with the terrorists, he refrained from informing the police or Magistrate intending thereby or knowing it to be likely that such concealment on his part will facilitate the waging of war. By his illegal omission to apprise the police or Magistrate of the design of Afzal and other conspirators to attack Parliament, which is an act of waging war, the appellant Shaukat has made himself liable for punishment for the lesser offence under Section 123 IPC. If he had given timely information, the entire conspiracy would have been nipped in the bud. The fact that there was no charge against him under this particular section, does not, in any way, result in prejudice to him because the charge of waging war and other allied offences are the subject-matter of charges. The accused Shaukat is not in any way handicapped by the absence of charge under Section 123 IPC. The case which he had to meet under Section 123 is no different from the case relating to the major charges which he was confronted with. In the face of the stand he had taken and his conduct even after the attack, he could not have pleaded reasonable excuse for not passing on the information. Viewed from any angle, the evidence on record justifies his conviction under Section 123 IPC. (Paras 321 and 320). State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715: 2005 Cri LJ 3950: (2005) 122 DLT 194.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2005]

[2674] — Ss. 216 and 401 — Altering charge under PFA — Prejudice to accused — Appellants convicted by trial court and first appellate court under S. 16(1)(a)(i) — Alteration of charge from S. 16(1)(a)(i) to S. 16(1)(a)(ii) and conviction thereof by High Court in revision — Propriety of — Applying Ram Sarup case, (1980) 1 SCC 580, held, in decision of High Court changing the nature of offence prejudice is writ large as the two provisions are substantially different and evidence of one cannot lead to finding of guilt for the other — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 2(i-a)(m), 16(1)(a)(i) and 16(1)(a)(ii)

The two accused persons found selling an adulterated food article. The Public Analyst in his report found that the abovementioned food article was adulterated with starch. This opinion was only partially maintained by the Central Food Laboratory as it opined that the foodstuff was adulterated, but there was no reference whatsoever to the adulteration by starch. The trial court and the first appellate court tried and convicted the appellants, who are father and son, for an offence punishable under Section 16(1)(a)(i) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 and sentenced them to various terms of imprisonment. The matter was taken in revision before the High Court and the High Court held that a case under Section 16(1)(a)(i) of the Act could not be made out against the appellants, but as the trial court and the first appellate court had misapplied the penal provision, it was the obligation of the High Court to see that the accused did not escape from criminal liability and accordingly convicted them for an offence punishable under Section 16(1)(a)(ii) of the Act.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

A bare reading of these two provisions and the findings of the first two courts reveal that the evidence required for recording a conviction under the two clauses would be distinct and different as the ingredients thereof are entirely different. In this view of the matter, it appears that the appellants were seriously prejudiced in the fact that the High Court had thought it fit to change the nature of the offence for which they had been brought to trial. The matter is settled in favour of the appellants by the cited judgment. In the light of what has been observed by Supreme Court the prejudice is writ large, more particularly as the ingredients of the two provisions are substantially different and evidence of one cannot lead to a finding of guilt for the other. (Paras 6, 8 and 9). Ramjee Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2009) 14 SCC 197.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-4-2009]

MCD v. Ram Sarup, (1980) 1 SCC 580: 1980 SCC (Cri) 137, applied

[2675] — S. 216(2) — Alteration of charge — Held, though the power of the court to alter charges is undisputed, but it is obligatory on the court to bring the same to the notice of the accused and explain it to him — In the instant case alteration of charge not read and explained to accused — Held, requirements of S. 216(2) not complied with (Paras 18 and 19). Sabbi Mallesu v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 543: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 142: AIR 2006 SC 2747: 2006 Cri LJ 4038.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-7-2006]

[2676] — S. 216(5) — Applicability — Prosecution in respect of food adulteration instituted on the basis of report of Public Analyst after obtaining consent of authorities concerned — Subsequently certificate issued by Director, Central Food Laboratory showing that though both the authorities held that the sample of the food article (toor dal) was adulterated but there was difference in the reasons or data by which they reached the conclusion inasmuch as while Public Analyst opined that it contained kesari dal, the Director, CFL opined that it contained synthetic coal tar dye (tartrazine) — Held, fresh consent to institute prosecution and recommence the proceedings on the basis of the new facts revealed in the certificate of the Director, CFL not required — Sanction is required only at the stage of institution of prosecution on the basis of report of Public Analyst and not at post-institutional stage when the certificate of Director, CFL can be brought in evidence — Once prosecution is instituted validly, matter is controlled by judicial functionary and switching back to the pre-institutional stage for fresh consent of the authorities concerned is unnecessary — In the circumstances, obtaining of fresh consent cannot also be insisted upon in view of the second limb of S. 216(5) CrPC — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 13 and 20(1)

The appellant Food Inspector purchased toor dal from the grocery of the respondent for the purpose of taking sample. One of the three parts of the sample was sent to the Public Analyst who, after analysis, sent a report stating that the sample contained kesari dal and hence it was adulterated. Thereupon the complaint was filed on the premise that the respondent committed the offence under Section 16(1-A) of the Act read with Section 2(i-a)(h) and Section 7(i) of the Act. The Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate before whom the complaint was filed issued process to the respondent as accused. After entering appearance in the case the respondent moved an application for sending a second part of the sample to the Director of Central Food Laboratory. It was sent accordingly and upon the same being analysed at the Central Food Laboratory, the Director thereof sent a certificate to the trial court stating that the sample was adulterated as it contained synthetic coal tar dye (tartrazine). On receipt of the said certificate the trial Magistrate converted the case from summary trial to a warrant case trial. After examining three witnesses for the prosecution the trial Magistrate framed a charge against the accused under Sections 2(i-a)(h) and 7(i) read with Section 16(1-A)(i) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. The respondent filed a revision before the High Court in challenge of the order framing charge. A Single Judge of the High Court accepted the respondent's contention that the complainant had not obtained sanction under Section 20 of the Act on the strength of the new facts revealed in the certificate issued by the Director of Central Food Laboratory and hence a fresh sanction is necessary for proceeding with the case. It was, therefore, directed that the Magistrate, before proceeding further, should give the prosecution an opportunity to place the certificate of the Director of Central Food Laboratory before the appropriate authority for consideration and consent for continuance of the prosecution and in the event of no such consent of the appropriate authority being obtained and produced, the Magistrate should discharge the accused and drop the proceedings. The Food Inspector who instituted the prosecution as well as the State have filed this appeal by special leave against the said order of the High Court. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

It is not necessary to deal with the question whether the prosecution was instituted with the written consent envisaged in Section 20 of the Act or whether it was instituted under a general authorisation made by the State Government. It is proposed to proceed on the assumption, without prejudice to the contention that the appellant instituted the prosecution proceedings on the strength of the written consent of one of the authorities concerned. (Para 11)

When the certificate of the Director, Central Food Laboratory superseded the report of the Public Analyst the latter stands sunk to the bottom and in that place the certificate alone would remain on the surface of evidence and hence that certificate alone can be considered as for the facts stated therein regarding the sample concerned. Thus the real contention posed is whether a fresh consent of the authority concerned is required when the said certificate has taken the place of the report of the Public Analyst. (Para 12)

The certificate of the Director of the Central Food Laboratory can be brought in evidence only in the post-institutional stage of a case, whereas the report of the Public Analyst can be obtained during pre-institution stage of the prosecution. There is no scope for countenancing a situation when prosecution proceedings can be instituted with the certificate of the Director of the Central Food Laboratory. What was in evidence in the form of report of the Public Analyst stands substituted, during the evidence stage, by the certificate of the Director of Central Food Laboratory. In other words, after evidence stage commences a new document would take the place of an existing material already admitted in evidence. Thereafter no legal provision requires the case to be switched back to the pre-institution stage. (Para 19)

It is the court's function to dispatch the other part of the sample to the Director of the Central Food Laboratory. What is the need for obtaining a fresh consent when the certificate of the Director of the Central Food Laboratory has reached the court? (Paras 17 and 20)

There is no good reason for making two different categories of cases with the help of certificates issued by the Central Food Laboratory. Report of the Public Analyst alone is contemplated for instituting the prosecution and consent or sanction is necessary only for such institution, and that a post-institutional development while exercising a statutory right conferred on the accused for challenging the report of the Public Analyst during trial is not a premise for turning the key backwards for a fresh institution of the prosecution, whatever be the result of the analysis made by the Central Food Laboratory. (Para 24)

It is also not possible to countenance the contention based on Section 216(5) CrPC. What is intended by that provision is that a prosecution, which requires previous sanction, cannot be started without such sanction even by way of amending the charge midway the trial. If the amended charge includes a new offence for which previous sanction is necessary then prosecution for such new offence cannot be started without such sanction. However, the second limb of the sub-section makes it clear that if sanction was already obtained for prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge is founded then no fresh sanction is necessary. (Para 26)

The facts on which prosecution is founded under the Act were broadly that the accused had sold adulterated toor dal to the Food Inspector. Variation regarding the reasons or the data by which two different analysts had reached the conclusion that the sample is adulterated is not sufficient to hold that the basic facts on which the prosecution is founded, have been altered. Hence Section 216(5) of the Code would not improve the position of the accused for the purpose of obtaining fresh consent on the facts of this case. (Para 27)

It must, therefore, be held that if the prosecution has been validly instituted, neither any new data nor any added reasons contained in the certificate issued by the Director of the Central Food Laboratory would be sufficient to annul the sanction already obtained with which the prosecution was already instituted. The trial has to proceed with the certificate on record which superseded the report of the Public Analyst. (Para 28). Food Inspector, Ernakulam v. P.S. Sreenivasa Shenoy, (2000) 6 SCC 348: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1116: AIR 2000 SC 2577: 2000 Cri LJ 3498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-7-2000]

State of Bombay v. Parshottam Kanaiyalal, AIR 1961 SC 1: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 170; A.K. Roy v. State of Punjab, (1986) 4 SCC 326: 1986 SCC (Cri) 443, relied on

State of Gujarat v. Ambalal Maganlal, (1978) 2 FAC 53 (Guj) (DB); Prahladbhai Ambalal Patel v. State of Gujarat, (1984) 2 FAC 27: 1984 Cri LJ 1642 (Guj) (FB), approved

Rattan Lal v. State of H.P., (1989) 2 FAC 190 (HP) (FB); S.M. Anwar & Co. v. State of W.B., 1994 FAJ 592 (Cal), overruled

Sreenivasa Shenoy v. Food Inspector, (1999) 1 KLT 17, reversed

— S. 217 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 216, 217 and 465

— S. 218 See also S. 233, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1104 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 218 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 221, 215 and 218
See also Ss. 221, 218 and 215
See also Ss. 221 & 218 and 215 & 464
See also Ss. 386(b), 374(2) and 218
See also Ss. 464, 218 and 211(4)
See also Ss. 464, 218 and 223
See also Ss. 464, 218 and 228

[2677] — S. 218 — Omission to frame an independent charge — Appellant and two others charged under Ss. 302 and 201 r/w S. 34 IPC but the two accused acquitted of the charge under Ss. 302/34 IPC — Held, accused could be convicted under S. 302 IPC simpliciter even in absence of an independent charge

If, from the evidence, it is established that any one of the accused charged under Ss. 302/34 have committed the crime individually, though the other accused were acquitted, even without any independent charge under S. 302, the individual accused would be convicted under S. 302, IPC simpliciter. The omission to frame an independent charge under S. 302, IPC does not vitiate the conviction and sentence under it. (Para 10). Kishore Chand v. State of H.P., (1991) 1 SCC 286: 1991 SCC (Cri) 172: AIR 1990 SC 2140: 1990 Cri LJ 2289.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.B. Sawant and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-1990]

[2678] — Ss. 218, 464 and 465 — Misjoinder of charges — Separate charge and trial for each distinct offence not done — It is an irregularity, not an illegality and is curable under Ss. 464 and 465, provided no failure of justice is occasioned thereby — Relevant factors of ascertaining whether any failure of justice had occasioned, stated

It is true that Section 218 CrPC prescribes that for every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge and every charge shall be tried separately. Chapter XVII of the Code deals with the charge. Section 218 is under the heading — "Joinder of charges". Therefore, if joinder of charges is in contravention of procedure prescribed under Section 218, it would be misjoinder of charges which is not an illegality but an irregularity curable under Section 464 or Section 465 CrPC provided no failure of justice had occasioned thereby. To ascertain that it is the duty of the court to see whether an accused had a fair trial, whether he knew what he was being tried for, whether the main facts sought to be established against him were explained to him fairly and clearly and whether he was given a full and fair chance to defend himself. (Paras 44 and 50)

In the present case the accused was represented by a very senior and able criminal lawyer. All the prosecution witnesses were subjected to incisive cross-examination. The accused put up 49 defence witnesses. In his cross-examination under Section 313 altogether 445 questions were put to him, affording an opportunity to explain all the circumstances appearing against him. Having regard to these facts, no failure of justice had occasioned. (Para 51). Kamalanantha v. State of T.N., (2005) 5 SCC 194: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1121: AIR 2005 SC 2132.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-4-2005]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., (1955) 2 SCR 1140: AIR 1956 SC 116: 1956 Cri LJ 291, distinguished

Birichh Bhuian v. State of Bihar, 1963 Supp (2) SCR 328: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 190: AIR 1963 SC 1120; State of A.P. v. Cheemalapati Ganeswara Rao, (1964) 3 SCR 297: AIR 1963 SC 1850: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 671; R. v. Dawson, (1960) 1 All ER 558: (1960) 1 WLR 163 (CCA); State of W.B. v. Laisal Haque, (1989) 3 SCC 166: 1989 SCC (Cri) 513, relied on [2679] — S. 218 — Charge of conspiracy to commit an offence — Followed by a substantive charge in respect of said offence — Conspiracy not established — Effect of — Held, accused can be convicted in respect of substantive offence even if he is acquitted of the charge of conspiracy — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 7 and S. 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-B (Para 5). T. Shankar Prasad v. State of A.P., (2004) 3 SCC 753: 2004 SCC (Cri) 870: AIR 2004 SC 1242: (2004) 164 ELT 143: 2004 Cri LJ 884.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-2004]

Madan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 1590: 1967 Cri LJ 1401, followed [2680] — S. 218 — Conviction under S. 306 IPC on the basis of presumption under S. 113-A of Evidence Act, 1872, while charge was framed under S. 302 IPC — Legality — Held valid In absence of prejudice to the accused. Lakhjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 173: 1994 SCC (Cri) 235.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-1993]

See also Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334

[2681] — S. 218 — Joinder of charges — Joint trial for offences of kidnapping and murder under the Penal Code along with offence under S. 25 of Arms Act read with S. 5 of TADA for illegal possession of country-made pistol and a cartridge — No charge that the accused used the pistol for committing the offence of kidnapping or murder — Held, joint trial was illegal and caused prejudice to the accused — Hence conviction for offence under S. 25 of Arms Act read with S. 5, TADA, set aside — Further, conviction under S. 25 of Arms Act must also fail for want of sanction under S. 39 of the Arms Act — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 25, 27 and 39 — TADA, 1987, S. 5. Vijender v. State of Delhi, (1997) 6 SCC 171: 1997 SCC (Cri) 857.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-1997]

[2682] — Ss. 218 and 220 — Circumstantial evidence — Commission of rape and murder in a single incident — Whether charge of murder automatically falls if rape not proved — Held, there was ample evidence of murder irrespective of charge of rape — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 376

It is a rather broad argument that the primary allegations were of rape whereas murder was a secondary issue in the facts of the case and that the proof of murder would depend on proof of rape. The records show that there is very substantial evidence with regard to the allegations of murder simpliciter. (Paras 49 to 51). Santosh Kumar Singh v. State, (2010) 9 SCC 747.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-10-2010]

[2683] — S. 218 proviso — Applicability — Held, applies only in such a case where the distinct offences for which the accused is charged are being tried before the same Magistrate — In the instant case, offences were being tried before different Magistrates — Thus, proviso to S. 218, held, cannot give any single Magistrate the power to order transfer of cases to him from different Magistrates or courts (Para 6). State of Punjab v. Rajesh Syal, (2002) 8 SCC 158: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1867: AIR 2002 SC 3687.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Kirpal, K.G. Balakrishnan and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-10-2002]

— S. 219 See also S. 234, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1107 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 219 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 227, 228 and 219

[2684] — S. 219(2) — Offence under CRPF Act committed by member of Force while not on active duty — Accused charged with, and tried at one trial — Same quantum of punishment provided for all the charges — Held, there was no mistrial — Central Reserve Police Force Act, 1949, S. 9(e) to (l) read with S. 10(p). Union of India v. G. Soman Pillai, 1998 SCC (Cri) 249.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-1996]

— S. 220 See also S. 235, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1109 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 220 See Ss. 197, 220, 221, 227, 239 and 245
See also Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 215, 173, 220 and 228
See also Ss. 223 and 220
See also Ss. 482, 407 and 220

[2685] — S. 220 — Applicability — Where, in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, more than one offence is committed, held, there could be a joint trial (Para 6). State of Punjab v. Rajesh Syal, (2002) 8 SCC 158: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1867: AIR 2002 SC 3687.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Kirpal, K.G. Balakrishnan and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-10-2002]

[2686] — S. 220 — "Same transaction" — Whether series of acts are so connected together as to form the same transaction — Held, is a question of fact to be determined in the circumstances of the case having regard to the factors such as proximity of time and place and continuity of action and purpose or design — Where complaint filed before Magistrate at Bhagalpur, Bihar alleging commission of offence under Ss. 304-B/34 IPC by accused at Azamgarh, U.P. by narrating the chain of events starting from the date of marriage of the deceased with the accused, date on which complainant received telephonic message that deceased received burn injuries and ultimately the date of her death at Azamgarh, held, Magistrate at Bhagalpur cannot be said to have lacked jurisdiction to try the case as the chain of events constituted the same transaction

The father of the deceased filed an FIR at police station in Bhagalpur, Bihar pursuant to which police registered a case under Sections 304-B/34/406 IPC. He also filed a complaint at police station in Bhagalpur against deceased's husband B and four others alleging commission of offence under Sections 304-B, 498-A, 120-B and 406 IPC. In the complaint petition he narrated the chain of events starting from 9-6-1994, the date on which his daughter was married to B till 12-6-1997, the date on which he received the message that his daughter had received burn injuries, and who ultimately died on 20-6-1997. The police on completion of investigation filed the charge-sheet on 3-4-1999. Immediately after filing of the charge-sheet and before the Magistrate took up the matter and passed any order in the criminal proceeding, the accused persons approached the High Court, assailing the territorial jurisdiction of the Magistrate at Bhagalpur to try the offence under Section 304-B IPC. It was contended that under Section 177 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, an offence could be enquired into and tried by the Court in whose local jurisdiction it was committed and consequently on the basis of allegations made in the FIR as well as the complaint filed, the incident constituting the alleged offence under Section 304-B being at Jahanaganj (Azamgarh) in the State of Uttar Pradesh, the Magistrate at Bhagalpur in the State of Bihar will have no territorial jurisdiction to try the offence. The Single Judge of the High Court, while rejecting the contention based on Section 177, relied on Section 220 CrPC and considering narration of events culminating in death of the deceased which constituted offence under Section 304-B IPC, came to the conclusion that there was a continuity of action to attract Section 220(1), and therefore, it cannot be said that the jurisdiction of the Magistrate at Bhagalpur was ousted to try the offence under Section 304-B. The High Court also casually observed that the assertions made prima facie constituted an offence under Section 498-A and since the accused had approached the Court even before the Magistrate had applied his mind to the result of the investigation on the basis of the allegations made by the informant/complainant, it would not be appropriate to express any definite opinion on the same. On behalf of the accused it was argued that from the tenor of the impugned judgment, it could well be imagined that the judgment was rather a strained one and had been passed in view of the earlier directions and the incident constituting the offence under Section 304-B could not be held to be one falling under Section 220 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, so as to be tried along with the offence under Section 406 at Bhagalpur. Rejecting the contentions of the appellant and dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The expression "same transaction" from its very nature is incapable of an exact definition. It is not intended to be interpreted in any artificial or technical sense. Common sense and the ordinary use of language must decide whether on the facts of a particular case, it can be held to be one transaction. It is not possible to enunciate any comprehensive formula of universal application for the purpose of determining whether two or more acts constitute the same transaction. But the circumstances of a given case indicating proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design are the factors for deciding whether certain acts form parts of the same transaction or not. Therefore a series of acts whether are so connected together as to form the same transaction is purely a question of fact to be decided on the aforesaid criteria. (Para 4)

Bearing in mind the aforesaid principles and on scrutiny of the narration of events in the FIR as well as the complaint, it must be held that there is no infirmity in the conclusion of the High Court in applying Section 220 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the case in hand and in coming to the conclusion that the jurisdiction of the Magistrate at Bhagalpur cannot be held to have been ousted for the offence under Section 304-B IPC. (Para 4). Mohan Baitha v. State of Bihar, (2001) 4 SCC 350: 2001 SCC (Cri) 710: AIR 2001 SC 1490.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-3-2001]

[2687] — S. 220 — Single offence or separate offences — Finance companies accepting deposits from a large number of persons but not repaying the same — Criminal cases filed by depositors at different places in different States — In such cases, since parties were different, amount of deposit and the period for which the deposit was accepted, were also different, held, each individual deposit agreement constituted an independent transaction

As regards the issue of a single offence, the writ petitioners' contention cannot be accepted. Each individual deposit agreement shall have to be treated as a separate and individual transaction brought about by the allurement of the financial companies, since the parties are different, the amount of deposit is different as also the period for which the deposit was effected. It has all the characteristics of independent transactions. (Para 60). Narinderjit Singh Sahni v. Union of India, (2002) 2 SCC 210: AIR 2001 SC 3810.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, U.C. Banerjee and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2001]

[2688] — S. 220 — Trial for more than one offence — Different offences committed in a series of acts constituting one transaction — Held, S. 220 is an enabling provision and no illegality is committed where court chooses to try the offences separately — Arms Act, 1959, S. 25 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 399 and 402 — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 — Ss. 5 and 3. Mohinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1998) 7 SCC 390: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1638: AIR 1999 SC 211.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-9-1998]

[2689] — S. 220 — Applicability — Simultaneous conviction under Ss. 7 and 13(1)(d), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, held, is permissible — Principles under S. 71 IPC and S. 220 CrPC, applied — Penal Code, 1860, S. 71 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7 and 13(1)(d)

The sentences of imprisonment in the present case shall be six months under Section 7 and one year under Section 13(2) of the Act, both the sentences to run concurrently. So far as the levy of fine in addition made by the learned trial Judge with a default clause on two separate counts are concerned, they shall remain unaffected and are hereby confirmed. (Para 14). State v. A. Parthiban, (2006) 11 SCC 473: 2006 Cri LJ 4772.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-10-2006]

[2690] — S. 220(3) — Simultaneous prosecution for two offences — Act of accused in the same transaction constituting more than one offence — Accused-appellant firing at deceased and PW, causing death of the former and injuries to the latter — Act of firing at PW constituting offence under S. 307 IPC while act of firing at the deceased constituting offence under S. 302 IPC as well as under S. 27(3) of Arms Act — Held, in view of specific provi- sions of S. 220(3), the accused can be tried simultaneously for offences under S. 302 IPC as well as S. 27(3) of Arms Act (Para 11). Surendra Singh Rautela v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 266: 2002 SCC (Cri) 165: AIR 2002 SC 260: 2002 Cri LJ 555.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-11-2001]

— S. 221 See also Ss. 236 and 237, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1110 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 221 See Ss. 197, 220, 221, 227, 239 and 245

See also Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 211, 215 and 221
See also Ss. 215, 221 and 464
See also Ss. 227, 228, 216 and 221
See also Ss. 464, 216, 221 and 215
See also Ss. 464(1) and 222, 221

[2691] — S. 221 — Applicability — Condition for

The primary condition for application of Section 221 of the Code is that the court should have felt doubt, at the time of framing the charge, as to which of the several acts (which may be proved) will constitute the offence on account of the nature of the acts or series of acts alleged against the accused. In such a case the section permits to convict the accused of the offence which he is shown to have committed though he was not charged with it. But in the nature of the acts alleged by the prosecution in this case there was absolutely no scope for any doubt regarding the offence under Section 302 IPC, at least at the time of framing the charge. (Para 14). Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358: AIR 2001 SC 921.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-2001]

[2692] — Ss. 221, 215 and 218 — Omission or defect in framing of charge — Held, accused may still be convicted for offence actually committed and proved on basis of evidence on record, so long as accused has not been misled by any error or omission in framing the charge and no failure of justice has been occasioned — Accused Respondent 1 being charged under S. 304-B IPC (dowry death) and alternatively under S. 498-A IPC — Statement of charges unambiguously stating that deceased had been subjected to such cruelty and harassment "as did drive her to commit suicide" — Trial court convicting Respondent 1 under S. 498-A IPC only — Held on facts, presumption under S. 113-A, Evidence Act could be raised and Respondent 1 could be convicted under S. 306 IPC as the case had all ingredients necessary for framing charge under that section — No need to remit the matter for retrial — Accused had had enough opportunity for defence — High Court ought to have allowed appeal of appellant parents of deceased — Respondent 1 sentenced to 5 years' RI and Rs 20,000 fine under S. 306 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 306, 304-B and 498-A — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 113-A

The deceased, K, was married on 26-6-1988, to respondent-Accused 1, S, who worked as a Branch Postmaster in the village where the two lived. Dowry given at the marriage consisted of Rs 15,000 cash and jewellery worth Rs 15,000. Five acres of land and a house site were also given as a customary gift in the nature of stridhana, known as "pasupukumkuma", to the bride by her father for her maintenance. After K and Accused 1, S, had been married for about three or four months, S began demanding that K transfer the ownership of the land and house site to him. K refused and trouble between the two then began. S subjected K to harassment, including preventing delivery of letters from her father and sister to her, by taking advantage of his position in the village post office. At one point K got hold of the letters and gave them to her father. After this incident K was thrown out of the matrimonial home with a warning that she must return the letters. K, unable to bear her situation, consumed poison (an insecticide called endosulphan) on 22-10-1989, the day after she had been forced out of the house. PW 4 witnessed the scene when K was thrown out; S took her back when prevailed upon by PWs 3 and 4. PW 4 saw S taking K to hospital the next day. PW 4 informed the father of K, PW 1, who came immediately to the house and found that K was dead. PW 1 lodged an FIR within eight hours on the same day.

Accused 1 and his parents, Accused 2 and 3, were charged under Section 304-B IPC for causing the dowry death of K and in the alternative under Section 498-A IPC for cruelty and such harassment as to drive K to commit suicide.

The trial court convicted all the accused under Section 498-A IPC, acquitted them of the offence under Section 304-B, and sentenced them to 2 years' RI and fine of Rs 500 each.

A criminal revision petition was filed on behalf of the parents of the deceased against the acquittal of the accused under Section 304-B. The accused filed an appeal challenging their conviction. The revision petition was dismissed by the High Court and the judgment and order of the trial court confirmed in respect of Accused 1. The appeal of his parents was allowed and they were acquitted.

Before the Supreme Court, the State of A.P. filed a criminal appeal against the acquittal of the parents and the parents of the deceased filed criminal appeal praying for conviction of all three accused of the offence under Section 304-B.

Dismissing the State's appeal and allowing that of the parents of the deceased,

Held :

Mere omission or defect in framing the charge does not disable the criminal court from convicting the accused for the offence which is found to have been proved on the evidence on record. The Code of Criminal Procedure has ample provisions to meet a situation like the present one. From the statement of charge framed under Section 304-B and in the alternative Section 498-A IPC it is clear that all facts and ingredients for framing charge for offence under Section 306 IPC existed in the case. The mere omission on the part of the trial Judge to mention Section 306 IPC with Section 498-A IPC does not preclude the court from convicting the accused for the said offence when found proved. In the alternate charge framed under Section 498-A IPC, it has been clearly mentioned that the accused subjected the deceased to such cruelty and harassment as to drive her to commit suicide. The provisions of Section 221 CrPC take care of such a situation and safeguard the powers of the criminal court to convict an accused for an offence with which he is not charged although on facts found in evidence, he could have been charged for such an offence. (Para 22)

The provision of sub-section (2) of Section 221 read with sub-section (1) of the said section can be taken aid of in convicting and sentencing Accused 1 of offence of abetment of suicide under Section 306 IPC along with or instead of Section 498-A IPC. (Para 23)

Section 215 CrPc allows the criminal court to ignore any error in stating either the offence or the particulars required to be stated in the charge, if the accused was not, in fact, misled by such error or omission in framing the charge and it has not occasioned a failure of justice. As provided in Section 215 CrPC omission to frame charge under Section 306 IPC has not resulted in any failure of justice. There is no necessity to remit the matter to the trial court for framing charge under Section 306 IPC and direct a retrial for that charge. The accused cannot legitimately complain of any want of opportunity to defend the charge under Section 306 IPC and a consequent failure of justice. The same facts found in evidence, which justify conviction of the appellant under Section 498-A for cruel treatment of his wife, make out a case against him under Section 306 IPC of having abetted commission of suicide by the wife. The appellant was charged for an offence of higher degree causing "dowry death" under Section 304-B which is punishable with minimum sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment and maximum for life. Presumption under Section 113-A of the Evidence Act could also be raised against him on the same facts constituting the offence of cruelty under Section 498-A IPC. No further opportunity of defence is required to be granted to the appellant when he had ample opportunity to meet the charge under Section 498-A IPC. (Paras 24 and 25)

It is significant that against confirmation of his conviction by the High Court under Section 498-A IPC, Accused 1 has not preferred any special leave to appeal to this Court. The facts found proved for his conviction and sentence under Section 498-A IPC, cannot now be questioned by him. It is therefore concluded that the same facts and evidence on which Accused 1 was charged under Section 498-A and Section 304-B, the accused can be convicted and sentenced under Section 306 IPC. There is no legal or procedural impediment in doing so. (Para 26)

The legislature has by amending the Penal Code and the Evidence Act made penal law more strident for dealing with and punishing offences against married women. Such strident laws would have a deterrent effect on the offenders only if they are so stringently implemented by the law courts to achieve the legislative intent. On the facts found and the offence proved to have been committed leading to suicidal death of the wife, imprisonment of two years with fine of Rs 500 is too light a sentence. For offence under Section 306 IPC the sentence may extend to ten years. In this case the husband is found to have harassed his wife to such an extent as to drive her to commit suicide. Sentence of five years would in our opinion, be a proper sentence for the crime with the amount of fine increased to Rs 20,000 to be paid as compensation to the parents of the deceased. On non-payment of fine Accused 1 shall suffer further sentence of one year. (Para 27)

Thus Criminal Appeal No. 1457 of 1995 preferred by the parents of the deceased is allowed and the conviction and sentence of Accused 1 under Section 498-A IPC is maintained. Respondent-Accused 1 is also convicted under Section 306 IPC and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs 20,000 to be paid as compensation to the parents of the deceased. In the event of non-payment of fine, Accused 1 shall suffer imprisonment for a further period of one year. The sentences imposed under Section 498-A IPC and under Section 306 IPC shall run concurrently. (Para 28). K. Prema S. Rao v. Yadla Srinivasa Rao, (2003) 1 SCC 217: 2003 SCC (Cri) 271: AIR 2003 SC 11: 2003 Cri LJ 69.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, K.G. Balakrishnan and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-10-2002]

[2693] — Ss. 221, 222 and 462 — Absence of specific charge — Conviction — Sustainability — Held, in certain situations an accused can be convicted for an offence with which he may not have been specifically charged and that an error, omission or irregularity in the framing of charge is, by itself not sufficient for upsetting the conviction — Further held, appellate, confirming or revisional court can interfere in such matters only if it is shown that error, omission or irregularity in the framing of charge has caused prejudice to the accused and failure of justice has been occasioned (Para 21). Dinesh Seth v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 14 SCC 94.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-8-2008]

State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73: 1994 SCC (Cri) 107; Satpal v. State of Haryana, (1998) 5 SCC 687: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1372; Pyare Lal v. State of Haryana, (1997) 11 SCC 552: 1998 SCC (Cri) 197, relied on

Dinesh Seth v. State, 2003 Cri LJ 4532 (Del), affirmed

[2694] — Ss. 221, 222 and 464 — Absence of specific charge of the provision on which conviction based — Accused however charged with substance of the offence and trial proceeding on that basis — Appellant charged under S. 304-B r/w S. 34, but convicted under S. 498-A — Submission by appellant that omission of the trial court to frame specific charge under S. 498-A IPC had prejudiced him or that failure of justice had been occasioned on that count — Specific charge levelled against the accused was that they had subjected the deceased to cruelty for or in connection with demand for dowry and she had died unnatural death within seven years of her marriage — Cross-examination of PWs also unmistakably showing that the defence had made concerted effort to discredit the testimony of mother, sisters and brother of the deceased in the context of allegation of cruelty — Besides, in his statement under S. 313 of the Code, the appellant denied the allegation that he had subjected his wife to cruelty — Held, it is thus evident that the appellant was not only aware of the charge of cruelty but he got and availed the opportunity to defend himself with reference to that charge — Hence, submission of prejudice rejected — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B/34 and S. 498-A (Paras 6 and 10 to 22). Dinesh Seth v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 14 SCC 94.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-8-2008]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116; Gurbachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 623; Lakhjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 173: 1994 SCC (Cri) 235; Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1592, relied on

Sangaraboina Sreenu v. State of A.P., (1997) 5 SCC 348: 1997 SCC (Cri) 690, held, overruled

[2695] — Ss. 221 & 218 and 215 & 464 — Misjoinder of charges — Not made out when on the inference to be deduced from facts if proved it is not clear what offences they will constitute — Ss. 215 and 464, held, also applicable on facts — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/149 and 302 simpliciter

The accused 16 persons including one LH along with 26 other persons (later acquitted) were charged for rioting, causing death and hurt under Ss. 147, 302 and 324 both read with S. 149. LH was separately charged under S. 302 simpliciter for having caused the death of the sole deceased G. The Sessions Court convicted the various accused under Ss. 143, 324/249 and 147 and LH under S. 148 as well as S. 302 and acquitted the remaining 26 accused.

On appeal the High Court ordered a retrial on the ground that material defect in the framing of the charges had occasioned failure of justice. Mistrial was founded on the grounds that: (1) While all the rioters including LH had been charged under Ss. 149/302, LH alone had also been separately charged under S. 302 simpliciter 'without making that charge as an alternative charge' (2) the charge was a 'rolled up charge' in that the common object was to murder G and 'injure others'. The use of 'injure others' without specifically mentioning the injured persons made the charge vague and indefinite, and (3) the evidence had not been discussed separately under different heads of the charges framed against each of the accused persons. Hence the order for retrial. Allowing the appeal by the State and the complainant

Held :

There was no fundamental defect in the framing of the charges. It is covered by S. 221, CrPC which is an exception to S. 218. The situation is also covered by S. 215 and S. 464.

Section 221 is an exception to S. 218 of the Code viz. that for every distinct offence there should be a separate charge and every charge should be tried separately. Section 221 applies to a case only when from the evidence led by the prosecution it is doubtful which of several offences has been committed by the accused person. There must not be any doubt as to 'a single act or series of acts' which constitutes the transaction, that is to say, there must not be any doubt as to the facts. The doubt must be as to the inference to be deduced from these facts, thus making it 'doubtful' which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute.

In the present case the facts are uncontroverted and there is no doubt regarding them. On a careful consideration of the evidence adduced and the circumstances the Sessions Court came to definitive findings regarding 16 of the 42 put on trial and in particular the role of LH and convicted them accordingly.

On these facts there was complete non-application of mind on the part of the High Court and instead of considering the appeals preferred by the respondents, it has passed an order for retrial which is totally unwarranted. It was nobody's case that the accused were, in fact, misled by any error or defect in the charges framed nor has the High Court explained as to how there has been a failure of justice. The High Court was clearly in error in directing a remand for retrial of the respondents. There is no material on record on which the High Court could have reached the conclusion that the accused had been misled by any error or omission in the charge or there was failure of justice. The present case meets the test of prejudice laid down in Slaney's case.

Nor has the High Court examined the merits of the case at all. If it had done so, it could not have come to the conclusion that there was any material defect or omission in the framing of the charges or giving the particulars thereof or any failure of justice was occasioned thereby. State of W.B. v. Laisal Haque, (1989) 3 SCC 166: 1989 SCC (Cri) 513: AIR 1989 SC 129: 1989 Cri LJ 865.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-9-1988]

[2696] — Ss. 221, 218 and 215 — Absence of charge under S. 306 — Conviction thereunder — Held, permissible where sufficient material available on record to convict the accused — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 306, 498-A and 304-B — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 113-A

Though no charge was framed under Section 306 IPC, that is inconsequential. On the facts of the case, even though it is difficult to sustain the conviction under Section 304-B IPC, there is sufficient material to convict the accused-appellants in terms of Section 306 IPC along with Section 498-A IPC. (Paras 15, 16 and 17). Hira Lal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2003) 8 SCC 80: 2003 SCC (Cri) 2016: AIR 2003 SC 2865: (2003) 105 DLT 705: 2003 Cri LJ 3711.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2003]

K. Prema S. Rao v. Yadla Srinivasa Rao, (2003) 1 SCC 217: 2003 SCC (Cri) 271, followed

[2697] — Ss. 221, 218 and 215 — Suicide — Dowry death — Charges framed under Ss. 304-B and 498-A — Absence of charge under S. 306 — Effect — Held, inconsequential — On facts, father-in-law convicted under Ss. 498-A and 304-B, whereas mother-in-law convicted under S. 498-A but acquitted under S. 304-B — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 306, 304-B and 498-A (Paras 11, 9, 10 and 12). Kaliyaperumal v. State of T.N., (2004) 9 SCC 157: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1417: AIR 2003 SC 3828: 2003 Cri LJ 4321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2003]

K. Prema S. Rao v. Yadla Srinivasa Rao, (2003) 1 SCC 217: 2003 SCC (Cri) 271, followed

[2698] — Ss. 221 and 222— Conviction under S. 201 IPC despite acquittal under S. 302 IPC — Held, is permissible — But, in the present matter where the conviction of the appellant under S. 302 IPC was set aside, no case under S. 201 IPC was made out against him — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 201 and 302 (Paras 16, 22 and 23). Sukhram v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 7 SCC 502: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 426: AIR 2007 SC 3050: (2007) 57 AIC 90 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-2007]

Kalawati v. State of H.P., AIR 1953 SC 131: 1953 Cri LJ 668, relied on [2699] — Ss. 221 and 374(1) — Conviction under S. 109 IPC when no charge framed — Abetment — Held, is a distinct offence for which a charge must be framed — Where appellant was charged and convicted along with others for offences under Ss. 302/49 IPC, held, High Court in appeal erred in convicting appellant for the offence under S. 302 IPC read with S. 109 — Such an error committed by High Court necessitates appellant's acquittal — Penal Code, 1860, S. 109

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The appellant having faced trial for being a member of an unlawful assembly which achieved the common object of killing the deceased, could in no event be substitutedly convicted for offence under Section 302 IPC with the aid of Section 109 IPC. There was obviously thus not only a legal flaw but also a great prejudice to the appellant in projecting his defence. He, on such error committed by the High Court, has rightly earned his acquittal. (Para 2). Wakil Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2000) 10 SCC 500: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1499: 1999 Cri LJ 5000.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-1997]

Joseph Kurian v. State of Kerala, (1994) 6 SCC 535: 1995 SCC (Cri) 20, followed [2700] — Ss. 221 and 464(1) — Framing of charge — Omission/defect in — When material — Held, mere omission or defect in framing charge would not disable court from convicting accused for offence which has been found to be proved on basis of evidence on record — In such circumstances, matter would fall within purview of S. 221 CrPC — In instant case of bride committing suicide, there was no failure of justice, when High Court, on close scrutiny of evidence, converted conviction of appellant-accused (husband of deceased) under S. 304-B IPC to one under S. 306 IPC, even though specific charge had not been framed under S. 306 IPC — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B and 306 (Paras 22 and 23). Narwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2011) 2 SCC 47.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B. Sudershan Reddy and S.S. Nijjar, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2011]

Sangaraboina Sreenu v. State of A.P., (1997) 5 SCC 348: 1997 SCC (Cri) 690; Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358, distinguished

Lakhjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 173: 1994 SCC (Cri) 235; Town Investments Ltd. v. Deptt. of the Environment, 1978 AC 359: (1977) 2 WLR 450: (1977) 1 All ER 813 (HL), cited

[2701] — S. 221(1) — Attracted only where offence would fall under either of the alternative charges and not where offence would fall under both the charges — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 236 and 237(1). V.K. Agarwal, Asstt. Collector of Customs v. Vasantraj Bhagwanji Bhatia, (1988) 3 SCC 467: 1988 SCC (Cri) 679: AIR 1988 SC 1106: (1988) 16 ECC 164: (1988) 64 Comp Cas 664.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-1988]

[2702] — S. 221(2) — Absence of charge under S. 34 IPC — Conviction with the aid of S. 34 IPC — Legality — Accused persons charged only in respect of offences under S. 302 and S. 302 r/w S. 120-B IPC — Common intention established on facts — Held, accused could be convicted under S. 302 by applying S. 34 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 34 (Paras 10 and 11). State of A.P. v. K. Srinivasulu Reddy, (2003) 12 SCC 660: AIR 2004 SC 3305.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2003]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116: 1956 Cri LJ 291; Dhanna v. State of M.P., (1996) 10 SCC 79: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1192, followed

— S. 222 See also S. 238, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1113 in Vol. 2

— S. 222 See Ss. 211 to 224
See also Ss. 221 and 222
See also Ss. 221, 222 and 462
See also Ss. 221, 222 and 464
See also Ss. 464, 222, 215 and 216
See also Ss. 464(1) and 222, 221

[2703] — S. 222 — Conviction for lesser offence without being charged for the latter — Permissibility — If court is satisfied that accused had not committed the offence with which he was charged but committed a less serious offence, then even though accused was not charged with that offence, he can be convicted therefor

If the accused is charged for a higher offence and on the evidence led by the prosecution, the court finds that the accused has not committed that offence but is equally satisfied that he has committed a lesser offence, then he can be convicted for such lesser offence. Thus, if A is charged with an offence of committing murder of B, and the court finds that A has not committed murder as defined in Section 300 IPC but is convinced that A has committed an offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder (as defined in Section 299 IPC), there is no bar on the court in convicting A for the said offence and no grievance can be made by B against such conviction. (Para 29). Suman Sood v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 5 SCC 634: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 637: AIR 2007 SC 2774: 2007 Cri LJ 4080.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-5-2007]

[2704] — S. 222 — When offence proved included in offence charged — Charge under latter set of sections but conviction under the former set — Permissibility — A-3 charged of murder by resorting to extortion by engaging A-4 to put the property owner in fear of injury unless the property owner delivered his valuable property to a third party by executing a release deed in favour of A-3 — Prosecution failing to prove the commission of major offence of murder but succeeding in proving the commission of minor offence under Ss. 384 and 34 IPC — In such circumstances, A-3, held, guilty under Ss. 384 and 34 — Sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs 5000 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 384 & 34 and Ss. 302, 307, 120-B, 23 & 114

In the present case, the prosecution has alleged that for completing the transaction of selling the property to L, A-3 procured the services of A-4 who is shown to have put P and his brothers in fear of injury with the object of dishonestly inducing them to deliver their valuable property to L by execution of releases deeds, which were for the immediate benefit of A-3. In other words A-3 was charged for the offence of murder by resorting to extortion. The offence of extortion is a lesser offence which, under the circumstances of the case, was so connected with the main transaction that no failure of justice can be caused if A-3 is convicted and sentenced for the said offence. The offence with which A-3 was charged consisted of several particulars, the combination of some of those particulars constitute a complete minor offence of extortion. The offence of extortion in the context of the facts of the case has all the ingredients connected with the major offence. Respondent 3 was charged for an offence consisting of several particulars which the prosecution failed to prove so far as the major offence is concerned but succeeded in showing the commission of the minor offence punishable under Section 384 read with Section 34 IPC as it is proved that A-3 intentionally put P and his brothers in fear of injury and availing the services of A-4 dishonestly induced in them fear to deliver their valuable property. A-3 though not as a conspirator but sharing common intention with A-4 committed the offence of extortion. He is therefore, guilty of the offence of extortion, punishable under Section 384 read with Section 34 IPC. He is sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years with fine of Rs 5000. (Paras 57 and 64). State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Chaganlal Raghani, (2001) 9 SCC 1: AIR 2002 SC 409.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2001]

Lakhjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 173: 1994 SCC (Cri) 235, followed

See also Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334

[2705] — S. 222 — Where accused acquitted of offence of higher degree, held, he may still be convicted for lesser offence depending on actual evidence on record (Para 25). K. Prema S. Rao v. Yadla Srinivasa Rao, (2003) 1 SCC 217: 2003 SCC (Cri) 271: AIR 2003 SC 11: 2003 Cri LJ 69.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, K.G. Balakrishnan and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-10-2002]

[2706] — S. 222 — Sharp-edged weapon used — Death caused by stab injuries inflicted by knife while the co-accused had caught hold of the victim — On facts, though common intention to cause death doubtful an intention to cause grievous hurt, held, clear — Conviction altered to that under Ss. 326/34, IPC though originally charged under Ss. 302/149 and Ss. 307/149, IPC — No prejudice caused by such alteration — CrPC, 1898, S. 238. State of U.P. v. Ram Kishun, (1976) 3 SCC 449: 1976 SCC (Cri) 443: AIR 1976 SC 2016: (1976) 3 SCR 379: 1976 Cri LJ 1559.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and P.K. Goswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-1976]

[2707] — S. 222 — Appellant acquitted of the offence under Ss. 302/120-B — Whether her conviction under Ss. 302/34 proper — In view of specific finding that circumstantial evidence was not sufficient for her conviction under Ss. 302/34 question not decided — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/120-B and 302/34. Tanviben Pankajkumar Divetia v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 156: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1004: AIR 1997 SC 2193: 1997 Cri LJ 2535: (1997) 1 Guj LH 851: (1997) 2 Guj LR 1346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1997]

[2708] — S. 222 — Applicability of — Conviction where major offence not proved, but minor offence in respect of which no charge was framed is established — Accused charged only under Ss. 376/511 IPC — Said offence not made out — However, ingredients of minor offences under Ss. 366 and 354 IPC present — Held, accused could be convicted under Ss. 366 and 354 IPC by invoking S. 222 CrPC — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376/511, 366 and 354 — Charge framed under Ss. 376/511, but convicted under Ss. 366 and 354

In the instant case, the accused has been charged with Sections 376/511 IPC only. But, the offence committed does not come within the purview of offence punishable under Sections 376/511 IPC. In the absence of charge under any other section, the question now arises — whether the accused should be acquitted; or whether he should be convicted for committing any other offence pertaining to forcibly outraging the modesty of a girl. In a situation like this, Section 222 CrPC would be invoked which provides that in a case where the accused is charged with a major offence and the said charge is not proved, the accused may be convicted of the minor offence, though he was not charged with it. (Paras 23 and 36)

In the present case, the offence committed squarely covers the ingredients of Sections 366 and 354 IPC. The appellant is clearly guilty of the offences under Sections 366 and 354 IPC. (Paras 36 and 59). Tarkeshwar Sahu v. State of Bihar (Now Jharkhand), (2006) 8 SCC 560: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 556.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-2006]

Lakhjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 173: 1994 SCC (Cri) 235; Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358, relied on [2709] — Ss. 222 and 216 — Absence of charge under S. 325 IPC in murder trial — Effect — Conviction under S. 325, if sustainable — High Court finding that appellant may or may not have given the fatal blow on head of deceased and that his conviction under S. 302 IPC recorded by trial court was incorrect — Having found so, held, High Court erred in taking the view that appellant could be convicted under S. 325 and sentenced to four years' RI when there was no charge thereunder — Introduction of S. 325 IPC by High Court cannot be justified merely on ground that there was a scuffle and deceased sustained head injury — Penal Code, 1860, S. 325 (Paras 5 to 7). Ravinder Kumar v. State of H.P., (2009) 16 SCC 354.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-10-2002]

[2710] — Ss. 222 and 216 — Conviction for offence which necessarily forms a part of offence for which acquittal is recorded — Impermissibility — Acquittal under S. 148, but conviction under S. 302 r/w S. 149, in absence of charge S. 302 r/w S. 149 — Sustainability — Held, where appellants had been expressly charged under S. 148 but acquitted thereunder, they cannot legally be convicted under S. 302 r/w S. 149 because offence of rioting must occur where members are charged with murder as common object of unlawful assembly — S. 148 creates liability on persons armed with deadly weapons and is a distinct offence and it is not required that members of unlawful assembly should also be charged under S. 148 for convicting them under S. 302 r/w S. 149 — However, when accused is charged under S. 148 and acquitted, his conviction under S. 302 r/w S. 149 cannot be recorded — Penal Code, 1860, S. 148 and S. 302 r/w S. 149 (Paras 33 to 36). Mohd. Ankoos v. High Court of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 94.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-2009]

Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 302: 1966 Cri LJ 197: (1966) 1 SCR 18, followed [2711] — Ss. 222 and 216 — When offence proved included in offence charged — Conviction for — Held, a court can convert a case from major offence to minor offence, if a case for conviction under such minor offence is made out and even though he was not charged therewith — In the instant case, though charge-sheet was submitted against Appellants 1, 2 (parents of Appellant 3) and also 3 under S. 363 IPC by the police but trial court framed charges only under S. 366-A and S. 372 r/w S. 511 IPC — In appeal filed against acquittal of appellants, High Court convicting them under S. 366-A and S. 372 r/w S. 511 IPC — Ingredients of S. 363 IPC involve an act of kidnapping of any person from the lawful guardianship — S. 366-A IPC also envisages similar act of kidnapping but with the intention of committing sexual intercourse — S. 366-A IPC is a major offence whereas S. 363 IPC is a minor offence — So far as Appellants 1 and 2 are concerned no evidence was led to prove that they had any role in the kidnapping — On the other hand, testimony of prosecutrix showed that it was Appellant 3 who kept the prosecutrix confined at a place away from home for 39 long days knowing that she was a minor — But no reliable or cogent evidence led to prove that prosecutrix was kidnapped by accused persons with the intention of making her have sexual intercourse with them or with any other person, or with the intention of selling her for prostitution — No reason for prosecutrix to falsely implicate Appellant 3 — Held, in such circumstances, Appellant 3 liable to be convicted under S. 363 IPC, while Appellants 1 and 2 acquitted of all charges — Since appellants were charged under S. 366-A they knew they had to defend themselves against allegations of taking away a minor out of lawful guardianship — Appellant 3 could be convicted under S. 363, in absence of any specific charge framed thereunder — Considering the fact that incident had occurred 15 years ago, Appellant 3 sentenced to 3 years' RI — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 363, 366-A and 372 r/w S. 511 (Paras 46 to 60). Sannaia Subba Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 17 SCC 225.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-7-2008]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., AIR 1956 SC 116: (1955) 2 SCR 1140; Tarkeshwar Sahu v. State of Bihar, (2006) 8 SCC 560: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 556; Lakhjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 173: 1994 SCC (Cri) 235; Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358; State of W.B. v. Laisal Haque, (1989) 3 SCC 166: 1989 SCC (Cri) 513; Kammari Brahmaiah v. Public Prosecutor, (1999) 2 SCC 522: 1999 SCC (Cri) 281; Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1592, relied on

[2712] — S. 222 — Applicable provision — After finding the accused guilty under Ss. 376/511, even in absence of a charge under S. 376 read with S. 511, held, High Court should have convicted him under Ss. 376/511 by invoking S. 222, CrPC and not under S. 354 — Quantum of punishment — Determination of — Keeping in view the objects of 1983 amendment to S. 376, held, no person committing or attempting to commit rape should be allowed to escape punishment — Having found the accused guilty, the quantum of punishment must be decided in accordance with law without being influenced by the press, electronic media or public agitation, as a trial by such agencies is the very antithesis of rule of law — While imposing fine and apportioning the whole or part thereof to the victim, the damage caused to her and even to her family should be taken into consideration — Father of eight-year-old daughter found guilty of attempting rape on a girl aged below twelve years and also found guilty under S. 57 of Bombay Children Act — High Court, however, setting aside the conviction under Ss. 376/511 and instead convicting him under S. 354 IPC and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for the period already undergone (only 33 days) and to a fine of Rs 40,000 of which Rs 25,000 was to be apportioned to the complainant (father of the prosecutrix in this case) — High Court upholding the respondent's conviction under S. 57 of the Bombay Act but restricting the sentence thereunder to the period of imprisonment already undergone — Matter coming up before the Supreme Court 11 long years after the incident and by then the fine imposed by the High Court having already been paid by the accused and the complainant having withdrawn his share of the fine — In such circumstances while converting the conviction of the accused from one under S. 354 IPC to that under Ss. 376/511 IPC, held, a sentence of five years' RI and a fine of Rs 40,000 would meet the ends of justice — Conviction and sentence under S. 57 of Bombay Children Act, however, affirmed — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376 (as amended in 1983)/511 or 354 — Bombay Children Act, 1948 (71 of 1948), S. 57 — Law Commission Reports 42nd, 69th and 84th — Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1983

The accused-respondent was convicted by the trial court for offences under Section 376 of IPC and Section 57 of the Bombay Children Act, 1948 for having committed rape on a girl of eight years of age on 24-9-1986 and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 7 years and to pay fine of Rs 5000 and for offence under Section 57 of the Bombay Children Act he was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs 500. The substantive sentences were ordered to run concurrently. The Bombay High Court upset the conviction under Section 376 IPC and instead convicted him for an offence under Section 354 IPC and sentenced him to suffer rigorous imprisonment which he had already undergone (which was 33 days in all) and to pay fine of Rs 40,000 out of which Rs 25,000 was directed to be paid to the complainant who was the father of the girl. The conviction for the offence under Section 57 of the Bombay Children Act was upheld but the sentence was reduced to the imprisonment already undergone. Cross appeals were filed against the High Court's decision. While the State of Maharashtra filed appeal against the conviction and sentence of the accused by the High Court praying for his conviction under Section 376 IPC and for enhancement of his sentence to a minimum of 10 years, the accused filed appeal against his very conviction and sentence under Section 354 IPC and Section 57 of the Bombay Children Act. On the question of sentence under Sections 376/511, IPC, the accused-respondent contended that when the offence was committed the accused had also a daughter of 8 years of age and that a long time had elapsed since the offence was committed and that in terms of the judgment of the High Court the accused had already deposited Rs 40,000 out of which Rs 25,000 had already been withdrawn by the father of the prosecutrix. It was submitted that if the Court came to the conclusion that the sentence had to be enhanced then only the amount of fine could be raised. Dismissing the respondent's appeal and partly allowing the State's appeal

Held :

The circumstances of the case show that the accused intended to commit rape on the girl. In the commission of that crime, he laid the girl on the seat in the Maruti car and then laid himself over her. He pulled down her knickers and also opened the zip of his pants and took out his male organ. He pressed his male organ on the private parts of the girl. But since he discharged, he could not penetrate and was unable to complete the offence of rape. However, it is clear that he did attempt to commit rape.

The High Court after having come to the conclusion that the accused was guilty of an offence under Sections 376/511 of the IPC could not have convicted the accused for an offence under Section 354 IPC. Section 511 IPC provides punishment for attempting to commit offences punishable with imprisonment for life or other imprisonment. In the instant case since the girl was under 12 years of age and the Sessions Judge having found that offence of rape had been committed could not have awarded sentence of 7 years when the law prescribes minimum sentence of rigorous imprisonment for a term not less than 10 years, unless exceptional circumstances existed. However, the State of the complainant did not come up in appeal in the High Court for enhancement of the sentence. Though there was no charge under Section 376 read with Section 511 IPC, under Section 222 CrPC when a person is charged for an offence he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence although the attempt is not separately charged.

The respondent's plea that in case the court took a decision to enhance the sentence the amount of fine could be raised, cannot be accepted. A heinous crime has been committed and the accused must suffer for the consequences. A rapist not only violates the victim's personal integrity but leaves indelible marks on the very soul of the helpless female. The girl of 8 years must have undergone a traumatic experience. Despite the 11 year long lapse of time after the offence, keeping the objects of the 1983 amendment to Section 376 of IPC in view, the law as it exists now and the decisions of the Supreme Court on the question of sentence, the message is loud and clear that no person who commits or attempts to commit rape shall escape punishment.

Considering the whole aspect of the matter, it has to be held that a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs 40,000 will meet the ends of justice. The fine has already been paid, out of that Rs 25,000 has been withdrawn by the father of the girl as per direction of the High Court which is upheld. The conviction of the accused-respondent is converted from one under Section 354 IPC to that under Sections 376/511 IPC and he is sentenced as aforesaid. The conviction and sentence of the accused under Section 57 of the Bombay Children Act as ordered by the High Court shall, however, stand. The sentences shall run concurrently. State of Maharashtra v. Rajendra Jawanmal Gandhi, (1997) 8 SCC 386: AIR 1997 SC 3986.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-9-1997]

[2713] — S. 222 — Applicability — Conviction for attempt to commit offence although attempt not separately charged — Maintainability — Held, settled legal position is that if accused is charged of a major offence, but is not found guilty thereunder, he can be convicted of minor offence, if facts established indicate that such minor offence was committed — When a person is charged for an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence, although attempt is not separately charged — In the instant case, if it appeared to Court that S. 376 IPC was not applicable but a lesser offence under S. 376 r/w S. 511 IPC was made out, the Court was not prevented from taking recourse to and punishing accused for commission of such lesser offence — Penal Code, 1860, S. 511 (Paras 17, 18 and 20). Pandharinath v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 14 SCC 537: (2009) 80 AIC 240 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. M.K. Sharma and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-7-2009]

State of Maharashtra v. Rajendra Jawanmal Gandhi, (1997) 8 SCC 386: 1998 SCC (Cri)) 76; Tarkeshwar Sahu v. State of Bihar, (2006) 8 SCC 560: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 556; Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358, relied on [2714] — S. 222 — Appellant charged under S. 302 IPC and an alternative charge under S. 306 IPC also framed against him — Trial judge convicting him under S. 302 but no finding in respect of charge under S. 306 recorded resulting in his acquittal under S. 306 — No appeal filed by the State against acquittal under S. 306 — High Court acquitting the appellant of charge under S. 302 but convicting him under S. 306 — Held, offence under S. 306 being not a minor offence in relation to S. 302 within the meaning of S. 222 CrPC, High Court not justified in convicting the appellant under S. 306 after having acquitted him of the charge under S. 302 — However, finding of the High Court that the deceased committed suicide found to be proper and, therefore, the appellant cannot be convicted under S. 302 — S. 304-B squarely applies to the facts of the case but since the incident took place prior to introduction of that section accused could not be convicted under S. 304-B also — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 306 and 304-B. Lokendra Singh v. State of M.P., 1999 SCC (Cri) 371.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1998]

Sangaraboina Sreenu v. State of A.P., (1997) 5 SCC 348: 1997 SCC (Cri) 690: 1997 Cri LJ 3955, followed

Impliedly overruled by Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334*

[2715] — S. 222 — Accused charged for substantive offences under IPC and Abkari Act — He cannot be convicted for abetment of those offences by employing S. 109 IPC — Penal Code, 1860, S. 109

Section 109 IPC is by itself an offence though punishable in the context of other offences. The accused suffered a trial for substantive offences under the Penal Code and Abkari Act. When his direct involvement in these crimes could not be established, it is difficult to uphold the view of the High Court that he could lopsidedly be taken to have answered the charge of abetment and convicted on that basis. There would, as is plain, be serious miscarriage of justice to the accused in causing great prejudice to his defence. The roles of the perpetrator and abettor of the crime are distinct, standing apart from each other. The High Court was thus in error in employing S. 109 IPC to hold the accused guilty. Joseph Kurian v. State of Kerala, (1994) 6 SCC 535: 1995 SCC (Cri) 20: AIR 1995 SC 4.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-10-1994]

[2716] — S. 222 — Accused persons charged with an offence under S. 4 of Explosive Substances Act, 1908 — They can be convicted and punished for a lesser offence under S. 5 of that Act if the ingredients constituting that offence are established — Explosive Substances Act, 1908, Ss. 4 and 5. State of T.N. v. Sivarasan, (1997) 1 SCC 682: 1997 SCC (Cri) 362.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-10-1996]

[2717] — S. 222 — Appellant charged and tried under S. 302 IPC — Conviction under S. 306 since it was the minor offence in relation to offence under S. 302 IPC — Held, is illegal — Basic constituents of the two offences are of distinct and different categories — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302

Section 306 IPC cannot be said to be a minor offence in relation to an offence under Section 302 IPC within the meaning of Section 222 CrPC for the two offences are of distinct and different categories. While the basic constituent of an offence under Section 302 IPC is homicidal death, those of Section 306 IPC are suicidal death and abetment thereof. Sangaraboina Sreenu v. State of A.P., (1997) 5 SCC 348: 1997 SCC (Cri) 690: AIR 1997 SC 3233.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-4-1997]

Overruled in Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334

[2718] — S. 222 — Applicability of — Conviction of accused under Ss. 304-B and 498-A r/w S. 34 IPC though he was charged only under S. 201 r/w S. 34 IPC — Permissibility of — Held, since the offences under Ss. 304-B and 498-A IPC were not minor offences in relation to that under S. 201 IPC and all the said three offences were distinct and belonged to different categories, S. 222 CrPC had no application in present case — Hence, the said conviction was not permissible — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B, 498-A and 201 r/w S. 34 — Conviction of accused under Ss. 304-B and 498-A r/w S. 34 IPC though he was charged only under S. 201 r/w S. 34 IPC — Permissibility of

The only charge framed against A-2 was for an offence punishable under Section 201 read with Section 34 IPC. True that Section 222 CrPC clothes the court with the power to convict a person of an offence which is minor in comparison to the one for which he is charged and tried, but by no stretch of imagination, offences under Sections 304-B and 498-A IPC, under which appellant A-2 was convicted by the trial court, could be said to be minor offences in relation to that under Section 201 IPC, for which he was charged. In fact, the three offences are distinct and belong to different categories. The ingredients of the offences under the said sections are vastly different. Therefore, Section 222 CrPC had no application to the facts in hand. (Para 14). Sukhram v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 7 SCC 502: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 426: AIR 2007 SC 3050: (2007) 57 AIC 90 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-2007]

[2719] — Ss. 222 and 216 — Power of Supreme Court to itself frame charge instead of remanding the case for retrial — Accused charge-sheeted under Ss. 498-A, 302 and 120-B IPC — But the trial court framing charge only under S. 302 IPC — Accused acquitted — Evidence on record clearly attracting charge under S. 498-A IPC — Held, in the circumstances of the case, the Supreme Court can itself examine the question of culpability of the accused for offence under the said section so as to obviate protraction of trial and multiplicity of proceedings against the accused — Constitution of India, Art. 142. Balram Prasad Agrawal v. State of Bihar, (1997) 9 SCC 338: 1997 SCC (Cri) 612: AIR 1997 SC 1830: 1997 Cri LJ 1640.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-12-1996]

[2720] — Ss. 222 and 39 — Conviction without charge for minor offence — Habeas corpus — Maintainability — Petition for habeas corpus filed after dismissal of criminal appeal, review petition and curative petition — Petitioner's plea that the Supreme Court allowed his appeal to the extent that his conviction under S. 121 IPC was set aside, but he was convicted under S. 123 IPC read with S. 39 CrPC, though this was not the charge against him, and therefore he was deprived of opportunity to defend himself — Held, this aspect had been considered while dismissing review and curative petitions — Entertaining a fresh petition under Art. 32 on the same ground would require setting aside the orders passed in review and curative petitions — This was not permissible — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. 40 R. 1 — CPC, 1908, Or. 47 R. 1 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 121 and 123

The contention raised by the petitioner that his conviction under Section 123 IPC without there being any charge framed tantamounts to grave miscarriage of justice and is contrary to the principles of natural justice, has already been rejected in the review petition. Thereafter, a curative petition which was placed in chambers by circulation before three seniormost Judges and one Judge who was a member of the Bench which initially delivered judgment (the other Judge of the Bench) and after due consideration, the curative petition was also rejected. In the curative petition also, a specific ground was raised by the petitioner that there was violation of principles of natural justice and manifest injustice was caused to him because he had not been given opportunity to defend himself for an offence under Section 123 IPC for which the charge had not been framed. By rejection of his curative petition, the contention so raised by the petitioner has also been rejected. (Para 24)

In the facts and circumstances of the case, there is no ground to entertain petition under Article 32 of the Constitution. Moreover, for granting relief prayed for by the petitioner for entertaining the present writ petition it is necessary to set aside judgment delivered by a Division Bench of the Supreme Court confirmed by dismissal of the review petition as also of the curative petition, which cannot be granted as not being permissible in exercise of the powers under Article 32 of the Constitution. (Para 25). Shaukat Hussain Guru v. State, (2008) 6 SCC 776: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 137: AIR 2008 SC 2419: 2008 Cri LJ 3016.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.P. Naolekar and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-5-2008]

[2721] — S. 222(2) — "Minor offence" — Meaning — Where main ingredients of two cognate offences are common, one punishable with lesser sentence can be said to be minor offence — Ingredients of S. 304-B IPC being different from those of S. 302 IPC, the former cannot be regarded as minor offence

Although the expression "a minor offence" under Section 222 CrPC is not defined in the Code it can be discerned from the context that the test of minor offence is not merely that the prescribed punishment is less than the major offence. The two illustrations provided in the section would bring the above point home well. Only if the two offences are cognate offences, wherein the main ingredients are common, the one punishable among them with a lesser sentence can be regarded as minor offence vis-à-vis the other offence. The composition of the offence under Section 304-B IPC is vastly different from the formation of the offence of murder under Section 302 IPC and hence the former cannot be regarded as minor offence vis-à-vis the latter. However, the position would be different when the charge also contains the offence under Section 498-A IPC. (Paras 16 and 17). Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358: AIR 2001 SC 921.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-2001]

See now (2004) 5 SCC 334

[2722] — Ss. 222(2) & 464 and 313 — S. 113-A, Evidence Act, 1872 — Appellant-accused charged only under S. 302, but convicted by the High Court in terms of S. 306 — Sustainability — Further submission that the offence was committed on 7-10-1982 when the provision i.e. S. 113-A was not in the statute-book — In view of conflicting two-Judge Bench decisions given in Sangaraboina Sreenu case, (1997) 5 SCC 348 and Lakhjit Singh case, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 173 matter was referred to a three-Judge Bench decision in Dalbir Singh case, (2004) 5 SCC 334, which held that in view of S. 464 CrPC, it was possible for the appellate or revisional court to convict an accused for an offence for which no charge was framed, unless the court was of the opinion that a failure of justice would occasion because the accused was not aware of the basic ingredients of offence for which he was convicted, or the main facts sought to be established against him were not explained to him clearly and he had no fair chance to defend himself — In the instant case, circumstances relatable to S. 306 IPC were clearly put to the appellant during his examination under S. 313 CrPC — Incriminating materials relating to torture, harassment and demand of dowry were specifically brought to the notice of the appellant during such examination — Only one witness was examined by the appellant to prove that the deceased had committed suicide who specifically stated that the appellant's father had asked him to inform PW 2 that the deceased had committed suicide and accordingly he had informed PW 2 — Even in absence of presumption under S. 113-A Evidence Act, prosecution version was specific to the extent that the deceased was being taunted by the appellant for not bringing adequate dowry and/or being of dark complexion — Humiliation and harassment meted out was described by the deceased when she had gone to her maternal uncle's house — Evidence of PW 1, who was a neighbour of the accused-appellant clearly showed that the appellant used to beat his wife i.e. the deceased and on the night of occurrence, when he was sitting on his rooftop he had heard cries of the deceased being beaten, went to the house of the appellant but was turned away by the appellant who said that it was their internal affair and he should mind his own business — To similar effect was the evidence of PW 4, another neighbour — Many major injuries on different parts of body including one mark on the neck were found by the doctor who conducted autopsy — Therefore, as rightly contended by the respondent State, even without reference to S. 113-A of the Evidence Act the prosecution version has been established — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 or S. 306 (Paras 10 to 16). Virendra Kumar v. State of U.P., (2007) 9 SCC 211: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 120: (2007) 51 AIC 81 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1435: (2007) 2 All LJ 687.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-2007]

Dalbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 5 SCC 334: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1592, relied on

— S. 223 See also S. 239, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1114 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 223 See Ss. 190(1), 209, 216 and 223
See also Ss. 210 and 223
See also Ss. 211, 213, 214, 216 and 223
See also Ss. 211 and 223
See also Ss. 211 and 224
See also Ss. 229, 241 and 223
See also Ss. 464, 218 and 223

[2723] — S. 223 — Amalgamation of cases — Denial of — Large number of common witnesses and documents in all cases — Relief — Liberty granted to accused-appellants to apply to the trial court to read the evidence of one case in other cases also

In support of the plea of amalgamation of cases, the accused-appellants submitted that (i) in all the six cases against them there would be same witnesses (58 in number) and same documents (approximately 100 documents), and (ii) if these witnesses were to depose separately in all the six cases, there was a strong possibility of their evidence being different and of there being a conflict of decisions. It was also submitted that the appellants would have to hear the evidence of the same witnesses in six trials.

Rejecting the prayer for amalgamation of cases, Held :

It had been complained that the appellants would be forced to hear the same evidence 5 or 6 times. If the appellants or any of them feel aggrieved by this and if they so desire, they may apply to the Special Judges that evidence recorded in one case and documents marked as an exhibit in one case be used as evidence in other cases also. This would obviate their having to hear the same evidence in 5 or 6 different cases. (Para 14). Lalu Prasad v. State, (2003) 11 SCC 786: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1244: AIR 2003 SC 3838.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.N. Variava, P. Venkatarama Reddi and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-2003]

[2724] — S. 223 — Amalgamation of cases — Power of Magistrate in respect of — Held, is discretionary — He has to be satisfied that persons would not be prejudicially affected and that it is expedient to amalgamate cases (Para 10). Lalu Prasad v. State, (2003) 11 SCC 786: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1244: AIR 2003 SC 3838.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.N. Variava, P. Venkatarama Reddi and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-2003]

[2725] — S. 223 — Amalgamation of cases — Prayer in respect of, not made by all accused — Affidavit of consent, for joint trial, by all accused in all cases — Filing of, before the Supreme Court — Held, could not be allowed — Such consent had to be obtained before the application for amalgamation was made — Then it was for the trial court to consider the question regarding the joint trial of all the accused persons

The Supreme Court in the instant appeals was concerned with amalgamation of six cases (relating to famous Animal Husbandry Scam) pending before the Special Courts in the State of Jharkhand. Earlier these cases were before the Special Judge at Patna. An application for joint trial of two of these cases was moved when these two cases were pending before the Special Judge, Patna. The said application was rejected by the Special Judge, Patna. The Patna High Court, vide its judgment in Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2000) 3 Pat LJR 357, rejected the criminal petitions filed under Section 482 CrPC against the said order. The present appeals were filed against the order of the Jharkhand High Court dismissing the writ petitions (criminal) and a criminal miscellaneous petition filed before it for amalgamation of the cases. The appellants submitted that even though the petitions were dismissed by the Patna High Court, it had been held that there was a single conspiracy. It was submitted that the application for amalgamation was filed pursuant to the liberty granted by the Patna High Court while dismissing the petitions.

Held :

The High Court has also correctly held that it is the trial court which would have to consider the stand of other accused persons who have not prayed for joint trial. It is to be seen that apart from the appellants there are a large number of other accused persons. Most of the other accused persons have not applied for joint trial. The Supreme Court does not know what their stand is. When this was pointed out to the counsel for the appellants, it was stated that affidavit of consent, for joint trial, by all the accused in all the cases would be filed before the Supreme Court. But this is not the stage when such affidavits could be filed. The consent had to be obtained before the application for amalgamation was made. It was for the Special Judge to consider whether it was expedient and in the interest of justice that all accused persons, in all the cases, be tried jointly. It is neither expedient nor proper that the appellants be permitted to bypass the trial court in this manner. (Para 10)

That apart, the charge of conspiracy is only an allied charge and the main charges (under the Prevention of Corruption Act) are in respect of separate and distinct acts i.e. monies siphoned out of different treasuries at different times. Hence, these cases could not be amalgamated. (Para 11). Lalu Prasad v. State, (2003) 11 SCC 786: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1244: AIR 2003 SC 3838.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.N. Variava, P. Venkatarama Reddi and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-2003]

Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2000) 3 Pat LJR 357, considered and explained

CBI v. Braj Bhushan Prasad, (2001) 9 SCC 432: 2002 SCC (Cri) 576, followed

Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2000) 3 Pat LJR 357; Lalu Prasad @ Lalu Prasad Yadav v. State through CBI, 2003 Cri LJ 610, approved

Kadiri Kunhahammad v. State of Madras, AIR 1960 SC 661: 1960 Cri LJ 1011; Babulal Chaukhani v. King Emperor, AIR 1938 PC 130: 39 Cri LJ 452; S. Swamirathnam v. State of Madras, AIR 1957 SC 340: 1957 Cri LJ 422; Mohan Baitha v. State of Bihar, (2001) 4 SCC 350: 2001 SCC (Cri) 710; Balbir v. State of Haryana, (2001) 1 SCC 285: 2000 SCC (Cri) 160; State of Bihar v. Ranchi Zila Samta Party, (1996) 3 SCC 682, distinguished [2726] — S. 223 — Animal Husbandry Scam — Amalgamation of six cases sought by accused-appellants on the plea that there was one conspiracy — Charges under the Prevention of Corruption Act and of the offence of conspiracy to defraud the Government exchequer of large sums of money — No finding by High Court that there was a single conspiracy — High Court rightly held that the said question could not be decided unless all the cases reach the stage of framing of charges — Three cases were still at the appearance stage — Further, all the accused in all the said cases did not apply for joint trial — That apart, charge of conspiracy was only an allied charge — The main charges (under the Prevention of Corruption Act) were in respect of separate and distinct acts i.e. monies siphoned out of different treasuries at different times — In view of the above reasons, held, the said cases could not be amalgamated. Lalu Prasad v. State, (2003) 11 SCC 786: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1244: AIR 2003 SC 3838.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.N. Variava, P. Venkatarama Reddi and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-2003]

[2727] — S. 223 — An accused cannot demand as a right his trial with co-accused. A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1988]

[2728] — S. 223 — Clubbing and consolidating two cases, one on a police challan and the other on a complaint, not permissible under, if the prosecution versions in the two cases are materially different, contradictory and mutually exclusive — Such cases ordered to be tried together but not consolidated i.e., evidence be recorded separately in both the cases and they be disposed of simultaneously — Art. 20(2) of the Constitution or S. 300, Criminal Procedure Code would not be infringed thereby. Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1985) 1 SCC 422: 1985 SCC (Cri) 93: AIR 1985 SC 404.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-12-1984]

[2729] — S. 223 — Persons who may be charged jointly — Prosecution of State officials in pick-and-choose manner — A few who held office only for short periods or who had retired before process of impugned decision-making began, proceeded against — A few others connected with impugned decision of the Department, left out — Discrimination so made, deprecated — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 13(1)(d)(ii)-(iii) — Constitution of India, Arts. 14 and 21 (Para 49). State of M.P. v. Sheetla Sahai, (2009) 8 SCC 617: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 901.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2009]

[2730] — Ss. 223 and 220 — Applicability of, to trial under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Jurisdiction of Special Judge — Appellant not charged under PC Act, but under Ss. 420 and 120-B/420 IPC — Whether Special Judge had jurisdiction to try appellant along with the two co-accused who, in addition to the said sections, were also charged under PC Act — Applying the provisions of Ss. 3 and 4 of the Act and Ss. 220 and 223 CrPC, held, in the facts and circumstances of the case, appellant and his co-accused could be tried by the Special Judge in the same trial — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 4 and 3(1)

The provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure apply to trials under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 subject to certain modifications as contained in Section 22 of the Act and their exclusion either express or by necessary implication. Section 223 CrPC has not been excluded either expressly or by necessary implication nor has the same been modified in their application to trials under the Act. The said provision therefore is applicable to the trial of an offence punishable under the Act. (Paras 12 and 13)

A Special Judge is not precluded altogether from trying any other offence, other than offences specified in Section 3 thereof. A person charged of an offence under the Act may in view of sub-section (3) of Section 4 be charged at the same trial of any offence under any other law with which he may, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, be charged at the same trial. Thus a public servant who is charged of an offence under the provisions of the Act may be charged by the Special Judge at the same trial of any offence under IPC if the same is committed in a manner contemplated by Section 220 of the Code. (Para 13)

Since sub-section (3) of Section 4 of the Act authorizes a Special Judge to try any offence other than an offence specified in Section 3 of the Act to which the provisions of Section 220 CrPC apply, there is no reason why the provisions of Section 223 of the Code should not apply to such a case. Section 223 in clear terms provides that persons accused of the same offence committed in the course of the same transaction, or persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction may be charged and tried together. (Para 14)

All the three accused, including the appellant, have been charged of the offence under Section 120-B read with Section 420 IPC. If the Special Judge has jurisdiction to try the co-accused for the offence under Section 120-B read with Section 420 IPC, the provisions of Section 223 are attracted. Therefore, it follows that the appellant who is also charged of having committed the same offence in the course of the same transaction may also be tried with them. Otherwise it appears rather incongruous that some of the conspirators charged of having committed the same offence may be tried by the Special Judge while the remaining conspirators who are also charged of the same offence will be tried by another court, because they are not charged of any offence specified in Section 3 of the Act. (Para 15)

Thus, in the facts and circumstances of this case, the Special Judge while trying the co-accused of an offence punishable under the provisions of the Act as also an offence punishable under Section 120-B read with Section 420 IPC has the jurisdiction to try the appellant also for the offence punishable under Section 120-B read with Section 420 IPC applying the principles incorporated in Section 223 of the Code. (Para 17). Vivek Gupta v. CBI, (2003) 8 SCC 628.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-9-2003]

Kadiri Kunhahammad v. State of Madras, AIR 1960 SC 661: 1960 Cri LJ 1013, relied on [2731] — Ss. 223 and 220 — Misjoinder of accused — Appellants 1 and 2 charged of conspiracy by retracting their earlier statements before officers of Enforcement Department regarding receipt of money and by giving false statements before ITO retracting their statements made before the Enforcement Officers but appellant 3 who claimed ownership of the money charged of conspiracy with appellants 1 and 2 to cause false entries in account books of a company and to wilfully make false statement before ITO — Courts below clubbing all the allegations against all the appellants together and considering the same as if all offences committed in the course of the same transaction of conspiracy — Putting appellant 3 in a joint trial with appellants 1 and 2 for conspiracy without any specific allegation or acceptable evidence to connect appellant 3 with the activities of appellants 1 and 2, held, amounted to misjoinder of charges which includes misjoinder of parties — This was not a mere irregularity but resulted in failure of justice in the facts and circumstances of the case. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178: 1992 SCC (Cri) 572: AIR 1992 SC 1831: 1992 Cri LJ 2781: (1992) 197 ITR 196: (1992) 75 Comp Cas 321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1992]

[2732] — Ss. 223 and 228(1) — Direction made by Sessions Court for separate trial of three of the accused by the Chief Judicial Magistrate — Propriety — Some evidence in trial against the said three accused was likely to be common in the trial of the other accused, who were charged before the Sessions Court — Likelihood of prejudice to the prosecution's case, if the trials were held separately — On facts, no prejudice was likely to be caused to the above three accused if they were tried by the Sessions Court — Further, S. 228(1) not applicable to the present case — Held, the aforesaid direction was not proper — The said three accused be tried by the Sessions Court (Paras 3 and 4). State of Kerala v. Ayyappan, (2006) 13 SCC 320: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 672.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-8-2005]

[2733] — Ss. 223(a) and (d) — Joint trial — Offence committed "in the course of same transaction" — Test to determine — There must be commonality of purpose or design and continuity of action — Where in connection with murder of one person, two different cases were put before Sessions Court, one pursuant to police investigation and the other pursuant to a private complaint accusing two different persons as perpetrators of the crime, held, the offence alleged in the two cases cannot be said to have been committed "in the course of the same transaction" and hence the same Sessions Judge should try the two cases separately one after the other and judgments should be pronounced separately — If more than one Public Prosecutor available, the two cases should be prosecuted by two different Public Prosecutors

The deceased was shot at near a bus-stand. He was removed in an injured condition by his nephew (PW 4) and his uncle (PW 5) to hospital where he was pronounced dead. PW 4 then proceeded to the police station and launched the complaint accusing the present appellant and his brother as the persons who shot the deceased. The police registered an FIR on the strength of that complaint against the above two persons as accused. PW 7 Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police held the inquest on the dead body of the deceased on the same day. During the investigation, however, the appellant was found to be not the culprit and instead one 19-year-old youngster G was found to have shot at the deceased. G was arrested and on the strength of a statement elicited from him a country-made pistol, a used cartridge and a live cartridge were recovered from beneath the heap of fodder grain stocked in his house. G was finally charge-sheeted by the police and eventually that case was committed to the Court of Session. PW 4 filed a complaint before the Magistrate on the allegation that the real culprits of the deceased's murder were the appellant and his brother and that the police investigation was totally misdirected due to the influence of the real culprits. The Magistrate, on receipt of the complaint, proceeded therewith and eventually committed that case also to the Court of Session. Two separate trials, one against G and another against the appellant and his brother were conducted before the same Court of Additional Sessions Judge. The said Sessions Judge pronounced separate judgments acquitting G and convicting the appellant under Section 302 IPC (the appellant's brother was, however, acquitted). No appeal was filed against the acquittal of G and hence the Division Bench of the High Court heard the appeal filed by the appellant alone. The Bench confirmed the conviction and sentence passed on him and dismissed his appeal. Hence, the present appeal by special leave. The first point sought to be considered was whether the two sessions cases should have been tried separately (as is done in the present case) or whether they should have been jointly tried. Second point was whether on the facts of the case the trial court and the High Court were justified in convicting the appellant. Allowing the appeal and acquitting the appellant

Held :

In both clauses (a) and (d) of Section 223 CrPC the primary condition is that persons should have been accused either of the same offence or of different offences "committed in the course of the same transaction". The expression advisedly used is "in the course of the same transaction". That expression is not akin to saying "in respect of the same subject-matter". For several offences to be part of the same transaction, the test which has to be applied is whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose or of cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary, so as to result in one continuous action. Thus, where there is a commonality of purpose or design, where there is a continuity of action, then all those persons involved can be accused of the same or different offences "committed in the course of the same transaction". But if in one case the accused is alleged to have killed a person without any junction with the accused in the other case, then it cannot be treated as the same offence or even different offences "committed in the course of the same transaction". If such two diametrically opposite versions are put to joint trial the confusion which it can cause in the trial would be incalculable. It would then be a mess and then there would be no scope for a fair trial. Hence the attempt to bring the two cases under the umbrella of Section 233 of the Code has only to be foiled as untenable. (Paras 11 to 13)

In the present case the police version and the private complainant's version are diametrically divergent without anything in common except that the murdered person was the same. In such cases the most appropriate procedure to be followed by a

Sessions Judge should be the same as followed in the present case i.e. the two trials were separately conducted one after the other by the same court before the same Judge and judgments in both cases were separately pronounced on the same day. No doubt the Sessions Judge should take care that he would confine his judgment in one case only to the evidence adduced in that particular case. If more than one Public Prosecutor are available at the same station it is advisable that the Public Prosecutor who prosecuted one case should avoid prosecuting the other case. (Para 16). Balbir v. State of Haryana, (2000) 1 SCC 285: 2000 SCC (Cri) 160: AIR 2000 SC 11: 2000 Cri LJ 169.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, A.P. Misra and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-10-1999]

State of A.P. v. Cheemalapati Ganeswara Rao, AIR 1963 SC 1850: (1964) 3 SCR 297; Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1985) 1 SCC 422: 1985 SCC (Cri) 93, relied on

See also 1994 Supp (1) SCC 183

— S. 223(d) See S. 223(a) and (d)

— S. 224 See also S. 240, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1116 in Vol. 2

— S. 224 See Ss. 211 to 224

[2734] — Ch. XVIII (Ss. 225 to 237) and S. 465 — Sessions Court, even after being specified as Special Court under the SC and ST Act, 1989, would continue to be a Sessions Court and trial before that Court can be held only in accordance with the provisions of Ch. XVIII CrPC — Where respondent was charge-sheeted for offences under S. 376 IPC and S.3 of the Act and Magistrate committed the case to Sessions Court which was specified as a Special Court under the Act but that Court framed a charge only for offence under S. 376 IPC and after trial convicted the respondent under S. 376 IPC and sentenced him to 10 years' imprisonment, held, High Court erred in setting aside the conviction and sentence only on the technical ground that the trial court had no jurisdiction as he was only a Special Court specified under the Act, more so when no objection in that regard had been raised at any earlier stage of the proceedings — Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, Ss. 14, 2(1)(d) & 3

Even after specification of a Sessions Court as a Special Court under the Act the Sessions Court would continue to be the Sessions Court and a trial before that Court can be held only in accordance with the provisions contained in Chapter XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Sessions Court which tried the case for the offence under Section 376 IPC continued to have jurisdiction to try the same, and the order of committal was legally valid. The appeal filed before the High Court could only be disposed of on merits. The High Court has not considered the appeal on merits. The fallout of the view taken by the High Court in this case would be that all the witnesses once examined in full should be called back again, and the whole chief-examination, cross-examination, re-examination and questioning of the accused under Section 313 of the Code, hearing arguments, then examination of defence witnesses further, again final arguments to be heard and preparation of judgment be done once again. The very object underlined in Section 465 of the Code is that if on any technical ground any party to the criminal proceedings is aggrieved he must raise the objection thereof at the earliest stage. If he did not raise it at the earliest stage he cannot be heard on that aspect after the whole trial is over. Therefore, the impugned judgment of the High Court is set aside and the case is remitted back to the High Court for disposal of the appeal afresh on merits. (Paras 5, 7 and 6). State of H.P. v. Gita Ram, (2000) 7 SCC 452: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1390: AIR 2000 SC 2940.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2000]

Gangula Ashok v. State of A.P., (2000) 2 SCC 504: 2000 SCC (Cri) 488, followed

— S. 225 See Ss. 24 and 225

See also Ss. 24, 225 and 321

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 226, 231 and 225

See also Ss. 301, 302 and 225 & 24

See also Ss. 311 and 225

See also Ss. 406 and 386(1), 24 and 225

See also Ss. 406, 432(7), 385(1), 225, 2(u), 24 and 378

See also Ss. 482, 190, 301, 302 & 225

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2735] — S. 225 — Informant if can assist Public Prosecutor — Public Prosecutor — Assistance to — An informant may assist the Public Prosecutor but he cannot, as of right, claim to pursue the trial in case of murder — If in the present case certain materials are brought to the notice of the Public Prosecutor which will unravel the truth, Public Prosecutor will take the same into consideration and act according to law. Abhilasha v. State of Rajasthan, (2000) 10 SCC 237.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1999]

— S. 226 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 & 226 and 482

See also Ss. 313, 229, 228 and 226

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2736] — S. 226 — Opening of case by Public Prosecutor (PP) — PP can either state before the court that certain witnesses were not likely to support prosecution case or he may obtain direct information about what they might speak in court and if their version is not in favour of the prosecution, PP cannot be compelled to examine them for the prosecution

In trials before a Court of Session, the prosecution "shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor". Section 226 CrPC enjoins on him to open up his case by describing the charge brought against the accused. He has to state what evidence he proposes to adduce for proving the guilt of the accused. If he knew at that stage itself that certain persons cited by the investigating agency as witnesses might not support the prosecution case he is at liberty to state before the court that fact. Alternatively, he can wait further and obtain direct information about the version which any particular witness might speak in court. If that version is not in support of the prosecution case it would be unreasonable to insist on the Public Prosecutor to examine those persons as witnesses for prosecution. (Para 12). Banti v. State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414: 2004 SCC (Cri) 294: AIR 2004 SC 261: 2004 Cri LJ 372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-11-2003]

[2737] — Ss. 226, 231 and 225 — Public Prosecutor is not bound to examine all the witnesses including even those who, according to his information, would not support the prosecution case — Although Public Prosecutor should prefer to examine those witnesses who are not related to the victim instead of those who are related to the victim but if he comes to know that any of the non-related victims would not support the prosecution version, he may drop such witness from being examined — Public Prosecutor has to take decision in that regard in a fair manner — He can interview the witnesses beforehand to know in advance the stand to be taken by the witnesses

In the first information statement PW 4 mentioned that two persons had also seen the incident. The investigating officer included those two persons as witnesses to the occurrence when the final report was laid. But in the Sessions Court they were not examined by the Public Prosecutor. The Sessions Judge frowned at the prosecution for not examining those witnesses. The High Court noted that non-examination of those witnesses was due to an application submitted by the Public Prosecutor that those two witnesses did not support the prosecution version.

Held :

In trials before a Court of Session the prosecution "shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor". Section 226 of the Code enjoins on him to open up his case by describing the charge brought against the accused. He has to state what evidence he proposes to adduce for proving the guilt of the accused. If he knows at that stage itself that certain persons cited by the investigating agency as witnesses might not support the prosecution case he is at liberty to state before the Court that fact. Alternatively, he can wait further and obtain direct information about the version which any particular witness might speak in court. If that version is not in support of the prosecution case it would be unreasonable to insist on the Public Prosecutor to examine those persons as witnesses for prosecution. (Para 12)

When the case reaches the stage envisaged in Section 231 of the Code the Public Prosecutor is expected to produce evidence "in support of the prosecution" and not in derogation of the prosecution case. At the said stage the Public Prosecutor would be in a position to take a decision as to which among the persons cited are to be examined. If there are too many witnesses on the same point the Public Prosecutor is at liberty to choose two or some among them alone. That principle also applies when there are too many witnesses cited, if they all had sustained injuries at the occurrence. It is open to the Public Prosecutor to inform the Court that he does not propose to examine the remaining persons in that category. This will help not only the prosecution in relieving itself of the strain of adducing repetitive evidence on the same point but also help the Court considerably in lessening the workload. (Para 13)

The situation in a case where the prosecution cited two categories of witnesses to the occurrence, one consisting of persons closely related to the victim and the other consisting of witnesses who have no such relation, the Public Prosecutor's duty to the Court may require him to produce witnesses from the latter category, also subject to his discretion to limit to one or two among them. But if the Public Prosecutor got reliable information that any one among that category would not support the prosecution version he is free to state in court about that fact and skip that witness from being examined as a prosecution witness. It is open to the defence to cite him and examine him as a defence witness. The decision in this regard has to be taken by the Public Prosecutor in a fair manner. He can interview the witness beforehand to enable him to know well in advance the stand which that particular person would be adopting when examined as a witness in court. (Para 14). Hukam Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2000) 7 SCC 490: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1416.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-2000]

Dalbir Kaur v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 158: 1976 SCC (Cri) 527; Masalti v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 202: (1965) 1 Cri LJ 226; Bava Hajee Hamsa v. State of Kerala, (1974) 4 SCC 479: 1974 SCC (Cri) 515; Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033, relied on

[2738] — Ss. 226 and 231 — Evidence for prosecution — Public Prosecutor (PP) is to produce evidence which is in support of the prosecution, not against it — If there are many witnesses on the same point or many witnesses who had suffered injuries in the same occurrence, PP may choose only some of them and inform the court that he would not examine the remaining persons — Where prosecution cited several witnesses, some related and some not related to the victim, PP should produce witnesses of the latter category, subject to his discretion to limit only one or two of them — But PP may not produce a witness, who according to his information, would not support the prosecution case — Defence can cite him and examine him as defence witness — PP has to take decision in the matter in a fair manner

When the case reaches the stage as envisaged in Section 231 of the Code the Sessions Judge is obliged "to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution". It is clear from the said section that the Public Prosecutor is expected to produce evidence "in support of the prosecution" and not in derogation of the prosecution case. At the said stage the Public Prosecutor would be in a position to take a decision as to which among the persons cited are to be examined. If there are too many witnesses on the same point the Public Prosecutor is at liberty to choose two or some among them alone so that the time of the court can be saved from repetitious depositions on the same factual aspects. That principle applies when there are too many witnesses cited, if they all had sustained injuries at the occurrence. The Public Prosecutor in such cases is not obliged to examine all the injured witnesses. If he is satisfied by examining any two or three of them, it is open to him to inform the court that he does not propose to examine the remaining persons in that category. This will help not only the prosecution in relieving itself of the strain of adducing repetitive evidence on the same point but also help the court considerably in lessening the workload. Time has come to make every possible effort to lessen the workload, particularly those courts crammed with cases, but without impairing the cause of justice. (Para 13)

The situation in a case where the prosecution cited two categories of witnesses to the occurrence, one consisting of persons closely related to the victim and the other, consisting of witnesses who have no such relation, the Public Prosecutor's duty to the court may require him to produce witnesses from the latter category, also subject to his discretion to limit to one or two among them. But if the Public Prosecutor got reliable information that any one among that category would not support the prosecution version he is free to state in court about that fact and skip the witness from being examined as a prosecution witness. It is open to the defence to cite him and examine him as a defence witness. The decision in this regard has to be taken by the Public Prosecutor in a fair manner. He can interview the witness beforehand to enable him to know well in advance the stand which that particular person would be adopting when examined as a witness in court. (Para 14). Banti v. State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414: 2004 SCC (Cri) 294: AIR 2004 SC 261: 2004 Cri LJ 372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-11-2003]

Masalti v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 202: (1965) 1 Cri LJ 226; Bava Hajee Hamsa v. State of Kerala, (1974) 4 SCC 479: 1974 SCC (Cri) 515; Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; Dalbir Kaur v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 158: 1976 SCC (Cri) 527; Hukam Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2000) 7 SCC 490: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1416, relied on [2739] — Ss. 226 and 231 — Failure of prosecution to produce all material witnesses — Adverse effect of — Highly unsatisfactory investigation — Multiple murder case — Occurrence taking place inside a bus — Bus not seized — Absence of proper scene "mahazar" — Many relevant facts not noted by IO — Delay of six days in sending FIR to Magistrate — No reasonable explanation by IO for delay in questioning the material witnesses (fifteen days after the incident) — Failure to produce all material witnesses — Held, a case of this serious nature which resulted in the death of eight persons should have been conducted with more circumspection and seriousness — Failure of police to produce the best evidence before the court casts serious reflection on the system that is followed in investigation of criminal cases — CrPC, 1973, S. 157 (Para 6). Sahdeo v. State of U.P., (2004) 10 SCC 682: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1873: AIR 2004 SC 3508: 2004 Cri LJ 2876.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-2004]

[2740] — Ss. 226 and 231 — Non-examination of an eyewitness mentioned in the FIR, held, on facts not fatal

It would be unsound to lay down a general rule that every witness mentioned in the first information report must be examined by the prosecution in all circumstances and that the failure to do so would lead to the rejection of the evidence of all others. Bhagwati v. State of U.P., (1976) 3 SCC 235: 1976 SCC (Cri) 388: AIR 1976 SC 1449: 1976 Cri LJ 1171.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-4-1976]

[2741] — Ss. 226, 242 and 311 — Prosecution witness — Non-examination of — The defence having failed to call such witnesses as court witnesses, held, cannot later plead that those witnesses were withheld by the prosecution for any ulterior motive. Shanker v. State of U.P., (1975) 3 SCC 851: 1975 SCC (Cri) 270: AIR 1975 SC 757: 1975 Cri LJ 634.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-1975]

[2742] — Ss. 226 and 242 — Prosecution witness — Non-examination by public prosecutor on ground of having been "won over" — Held, expression "won over" will include case of refusal by witness to give testimony by reason of fear of his life. Shanker v. State of U.P., (1975) 3 SCC 851: 1975 SCC (Cri) 270: AIR 1975 SC 757: 1975 Cri LJ 634.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-1975]

— S. 227 See Ss. 91, 227, 228, 239 and 240

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 197, 220, 221, 227, 239 and 245

See also Ss. 197, 227 and 228

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 203, 204, 209 and 227

See also Ss. 204, 203, 227, 228 and 190

See also Ss. 207, 238, 228 & 240 and S. 227

See also Ss. 209, 319, 2(g), 227 and 228

See also Ss. 228 and 227

See also Ss. 228, 227 and 26

See also Ss. 228 & 227 and 239 & 240 and 245(1) & (2)

See also Ss. 228, 227 and 240

See also Ss. 228 & 227 and 240 & 239

See also Ss. 228, 227 and 401

See also Ss. 228, 240 and 227

See also Ss. 239, 227, 245 and 482

See also Ss. 239, 240, 227, 190(1), 156(3) and 468

See also Ss. 239 & 240 and 227 & 228

See also Ss. 239, 240, 227 and 245

See also Ss. 240, 228, 238, 227 and 482

See also Ss. 245, 227 and 239

See also Ss. 245, 227, 397 and 482

See also Ss. 245, 239 and 227

See also Ss. 245(1), 227, 239 and 246

See also Ss. 300, 482, 465 and 227

See also S. 319 r/w Ss. 209 and 193, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231 and 482

See also Ss. 321, 227 and 239

See also Ss. 321, 227, 239 and 397

See also Ss. 340, 192 to 196, 227 and 482

See also Ss. 386 and 227, 228

See also Ss. 401 & 397 and 227 & 228

See also Ss. 408(1), 406, 407, 228(1), 227 and 26(a)(ii)

See also Ss. 482, 148(3), 342, 359, 357, 358 and 227

See also Ss. 482, 190, 203, 211, 227, 239 and 245

See also Ss. 482, 203 and 227

See also Ss. 482, 203, 227 and 245

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

See also Ss. 482 and 227

See also Ss. 482, 227 and 190

See also Ss. 482 and 227, 239 & 245

See also Ss. 482, 397, 227 & 228

[2743] — S. 227 — Discharge — Nature of inquiry to be made by court in deciding whether to discharge or to frame charges against the accused

Section 227 itself contains enough guidelines as to the scope of inquiry for the purpose of discharging an accused. It provides that "the judge shall discharge when he considers that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused". The 'ground' in the context is not a ground for conviction, but a ground for putting the accused on trial. It is in the trial, the guilt or the innocence of the accused will be determined and not at the time of framing of charge. The court, therefore, need not undertake an elaborate inquiry in sifting and weighing the materials. Nor is it necessary to delve deep into various aspects. All that the court has to consider is whether the evidentiary material on record, if generally accepted, would reasonably connect the accused with the crime. Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad v. Dilip Nathumal Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715: 1989 SCC (Cri) 285: 1989 Mah LJ 462.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-2-1989]

[2744] — S. 227 — Discharge — Summary dismissal of application for — Sustainability — Necessity of considering submission of accused — FIR lodged alleging that accused had physical relationship with the informant on the promise that he would marry the informant and that they were married in a temple but accused denied all this and was marrying another girl — After investigation commenced, statement of the informant recorded under S. 164 and police report filed stating that offence under Ss. 376 and 406 IPC made out, application under S. 227 filed by accused for his discharge — Application rejected by trial court observing that there were sufficient grounds for framing charge against accused — Application filed before High Court challenging trial court's order rejected summarily — State submitting that though prima facie Ss. 376 and 406 IPC were not applicable but other provisions like Ss. 415 and 493 IPC were applicable — Held, it was rightly submitted that Ss. 376 and 406 IPC had no application but High Court should have dealt with the various submissions made before it — That having not been done, this was not a case where application under S. 227 should have been dismissed in a summary manner — Though stage of analysing the factual materials was yet to be undertaken but when on a bare reading of the FIR it shows that no offence had been made out for proceeding, the situation becomes different — Hence, without expressing any opinion on merits, order of High Court set aside and matter remitted to it for fresh consideration (Paras 8 and 11). Pradeep Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2007) 7 SCC 413: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 407: AIR 2007 SC 3059: (2007) 4 KLT 41: (2007) 57 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-2007]

Deelip Singh v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 88: 2005 SCC (Cri) 253, relied on

[2745] — S. 227 — Function of the Judge under, explained — Held, he cannot act merely as a post office or mouthpiece of the prosecution — He has to sift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of finding out whether a prima facie case has been made out — Where two views are equally possible and evidence gives rise to some suspicion but not grave suspicion, he can discharge the accused — On facts held, prosecution failed to throw any suspicion, much less a grave suspicion, against the accused — Hence, there was no prima facie case — Therefore, criminal proceedings against him under Ss. 161/477-A IPC and Ss. 5(2) & (1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, set aside — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 7

In exercising powers under Section 227 CrPC, the settled position of law is that the Judge while considering the question of framing the charges under the said section has the undoubted power to sift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out; where the materials placed before the court disclose grave suspicion against the accused which has not been properly explained the court will be fully justified in framing a charge and proceeding with the trial; by and large if two views are equally possible and the Judge is satisfied that the evidence produced before him gave rise to some suspicion but not grave suspicion against the accused, he will be fully justified to discharge the accused, and in exercising jurisdiction under Section 227 CrPC, the Judge cannot act merely as a post office or a mouthpiece of the prosecution, but has to consider the broad probabilities of the case, the total effect of the evidence and the documents produced before the court but should not make a roving enquiry into the pros and cons of the matter and weigh the evidence as if he was conducting a trial. (Para 12)

In the present case, in the alleged trap no police agency was involved; the FIR was lodged after seven days; no incriminating articles were found in the possession of the accused and statements of witnesses were recorded by the police after ten months of the occurrence. Therefore, not to speak of grave suspicion against the accused, in fact the prosecution has not been able to throw any suspicion. Therefore, it has to be held that no prima facie case was made against the appellant and consequently the criminal proceedings against the appellant are quashed. (Paras 14 and 15). Dilawar Balu Kurane v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 2 SCC 135: 2002 SCC (Cri) 310: AIR 2002 SC 564: 2002 Cri LJ 980: (2002) 1 LLN 671.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-2002]

Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, (1979) 3 SCC 5: 1979 SCC (Cri) 609, relied on

[2746] — S. 227 — Special Judge's power to pass order of discharge under — Ambit and scope — When discharge order should be passed — Principles stated — Special Judge should not act as a trial Judge but should weigh evidence and form opinion only on the limited question of whether a prima facie case made out — Excepting the cases of grave suspicion which the accused is unable to explain, he is empowered to discharge the accused — On facts, Special Judge justified in passing the discharge order

In exercising the jurisdiction under S. 227, the Special Judge, which under the present Code is a senior and experienced court, cannot act merely as a post office or mouthpiece of the prosecution, but has to consider the broad probabilities of the case, the total effect of the evidence and the documents produced before the Court, any basic infirmities appearing in the case and so on. This, however, does not mean that the Judge should make a roving enquiry into the pros and cons of the matter and weigh the evidence as if he was conducting a trial. While considering the question of framing charges under this section, he has the undoubted power to sift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out.

The test to determine a prima facie case would naturally depend upon the facts of each case and it is difficult to lay down a rule of universal application. Where the materials placed before the Court disclose grave suspicion against the accused which has not been properly explained, the Court will be fully justified in framing a charge and proceeding with the trial. By and large, however, if two views are equally possible and the Judge is satisfied that the evidence produced before him while giving rise to some suspicion but not grave suspicion against the accused, he will be fully within his right to discharge the accused. Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, (1979) 3 SCC 4: 1979 SCC (Cri) 609: AIR 1979 SC 366: 1979 Cri LJ 154: 1979 MLJ (Cri) 361.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-1978]

[2747] — S. 227 — Discharge of accused — When warranted — Scope and object of S. 227, stated

If two views are possible and one of them gives rise to suspicion only, as distinguished from grave suspicion as to the guilt of the accused, the trial Judge will be empowered to discharge the accused and at this stage the trial Judge is not to see whether the trial will end in conviction or acquittal. Further, the words "not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused" in Section 227 CrPC clearly show that the Judge is not a mere post office to frame the charge at the behest of the prosecution, but has to exercise his judicial mind to the facts of the case in order to determine whether a case for trial has been made out by the prosecution. In assessing this fact, it is not necessary for the court to enter into the pros and cons of the matter or enter into a weighing and balancing of evidence and probabilities which is really the function of the court, after the trial starts. (Para 10)

At the stage of Section 227, the Judge has merely to sift the evidence in order to find out whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. In other words, the sufficiency of ground would take within its fold the nature of the evidence recorded by the police or the documents produced before the court which ex facie disclose that there are suspicious circumstances against the accused so as to frame a charge against him. If the Judge comes to a conclusion that there is sufficient ground to proceed, he will frame a charge under Section 228 CrPC, if not, he will discharge the accused. This provision was introduced in CrPC to avoid wastage of public time when a prima facie case was not disclosed and to save the accused from avoidable harassment and expenditure. (Paras 11 and 25). P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-2010]

State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, (1979) 3 SCC 4: 1979 SCC (Cri) 609; Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47; Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 514, relied on

[2748] — Ss. 227, 193, 204 and 211 — After committal of a case to a Sessions Court, it is for that court to decide what action is to be taken and High Court cannot direct it to frame charges — Constitution of India, Article 226 — Quashing of criminal charge/complaint/proceedings

Pursuant to a complaint lodged against the appellants the police filed charge-sheet directly before the Sessions Court which was designated as Special Court for trial of offences under the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act. A charge was framed by the Special Judge against both the appellants for the alleged offences under the Act. At that stage the appellants moved the High Court for quashing the charge as well as the charge-sheet on various reasons. A Single Judge of the High Court of Andhra Pradesh found that the procedure adopted by the investigating officer in filing the charge-sheet straight away to the Special Court was not in accordance with law, and the Special Judge had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of any offence under the Act without the case having been committed to that Court. Accordingly the Single Judge set aside the proceedings of the Special Court and directed the charge-sheet and the connected papers to be returned to the police officer concerned who, in turn, was directed to present the same before a Judicial Magistrate of Ist Class "for the purpose of committal to the Special Court". The Single Judge further directed that "on such committal the Special Court shall frame appropriate charges in the light of the observations in the order". Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

The High Court of Andhra Pradesh has rightly set aside, as per the impugned order, the proceedings initiated by the Special Court specified under the Act. But it is not possible to support the directions given by the Single Judge in his order that after committal of the case the Special Court shall frame charge against the appellants. It is for the Special Court to decide regarding the action to be taken next, after hearing both sides as provided in Section 227 of the Code. No direction can be given to the Special Court at this premature stage as to what course the court should adopt then. It is open to the appellants to raise all their contentions at that stage if they wish to make a plea for discharge. If any such plea is made, the Judge of the Special Court shall pass appropriate orders untrammelled by the observations made in the impugned order. (Para 26). Gangula Ashok v. State of A.P., (2000) 2 SCC 504: 2000 SCC (Cri) 488: AIR 2000 SC 740: 2000 Cri LJ 819: (2000) 1 KLT 609.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-1-2000]

[2749] — Ss. 227, 228, 67 and 407 — Compelling appearance for trial — One of the several accused persons facing trial in another case in another State and, therefore, lodged in a jail in that other State — Trial court in that other State refusing to make the accused available for trial in the present case and, therefore, the trial court in the present case finding it not possible to frame charges against him — In such circumstances, Supreme Court directing the State Govts. to ensure the presence of all the accused persons at one place for trial and also directing both the High Courts concerned to examine on the administrative side the details to be worked out for this purpose and give appropriate directions for expeditious disposal of the case — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 20(b), 21 and 29

Attempts should be made by the State Governments of Orissa and West Bengal to see that the trial in the pending cases are facilitated by making appropriate arrangements to have all the accused persons in one place for purposes of trial and details should be worked out and shall be examined by the High Court of Orissa and the High Court of Calcutta on the administrative side and appropriate directions be given in that regard to enable expeditious disposal of the case. (Para 4). Babua v. State of Orissa, (2001) 2 SCC 566: 2001 SCC (Cri) 351: AIR 2001 SC 1052.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and K. G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-1-2001]

[2750] — Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 245 — Framing of charge — Proper basis — Nature of evaluation to be made at the stage of — Held, at that stage the court is not expected to go deep into the probative value of the material on record — The court has to form a presumptive opinion as to existence of factual ingredients constituting the offence alleged

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

At the stage of framing of charge the court is required to evaluate the material and documents on record with a view to finding out if the facts emerging therefrom, taken at their face value, disclosed the existence of all the ingredients constituting the alleged offence. What needs to be considered is whether there is a ground for presuming that the offence has been committed and not a ground for convicting the accused has been made out. At that stage, the court is not expected to go deep into the probative value of the material on record. The court is not required to appreciate evidence to conclude whether the materials produced are sufficient or not for convicting the accused. The materials brought on record by the prosecution has to be accepted as true at that stage. At that stage, even strong suspicion founded on material which leads the court to form a presumptive opinion as to the existence of the factual ingredients constituting the offence alleged would justify the framing of charge against the accused in respect of the commission of that offence. (Paras 11, 14 and 13). Onkar Nath Mishra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 2 SCC 561: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 507: 2008 Cri LJ 1391.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-12-2007]

State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, (1977) 2 SCC 699: 1977 SCC (Cri) 404; State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820; State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, (2000) 6 SCC 338: 2000 SCC Cri 1110, relied on [2751] — Ss. 227 and 228 — Discharge — Scope of inquiry contemplated at — Appreciation of evidence, at stage of discharge — Impermissibility — Held, at stage of framing charge, what is required to be seen is whether there are sufficient grounds to proceed against accused — Special Court erred in virtually passing order of acquittal in garb of order of discharge. CBI v. Mukesh Pravinchandra Shroff, (2009) 16 SCC 429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-2005]

[2752] — Ss. 227 and 228 — Framing of charge/Discharge of accused — Exercise of jurisdiction — Scope — Explained — Appreciation of evidence — Impermissibility — Held, at the stage of framing of charge under S. 228 or while considering discharge petition filed under S. 227, it is not for Magistrate or Judge concerned to analyse all the materials including pros and cons, reliability or acceptability thereof, etc. — It is at the trial, that Judge concerned has to appreciate evidentiary value, credibility or otherwise of the material, veracity of various documents and is free to take a decision one way or the other — On facts held, though PWs 1, 2, 8 and 10 did not whisper a word about involvement of appellant in anti-Sikh riots of 1984 at the earliest point of time yet it cannot be presumed that there is no case to proceed against appellant — Hence, it could not be concluded that framing of charges against appellant by trial Judge (23 yrs later) was either bad in law or abuse of process of law or without any material basis — Inasmuch as trial related to incident of 1984, trial Judge directed to make sincere efforts for expeditious disposal of case — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-B r/w Ss. 153-A, 295, 302, 395, 427, 436, 339 & 505 and S. 109 r/w Ss. 147, 148, 149, 153-A, 295, 302, 395, 427, 435, 339 & 505

The present case arose out of the 1984 anti-Sikh riot cases in which thousands of Sikhs were killed. The investigation pertaining to the death of family members of Smt J, PW 1 was reopened by the Anti-Riot Cell of Delhi Police in the year 2002 and after investigation, a closure report was filed on 15-12-2005/22-12-2005. Thereafter, on 31-7-2008, a status report was filed by Delhi Police before the Metropolitan Magistrate. Pursuant to the recommendation of Justice Nanavati Commission, the Government of India entrusted the investigation to CBI on 24-10-2005. CBI registered a formal FIR on 22-11-2005. The closure report was filed by Delhi Police on 15-12-2005/22-12-2005, when a case had already been registered by CBI on 22-11-2005 and the documents had already been transferred to CBI.

After fresh investigation, CBI filed a charge-sheet on 13-1-2010. After committal, charges were framed on 15-5-2010. The appellant filed a petition for discharge raising various grounds in support of his claim. Since he was not successful before the Special Court, he filed a revision before the High Court and by the impugned order High Court dismissed his criminal revision and directed the trial court for early completion of the trial since the same was pending from 1984.

Directing as above, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal.. Sajjan Kumar v. CBI, (2010) 9 SCC 368.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Anil R. Dave, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2010]

Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, (1979) 3 SCC 4: 1979 SCC (Cri) 609; Dilawar Balu Kurane v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 2 SCC 135: 2002 SCC (Cri) 310, relied on [2753] — Ss. 227, 228 and 209 — Discharge — Scope and ambit of powers of trial court under S. 227 — Held, if two views are equally possible and the Judge is satisfied that evidence produced gives rise to suspicion only, as distinguished from grave suspicion, he would be fully within his right to discharge the accused — At this stage he is not to see whether the trial will end in conviction or not — Words and Phrases — Expression "not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused" appearing in S. 227, explained

Chapter XVIII CrPC lays down the procedure for trial before the Court of Session, pursuant to an order of commitment under Section 209 CrPC. Section 227 CrPC contemplates the circumstances whereunder there could be a discharge of an accused at a stage anterior in point of time to framing of charge under Section 228 CrPC. It provides that upon consideration of the record of the case, the documents submitted with the police report and after hearing the accused and the prosecution, the court is expected, nay bound to decide whether there is "sufficient ground" to proceed against the accused and as a consequence thereof either discharge the accused or proceed to frame charge against him. (Para 15)

It is trite that the words "not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused" appearing in Section 227 CrPC postulate exercise of judicial mind on the part of the Judge to the facts of the case in order to determine whether a case for trial has been made out by the prosecution. However, in assessing this fact, the Judge has the power to sift and weigh the material for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out. The test to determine a prima facie case depends upon the facts of each case and in this regard it is neither feasible nor desirable to lay down a rule of universal application. By and large, however, if two views are equally possible and the Judge is satisfied that the evidence produced before him gives rise to suspicion only as distinguished from grave suspicion, he will be fully within his right to discharge the accused. At this stage, he is not to see as to whether the trial will end in conviction or not. The broad test to be applied is whether the materials on record, if unrebutted, make a conviction reasonably possible. (Para 16). Yogesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 10 SCC 394: AIR 2008 SC 2991: 2008 Cri LJ 3872.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2008]

Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, (1979) 3 SCC 4: 1979 SCC (Cri) 609; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533, relied on [2754] — Ss. 227 and 482 — Discharge — Grounds for — Delay in proceedings — Continuation of prosecution and framing of charges on basis of statements made by PWs after a gap of about 23 years — Propriety — Held, though delay may be a relevant ground, however, in light of materials available before court through CBI, without testing the same at trial, proceedings cannot be quashed merely on ground of delay — Those materials have to be tested in context of prejudice to accused only at trial — Constitution of India, Art. 21. Sajjan Kumar v. CBI, (2010) 9 SCC 368.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Anil R. Dave, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2010]

P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 1488, relied on

Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, (2009) 3 SCC 355: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 95; Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93; Japani Sahoo v. Chandra Sekhar Mohanty, (2007) 7 SCC 394: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 388, considered

[2755] — Ss. 227, 228 and 219 — Order to discharge or frame charges against the accused — Tests and nature of enquiry to be made by the court — Court has to sift evidence on record only for limited purpose of ascertaining whether a prima facie case is made out against the accused — At that stage court is not required to undertake an elaborate enquiry in sifting and weighing the material to arrive at the conclusion that it will not lead to conviction — In the circumstances of the case the High Court erred in seeking independent corroboration to the version put up by the complainants and in discharging the accused — Case remitted to the trial court to proceed further in accordance with law — Trial court further directed to consider whether the charge was required to be altered or amended so as to make it consistent with S. 219

At the stage of Sections 227 and 228 the Court is required to evaluate the material and documents on record with a view to finding out if the facts emerging therefrom taken at their face value disclose the existence of all the ingredients constituting the alleged offence. The Court may, for this limited purpose, sift the evidence as it cannot be expected even at that initial stage to accept all that the prosecution states as gospel truth even if it is opposed to common sense or the broad probabilities of the case. Therefore, at the stage of framing of the charge the Court has to consider the material with a view to find out if there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence or that there is not sufficient ground for proceeding against him and not for the purpose of arriving at the conclusion that it is not likely to lead to a conviction.

What the Court has to consider at the stage of framing of the charge is whether the version of the person complaining together with his/her explanation is prima facie believable or not. It was, therefore, not proper for the High Court to seek independent corroboration at that stage and to quash the charge and discharge the accused in absence thereof. The High Court was wholly wrong in discarding the material placed before the Court as false and discharging the accused on that ground. State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, (1997) 4 SCC 393: 1997 SCC (Cri) 584: AIR 1997 SC 2041: 1997 Cri LJ 2248.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-3-1997]

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, followed

State of Punjab v. Jagir Singh, (1974) 3 SCC 277: 1973 SCC (Cri) 886, distinguished

Priya Sharan Maharaj v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 Cri LJ 3683 (Bom), reversed

[2756] — Ss. 227, 228 and 401 — High Court should not ordinarily interfere with trial court's order for framing of charge unless there is glaring injustice — High Court's interference at that stage may encourage unscrupulous persons to protract trial and prevent culmination of criminal case which would amount to abuse of process of the court — Where trial court by a well-reasoned order directed framing of charges for murder, held, High Court in revision was not justified in quashing that order by a cryptic non-speaking order

It is the statutory obligation of the High Court not to interfere at the initial stage of framing the charges merely on hypothesis, imagination and far-fetched reasons which in law amount to interdicting the trial against the accused persons. Self-restraint on the part of the High Court should be the rule unless there is a glaring injustice staring the court in the face. Unscrupulous litigants should be discouraged from protracting the trial and preventing culmination of the criminal cases by having resort to uncalled-for and unjustified litigation under the cloak of technicalities of law. (Paras 12 and 8). Om Wati v. State, (2001) 4 SCC 333: 2001 SCC (Cri) 685: AIR 2001 SC 1507.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-3-2001]

Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303; Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad v. Dilip Nathumal Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715: 1989 SCC (Cri) 285; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533: AIR 1977 SC 2018; Supdt. & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W.B. v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038: AIR 1980 SC 52; Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, relied on

See also State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568 where Satish Mehra case, overruled

[2757] — Ss. 227, 228 and 401 — Revision against dismissal of discharge petition and framing of charges — Observations by High Court while dismissing revision — Effect on trial court — Need for independent application of mind by trial court — Apprehension expressed that if observations concerned of High Court were allowed to stand, trial Judge would have no other option but to convict appellant which would be against all canons of justice — Held, it is for trial Judge to evaluate all materials including evidentiary value of testimonies of PWs, alleged contradictory statements, delay and the conduct of Delhi Police in filing status report and further investigation by CBI — Clarified that all observations concerned of High Court would not affect ultimate analysis and final verdict of trial Judge (Paras 40 to 43). Sajjan Kumar v. CBI, (2010) 9 SCC 368.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Anil R. Dave, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2010]

Common Cause v. Union of India, (1999) 6 SCC 667: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1196, considered [2758] — Ss. 227, 245 and 362 — Review of order of discharge — Permissibility — Held, the said order is a final order and the same cannot be reviewed or corrected by subsequent order — Sessions Judge, without considering the supplementary charge-sheet, discharging the accused taking into account only preliminary charge-sheet — But, he recalling the discharge order when application moved therefor by prosecution bringing the said error to his notice — Held, the said discharge order could not have been recalled or modified — Hence, High Court's order confirming the order of Sessions Judge, not sustainable — However, State could take such steps as permissible in law to question the order of discharge — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 394, 360 and 397 — Arms Act, 1959, S. 27 (Para 5). Deepu v. State of M.P., (2007) 15 SCC 543.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-8-2003]

[2759] — Ss. 227, 228(1)(b) and 397/401 — Discharge of accused — When not justified — Test — Whether there was sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused or presuming that accused had committed an offence — FIR showing that three accused came at the spot armed with firearms and after giving exhortation to kill H and others resorted to firing as a result of which H and a girl belonging to Scheduled Caste who had come there to purchase some articles died — During course of investigation name of Respondent 2 also appeared and some witnesses stated under S. 161 CrPC that one of the accused handed over his rifle to Respondent 2 who ran away from the spot — Trial court framed charges against Respondent 2 under S. 302 read with S. 34 IPC and S. 3(2)(v) of the SC and ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act — Respondent 2 filed revision under Ss. 397/401 before High Court challenging the order framing the charges — High Court set aside the order for the reason that the firing was not aimed at the deceased girl but she received the fatal injuries accidentally — Held, reason for setting aside the order wholly erroneous and unsustainable — High Court failed to apply the relevant test for judging validity of trial court's order directing framing of charges — High Court ignored provisions of S. 301 IPC — Prosecution case that Respondent 2 ran away from the scene after an accused handed over his rifle to him also shows commission of offence under S. 201 IPC — Since two persons had been killed, there should be separate and distinct charge for each murder besides charge under S. 3(2)(v) of the SC/ST Act — In the circumstances, order of discharge not sustainable and Respondent 2 must face the trial. Rajbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 4 SCC 51: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 209: AIR 2006 SC 1963: (2006) 3 All LJ 754: 2006 Cri LJ 2458.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arun Kumar and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad v. Dilip Nathumal Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715: 1989 SCC (Cri) 285, relied on [2760] — Ss. 227, 239, 245 and 482 — Framing of charge — High Court's interference at that stage — Proposition of law laid down in A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716, reiterated that the test to be applied at the stage of framing of charge is of prima facie case — On facts held, strong suspicion about commission of offence and accused's involvement was sufficient for framing of charges — At that stage, there was no necessity of formulating opinion about prospects of conviction — Charges framed under Ss. 420 and 406 IPC, on account of breach of agreements relating to lease of commercial vehicles — High Court's interference on the ground that the charges were not sustainable, held, was not warranted (Paras 13 and 14). Sanghi Bros. (Indore) (P) Ltd. v. Sanjay Choudhary, (2008) 10 SCC 681.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820; State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, (1977) 2 SCC 699: 1977 SCC (Cri) 404; Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad v. Dilip Nathumal Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715: 1989 SCC (Cri) 285; State of W.B. v. Mohd. Khalid, (1995) 1 SCC 684: 1995 SCC (Cri) 266; R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256, relied on

Black's Law Dictionary; Shorter Oxford English Dictionary; Stroud's Legal Dictionary; P. Ramanatha Aiyar: Law Lexicon, referred to

[2761] — Ss. 227, 239 & 245 and 228 & 240 — Discharge of accused — Requirement of recording of reasons in respect of — Framing of charge, forming of opinion in case of — Difference in the requirements, explained — Reason therefor, explained — Held, the moment discharge order is passed, it is imperative to record reasons — However, charge(s) may be framed without recording reasons for showing why the charge(s) were framed

The question relating to forming of an opinion at the time of framing of charge is different from a case of recording of reasons on the basis of which an order of discharge of the accused may be passed. The moment the order of discharge is passed it is imperative to record the reasons. But for framing of charge the court is required to form an opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence. In case of discharge of the accused the use of the expression "reasons" has been inserted in Sections 227, 239 and 245 CrPC. At the stage of framing of a charge the expression used is "opinion". The reason is obvious. If the reasons are recorded in case of framing of charge, there is likelihood of prejudicing the case of the accused put on trial. The Judge is required to record reasons only if he decides to discharge the accused. But if he is to frame the charge he may do so without recording his reasons for showing why he framed the charge. But where the question of jurisdiction is raised and the trial court is required to adjudicate that issue, it cannot be said that reasons are not to be recorded. In such a case reasons relate to question of jurisdiction and not necessarily to the issue relating to framing of charge. In such a case reasons dealing with a plea relating to jurisdiction have to be recorded. (Paras 13, 15 and 16). Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2007) 1 SCC 49: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 241: (2007) 1 KLT 47: (2007) 50 AIC 107 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303, followed

[2762] — Ss. 227 and 209 — Expression "the record of the case" as used in S. 227 — Meaning of — Held, the record of the case and documents submitted therewith as postulated in S. 227 relate to the case and the documents referred to in S. 209 (Para 8). State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 2005 SC 359: (2005) 1 KLT 80: (2005) 99 Cut LT 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, D.M. Dharmadhikari and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-2004]

Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, overruled

Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W.B. v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; State of Delhi v. Gyan Devi, (2000) 8 SCC 239: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1486; State of M.P. v. S.B. Johari, (2000) 2 SCC 57: 2000 SCC (Cri) 311; State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, (1997) 4 SCC 393: 1997 SCC (Cri) 584; State Anti-Corruption Bureau v. P. Suryaprakasam, 1999 SCC (Cri) 373; Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI, (2000) 5 SCC 679: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014, relied on

Minakshi Bala v. Sudhir Kumar, (1994) 4 SCC 142: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1181; P.S. Rajya v. State of Bihar, (1996) 9 SCC 1: 1996 SCC (Cri) 897; State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, (2000) 6 SCC 338: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1110, explained and distinguished on facts

Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI, (2000) 5 SCC 679: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014, distinguished and held obiter dicta

[2763] — Ss. 227 and 228 — Court is required to record its reasons only if it decides to discharge the accused but it is not required to do so if it is to frame charge against the accused. Om Wati v. State, (2001) 4 SCC 333: 2001 SCC (Cri) 685: AIR 2001 SC 1507.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-3-2001]

[2764] — Ss. 227 and 228 — Court on perusal of evidence has only to find out whether there exists sufficient ground so that a prima facie case is made out to proceed against the accused — It is only when even accepting as it is the evidence, which prosecution proposes to adduce, no case is made out against the accused, court can discharge him

In an occurrence which took place in July 1991, the appellant's son was subjected to beating by the accused-respondents by weapons like hockey sticks, lathis and iron chain. A report was lodged with the police regarding the incident. Statement of a person who claimed to be an eyewitness was recorded by police under Section 161 CrPC wherein he supported the above incident. The accused persons and the deceased were arrested by the police under Sections 107/151 CrPC. Due to beating the deceased complained of pain in all parts of his body which necessitated his admission in hospital where he died at about 5 a.m. on 7-9-1991. The post-mortem report stated that "the death in this case is possibly by hepatic failure following viral hepatitis". After investigation, the final report was submitted against the accused persons who were charged by the trial court by passing a detailed order on 23-12-1991. A revision petition was filed against that order before the High Court. Meanwhile the accused were released on bail by the High Court. The revision petition was disposed of by the High Court after four years by quashing the charges framed with direction to the trial court to pass "an order delineating reasons in sufficient detail to lend assurance to the accused, the public and the court that sufficient judicial thought is at its back". Again on 4-2-1998 the trial court dealt with all the arguments addressed before it and held that prima facie there was sufficient evidence to frame charges against the accused persons under Sections 302, 147 r/w Section 149 IPC. The accused respondents who were on bail again filed revision petition which the High Court disposed of by a non-speaking order as follows: "Heard learned counsel for the petitioners as also learned counsel for the State and perused the documents on record, in particular, the post-mortem report, I am of the view that the charge under Section 302 IPC cannot be made out. In this view of the matter, I quash the charge framed under Section 302 IPC and direct the trial court to reframe the charge in accordance with law based upon material on record. The revision petition is allowed." Allowing the appeal of the deceased's mother, the Supreme Court

Held :

The trial court, in the instant case, rightly held that merely on account of the observations and the opinion incorporated in the post-mortem report, the prosecution could not be deprived of its right to prove that the accused were guilty of the offence for which the final report had been filed against them. There was no ground for the High Court to interfere with the well-reasoned order of the trial court by passing a cryptic and telegraphic order which is impugned in this appeal. It is not safe, at this stage, to deprive the prosecution in proving its case on the basis of the direct evidence, the statement of the deceased claimed to be admissible under Section 32 of the Evidence Act and the other documents including the inquest report allegedly disclosing the infliction of injuries on the person of the deceased which resulted in his death. The acceptance of the opinion of the doctors, as incorporated in the post-mortem report for the cause of death of the deceased being "hepatic failure following viral hepatitis" cannot be accepted on its face value at this initial stage. (Para 11)

The present case reflects and demonstrates the abuse of the process of the court by the accused persons who have succeeded in protracting the commencement of trial against them for about a decade. The accused have left no stone unturned to exploit the procedural wrangles to defeat the ends of justice. The impugned order of the High Court not only reflects the non- application of mind by the Single Judge of the High Court while discharging the respondents for the offence punishable under Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code but also demonstrates the ignoring of the correct position of law applicable on the point and catena of judgments pronounced by the Supreme Court on the subject. (Para 2)

Now no reasons are required to be recorded when the charges are framed against the accused persons. At the stage of passing the order in terms of Section 227 of the Code, the court has merely to peruse the evidence in order to find out whether or not there is a sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. If upon consideration, the court is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out against the accused, the Judge must proceed to frame charge in terms of Section 228 of the Code. Only in a case where it is shown that the evidence which the prosecution proposes to adduce to prove the guilt of the accused, even if fully accepted before it is challenged in cross-examination or rebutted by defence evidence cannot show that the accused committed the crime, then and then alone the court can discharge the accused. The court is not required to enter into meticulous consideration of evidence and material placed before it at this stage. (Paras 7 and 8). Om Wati v. State, (2001) 4 SCC 333: 2001 SCC (Cri) 685: AIR 2001 SC 1507.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-3-2001]

Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303; Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad v. Dilip Nathumal Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715: 1989 SCC (Cri) 285; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533: AIR 1977 SC 2018; Supdt. & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W.B. v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038: AIR 1980 SC 52; Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, relied on

But see (2003) 2 SCC 711, 715 where Satish Mehra case, doubted, and See State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568 where Satish Mehra case, overruled

[2765] — Ss. 227 and 228 — Framing of charge — At this stage court has to be only prima facie satisfied about existence of sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused — For this limited purpose, court can evaluate material and documents on record — But it cannot appreciate the evidence — In the circumstances held, accused-respondent's application for production of documents relating to income tax returns or income tax assessment orders which were collected during course of investigation conducted pursuant to complaint under S. 13(1)(e) r/w S. 13(2) of Prevention of Corruption Act were wrongly rejected by trial court in view of relevance of those documents in reaching court's prima facie satisfaction — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(1)(e) r/w S. 13(2)

A complaint under Section 13(1)(e) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 for the check period 25-9-1982 to 27-3-1993 was filed against the respondent public servant stating that he had acquired the property in excess of the known sources of his income. While submitting the charge-sheet several important documents, which were collected during the course of investigation, were withheld. Most of the documents related to the income tax returns or income tax assessment orders. All these documents pertained to the period prior to 26-3-1993. Some of them even related to the year 1988. At the time of framing charges the respondent made an application seeking production of these documents in court. According to the respondent the said documents supported him. If those documents were considered even prima facie there was no scope to frame charges against him. But the said application was rejected stating that for the purpose of framing charges only the documents forwarded to the court under Section 173(5) CrPC were required to be considered. Hence the respondent filed criminal revision which was allowed by the High Court directing that the documents collected during investigation be produced and may be taken into consideration by the court below while framing the charge. Thereafter the trial court framed charges under Section 13(1)(e) read with Section 13(2) of the Act. Aggrieved by the order framing charges, the respondent filed a criminal revision. The High Court accepted the case of the respondent, set aside the order of the trial court framing charges and discharged the respondent. Dismissing the SLP by the State,

Held :

At the stage of framing charge, the court has to prima facie consider whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. The court is not required to appreciate evidence to conclude whether the materials produced are sufficient or not for convicting the accused. If the court is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out for proceeding further then a charge has to be framed. Per contra, if the evidence which the prosecution proposes to produce to prove the guilt of the accused, even if fully accepted before it is challenged by cross-examination or rebutted by the defence evidence, if any, cannot show that the accused committed the particular offence, then the charge can be quashed. (Paras 7 and 11)

In the normal course the documents in question in the present case could not have been prepared in anticipation that the respondent would have to face such charges on a future date. The documents being the orders of assessment or returns filed with the Income Tax Authorities on their face value supported the case of the respondent. There was no bar to consider the material on record in the case on hand, which was collected during the course of investigation and produced before the Court. (Paras 6 and 12)

Besides, in the order passed by the High Court in the earlier revision petition the trial court was directed that the documents made available by the accused during investigation be produced and they be taken into consideration by the court while framing charges. The said order became final, it having not been challenged further. In this situation the parties and the trial court were bound and governed by the said direction. The trial court's failure to follow the directions resulted in framing charges against the respondent ignoring the documents, which on their face value supported the respondent. (Para 6)

In this view the High Court, looking to the material and documents that were made available at the stage of framing charges on their face value in the light of the directions given earlier in criminal revision and bearing in mind the position in law, concluded that charges could not be framed against the respondent and, consequently, set aside the order of the trial court and discharged the respondent. On the facts and in the circumstances of the case and having regard to the legal position stated above, there is no good reason or valid ground to upset the impugned order. (Paras 13 and 14). State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, (2000) 6 SCC 338: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1110: AIR 2000 SC 2583: 2000 Cri LJ 3504.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-7-2000]

Ananda Bezbaruah v. Union of India, 1994 Cri LJ 12 (Gau), approved

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, relied on

State of M.P. v. S.B. Johari, (2000) 2 SCC 57: 2000 SCC (Cri) 311, distinguished

Followed in Hem Chand v. State of Jharkhand, (2008) 5 SCC 113

[2766] — Ss. 227 and 228 — Order to discharge accused or to proceed with trial — Tests and considerations to be applied by Court

Reading Ss. 227 and 228 together in juxtaposition, as they have got to be, it would be clear that at the beginning and the initial stage of the trial the truth, veracity and effect of the evidence which the Prosecutor proposes to adduce are not to be meticulously judged. Nor is any weight to be attached to the probable defence of the accused. It is not obligatory for the Judge at that stage of the trial to consider in any detail and weigh in a sensitive balance whether the facts, if proved, would be incompatible with the innocence of the accused or not. The standard of test and judgment which is to be finally applied before recording a finding regarding the guilt or otherwise of the accused is not exactly to be applied at the stage of deciding the matter under S. 227 or S. 228 of the Code. At that stage, the Court is not to see whether there is sufficient ground for conviction of the accused or whether the trial is sure to end in his conviction. Strong suspicion against the accused, if the matter remains in the region of suspicion, cannot take the place of proof of his guilt at the conclusion of the trial. But at the initial stage, if there is a strong suspicion which leads the Court to think that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence then it is not open to the Court to say that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. The presumption of the guilt of the accused which is to be drawn at the initial stage is not in the sense of the law governing the trial of criminal cases in France where the accused is presumed to be guilty unless the contrary is proved. But it is only for the purpose of deciding prima facie whether the Court should proceed with the trial or not. If the evidence which the Prosecutor proposes to adduce to prove the guilt of the accused, even if fully accepted before it is challenged in cross-examination or rebutted by the defence evidence, if any, cannot show that the accused committed the offence, then there will be no sufficient ground for proceeding with the trial. An exhaustive list of the circumstances to indicate as to what will lead to one conclusion or the other is neither possible nor advisable. If the scales as to the guilt or innocence of the accused are even at the conclusion of the trial, then on the theory of benefit of doubt the case must end in the acquittal of the accused; but if, on the other hand, the scales are even at the initial stage of making an order under S. 227 or S. 228, then in such a situation, ordinarily and generally the order will have to be made under S. 228 and not under S. 227. The test is whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding and not whether there is sufficient ground for conviction. Where there is a prima facie evidence even though the person charged of an offence in the complaint might have a defence, the matter has to be left to be decided by the appropriate forum at the appropriate stage and issue of a process could not be refused. Unless, therefore, the Magistrate finds that the evidence led before him is self-contradictory or intrinsically untrustworthy, process cannot be refused if that evidence makes out a prima facie case.

In the present case, the fact that the deceased died an unnatural death and there were injuries of burning on her person was not in doubt or dispute. The question to be decided at the trial would be whether the respondent had murdered her and set fire to the body or whether she committed suicide by setting fire to herself. This undoubtedly is a serious matter for decision at the trial and the discharge of the accused under S. 227 is not justified. State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533: AIR 1977 SC 2018: 1977 Cri LJ 1606.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-1977]

[2767] — S. 227 — Expression "hearing the submissions of the accused" as used therein — Meaning of — Held, means hearing the submissions of the accused on the record of the case as filed by the prosecution and documents submitted therewith — It cannot mean opportunity to file material to be granted to the accused

Can the trial court at the time of framing of charge consider material filed by the accused, was the point for determination in these matters.

Answering the said question in the negative,

Held :

The record of the case and documents submitted therewith as postulated in Section 227 relate to the case and the documents referred in Section 209 CrPC. That is the plain meaning of Section 227 read with Section 209 CrPC. The provision about hearing the submissions of the accused as postulated by Section 227 only means hearing the submissions of the accused on the record of the case as filed by the prosecution and documents submitted therewith and nothing more. The expression "hearing the submissions of the accused" cannot mean opportunity to file material to be granted to the accused and thereby changing the settled law. At the stage of framing of charge hearing the submissions of the accused has to be confined to the material produced by the police. (Paras 8 and 18). State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 2005 SC 359: (2005) 1 KLT 80: (2005) 99 Cut LT 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, D.M. Dharmadhikari and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-2004]

Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, overruled

Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W.B. v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; State of Delhi v. Gyan Devi, (2000) 8 SCC 239: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1486; State of M.P. v. S.B. Johari, (2000) 2 SCC 57: 2000 SCC (Cri) 311; State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, (1997) 4 SCC 393: 1997 SCC (Cri) 584; State Anti-Corruption Bureau v. P. Suryaprakasam, 1999 SCC (Cri) 373; Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI, (2000) 5 SCC 679: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014, relied on

Minakshi Bala v. Sudhir Kumar, (1994) 4 SCC 142: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1181; P.S. Rajya v. State of Bihar, (1996) 9 SCC 1: 1996 SCC (Cri) 897; State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, (2000) 6 SCC 338: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1110, explained and distinguished on facts

Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI, (2000) 5 SCC 679: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014, distinguished and held obiter dicta

[2768] — Ss. 227 & 228, 239 & 240, 91 and 482 — Framing of charge — Trial court whether can consider any material filed by the accused — Held, at the said stage it can consider only the material produced by the prosecution — No provision in CrPC grants to the accused any right to file any material or document at the said stage — That right is granted only at the stage of trial — Satish Mehra case, (1996) 9 SCC 766 taking a contrary view, held, not correctly decided — Contention made about production of documents relying upon S. 91 CrPC, rejected — Scheme and object of new CrPC of 1973 which incorporated Ss. 227 and 209 and omitted Ss. 207 and 207-A existing in old CrPC of 1898, taken note of — Submission that the above interpretation of Ss. 227 and 239 would run the risk of those provisions being declared ultra vires Arts. 14 and 21 of the Constitution as it would compel the accused to face trial despite being in a position to produce unimpeachable and unassailable material to show his innocence at the stage of framing of charge, held, not acceptable — Constitution of India, Arts. 21, 14 and 226

Can the trial court at the time of framing of charge consider material filed by the accused, was the point for determination in these matters.

Answering the said question in the negative, Held :

The law is that at the time of framing charge or taking cognizance the accused has no right to produce any material. No provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (for short the "Code") grants to the accused any right to file any material or document at the stage of framing of charge. That right is granted only at the stage of the trial. Satish Mehra case, (1996) 9 SCC 766 holding that the trial court has powers to consider even materials which the accused may produce at the stage of Section 227 of the Code has not been correctly decided. It is well settled that at the stage of framing of charge the defence of the accused cannot be put forth. The acceptance of the contention of the accused would mean permitting the accused to adduce his defence at the stage of framing of charge and for examination thereof at that stage which is against the criminal jurisprudence. (Paras 23, 8, 27 and 18)

In the old Code of 1898 there was no provision similar to Section 227 of the new Code of 1973. Section 227 was incorporated in the 1973 Code with a view to save the accused from prolonged harassment which is a necessary concomitant of a protracted criminal trial. It is calculated to eliminate harassment to accused persons when the evidential materials gathered after investigation fall short of minimum legal requirements. If the evidence even if fully accepted cannot show that the accused committed the offence, the accused deserves to be discharged. In the old Code, the procedure as contained in Sections 207 and 207-A was fairly lengthy. The aforesaid Sections 207 and 207-A have been omitted from the 1973 Code and a new Section 209 enacted on the recommendation of the Law Commission contained in its 41st Report. It was realised that the commitment inquiry under the old Code was resulting in inordinate delay and served no useful purpose. That inquiry has, therefore, been dispensed with in the 1973 Code with the object of expeditious disposal of cases. Instead of the committal Magistrate framing the charge, it is now to be framed by the Court of Session under Section 228 in case the accused is not discharged under Section 227. This change brought out in the 1973 Code is also required to be kept in view while determining the question. Under the 1973 Code, the evidence can be taken only after framing of charge. At the stage of framing of charge roving and fishing inquiry is impermissible. If the contention of the accused is accepted, there would be a mini-trial at the stage of framing of charge. That would defeat the object of the Code of Criminal Procedure. (Paras 9 and 18)

The reliance placed by the accused on Articles 14 and 21 is misplaced. Regarding the argument of the accused having to face the trial despite being in a position to produce material of unimpeachable character of sterling quality, the width of the powers of the High Court under Section 482 CrPC and Article 226 of the Constitution is unlimited whereunder in the interests of justice the High Court can make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice within the parameters laid down in Bhajan Lal case, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335. (Paras 18 and 29). State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 2005 SC 359: (2005) 1 KLT 80: (2005) 99 Cut LT 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, D.M. Dharmadhikari and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-2004]

Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, overruled

Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W.B. v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; State of Delhi v. Gyan Devi, (2000) 8 SCC 239: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1486; State of M.P. v. S.B. Johari, (2000) 2 SCC 57: 2000 SCC (Cri) 311; State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, (1997) 4 SCC 393: 1997 SCC (Cri) 584; State Anti-Corruption Bureau v. P. Suryaprakasam, 1999 SCC (Cri) 373; Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI, (2000) 5 SCC 679: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014, relied on

Minakshi Bala v. Sudhir Kumar, (1994) 4 SCC 142: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1181; P.S. Rajya v. State of Bihar, (1996) 9 SCC 1: 1996 SCC (Cri) 897; State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, (2000) 6 SCC 338: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1110, explained and distinguished on facts

Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI, (2000) 5 SCC 679: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014, distinguished and held obiter dicta

Followed in Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609

[2769] — Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 482 — Consideration of material produced by the defence at the stage of taking cognizance or framing of charges — Power of trial court — Referring to relevant provisions contained in CrPC as well as various decisions of the Supreme Court including the one made by the three-Judge Bench in Anil Kumar Bhunja case, (1979) 4 SCC 274 Supreme Court taking the view that there is no requirement in law that the court at the time of framing charge should either give an opportunity to the accused to produce evidence in defence or consider such evidence the defence may produce at that stage — But in view of the fact that the Supreme Court in Satish Mehra case, (1996) 9 SCC 766 despite taking notice of the said three-Judge Bench judgment, had taken somewhat different view, held, it would be appropriate that the matter should be referred to a larger Bench (Paras 7, 11 and 12). State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2003) 2 SCC 711: 2003 SCC (Cri) 688: AIR 2003 SC 1512: 2003 Cri LJ 1517.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-2-2003]

Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W.B. v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038; Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad v. Dilip Nathumal Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715: 1989 SCC (Cri) 285; Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47; Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; G.L. Didwania v. ITO, 1995 Supp (2) SCC 724; Secy., Hailakandi Bar Assn. v. State of Assam, (1996) 9 SCC 74: 1996 SCC (Cri) 921; Uttam Chand v. ITO, (1982) 2 SCC 543: 1982 SCC (Tax) 150, considered

Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, doubted

Matter finally decided in State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568*

[2770] — Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 & 226 and 482 — Framing of charge — Whether there was sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused — Test to be applied — Court not debarred from looking into any material produced by the accused at that stage — Hearing of accused not confined to oral arguments — Accusation by wife against her husband that he molested their infant child — Wife's attitude towards her husband found to be vengeful — In the circumstances of the case, possibility of the wife manipulating child's genitals in order to concoct medical evidence against the accused cannot be ruled out — Proceedings and charge framed by the Sessions Judge quashed and accused discharged — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 354 and 376/511

The appellant and his wife Anita were living in New York ever since their marriage. Before and after the birth of the children relationship between husband and wife was far from cordial. Husband alleged that his wife, in conspiracy with her father, had siphoned off a whopping sum from his bank deposits in India by forging his signature. He also alleged that his wife is suffering from some peculiar psychiatric condition. He approached a court at New York for securing custody of his children. On 31-10-1992 his wife left his house with the children and then filed a complaint with Saffolk Country Police Station (United States) alleging that her husband had sexually abused Nikita who was then aged four. United States police at the local level moved into action, but after conducting detailed investigation concluded that the allegations of incestuous abuse were untrue. The appellant's wife returned to India with her children. In the meanwhile Family

Court at New York has ordered that custody of the children be given to the husband and a warrant of arrest was issued against Anita for implementation of the said order. The appellant's wife came back to India and lodged an FIR on 14-8-1993 against her husband who had returned to India on 12-7-1993 and had filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus for securing the custody of the children. On the basis of the FIR filed by the wife a case was charge-sheeted by the police. The Sessions Judge framed charges on two counts. First count in the charge was that appellant had outraged the modesty of his minor daughter aged about 3 years sometime during March and July 1991 at New Delhi by fondling with her vagina and also by inserting a bottle into it and thereby committed the offence under Section 354 of the IPC. Second count in the charge was that he made an attempt to commit rape on the said infant child (time and place being the same) and thereby committed the offence under Section 376 read with Section 511 of the IPC.

Allowing the appeal by the special leave,

Held :

Consideration which should weigh with the Sessions Court at the stage of framing of charge have been well designed by Parliament through Section 227 CrPC. Section 228 contemplates the stage after the case survives the stage envisaged in the former section. When the court is of opinion that there is ground to presume that the accused has committed an offence the procedure laid down therein has to be adopted. When those two sections are put in juxtaposition with each other the test to be adopted becomes discernible: Is there sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused? It is axiomatic that the standard of proof normally adhered to at the final stage is not to be applied at the stage where the scope of consideration is where there is "sufficient ground for proceeding".

An incidental question which emerges in this context is whether the Sessions Judge can look into any material other than those produced by the prosecution. Section 226 of the Code obliges the prosecution to describe the charge brought against the accused and to state by what evidence the guilt of the accused would be proved. The next provision enjoins on the Sessions Judge to decide whether there is sufficient ground to proceed against the accused. In so deciding the Judge has to consider (1) the record of the case, and (2) the documents produced therewith. He has then to hear the submissions of the accused as well as the prosecution on the limited question whether there is sufficient ground to proceed. What is the scope of hearing the submissions? Should it be confined to hearing oral arguments alone?

Similar situation arises under Section 239 of the Code (which deals with trial of warrant cases on police report). In that situation the Magistrate has to afford the prosecution and the accused an opportunity of being heard besides considering the police report and the documents sent therewith. At these two stages the Code enjoins on the court to give audience to the accused for deciding whether it is necessary to proceed to the next stage. It is a matter of exercise of judicial mind. There is nothing in the Code which shrinks the scope of such audience to oral arguments. If the accused succeeds in producing any reliable material at that stage which might fatally affect even the very sustainability of the case, it is unjust to suggest that no such material shall be looked into by the court at that stage. Here the 'ground' may be any valid ground including insufficiency of evidence to prove the charge.

The object of providing such an opportunity as is envisaged in Section 227 of the Code is to enable the court to decide whether it is necessary to proceed to conduct the trial. If the case ends there it gains a lot of time of the court and saves much human efforts and cost. If the materials produced by the accused even at that early stage would clinch the issue, why should the court shut it out saying that such documents need be produced only after wasting a lot more time in the name of trial proceedings. Hence, the Sessions Judge would be within his powers to consider even materials which the accused may produce at the stage contemplated in Section 227 of the Code.

But when the Judge is fairly certain that there is no prospect of the case ending in conviction the valuable time of the court should not be wasted for holding a trial only for the purpose of formally completing the procedure to pronounce the conclusion on a future date. Most of the Sessions Courts in India are under heavy pressure of workload. If the Sessions Judge is almost certain that the trial would only be an exercise in futility or a sheer waste of time it is advisable to truncate or snip the proceedings at the stage of Section 227 of the Code itself.

In the instant case the complaint made by the wife with the New York police that her husband committed sexual offences against her 18 months' old female child was investigated by the New York police who found the complaint bereft of truth hook, line and sinker. The present charge is that the appellant committed such offences against the same child at New Delhi sometime during March to July 1991. There is now no case of what happened in United States. The Sessions Judge should have noted that appellant's wife has not even remotely alleged in the complaint filed by her on 19-3-1993 before CAW Cell, New Delhi that the appellant has done anything like that while he was in India. Even the other complaint petition (on which basis the FIR was prepared) is totally silent about a case that the appellant did anything against his daughter anywhere in India.

Her attitude to the appellant, even dehors the allegation involving the child, was vengeful. The Court can take into account the assertion of the petitioner that the present story involving the child was concocted by his wife to wreak her vengeance by embroiling him in serious criminal cases in India so that he could be nailed down here and prevent him from going back to USA.

Even overlooking all the inherent infirmities shrouding the testimony of a tiny tot speaking about what her father did when she was aged 3 and even ignoring the appellant's persistent submission that the little child was briskly tutored by her mother to speak to the present version, there is no reasonable prospect of the Sessions Court relying on such a testimony to reach the conclusion that the prosecution succeeded in proving the offence charged beyond all reasonable doubt.

Therefore, the proceedings and the charge framed by the Sessions Judge are quashed and the appellant is discharged. Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-1996]

Doubted in State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2003) 2 SCC 711, 715*

Finally overruled in State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568*

Held, overruled in Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609*

[2771] — S. 227 — Material produced by the defence at stage of cognizance or framing of charges — Power of trial court to consider — Held, per Katju, J. (Kabir, J. concurring), it cannot be said as an absolute proposition that under no circumstances can the court look into the material produced by the defence at the time of framing of the charges, though this should be done in very rare cases i.e. where the defence produces some material which convincingly demonstrates that the whole prosecution case is totally absurd or totally concocted — Per Kabir, J., there is no scope for the accused to produce any evidence in support of the submissions made on his behalf at the stage of framing of charge and only such materials as are indicated in S. 227 CrPC can be taken into consideration by the Magistrate at that stage — In a proceeding taken therefrom under S. 482 CrPC the court is free to consider material that may be produced on behalf of the accused to arrive at a decision whether the charge as framed could be maintained — This appears to be the intention of the legislature in wording Ss. 227 and 228 the way in which they have been worded and as explained in Debendra Nath Padhi case, (2005) 1 SCC 568 by the larger Bench therein to which the very same question had been referred

Disposing of the appeal in terms below,

Held :

Per Katju, J.

Judgment of the High Court cannot be sustained so far as it has quashed the complaint and proceedings against accused husband R, but it has to be sustained so far as it relates to his wife V. (Para 10)

While there were certain rulings of two-Judge Benches of this Court, which had held that the findings in a civil suit are binding in a criminal case on the same facts but not vice versa, this view appears to have been somewhat watered down in the subsequent decisions of the larger Benches of this Court. The law as to when criminal proceedings can be quashed by the High Court in exercise of powers under Section 482 CrPC or Article 226 of the Constitution has been laid down by the Supreme Court. (Paras 12 and 13)

The allegations in the FIR if treated to be correct prima facie make out an offence against the respondent's husband R. (Para 14)

An appeal is pending against the judgment in the civil suit. The evidence of D is a very detailed one and some contradictory statements appear to have been given by him e.g. that the amount was paid by R as a loan, and this contradicts the version that the money was paid as a sale consideration. In the judgment of the civil court it has been held that undue influence cannot be ruled out. In these circumstances it cannot be said that at this stage the proceedings in the criminal case were totally mala fide and with ulterior motive. (Para 17)

The pleas which the respondent R took before the High Court could be taken by him at the time of the trial, and it would not be proper to pre-empt the criminal proceeding at this stage. Serious allegations have been made against him in the FIR. The relation of a lawyer and his client is like a fiduciary relationship, and the lawyer has to act in the interest of his client. However, it is alleged in the FIR that R deceived the complainant and her husband. These are matters which the trial court in the criminal case should look into, and no opinion is being expressed either way on this question. However, this was not a fit case for quashing of the criminal proceedings against R in exercise of the powers under Section 482 CrPC or Article 226 of the Constitution. (Para 18)

In Debendra Nath Padhi case, (2005) 1 SCC 568 it has been observed that the width of the powers of the High Court under Section 482 CrPC and Article 226 of the Constitution is unlimited whereunder in the interests of justice the High Court can make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of the Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice within the parameters laid down in Bhajan Lal case, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335. (Para 20)

It is well settled that a judgment of the Court has not to be treated as Euclid's formula. While it is true that ordinarily defence material cannot be looked into by the court while framing of the charge in view of Debendra Nath Padhi case, (2005) 1 SCC 568 there may be some very rare and exceptional cases where some defence material when shown to the trial court would convincingly demonstrate that the prosecution version is totally absurd or preposterous, and in such very rare cases the defence material can be looked into by the court at the time of framing of the charges or taking cognizance. It cannot be said as an absolute proposition that under no circumstances can the court look into the material produced by the defence at the time of framing of the charges, though this should be done in very rare cases i.e. where the defence produces some material which convincingly demonstrates that the whole prosecution case is totally absurd or totally concocted. (Paras 21 and 22)

In this case it cannot be said that the evidence in the civil suit which was produced by the defence before the trial court established convincingly that the prosecution case is totally absurd or preposterous. This is a matter which has to be looked into by the trial court. However, the trial court will not be influenced by any observations made in this judgment. (Paras 23 and 25)

As regards the other criminal appeal in which V, wife of R, is the respondent, there is no material whatsoever either mentioned in the FIR or produced by the prosecution to show that V was in any way involved in the alleged criminal offence committed by her husband R. The only allegation against her is that the sale deed was in her favour. This does not prima facie make out any offence. Criminal proceeding against V was rightly quashed by the High Court. (Para 26)

Per Kabir, J. (concurring)

Section 227 CrPC, which is in Chapter XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which deals with trials before a Court of Session, relates to the opening stages of a trial at the time of framing of charge against the accused which is done under Section 228. The aforesaid provision has fallen for consideration of this Court in several cases on the question as to whether at the stage of framing of charge, the court in seisin of the matter is required to consider any material, other than that indicated in the section. (Paras 29 and 30)

Till 1996, the consistent view which had been taken by the Supreme Court was that at the time of framing of charge the trial court can consider only such materials as are placed by the investigating agency having regard to the very language of Section 227. At that stage, the defence could only be heard but could not be given an opportunity to produce evidence for the consideration of the court. However, a different view was expressed by a two-Judge Bench of this Court in Satish Mehra case, (1996) 9 SCC 766. It was because of this discordant note that in Debendra Nath Padhi case, (2005) 1 SCC 568 an order was passed referring the said question to a larger Bench and the same was taken up for consideration in the said case itself by a three-Judge Bench. (Para 31)

It may be noted that no provision in the Code gives the accused the right to file any material or document at the stage of framing of charge. The right is only granted at the stage of the trial. (Para 33)

The larger Bench (in Debendra Nath Padhi case) made a conscious distinction between a proceeding under Section 227 CrPC before the trial court and a proceeding under Section 482 CrPC and made a reference to the Court's power to consider material other than those produced by the prosecution in a proceeding under Section 482 CrPC. While holding that the decision rendered in Satish Mehra case, (1996) 9 SCC 766 was erroneous, the larger Bench held that if the submission that the accused would be entitled to produce materials and documents in proof of his innocence at the stage of framing of charge, was to be accepted, it would be unsettling a law well settled over a hundred years. Section 227 only means hearing the submissions of the accused on the records of the case filed by the prosecution and documents submitted therewith and nothing more. The larger Bench arrived at a definite conclusion that the expression "hearing the submissions of the accused" cannot mean an opportunity to file material to be granted to the accused and thereby changing the settled law. At the stage of framing of charge, hearing the submissions of the accused has to be confined to the material produced by the police. (Para 36)

The larger Bench (in Debendra Nath Padhi case) did not leave any scope for a different interpretation of the provisions of Section 227 as is now being made. However, the larger Bench did indicate that the width of the powers of the High Court under Section 482 CrPC and Article 226 of the Constitution is unlimited whereunder in the interest of justice the High Court could make such order as may be required to secure the ends of justice and to prevent abuse of the process of any court. (Para 37)

There is no scope for the accused to produce any evidence in support of the submissions made on his behalf at the stage of framing of charge and only such materials as are indicated in Section 227 CrPC can be taken into consideration by the Magistrate at that stage. However, in a proceeding taken therefrom under Section 482 CrPC the court is free to consider material that may be produced on behalf of the accused to arrive at a decision whether the charge as framed could be maintained. This appears to be the intention of the legislature in wording Sections 227 and 228 the way in which they have been worded and as explained in Debendra Nath Padhi case by the larger Bench therein to which the very same question had been referred. (Para 38)

The complaint made in this case does make out a prima facie case against the accused R and the cognizance taken by the Magistrate cannot be faulted and the appeal as far as he is concerned, must be allowed. However, even prima facie, none of the offences referred to in the charge-sheet can be made out against the accused V and she has been roped in only with the aid of Section 120-B which is also not substantiated. The appeal as far as she is concerned, must be dismissed. (Para 39). Rukmini Narvekar v. Vijaya Satardekar, (2008) 14 SCC 1. Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir[2] and Markandey Katju[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415, followed

Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, held, overruled

[2772] — Ss. 227 & 228, 401 & 397 and 482 — Discharge — Court has only to see whether prima facie there was sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused — It cannot appreciate the evidence to arrive at a conclusion in the matter — On facts, held, High Court in revision erred in quashing the charge framed against the accused by trial court by appreciating the material produced by the prosecution and on that basis deciding that accused was not guilty — Constitution of India, Article 226 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(1)(d) and 5(2)

An FIR was lodged alleging that the accused respondents, viz. the Dean, the Superintendent, the Medical-Officer-in-Charge of Stores, and the Accountant of S.G. Cancer Hospital, Indore entered into criminal conspiracy with some local businessmen in purchase of medicines for the said Hospital by misusing their posts and also by using some forged documents that caused wrongful loss to the Government. It was alleged that though many of the items had not been purchased, amount was paid on bogus vouchers. On the basis of the material on record, it was pointed out that some medicines were purchased at Jabalpur at lesser price, roughly at half the rate. After considering the material on record, the Sessions Judge framed the charge. That charge was quashed by the High Court against the respondents by accepting the contention raised and considering the details of the material produced on record. The High Court observed that the role of the Medical-Officer-in-Charge in purchase of the medicines was limited to the extent that he prepared only a comparative statement of tenders and that the other two persons were members of the Purchase Committee. The Court arrived at the conclusion that comparison of different prices at different places at different periods on the basis of different transactions between different persons cannot straight away be made the basis for alleging corruption or corrupt practice on the part of the accused. The Court further observed that the trial court had not properly appreciated that there was a difference of about 550 miles between Jabalpur and Indore and therefore price difference in purchase of medicines would be there. The Court also held that the medicines were purchased at two places during different periods and therefore also, there would be a price difference. With regard to the Dean and the Superintendent, the Court observed that they were not shown to have any control over the purchase of the goods and, therefore, they cannot be saddled with the criminal prosecution. The Court further considered that as per the statement of the manufacturing company the quotations given by M/s Allied Medicine Agency, Indore were genuine and, therefore, held that charges levelled against the respondents cannot stand for a minute. Similarly, dealing with the contention of the respondent Accountant, the High Court observed that it cannot be disputed that the respondent had prepared the bills on account of instructions given to him by his superiors, and that on his own account he could not have prepared the said bills for making payment to the Company. The Court also observed that he was neither empowered to place orders nor competent to make payment thereof unless the same was approved by the doctors who were actually in charge of the Hospital. The Court, therefore, held that there was no sufficient material available for framing the charge against him.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

The aforesaid exercise of appreciating the materials produced by the prosecution at the stage of framing of the charge is wholly unjustified. The entire approach of the High Court appears to be as if the Court was deciding the case as to whether the accused are guilty or not. It was done without considering the allegations of conspiracy relating to the charge under Section 120-B. In most of the cases, it is only from the available circumstantial evidence an inference of conspiracy is to be drawn. Further, the High Court failed to consider that medicines are normally sold at a fixed price and in any set of circumstances, it was for the prosecution to lead necessary evidence at the time of trial to establish its case that purchase of medicines for the Cancer Hospital at Indore was at a much higher price than the prevailing market rate. Further again non-joining of the two remaining members to the Purchase Committee cannot be a ground for quashing the charge. After framing the charge and recording the evidence, if the Court finds that other members of the Purchase Committee were also involved, it is open to the Court to exercise its power under Section 319 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Not only that, the Court erroneously considered the alleged statement of the manufacturing company that quotations given by M/s Allied Medicine Agency, Indore were genuine without there being any cross-examination. The High Court ignored the allegation that many of the items have not been purchased and the amount was paid on bogus vouchers. Hence, there was no justifiable reason for the High Court to quash the charge framed by the trial court. (Para 6)

The entire approach of the High Court is illegal and erroneous. From the reasons recorded by the High Court, it appears that instead of considering the prima facie case, the High Court has appreciated and weighed the materials on record for coming to the conclusion that charge against the respondents could not have been framed. It is settled law that at the stage of framing the charge, the court has to prima facie consider whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. The court is not required to appreciate the evidence and arrive at the conclusion that the materials produced are sufficient or not for convicting the accused. If the court is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out for proceeding further then a charge has to be framed. The charge can be quashed if the evidence which the prosecutor proposes to adduce to prove the guilt of the accused, even if fully accepted before it is challenged by cross-examination or rebutted by defence evidence, if any, cannot show that the accused committed the particular offence. In such case, there would be no sufficient ground for proceeding with the trial. (Para 4). State of M.P. v. S.B. Johari, (2000) 2 SCC 57: 2000 SCC (Cri) 311: AIR 2000 SC 665: 2000 Cri LJ 944.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-1-2000]

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjayya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, relied on

[2773] — Ss. 227 & 228(1) and 239 & 240(1) — Scope of inquiry by court at the stage of framing of charges against accused restated

At the stage of framing of the charge the court has to consider the material with a view to find out if there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence or that there is not sufficient ground for proceeding against him and not for the purpose of arriving at the conclusion that it is not likely to lead to a conviction. The court has to prima facie consider whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. The court is not required to appreciate evidence to conclude whether the materials produced are sufficient or not for convicting the accused. Each case depends upon its particular facts and circumstances and sometimes even a remote link between the activities of an accused and the facts of the case may justify a reasonable inference warranting a judicial finding that there is ground for presuming that an accused has committed the offence or at least to presume that the question of his being directly or indirectly involved in the commission of such offence is not to be ruled out. (Paras 9 to 11). Suresh v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 3 SCC 703: 2001 SCC (Cri) 621: AIR 2001 SC 1375: 2001 Cri LJ 1697.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-3-2001]

State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, (1997) 4 SCC 393: 1997 SCC (Cri) 584; Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47; State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, (2000) 6 SCC 338: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1110, relied on

Rudolf Fernandes v. State of Goa, 1993 Mah LJ 1664, approved

[2774] — S. 227 — Discharge — Supreme Court interfering on facts and setting aside the proceedings before the Court of Session — Plea of accused that continuance of the proceedings before the appropriate court in the manner prescribed in law would serve no useful purpose in view of the long passage of time, held, had no substance — It was for the competent court to decide the action to be taken next — Accused directed to raise all their contentions at that stage if they wanted to make a plea for discharge (Para 18). Moly v. State of Kerala, (2004) 4 SCC 584: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1348: AIR 2004 SC 1890: 2004 Cri LJ 1812.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-2004]

[2775] — Ss. 227, 239, 399 and 401 — Corruption — Need for expedition in disposal of proceedings relating to — Discharge for alleged offences committed in relation to — Revision application filed by accused for non-allowance of discharge — Need for expedition in disposal of such proceedings

The challenge in the writ petition was essentially to the appointment of Respondent 3 Ms Neera Yadav as Chief Secretary of the State of Uttar Pradesh. It was contended by the petitioner that it was a prestigious appointment and looking to the tainted reputation and doubtful integrity of Respondent 3, she should not have been appointed as a Chief Secretary, particularly when criminal cases were pending and a Commission had been appointed by the Supreme Court to look into the various aspects, including the correctness of the decision to drop disciplinary proceedings against Respondent 3.

Held :

CBI obtained sanction to prosecute Respondent 3 Neera Yadav, from the Central Government and filed charge-sheets before the Special Judge, CBI. After the charge-sheets were filed Respondent 3 made an application for discharge under the provisions of CrPC, which was rejected. While rejecting the prayer for discharge, the Special Judge directed framing of charges. The order rejecting the prayer for discharge is currently under challenge before the High Court in Criminal Revision No. 2284 of 2004. It appears from the order passed by the High Court directing stay of further proceedings, that the primary question before it related to absence of sanction in terms of Section 197 CrPC. Considering the passage of time, the matters should be decided as early as practicable. The High Court is requested to ensure that Criminal Revision No. 2284 of 2004 is disposed of within a period of 3 months from the date of receipt of this order. (Paras 3 and 13). Centre for Public Interest Litigation v. Union of India, (2005) 8 SCC 202: AIR 2005 SC 4413: (2005) 128 Comp Cas 387.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Ruma Pal, Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-10-2005]

[2776] — Ss. 227, 228 and 482 — Quashing of charge — Propriety — Two dying declarations, one recorded by SDM and other by Executive Magistrate — High Court set aside the order of framing charge by preferring one dying declaration to that of other — Appreciation or marshalling of evidence, held, not permissible at the time of framing of charge — Even strong suspicion is enough to frame charge, restated

The deceased DK was a dumb lady. When she went to the land of the respondents, she was caught and set on fire after pouring kerosene on her. The appellant husband was attracted by the fire and brought her to the hospital. On the same day itself, her dying declaration based on signs was recorded by the Executive Magistrate. DK identified the respondents herein. In a subsequent dying declaration recorded by SDM, DK named some other persons and also identified them. The trial court's order of framing charges against the respondents was set aside by the High Court in a criminal revision filed by the respondents wherein DK is said to be deaf and paralytic. The husband of the deceased DK challenged the order of discharge passed by the High Court.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The jurisdiction of the learned Sessions Judge while exercising power under Section 227 CrPC is limited. Charges can also be framed on the basis of strong suspicion. Marshalling and appreciation of evidence is not in the domain of the Court at that point of time. (Para 13)

The observation of the High Court that the deceased was both deaf and dumb is not based on any material. Apart from the other materials on record, even the respondents in their memo of revision had described the deceased merely as a dumb and paralytic person and not a deaf person. Furthermore, it was not the stage where the High Court should prefer one dying declaration to that of the other. (Para 15). Palwinder Singh v. Balwinder Singh, (2008) 14 SCC 504.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-10-008]

State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on

[2777] — S. 227 — Highly incriminating circumstances — Discharge if justified — If established by the prosecution it will, in the light of the supporting circumstances, make out a prima facie case against the accused — Onus thereupon will shift on the accused — Order of discharge under S. 227, CrPC ignoring such and other incriminating circumstances not justified — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 106

The accused and his deceased wife was last seen together going to a hut. Later the accused was seen leaving the hut with blood-stained clothes on his person and going to the police station for confession. The deceased was found dead inside the hut. The Sessions Court passed a discharge order under S. 227, CrPC and the High Court confirmed the same.

Held :

The circumstances proved by the prosecution (1) of being last seen together, and (2) accused emerging with blood-stained clothes were highly incriminating in nature and make out a prima facie case against the accused for the charge of murder. It would be for the accused then to explain how death ensued inside the hut as also the incriminating circumstances. The mere fact that previously the deceased was seen in the company of another person did not cast any doubt on the evidence of her being last seen together with the accused. There was thus sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. Therefore, the Sessions Court was not justified in passing the discharge order under S. 227, CrPC and the High Court erred in confirming that order. State of Karnataka v. Khaja Hussain, (1982) 3 SCC 456: 1983 SCC (Cri) 82.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-11-1982]

[2778] — Ss. 227, 397, 401 and 482 — Discharge petition of appellant-accused, A-3 (retired IPS officer) under S. 227, dismissed by courts below — Propriety — Case of alleged fake encounter of a Naxalite with police — After about 28 years, on newspapers reporting aforesaid encounter to be fake, several writ petitions filed before High Court, praying for transfer of investigation to CBI — In said proceedings, extra-judicial confession in the form of counter-affidavit filed by Constable R (A-1, since deceased), was made, confessing that he shot aforesaid Naxalite on instruction of the then DSP (A-2) and that appellant-accused (A-3) was present when incident occurred — On basis of aforesaid counter-affidavit, High Court directed CBI to register FIR, which ultimately led to trial court framing charge regarding appellant under Ss. 302/34 IPC and dismissing his discharge petition under S. 227 CrPC, which order was affirmed by High Court in revision — Sustainability — Held, admissibility, probative value, reliability, etc. of extra-judicial confession in the form of counter-affidavit made by A-1 before High Court, are all matters to be considered at time of trial — After evaluating materials produced by prosecution and after considering probability of case, trial court being satisfied by existence of sufficient grounds against appellant, framed charge under Ss. 302/34 IPC and because of same, it dismissed discharge petition — Whether materials at hands of prosecution were sufficient or not are matters for trial — At this stage, it cannot be claimed by appellant that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against him and discharge is the only course open — Further, whether trial will end in conviction or acquittal is also immaterial — All these relevant aspects were carefully considered by High Court and it rightly affirmed order passed by trial court dismissing discharge petition filed by appellant — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 30 (Paras 24 and 26). P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-2010]

Hardeep Singh Sohal v. State of Punjab, (2004) 11 SCC 612: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 137, considered

[2779] — S. 227 — Discharge against changes under TADA — Allegation of propagating pro-Khalistan cult among Sikh community and organising force threatening the Govt. with dire consequences under pretext of championing cause of Sikh community — Held, prima facie provisions of the Act attracted on the basis of such allegation — Hence Designated Court erred in discharging the accused of the charges under the Act — TADA, 1987, Ss. 3(3) and 4(3), 5, 6. State of A.P. v. S. Eshar Singh, (1993) 1 SCC 440: 1993 SCC (Cri) 338: AIR 1993 SC 1374: 1993 Cri LJ 1028.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1992]

[2780] — Ss. 227 and 245 — Discharge justified where dispute of a civil nature — Withholding property of company wrongfully — Criminal complaint, on facts, not maintainable — Dispute really of a civil nature — Accused granted rent-free accommodation as part of conditions of employment contained in an agreement which containing clauses stipulating employee's right to retain flat in certain circumstances such as termination within a particular period — Upon termination employee refusing to hand over possession — Employer company though not itself the lessee of the property filing complaint under S. 630, Companies Act, 1956 and Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 408, 409 — Magistrate discharging accused on the ground that the complaint and the material on record disclosed that the dispute was really of a civil nature — Held, on facts, High Court in revision erred in quashing Magistrate's order of discharge and remanding case — Companies Act, 1956, S. 630. Jagdish Chandra Nijhawan v. S.K. Saraf, (1999) 1 SCC 119: 1999 SCC (Cri) 20: AIR 1999 SC 217: (1999) 95 Comp Cas 48: (1999) 1 LLJ 295.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-11-1998]

[2781] — Ss. 227 and 482 — Consort in live-in relationship with husband of complainant — Liability under S. 498-A, if any — Appellant was living with accused husband of complainant, allegedly as his wife — Appellant prayed for discharge, as she could not be made an accused under S. 498-A since she was not a relative of M (husband of complainant) — Held, S. 498-A being a penal provision, deserves strict construction — Neither a girlfriend nor concubine is a relative of husband within meaning of S. 498-A IPC — Appellant discharged — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A (Paras 15 and 16). Sunita Jha v. State of Jharkhand, (2010) 10 SCC 190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-9-2010]

U. Suvetha v. State, (2009) 6 SCC 757: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 36, applied

[2782] — S. 227 — Applicability — Conspiracy — Existence of reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence, held, is a condition precedent to the applicability of S. 10, Evidence Act, 1892 — However, even at the stage covered by S. 227 CrPC the court can consider the materials relating to what an accused would have said, done or written with reference to the common intention between the accused for deciding whether there is a reasonable ground to believe that the accused in question could be one of the conspirators — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 10 (Para 16). State of T.N. v. J. Jayalalitha, (2000) 5 SCC 440: 2000 SCC (Cri) 981: AIR 2000 SC 1589.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.C. Lahoti, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-2000]

[2783] — Ss. 227, 228, 216 and 221 — Prima facie case of cheating and money circulation against the appellant-accused — Courts not interfering at the stage of framing of charge, held, justified

On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the courts below were right in not interfering with the prosecution at the stage of framing of charge. It is no doubt, true, that the above orders do not mean that the accused have committed such offences. It only means that a prima facie case has been made out to frame charge and at that stage, no interference is called for. (Paras 44 and 49). Kuriachan Chacko v. State of Kerala, (2008) 8 SCC 708: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 631.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-2008]

— S. 228 See also S. 271, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1124 in Vol. 2

— S. 228 See Ss. 91, 227, 228, 239 and 240
See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250
See also Ss. 190, 211 and 228
See also Ss. 197, 227 and 228
See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465
See also Ss. 204, 203, 227, 228 and 190
See also Ss. 204, 228 and 240
See also Ss. 207, 238, 228 & 240 and S. 227
See also Ss. 209, 319, 2(g), 227 and 228
See also Ss. 215, 173, 220 and 228
See also Ss. 215 and 228
See also Ss. 227 and 228
See also Ss. 227, 228, 67 and 407
See also Ss. 227, 228 and 209
See also Ss. 227, 228, 216 and 221
See also Ss. 227, 228 and 219
See also Ss. 227 & 228, 239 & 240, 91 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 & 226 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 245
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228 and 401
See also Ss. 227 & 228, 401 & 397 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 239 & 245 and 228 & 240
See also Ss. 239 & 240 and 227 & 228
See also Ss. 239 & 240 and 228
See also Ss. 240 and 228
See also Ss. 240, 228, 238, 227 and 482
See also Ss. 313, 228, 374 and 386
See also Ss. 313, 229, 228 and 226
See also S. 319 r/w Ss. 209 and 193, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231 and 482
See also Ss. 321, 228, 240 & 173

See also Ss. 386 and 227, 228
See also Ss. 401 & 397 and 227 & 228
See also Ss. 401, 397 and 228
See also Ss. 439 and 228
See also Ss. 464, 211, 216 and 228
See also Ss. 464, 218 and 228
See also Ss. 464 and 228
See also Ss. 482, 173(8) and 228
See also Ss. 482, 190, 228, 240 & 246
See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247
See also Ss. 482 and 228
See also Ss. 482, 228 and 240
See also Ss. 482, 309, 228 and 240
See also Ss. 482, 397, 227 & 228

[2784] — S. 228 — Framing of charge — Findings regarding sufficiency or otherwise of the material to frame charge — Proper stage — Sessions Court framing a charge under S. 304 Pt. II IPC indicating conclusive opinion as to the sufficiency of material to establish charge punishable under that section — High Court in the criminal application filed thereagainst giving a finding as to non-existence of sufficient material to frame such a charge and proceeding to frame charge under S. 304-A — Held, arguments regarding framing of proper charge can only be decided by the trial court at an appropriate stage of the trial — More so, when neither of the sides were prejudiced by framing of charge under either section — Further held, by virtue of such premature finding of the High Court, the prosecution case gets pre-empted to that extent since during the course of trial even if the Magistrate comes to a different conclusion it may not be possible to pass appropriate orders — Constitution of India, Arts. 226 and 227

The respondent-accused was charged with rash and negligent driving under the influence of alcohol without holding a motor driving licence and in spite of being cautioned by the complainant failing to control the speed of vehicle, thus resulting in death of one person and causing grievous injuries to four others who happened to be sleeping on the footpath. The respondent accordingly was charged with offences under Sections 304-A, 279, 337, 338, 427 IPC and Sections 134(a) and (b) read with Sections 181 and 185 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1988 as also under Section 66(1)(b) of the Bombay Prohibition Act triable by a court of Magistrate of competent jurisdiction. A few days later the charge-sheet came to be modified based on the additional statement of the complainant and instead of Section 304-A IPC, Section 304 Part II IPC was substituted which is an offence exclusively triable by the Court of Session and hence the learned Magistrate who took cognizance of the offence committed the case to the Court of Session for trial. The respondent thereafter filed criminal application in the Sessions Court alleging that the facts as narrated in the complaint did not constitute an offence punishable under Section 304 Part II IPC and if at all, only a charge under Section 304-A could be framed against him apart from other offences triable by the Court of Magistrate. The said application was rejected and charges were framed one of which was for an offence punishable under Section 304 Part II IPC. Being aggrieved thereby, the respondent preferred criminal application under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court which by the impugned order allowed the same and directed the appropriate Magistrate's Court to frame de novo charges under various sections mentioned in the impugned order including the one under Section 304-A IPC. Hence the present appeal by the State.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

In the present case, the Sessions Court had come to the conclusion that evidence adduced is sufficient to frame a charge under Section 304 Part II IPC, along with the other charges while the High Court seem to have expressed a conclusive opinion that offence under Section 304-A IPC alone could be framed, along with the other charges. Neither of the sides would have been in any manner prejudiced in the trial by framing of a charge either under Section 304-A or Section 304 Part II IPC except for the fact that the forum trying the charge might have been different, which by itself, would not have caused prejudice to any party. This is because at any stage of the trial it would have been open to the court concerned to have altered the charge appropriately depending on the material that is brought before it in the form of evidence. But now by virtue of the impugned judgment of the High Court, even if in the course of the trial the Magistrate were to come to the conclusion that there is sufficient material to charge the respondent for a more serious offence than the one punishable under Section 304-A, it will not be possible for it to pass appropriate order. To that extent the prosecution case gets pre-empted. (Paras 7, 8 and 11). State of Maharashtra v. Salman Salim Khan, (2004) 1 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 337: AIR 2004 SC 1189: 2004 Cri LJ 920.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2003]

[2785] — S. 228 — Framing of charge — "Ground for presuming" — Scope — Held, at stage of framing of charge, court is required to evaluate material and documents on record to find out if facts emerging therefrom, taken at their face value, disclose existence of all ingredients constituting the alleged offence — For this limited purpose, the court may sift the evidence — Court has to consider material only with a view to find out if there is ground for "presuming" that the accused has committed an offence and not for the purpose of arriving at definite conclusion — Presume means if on the basis of materials on record, court could come to the conclusion that commission of the offence is a probable consequence, a case for framing of charge exists (Paras 25 and 26). Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-2009]

State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820; Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, followed [2786] — S. 228 — Framing of charge — Technical defect — No grievance made by accused about prejudice caused on account of non-framing of proper charge — Effect — But in appeal filed by complainant, High Court setting aside the order of acquittal and directing retrial on ground of technical defect in framing of charges such as one set of charges not containing signature of accused and that in one of the charges, section had not been mentioned — Held, High Court erred in setting aside the judgment of acquittal on ground of improper framing of charges when no such grievance was made by accused — There was no ground to direct retrial of the case (Para 3). K. Sainarayana Babu v. M. Sivaram Murthy, (2005) 10 SCC 457: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1583.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, D.M. Dharmadhikari and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-12-2004]

[2787] — S. 228 — Framing of charge in cases triable by the Sessions Court — Comparison with procedure under the old Code — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 207-A and 271

The charge against the accused under the procedure prescribed in the new Code is to be framed for the first time by the Court of Session while according to the procedure prescribed under the old Code, the charge is framed by the committing Magistrate and the Court of Session is merely given the power to alter or amend the charge, if it thinks necessary to do so. State of Karnataka v. K.H. Annegowda, (1977) 1 SCC 417: 1977 SCC (Cri) 106: AIR 1977 SC 357: 1977 Cri LJ 220: (1977) 2 SCR 350.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and A.C. Gupta, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-12-1976]

[2788] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Discharge and dilution of a charge — Duty of court to safeguard rights of victim who does not participate in discharge proceedings, pointed out

The reason given for dropping the charge under Section 302 was totally inadequate and untenable, and showed non-application of mind by the appellant to the statements in the charge-sheet and the medical record. The order does not explain as to why a charge under Section 304 was being preferred to one under Section 302 IPC. (Para 26)

All that the appellant stated in his order dated 21-3-1996 was, that on consideration of the material available in the case diary, he had found that there was no sufficient material to frame the charge under Section 302 IPC. This is nothing but a bald statement and was clearly against the statement of the injured eyewitness, and supporting medical papers on record. The appellant has not even referred to the same. He has also not stated in his order as to why he was of the opinion that the material available in the case diary was insufficient. Such a bald order raises a serious doubt about the bona fides of the decision rendered by the Judge concerned. (Para 25)

Although it is not so specifically stated in Section 228, it can certainly be said that when the charge under a particular section is dropped or diluted (although the accused is not discharged), some minimum reasons in a nutshell are expected to be recorded disclosing the consideration of the material on record. This is because the charge is to be framed "after such consideration" and therefore, that consideration must be reflected in the order. (Paras 21 and 24)

Section 228 which deals with framing of the charge, begins with the words "If, after such consideration". Section 228 refers to the "consideration" under Section 227 which has to be after taking into account the record of the case and the documents submitted therewith. These words provide an interconnection between Sections 227 and 228. Section 227 provides for recording the reasons for discharging an accused. As per Section 227 while discharging an accused, the Judge concerned has to consider the record of the case and the documents placed therewith, and if he is so convinced after hearing both the parties that there is no sufficient ground to proceed against the accused, he shall discharge the accused, but he has to record his reasons for doing the same. (Para 21)

A discharge order is passed on an application by the accused on which the accused and the prosecution are heard. At the stage of discharging an accused or framing of the charge, the victim does not participate in the proceeding. While framing the charge, the rights of the victim are also to be taken care of as also that of the accused. That responsibility lies on the shoulders of the Judge. (Para 22)

The Judge must give his reasons at least in a nutshell, if he is dropping or diluting any charge, particularly a serious one as in the present case. It is also necessary for the reason that the order should inform the prosecution as to what went wrong with the investigation. Besides, if the matter is carried to the higher court, it will be able to know as to why a charge was dropped or diluted. (Para 22). R.S. Mishra v. State of Orissa, (2011) 2 SCC 689.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2011]

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, relied on

[2789] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Discharge and dilution of a charge — When unwarranted — As per PW 3 injured witness, accused hitting head and chest of her husband with lathi and causing his death — Post-mortem report confirming this — As there was prima facie case under S. 302 IPC, that charge, held, should not have been diluted to S. 304 IPC — If there is strong suspicion of commission of certain offence, discharge and dilution of charge is unwarranted — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 or S. 304 [S. 300 Exception 1]

At the initial stage of the framing of a charge, if there is a strong suspicion/evidence which leads the court to think that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, then it is not open to the court to say that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. (Para 23)

In fact, since the material on record revealed a higher offence, it was expected of the appellant Additional Sessions Judge to frame the charge for more grievous offence and not to dilute the same. There was a prima facie case to proceed to frame the charge under Section 302 IPC. A young person was killed. It was not a case of grave and sudden provocation. (Paras 26, 6 and 8)

The material on record cannot be said to be self-contradictory or intrinsically unreliable. The material on record showed that there was an injured eyewitness and there was the supporting medical report. PW 3 (injured wife of deceased) stated that the accused had given a lathi-blow on the head of the deceased and then on his chest, in her presence. PW 3 also stated about the lathi-blow given to her. The post-mortem examination revealed that amongst other injuries, the left side mandible of the deceased was fractured and there was subdural haematoma over the left parietal region of the scalp. The other vital organs like lungs, liver, kidney were all congested. Due to these injuries, the deceased went into coma and then died. (Paras 26, 6 and 8). R.S. Mishra v. State of Orissa, (2011) 2 SCC 689.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2011]

State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; Nirmaljit Singh Hoon v. State of W.B., (1973) 3 SCC 753: 1973 SCC (Cri) 521; Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 397, relied on [2790] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Discharge under S. 227 or dilution of a charge under S. 228 — Need for giving reasons — Manner, mandatoriness of and rationale, stated — Giving a bald order of dilution without any reasons as in present case, held, raises a serious doubt about bona fides of decision rendered by Sessions Judge — In case of dilution of charge some minimum reasons in nutshell are expected and more so in case of serious offences as in present case of alleged murder — Giving reasons would help prosecution know its defects and higher courts may then adjudicate properly in case of dispute — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 or S. 304. R.S. Mishra v. State of Orissa, (2011) 2 SCC 689.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2011]

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, relied on

[2791] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Sufficiency of experience to pass order under — What is

It cannot be said that the appellant did not have requisite experience to pass a correct legal order under Section 228 CrPC. The impugned order of the Single Judge deciding revision notes that the appellant had been functioning in the rank of the District Judge from August 1991 onwards i.e. for nearly 5 years prior to his order dated 21-3-1996. The impugned order further states in para 5 that a judicial officer, before being posted as an Additional Sessions Judge, gets an experience of taking the sessions cases as Assistant Sessions Judge. (Para 27). R.S. Mishra v. State of Orissa, (2011) 2 SCC 689.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2011]

[2792] — Ss. 228 and 227 — "If after such consideration" in S. 228 — Interpretation and implication

The reason given for dropping the charge under Section 302 was totally inadequate and untenable, and showed non-application of mind by the appellant to the statements in the charge-sheet and the medical record. The order does not explain as to why a charge under Section 304 was being preferred to one under Section 302 IPC. (Para 26)

All that the appellant stated in his order dated 21-3-1996 was, that on consideration of the material available in the case diary, he had found that there was no sufficient material to frame the charge under Section 302 IPC. This is nothing but a bald statement and was clearly against the statement of the injured eyewitness, and supporting medical papers on record. The appellant has not even referred to the same. He has also not stated in his order as to why he was of the opinion that the material available in the case diary was insufficient. Such a bald order raises a serious doubt about the bona fides of the decision rendered by the Judge concerned. (Para 25)

Although it is not so specifically stated in Section 228, it can certainly be said that when the charge under a particular section is dropped or diluted (although the accused is not discharged), some minimum reasons in a nutshell are expected to be recorded disclosing the consideration of the material on record. This is because the charge is to be framed "after such consideration" and therefore, that consideration must be reflected in the order. (Paras 21 and 24)

Section 228 which deals with framing of the charge, begins with the words "If, after such consideration". Section 228 refers to the "consideration" under Section 227 which has to be after taking into account the record of the case and the documents submitted therewith. These words provide an interconnection between Sections 227 and 228. Section 227 provides for recording the reasons for discharging an accused. As per Section 227 while discharging an accused, the Judge concerned has to consider the record of the case and the documents placed therewith, and if he is so convinced after hearing both the parties that there is no sufficient ground to proceed against the accused, he shall discharge the accused, but he has to record his reasons for doing the same. (Para 21)

A discharge order is passed on an application by the accused on which the accused and the prosecution are heard. At the stage of discharging an accused or framing of the charge, the victim does not participate in the proceeding. While framing the charge, the rights of the victim are also to be taken care of as also that of the accused. That responsibility lies on the shoulders of the Judge. (Para 22)

The Judge must give his reasons at least in a nutshell, if he is dropping or diluting any charge, particularly a serious one as in the present case. It is also necessary for the reason that the order should inform the prosecution as to what went wrong with the investigation. Besides, if the matter is carried to the higher court, it will be able to know as to why a charge was dropped or diluted. (Para 22). R.S. Mishra v. State of Orissa, (2011) 2 SCC 689.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2011]

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, relied on

[2793] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Framing of charge — Court has to sift evidence on record and other documents only for the limited purpose of ascertaining whether prima facie case is made out against the accused — If so it should frame charges under S. 228, and if not, discharge the accused under S. 227

Under S. 227 CrPC, a duty is cast on the judge to apply his mind to the material on record and if on examination of the record he does not find sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused, he must discharge him. On the other hand if after such consideration and hearing he is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out against the accused, he must proceed to frame a charge as required by S. 228 of the Code. At the Ss. 227-228 stage the court is required to evaluate the material and documents on record with a view to finding out if the facts emerging therefrom taken at their face value disclose the existence of all the ingredients constituting the alleged offence. The court may for this limited purpose sift the evidence. Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47: AIR 1990 SC 1962: 1990 Cri LJ 1869.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and N.M. Kasliwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-8-1990]

[2794] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Magistrate has only to consider generally the materials placed before him by investigating officer in considering the sufficiency of ground for proceeding against the accused

Where a case is at the stage of framing charges and the prosecution evidence has not yet commenced, the Magistrate has to consider the question of sufficiency of ground for proceeding against the accused on a general consideration of materials placed before him by the investigating police officer. The truth, veracity and effect of the evidence which the prosecutor proposes to adduce are not to be meticulously judged. The standard of test, proof and judgment which is to be applied finally before finding the accused guilty or otherwise, is not exactly to be applied at the stage of Ss. 227 or 228 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. At this stage, even a very strong suspicion founded upon materials before the Magistrate, which leads him to form a presumptive opinion as to the existence of the factual ingredients constituting the offence alleged, may justify the framing of charge against the accused in respect of the commission of that offence. Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038: AIR 1980 SC 52: 1979 Cri LJ 1390.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria, P.N. Shinghal and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-1979]

[2795] — Ss. 228 & 227 and 239 & 240 and 245(1) & (2) — Framing of charge — Court must apply its judicial mind to the material placed on record — The materials on record must satisfy the mind of the court framing the charge that the commission of offence by the accused in question was probable — Instead of examining the merits of the prosecution case qua the charged accused, the court giving reasons for discharge of certain accused — Held, approach of the court was not proper — In the circumstances, the Supreme Court itself examined, whether on the basis of material placed before the trial court, charges should be framed against the accused persons. State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820: AIR 1996 SC 1744.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and B.L. Hansaria and S.C. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1996]

[2796] — Ss. 228 & 227 and 239 & 240 and 245(1) & (2) — Whether charges should be framed or not — Test of existence of prima facie case — If there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence it can be said that a prima facie case has been made out against the accused — Even if the court thinks that the accused might have committed the offence it can frame the charges — At the stage of framing of charge probative value of the materials on record cannot be gone into

If there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence, a court can justifiably say that a prima facie case against him exists, and so, frame a charge against him for committing that offence.

Regarding the meaning of the word presume, in Black's Law Dictionary it has been defined to mean "to believe or accept upon probable evidence". In Shorter Oxford English Dictionary it has been mentioned that in law 'presume' means "to take as proved until evidence to the contrary is forthcoming", Stroud's Legal Dictionary has quoted in this context a certain judgment according to which "A presumption is a probable consequence drawn from facts (either certain, or proved by direct testimony) as to the truth of a fact alleged."

So if on the basis of materials on record, a court could come to the conclusion that commission of the offence is a probable consequence, a case for framing of charge exists. To put it differently, if the court were to think that the accused might have committed the offence it can frame the charge, though for conviction the conclusion is required to be that the accused has committed the offence. It is apparent that at the stage of framing of a charge, probative value of the materials on record cannot be gone into; the materials brought on record by the prosecution has to be accepted as true at that stage. State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820: AIR 1996 SC 1744.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and B.L. Hansaria and S.C. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1996]

[2797] — Ss. 228 & 227 and 240 & 239 — Scope — Jurisdiction of court at the stage of framing of charge — Whether any documents, whereupon accused may rely in support of his defence, can be looked into at the stage of framing of charge — On facts, appellant-accused facing trial for alleged commission of offence under Ss. 13(1)(e)/13(2), PC Act, 1988 — He filed an application for his discharge, inter alia, on the premise that no case for framing of charge was made out, along with some documents in his own defence — Said application was rejected by trial court opining that documents relied on by appellant cannot be looked into for the purpose of passing an order on his application for discharge — Revision filed thereagainst dismissed by High Court — Sustainability — Held, court at the stage of framing of charge exercises a limited jurisdiction — At that stage it would not weigh the evidence — It would only see whether a prima facie case is made out — Whether a case of probable conviction for commission of offence is made out on the basis of the materials found during investigation should be its concern — It, at that stage, would not delve deep into the matter for the purpose of appreciation of evidence — It would ordinarily not consider whether the accused would be able to establish his defence, if any — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 13(1)(e)/13(2)

The question that arose before the Supreme Court was whether any documents, whereupon the appellant may rely in support of his defence can be looked into at the stage of framing of the charge.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

At the stage of framing of charge, the court will not weigh the evidence. The stage for appreciating the evidence for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion as to whether the prosecution was able to bring home the charge against the accused or not would arise only after all the evidence is brought on record at the trial. (Para 9)

The court at the stage of framing charge exercises a limited jurisdiction. It would only have to see as to whether a prima facie case has been made out. Whether a case of probable conviction for commission of an offence has been made out on the basis of the materials found during investigation should be the concern of the court. It, at that stage, would not delve deep into the matter for the purpose of appreciation of evidence. It would ordinarily not consider as to whether the accused would be able to establish his defence, if any. (Para 13)

It is one thing to say that on the basis of the admitted documents, the appellant was in a position to show that the charges could not have been framed against him, but it is another thing to say that for the said purpose he could rely upon some documents whereupon the prosecution would not rely. (Para 10)

Hence the trial court rightly refused to look into any of the documents filed by the appellant along with his application for discharge. (Para 13). Hem Chand v. State of Jharkhand, (2008) 5 SCC 113: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 537: AIR 2008 SC 1903.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-2008]

State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, (2000) 6 SCC 338: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1110, followed

State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on [2798] — Ss. 228 and 240 — Framing of charge — Necessary considerations — Held, charge can be framed if there are materials showing possibility about the commission of the crime as against certainty — At that stage, evidence cannot be gone into meticulously — It is immaterial whether the case is based on direct or circumstantial evidence (Para 10). State of A.P. v. Golconda Linga Swamy, (2004) 6 SCC 522: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1805: AIR 2004 SC 3967.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-2004]

Followed in Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609

[2799] — Ss. 228 and 240 — Framing of charge — Considerations of trial court during — Limitations — Reiterated, at the stage of framing of charge, the court is not required to go into details of the investigation but to only arrive at a prima facie finding on the materials made available as to whether a charge could be sustained as recommended in the charge-sheet — Holding of a mini trial at the time of framing of charge deprecated — Also, held, various circumstances can only be considered during a proper trial and not on the basis of surmises at the time of framing charge, where on the strength of the charge-sheet, only a prima facie satisfaction about the commission of an offence has to be arrived at by the trial court

In the instant case, on 14-7-2004, Officers of the Special Police Establishment (Lokayukta), appellant-accused in two of the appeals herein, set a trap for one R, Deputy Commissioner, Commercial Tax, and arrested him for taking a bribe of Rs 2000 from one C, Tax Consultant.

On 15-7-2004, prior to 9 a.m., R was found unconscious in the bathroom of the Office of the Lokayukta. He was taken to a hospital for treatment. The records of the hospital showed that when R was brought to the hospital at 9 a.m. on 15-7-2004, his body had neither any pulse nor respiration and recordable blood pressure and even heart sounds were absent. Though resuscitation measures were undertaken, including cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), there was little response and R was declared dead at 1.30 p.m. on the same day.

The post-mortem examination of the deceased, which was conducted on 15-7-2004 itself, at about 4 p.m., revealed certain injuries on the body, which included broken ribs, but the cause of death was shown to be on account of asphyxia within six hours of the post-mortem examination.

On completion of investigation, the investigating agency filed a charge-sheet before the trial court on 12-5-2005, and on 15-7-2005, the trial court framed charges against the five accused persons under Section 304 Part II IPC, but dropped the charge under Section 330 IPC.

Aggrieved by the framing of charge under Section 304 Part II IPC, accused persons filed criminal revisions before the High Court. On the other hand, on account of the dropping of charges under Section 330 IPC, the widow of the deceased also filed criminal revision before the High Court. All the revisional applications were heard together by the High Court which by its order dated 11-9-2006, set aside the charge framed by the trial court and directed that charge could only be framed under Sections 323/34 IPC. Hence, these five appeals were filed by the widow of the deceased, the State and the accused persons, against the said judgment and order of the High Court.

Partly allowing the three appeals filed by the widow of the deceased and the State and dismissing the two appeals filed by the accused persons,

Held :

At the stage of framing of charge, the court is not required to go into the details of the investigation but to only arrive at a prima facie finding on the materials made available as to whether a charge could be sustained as recommended in the charge-sheet. The holding of a mini trial at the time of framing of charge is deprecated. (Para 39)

It has been sufficiently established that the deceased was a patient of asthma which could cause asphyxia which was ultimately said to be the cause of death of R. It is also clear that notwithstanding his serious respiratory problem, the deceased was kept in a windowless room which was full of dust and cobwebs which are known allergens for triggering an asthma attack, which can be fatal, as in this case. The injuries found on the body of the deceased may have been caused during attempts at resuscitation, but all the said circumstances can only be considered during a proper trial and not on the basis of surmises at the time of framing charge where on the strength of the charge-sheet, only a prima facie satisfaction about the commission of an offence has to be arrived at by the trial court. Therefore, while rejecting the submissions that there were no materials on record to frame charge against the accused persons even under Sections 323/34 IPC, on a prima facie view of the matter, there is ground to proceed against the accused persons even under Section 304 Part II IPC. On that score, the High Court had erred in quashing the charge framed against the accused persons under Section 304 Part II and observing that in view of the materials on record only a charge under Section 323 could be brought against the accused persons. (Para 37). Indu Jain v. State of M.P., (2008) 15 SCC 341: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 996: AIR 2009 SC 976: 2009 Cri LJ 951.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-2008]

Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, 1980 Supp SCC 499: 1981 SCC (Cri) 438; Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609; State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568: 2005 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on [2800] — Ss. 228 and 240 — Framing of charge — Prerequisites for — Relevant considerations at the stage of framing of charge — Held (Per Katju, J.), the court can frame the charge if on the basis of material on record it can form an opinion that the commission of offence by the accused was possible — Whether, in fact, the accused committed the offence, can only be decided at trial — At the time of framing of charge, the probative value of the material on record cannot be gone into — The said material has to be accepted as true at that stage — Further held [per Sinha, J. (concurring)], suspicion alone cannot be the basis for framing charge — There must exist some materials therefor

Per Katju, J.

The settled legal position is that if on the basis of material on record the court could form an opinion that the accused might have committed offence it can frame the charge, though for conviction the conclusion is required to be proved beyond reasonable doubt that the accused has committed the offence. At the time of framing of the charges the probative value of the material on record cannot be gone into, and the material brought on record by the prosecution has to be accepted as true at that stage. Before framing a charge the court must apply its judicial mind on the material placed on record and must be satisfied that the commission of offence by the accused was possible. Whether, in fact, the accused committed the offence, can only be decided in the trial. (Para 10)

Per Sinha, J. (concurring)

Charge may although be directed to be framed when there exists a strong suspicion but it is also trite that the court must come to a prima facie finding that there exist some materials therefor. Suspicion alone, without anything more, cannot form the basis therefor or held to be sufficient for framing charge. (Para 19). Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 514: AIR 2007 SC 2149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[2] and Markandey Katju[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2007]

Union of India v. Major J.S. Khanna, (1972) 3 SCC 873: 1973 SCC (Cri) 94; State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820, relied on [2801] — Ss. 228, 240, 231, 242, 235 and 248 — Appreciation of evidence at stage of framing of charges and at stage of conclusion of trial — Distinguished — Held, while framing charges court may consider whether or not accused committed offence — But for recording conviction commission of offence has to be proved by prosecution beyond reasonable doubt (Para 51). State of M.P. v. Sheetla Sahai, (2009) 8 SCC 617: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 901.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2009]

[2802] — Ss. 228 & 240 and Ch. III (Ss. 26 to 35) — Framing of charge and determination of jurisdiction of court — Recording of reasons — Difference in the requirement, explained — Held, though charge(s) can be framed without recording reasons, where a question of jurisdiction is raised, and court is required to adjudicate the same, the court must record reasons relating to the question of jurisdiction

The question relating to forming of an opinion at the time of framing of charge is different from a case of recording of reasons on the basis of which an order of discharge of the accused may be passed. The moment the order of discharge is passed it is imperative to record the reasons. But for framing of charge the court is required to form an opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence. In case of discharge of the accused the use of the expression "reasons" has been inserted in Sections 227, 239 and 245 CrPC. At the stage of framing of a charge the expression used is "opinion". The reason is obvious. If the reasons are recorded in case of framing of charge, there is likelihood of prejudicing the case of the accused put on trial. The Judge is required to record reasons only if he decides to discharge the accused. But if he is to frame the charge he may do so without recording his reasons for showing why he framed the charge. But where the question of jurisdiction is raised and the trial court is required to adjudicate that issue, it cannot be said that reasons are not to be recorded. In such a case reasons relate to question of jurisdiction and not necessarily to the issue relating to framing of charge. In such a case reasons dealing with a plea relating to jurisdiction have to be recorded. (Paras 13, 15 and 16). Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2007) 1 SCC 49: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 241: (2007) 1 KLT 47: (2007) 50 AIC 107 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2006]

State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39: 1977 SCC (Cri) 533; Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303, followed

[2803] — Ss. 228 and 211 — Framing of charges — Questions to be considered at stage of — Questions as to applicability of legal provisions, held, are not matters on which a definite conclusion should be reached ahead of trial

The question whether Section 120-B applies to the POTA offences or Section 3(3) alone applies is not a matter on which a definite conclusion should be reached ahead of the trial. (Para 25). State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715: 2005 Cri LJ 3950: (2005) 122 DLT 194.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2005]

Willie (William) Slaney v. State of M.P., (1955) 2 SCR 1140: AIR 1956 SC 116: 1956 Cri LJ 291; State of A.P. v. Cheemalapati Ganeswara Rao, (1964) 3 SCR 297: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 671, relied on

[2804] — Ss. 228 and 216 — Alteration of charge — Held, charges can be altered at any stage of the proceedings by the court trying the offence depending on the evidence adduced — Further held, the trial court can always commit the case to the superior court in case the evidence on record establishes a more serious offence during the trial — Similarly, the superior court can always convict the accused of the lesser offence than he is charged with

The law governing the trial of criminal offences provides for alteration of charges at any stage of the proceedings depending upon the evidence adduced in the case. If the Court of Magistrate at any stage of trial comes to the conclusion that the material on record indicates the commission of an offence which requires to be tried by a superior court, it can always do so by committing such case for further trial to a superior court as contemplated in the CrPC. On the contrary, if the trial is being conducted in a superior court like the Sessions Court and if that court comes to the conclusion that the evidence produced in the said trial makes out a lesser offence than the one with which the accused is charged, it is always open to that court based on evidence to convict such accused for a lesser offence. Thus, arguments regarding the framing of a proper charge are best left to be decided by the trial court at an appropriate stage of the trial. (Para 4). State of Maharashtra v. Salman Salim Khan, (2004) 1 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 337: AIR 2004 SC 1189: 2004 Cri LJ 920.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2003]

[2805] — S. 228 — Framing of charge — No specific charge under S. 302 r/w S. 149 IPC framed but charges under S. 148, S. 302 simpliciter and S. 324 IPC framed and accused persons convicted thereunder by trial court — High Court setting aside conviction under S. 302 and instead convicting one of the accused under S. 304 Pt. I and the remaining accused under S. 326 — Plea to convict the accused under S. 302 r/w S. 149 IPC — Held, non-mentioning of S. 149 in form though an irregularity, but failure to mention to the accused the nature of the offence committed in substance not a mere irregularity and therefore, accused cannot be convicted thereunder — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/149

The Sessions Judge did not frame a charge against the accused persons for the offence punishable under Section 302 IPC read with Section 149 IPC. The relevant prosecution allegations so as to bring in the ingredients of the offence punishable under Section 302 IPC read with Section 149 IPC also were not incorporated in the charge framed by the Sessions Judge. The accused were not told that they had to face charges of being members of an unlawful assembly and the common object of such assembly was to commit murder of the deceased and in furtherance of that common object murder was committed and thereby they had a constructive liability and thus they committed the offence punishable under Section 302 IPC read with Section 149 IPC. Of course the mere omission to mention Section 149 may be considered as an irregularity, but failure to mention the nature of the offence committed by them cannot be said to be a mere irregularity. Had this mistake been noticed at the trial stage, the Sessions Judge could have corrected the charge at any time before the delivery of the judgment. In the instant case, the accused were told to face a charge punishable under Section 302 simpliciter and there was no charge under Section 302 IPC read with Section 149 IPC. Therefore, it is not possible to reverse the conviction of the accused under Section 326 IPC and substitute the conviction for the offence punishable under Sections 302/149 IPC as there was no charge framed against them for such offence. (Para 8). Bala Seetharamaiah v. Perike S. Rao, (2004) 4 SCC 557: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1332: AIR 2004 SC 2172: 2004 Cri LJ 2034: (2004) 17 AIC 126 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-3-2004]

[2806] — S. 228 — Framing of charge — Doctrine of parity — Necessify of consideration of — Many accused including government servants involved in offence of fraud and misappropriation of huge amount of Govt. money — An accused similarly situated not proceeded against only because departmental proceedings ended in his favour — Held (Per Sinha, J.), in a case of present nature the trial Judge should have considered the question having regard to the "doctrine of parity" — Relevant considerations which should have been taken into account in this regard, indicated — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 468 and 471 r/w S. 120-B — Constitution of India, Art. 14

In a case of this nature the trial Judge should have considered the question having regard to the "doctrine of parity" in mind. An accused similarly situated has not been proceeded against only because the departmental proceedings ended in his favour. Whether an accused before him although stands on a similar footing despite he having not been departmentally proceeded against or had not been completely exonerated also required to be considered. If exoneration in a departmental proceeding is the basis for not framing a charge against an accused person who is said to be similarly situated, the question which requires a further consideration was as to whether the applicant before it was similarly situated or not and/or whether the exonerated officer in the departmental proceeding also faced same charges including the charge of being a party to the larger conspiracy. (Para 23). Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 514: AIR 2007 SC 2149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[2] and Markandey Katju[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2007]

L. Chandraiah v. State of A.P., (2003) 12 SCC 670: 2005 SCC (Cri) 825, relied on [2807] — S. 228 — Interference with order framing charges — Improper application of mind by trial court — Non-interference by Supreme Court — Though there was improper application of mind by trial court while framing charges, considering that prosecution had already started examination of witnesses and it seemed that all endeavours would be made for early disposal of matter, held (Per Sinha, J.), the discretionary jurisdiction under Art. 136 may not be exercised at this point of time — Hence, matter not remitted to trial court for consideration afresh — Trial court directed to dispose of matter as expeditiously as possible. Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 514: AIR 2007 SC 2149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[2] and Markandey Katju[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2007]

[2808] — S. 228 — Commutation of sentence— Considerations for — Validity of Magistrate's action under S. 228 decided after eight years of protracted proceedings — Effect — Even after such a long period the accused can be put on trial — However, this is a circumstance to be taken into consideration by the trial Court in fixing the nature and quantum of sentence, in the event of the accused being found guilty. Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. Anil Kumar Bhunja, (1979) 4 SCC 274: 1979 SCC (Cri) 1038: AIR 1980 SC 52: 1979 Cri LJ 1390.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria, P.N. Shinghal and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-1979]

[2809] — S. 228 — Fraud and misappropriation of government money — Responsibility for signing a document — Accused alleged to have dishonestly processed and verified fake bills — Plea of accused that she signed the said bills in normal course of her duty and it was account section which was negligent in not verifying those bills — Sustainability of — Held, the said plea was not tenable as when a person signs on a document he or she is expected to make some enquiry before signing it — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 468 and 471 r/w S. 120-B (Para 14). Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 514: AIR 2007 SC 2149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[2] and Markandey Katju[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2007]

[2810] — Ss. 228 and 220 — Kidnapping and rape forming part of same transaction — Trial court continuing proceedings for kidnapping but dropping charge for rape, on ground of lack of territorial jurisdiction — Held, impermissible — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376 and 366 (Para 4). Parshotam Lal v. State of Punjab, (2010) 1 SCC 65.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-10-2009]

[2811] — S. 228 — Framing of charges — Propriety — Offence of fraud and misappropriation of huge amount of government money by accused persons — Charges against appellant government employee that she dishonestly processed and verified fake bills to cause undue pecuniary advantage to herself — Though appellant was not assigned any duty to process or sign the bills in question, she did so — Said bills were not sanctioned/approved by competent authority — Also, those bills were not entered in bill register — No file had been opened in respect thereof — File numbers written on fictitious bills were fake — Held (Per Katju, J.), there was existence of material on record to show a prima facie case against appellant — Hence, framing of charges against her was proper — Plea that appellant signed the fake bills by negligence but without any mala fide intention, held, could be considered during trial — Per Sinha, J. (concurring) though there was improper application of mind by trial court while framing charges, considering that prosecution already started examination of witnesses and assured that all endeavours would be made for early disposal of matter, the discretionary jurisdiction under Art. 136 of the Constitution would not be exercised at this stage for remitting the matter to trial court for consideration afresh — Thus, the order framing charges against appellant is upheld — Trial court directed to complete trial as expeditiously as possible — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 468 and 471 r/w S. 120-B — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2)

Charges were framed against the appellant and the other accused for various offences under the Indian Penal Code and the Prevention of Corruption Act. Allegations were made that by misusing their official position, the accused public servants, employees of Indian Trade Promotion Organisation (ITPO), caused an undue pecuniary advantage to themselves to the tune of Rs 30,30,057 and led to a corresponding loss to ITPO.

The prosecution case was that the publicity department of ITPO was concerned with the release of advertisements in newspapers. There were two types of advertisements: (1) regular advertisements; and (2) ad hoc advertisements. Regular advertisements were given to the national dailies and other leading newspapers and magazines, whereas ad hoc advertisements were those which were issued on ad hoc basis from time to time with the specific approval of the Chief Managing Director or Executive Director only.

At the relevant time, Deputy Manager B was in charge of the work relating to ad hoc advertisements. He was the authorised officer to process the bills for such advertisements. One U, Proof Reader/Senior Assistant of ITPO, floated 6 bogus firms and submitted 76 bogus bills worth Rs 30,30,057 for payment by signing under fictitious names. With these bills he enclosed photocopies of fake advertisements. Out of 76 bogus bills, 14 were dishonestly processed and verified by the appellant and one J, in connivance with the other accused to cheat ITPO and give wrongful gain to themselves. All the bogus vouchers had been filled in by the co-accused G who was neither posted in the publicity division nor was authorised to do so. The appellant knew that the said bogus bills had not been entered in the bill register of the Publicity Division of ITPO and no file had been opened/created in respect thereof. The file numbers written on the fictitious bills were also fake. None of the above bills bore initials or signatures of B, who was in charge of the ad hoc advertisements.

After examining the allegations and evidence collected by investigation, the trial court framed the impugned charges against the appellant and J. Against the order framing charges, a criminal revision was filed before the High Court. The said revision was dismissed by the impugned judgment. Hence, the present appeal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Per Katju, J.

It cannot be accepted there was no material to show that the appellant was prima facie guilty or had any mens rea. There are serious allegations of misappropriation of a huge amount of money belonging to the Government, and it cannot be said at this stage that there is no material at all for framing the charge against the appellant. Hence, the view taken by the High Court in this connection is proper. (Paras 11, 9, 12 and 15)

The appellant was never assigned any duty in respect of processing or signing the bills for ad hoc advertisements, and she was assigned duty only of regular advertisements. Moreover, these bills were not sanctioned/approved by the competent authority i.e. the Chairman/Executive Director. No doubt the appellant contended that she signed the fake bills by negligence but without any mala fide intention, but this is a matter which is to be seen at the time of the trial. (Paras 14 and 15)

Per Sinha, J. (concurring)

The trial Judge, it appears, did not properly apply its mind in regard to the different categories of the accused while framing charges. It ought to have been done. (Para 19)

Ordinarily, the matter would have been remitted to the trial Judge for consideration afresh, but as the prosecution has already started examination of witnesses and it is assured that all endeavours would be made for early disposal of the matter, the discretionary jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution may not be exercised at this point of time. However, keeping in view the fact that a large number of officers of the Union of India are involved in the present case and as it is stated at the Bar that they have not been promoted because of the pendency of this case, the trial Judge is requested to dispose of the matter as expeditiously as possible. (Para 25). Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 514: AIR 2007 SC 2149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[2] and Markandey Katju[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2007]

[2812] — S. 228 — Framing of charge — On facts, upheld — GPA-holder accepting factum of cancellation of GPA but thereafter executing the same — High Court while dismissing revision petition observing that it was possible that the appellants were duped by the attorney who knew that his powers had been revoked but concealed the fact, but such arguments could be validly advanced by petitioners for establishing their bona fides during trial — Hence, held, no interference with impugned judgment called for — Penal Code, 1860, S. 409 & S. 420 r/w S. 120-B (Paras 2, 17 and 18)

In February 1987 complainant and his five family members executed general power of attorney (GPA) at Canada in favour of one M which was subsequently registered at Ferozepur. The GPA-holder sold a plot of land belonging to complainant to appellants for Rs 5 lakhs, and the sale deed was duly registered. In December 1989 appellants suddenly came to know that complainant had filed a suit for declaration that said GPA-holder had no authority to sell the property and/or to permanently alienate and dispose of the said property. An ex parte injunction order/status quo was granted on 2-12-1989 though the appellants in absence of knowledge of the same had got the sale deeds registered on 5-12-1989.

On 14-6-1990 an order was passed in the suit restraining appellants from dispossessing the complainant from the said property and to maintain status quo, whereas in fact appellants were already in possession of that property since 7-11-1989. In appeal filed by the appellants the learned ADJ ordered status quo with regard to ownership and possession of property.

On 30-6-1995, complainant lodged a complaint with Deputy Commissioner, who was related to him. The Commissioner summoned the appellants at his residence and asked them to cancel the sale deeds and to concede the claim of complainant, threatening them with dire consequences.

On 31-8-1995 after about six years FIR was lodged against appellants. On 29-5-1996 a report was submitted to SSP stating that FIR was intended to pressurise the appellants and no offence appeared to have been committed by them. In spite of that charge-sheet was filed against appellants. Charges were framed against appellants under Section 120-B read with Section 409 IPC and Section 120-B read with Section 420 IPC against appellants. Criminal revision was filed challenging maintainability of charges framed against them which was dismissed by the High Court by impugned order holding that there was sufficient ground to presume that unrebutted evidence of complainant constitutes triable offences. It was also found that details of property in respect of which it was executed were missing and though the power of attorney prima facie appeared to be a valid document, nevertheless on a plain reading thereof left one with uncertain feeling as regard its impact. Hence, the present appeal.

Dismissing the appeal, the Supreme Court held as above. Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, (2009) 11 SCC 721: (2009) 2 ECrN 1057 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, L.S. Panta and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-2009]

Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1734, relied on American Jurisprudence, Vol. II, Section 23, p. 559; Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th Edn., Vol. 11, p. 44, para 58, cited

[2813] — S. 228 — Conspiracy and abetment of an offence — Involvement in — Drawing inference as to — Fraud alleged to have been committed by government servants by processing and verifying fake bills — Officers who would be liable for conspiracy and abetment of — Held (Per Sinha, J.), all the officers who dealt with the relevant files at one point of time or the other could not be considered to have taken part in conspiracy or would be guilty of aiding and abetting the offence — In such a case it was necessary to deal with individual acts of criminal misconduct for finding out a case therefor — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B, 107, 109, 420, 468 and 471

The courts although may take a strict view of an offence where fraud is alleged against a public servant, but only because it is found to have been committed, the same by itself may not be sufficient to arrive at a conclusion that all officers who have dealt with the files at one point of time or the other would be taking part in conspiracy thereof or would otherwise be guilty of aiding and abetting the offence. It is necessary to deal with the individual acts of criminal misconduct for finding out a case therefor. (Para 22). Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 514: AIR 2007 SC 2149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[2] and Markandey Katju[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2007]

[2814] — S. 228 — Objections raised to framing of charges for offences under Ss. 353, 506, 186 r/w 34, 504 and 173 IPC in a complaint case — Objections accepted by Magistrate but rejected by Additional Sessions Judge in revision and writ petition against revisional order dismissed by High Court — Main dispute compromised and more than 15 years elapsed since the incident — Held, proceedings need not proceed any further in the interest of justice — Hence without going into the merits proceedings quashed. Prem Lata v. State of Punjab, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 201: 1991 SCC (Cri) 547: AIR 1991 SC 69.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.B. Sawant and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-1990]

[2815] — Ss. 228, 197 and 177 — Power of High Court to pass directions relating to framing of charge, sanction and jurisdiction

It was not necessary to decide the question regarding the offences to be included in the charge which may be framed against the accused persons because that work has to be done by the Sessions Judges concerned after hearing both sides, as provided under Section 228 of the Code. The appellants can raise their arguments regarding what offences can be included in the charge at the appropriate stage. (Para 23)

The question of necessity of sanction need be considered by the Sessions Judge if and when raised by the accused. The High Court should not have embarked upon a discussion regarding sanction at such a premature stage, that too in the writ petition filed by the Samity. If the finding of the High Court is that no sanction is required such a finding has to be treated as bad mainly because that question has to be decided after taking into account various considerations including the fact situation in each case. (Para 24)

The jurisdiction of the Court can be decided on the factual foundation in each case. The High Court should not have pre-empted the Court before which each case would come up in the normal course, to determine the question of jurisdiction, if it is raised by any of the parties. It is difficult for the Supreme Court to comprehend what the learned Judges would have meant by "Special Court" to be established by the State Government. There is no suggestion in the impugned judgment as to what are the offences alleged to have been committed by the officials under any special enactment. The aforesaid direction (extracted above) if allowed to remain in force would create only confusion and provide room for procrastination of the trials. (Para 25). A.K. Singh v. Uttarakhand Jan Morcha, (1999) 4 SCC 476: 1999 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1999 SC 2193.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, D.P. Mohapatra and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1999]

[2816] — Ss. 228, 227 and 26 — Power of Sessions Court — Scope — Held, extends to try even cases which are not triable exclusively by it — Provision for in S. 228(1)(a) for transferring such a case to CJM, held, is not mandatory — On facts, transfer of only one of the counter-cases, held, improper — Transfer of one of the cross-cases, by Sessions Court to CJM — Legality — Case and counter-case both committed to Sessions Court — Sessions Court finding that in one case no charge for an offence triable exclusively by Sessions Court could be framed while such a charge could be framed in the other case — In such circumstances, transfer of the former case by Sessions Court to CJM for trial under S. 228(1), held, improper — Sessions Court should have rather itself tried it in the manner indicated in Naithani Lal case 1990 Supp SCC 145 — CrPC, 1973, Ss. 408(1), 228(1), 227 and 26(a)(ii) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 307, 149, 147, 427 and 324

A Sessions Judge has the power to try any offence under IPC. It is not necessary for the Sessions Court that the offence should be one exclusively triable by a Court of Session. This power of the Sessions Court can be discerned from a reading of Section 26 CrPC. Therefore, when a case involving offence not exclusively triable by such court is committed to the Court of Session, the Sessions Judge has to exercise a discretion regarding the case which he has to continue for trial in his court and the case which he has to transfer to the CJM. In Section 228(1) CrPC, the employment of the word "may" at one place and the word "shall" at another place in the same sub-section unmistakably indicates that when the offence is not triable exclusively by the Sessions Court it is not mandatory that he should order transfer of the case to the CJM after framing a charge. In situations where it is advisable for him to try such offence in his court there is no legal obligation to transfer the case to the CJM. (Para 16)

In the present case, the Sessions Judge ought not to have transferred the second case to the CJM as he did, but he himself should have tried it in the manner indicated in Nathi Lal. (Para 17). Sudhir v. State of M.P., (2001) 2 SCC 688: 2001 SCC (Cri) 387: AIR 2001 SC 826.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-2001]

Goriparthi Krishtamma, In re, 1929 MWN 881; Krishna Pannadi v. Emperor, AIR 1930 Mad 190: 31 Cri LJ 461, impliedly approved on this point

Nathi Lal v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 145: 1990 SCC (Cri) 638, followed

[2817] — Ss. 228, 227 and 240 — Identification by photo, held, admissible in evidence for the purpose of framing charges — However, it would become substantive evidence only when the witness identifies the accused in the court

There is no legal provision which inhibits the admissibility of identification by photo. In the present case prosecution does not say that they would rest with the identification made by the Inspector of Royal Swaziland Police Force when the photograph was shown to him. Prosecution has to examine him as a witness in the court and he has to identify the accused in the court. Then alone it would become substantive evidence. But that does not mean that at this stage the court is disabled from considering the prospect of such a witness correctly identifying the appellant during trial. (Para 12). Umar Abdul Sakoor Sorathia v. Narcotic Control Bureau, (2000) 1 SCC 138: 2000 SCC (Cri) 200: AIR 1999 SC 2562: 1999 Cri LJ 3972.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-1999]

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899, distinguished

[2818] — Ss. 228, 227 and 401 — Charges framed by trial court — High Court's interference in revision under S. 401 discharging the accused when uncalled for — Bride-burning for dowry — When trial court, finding a prima facie case prefers to frame charges against the accused, High Court should not interfere by probing into sufficiency of grounds for conviction of the accused and ordering his discharge — In such case Supreme Court, if satisfied as to the prima facie case against the accused, would restore the order of the trial court — Constitution of India, Article 136 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 304-B, 498-A — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 113-A

The deceased was seen in flames and crying for help in the first floor of the house of her in-law within 5 days of her marriage with the younger brother of the appellant. While the neighbours extinguished the flame, the inmates of the house did not render any such help. The appellant who was on the first floor was seen coming down the stairs. The deceased succumbed to the burn injuries in hospital on the same day. Before the death, her dying declaration was said to have been recorded by the Executive Magistrate, wherein it was stated that when she was preparing tea in the kitchen, her saree caught fire accidentally and consequently she received the burn injuries. The Chemical Analyser found kerosene residue on each and every garment of the deceased. The post-mortem report also indicated, besides burn injuries, that the deceased had sustained contusions on the back of shoulders, which might have been caused with a blunt, rounded object. The appellant and his father were charge-sheeted under S. 306 read with S. 34, IPC. The trial court after considering all the facts and circumstances and hearing the parties came to a prima facie conclusion that it was not a suicidal but homicidal death. Accordingly a charge under S. 302, IPC was framed against the appellant. But the appellant's father was discharged holding that the allegations against him did not justify the framing of any charge. But on revision the High Court inter alia observed that the fact that accused-appellant was passive was of no consequence. "It all depends upon the mental response and reaction of an individual whether he faces the risk and attempts to extinguish the flames or quietly watches the incident". The High Court took the view that the charge against the appellant was misconceived as there was not even a case against him to frame charge under S. 306, IPC. Accordingly, it discharged the accused. A social welfare organisation viz. Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad preferred the present appeals. Appreciating the object of the organisation and the assistance rendered by it and allowing its appeal

Held :

Section 227 which confers power to discharge an accused was designed to prevent harassment to an innocent person by the arduous trial or the ordeal of prosecution. The power has been entrusted to the Sessions Judge who brings to bear his knowledge and experience in criminal trials. If the Sessions Judge after hearing the parties frames a charge and also makes an order in support thereof, the law must be allowed to take its own course. Self-restraint on the part of the High Court should be the rule unless there is a glaring injustice staring the court in the face.

In the present case the trial court had considered every material on record and given reasons why a charge under S. 302, IPC was warranted against the appellant even though police had charge-sheeted him under S. 306, IPC. But the High Court discharged the appellant mainly relying on the dying declaration as if it has been conclusively proved to be the true and faithful version of the deceased. Apart from that, the approach made and the opinion expressed by the High Court in respect of many of the matters cannot be countenanced.

The discretion exercised by the trial court in discharging the appellant's father was correct. Although it was his obligation as manager of the family to protect the deceased and safeguard her life, but that by itself without anything more is not sufficient to frame a charge against him. Stree Atyachar Virodhi Parishad v. Dilip Nathumal Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715: 1989 SCC (Cri) 285: 1989 Mah LJ 462.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-2-1989]

[2819] — Ss. 228 and 482 — Abetment of suicide — Quashment of charge — When warranted — Appellant not named in FIR — Order of framing a charge under S. 306 IPC on basis of allegation of father of deceased — Allegations not substantiated — Held, suicide note does not even remotely connect appellant with offence of abetment — Order framing charge against appellant is unsustainable — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 306 and 107 (Paras 14, 21 to 27)

An enquiry was conducted by the Security Officer of the University, the appellant herein, regarding the theft of a mobile phone. A dispute arose between deceased and H. Deceased committed suicide during enquiry, by jumping in front of a train, leaving a suicide note. In the suicide note it is stated that he did not commit the theft and he had committed suicide because he was falsely implicated in the theft case of a mobile phone. On the basis of the suicide note an FIR under Section 306 IPC was registered. In the said FIR, the appellant was not even named as an accused. A report under Section 173 CrPC was submitted only against H. Charges were framed against H. Complainant, being the father of the deceased filed a private complaint alleging that the appellant S and M were responsible for abetting the suicide of his son. The trial court, on the basis of the said complaint, summoned the appellant as well as M to face trial under Section 306 IPC. The appellant, aggrieved by the framing of the charge moved the High Court in the revision petition which was dismissed. The appellant submitted that whether it would be just and fair to compel the appellant to face the rigmarole of a criminal trial in the absence of any credible material against him? When the appellant was in no manner connected with this case and there was no credible material to connect the appellant with the crime, in this view of the matter, according to the appellant, it would be a futile exercise to compel him to undergo the rigmarole of a criminal trial.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Abetment involves a mental process of instigating a person or intentionally aiding a person in doing of a thing. Without a positive act on the part of the accused to instigate or aid in committing suicide, conviction cannot be sustained. The intention of the legislature and the ratio of the cases decided by the Supreme Court is clear that in order to convict a person under Section 306 IPC there has to be a clear mens rea to commit the offence. It also requires an active act or direct act which led the deceased to commit suicide seeing no option and that act must have been intended to push the deceased into such a position that he committed suicide. (Para 25)

In the instant case, the deceased was undoubtedly hypersensitive to ordinary petulance, discord and differences which happen in our day-to-day life. Human sensitivity of each individual differs from the other. Different people behave differently in the same situation. (Para 26)

When the facts of this case are carefully scrutinised and critically examined in the light of the settled legal position the conclusion becomes obvious that no conviction can be legally sustained without any credible evidence or material on record against the appellant. The order of framing a charge under Section 306 IPC against the appellant is palpably erroneous and unsustainable. It would be travesty of justice to compel the appellant to face a criminal trial without any credible material whatsoever. Consequently, the order of framing charge under Section 306 IPC against the appellant is quashed and all proceedings pending against him are also set aside. (Para 27). S.S. Chheena v. Vijay Kumar Mahajan, (2010) 12 SCC 190: (2010) 3 UPLJ 223 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and K.S. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-8-2010]

Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 917; Mahendra Singh v. State of M.P., 1995 Supp (3) SCC 731: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1157; Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1088; State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73: 1994 SCC (Cri) 107; Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605: (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 367, relied on [2820] — S. 228 & S. 397 r/w Ss. 401 & 482 — Abetment of suicide — Framing of charge — Essentials — Held, a person is said to have abetted in doing a thing, when he "instigates" others to do it — Further held, where the accused by his acts or by a continued course of conduct creates such circumstances that the deceased was left with no other option except to commit suicide, an "instigation" may be inferred — Appellant charged that he along with other two accused "in furtherance of common intention", mentally tortured JS (the deceased) and thereby abetted him to commit suicide — Apart from the suicide note statements recorded by the police during investigation, showing that on account of business transactions with the accused, the deceased was put under tremendous pressure to do something which he was perhaps not willing to do — Prima facie*, the conduct of the appellant and his accomplices appeared such that the deceased was left with no other option except to end his life — Hence, impugned judgment upholding order of trial court framing charge for offence under S. 306 r/w S. 34 IPC, calls for no interference — Penal Code, 1860, S. 306 r/w S. 34 and S. 107* (Paras 15, 19 and 21 to 24). Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-2009]

Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1088, followed [2821] — Ss. 228, 240 and 173 — Framing of charge — Case instituted upon a police report — At the stage of framing of charges court must confine its attention to documents referred to under S. 173 only — Court not justified in referring to the letters purportedly written by the accused when their authenticity and veracity are yet to be gone into. State of J&K v. Sudershan Chakkar, (1995) 4 SCC 181: 1995 SCC (Cri) 664: AIR 1995 SC 1954: 1995 Cri LJ 3606.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-1995]

[2822] — Ss. 228, 240 and 227 — Framing of charges under Ss. 23 and 29, NDPS Act — Nature of material on record on the basis of which the charges can be framed — Held, at the stage of framing of charges, the court need not deeply examine the probative value of the materials on record — If on the basis of such material the court could come to the conclusion that the accused would have committed the offence, the court is obliged to frame the charge — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 23 and 29

On 21-4-1994, the Royal Police of the Kingdom of Swaziland (situate adjacent to South Africa and Mozambique) intercepted a container truck carrying a huge quantity of tablets of "Mandrax" which were concealed in packets of electric globes. Messages were sent to various Narcotic Bureaus. It was eventually discovered that the said stock was despatched from the port of Chennai in India in the name of a Chennai-based firm and the destination was a company at Annfrere, South Africa. After investigation a complaint was filed against four persons and different provisions of NDPS Act. Subsequently the investigating agency received some more information about the aforesaid Mandrax and the connection therewith of the appellant who was an Indian citizen and had in the past held a post in the Consulate of Liberia at Mozambique. After obtaining permission from the Special Court under Section 173(8) CrPC, the investigating agency conducted further investigation which revealed that the appellant was one of the key persons who conspired with the other four accused already charge-sheeted. Subsequently the appellant was also arraigned with them for the offence under Section 29 of the NDPS Act. Both the consignor and consignee were found to be fictitious concerns and the appellant was allegedly the Chairman of the clearing agency which had presented the Bill of Entry on behalf of the non-existent consignee and had taken possession of the consignment. The prosecution further alleged that the Inspector of the Royal Swaziland Police had stated in an affidavit that he had seen a car making a U-turn before the police station and the driver of the car curiously watching the police personnel offloading the Mandrax consignment. That the driver of the car was an Indian male who, on being interrogated told that he was a diplomat from Liberia and was staying in Mozambique. That the said driver looked very nervous. The prosecution further alleged that the said Police Inspector of Swaziland on being shown a photo of the appellant had identified the figure therein as the person who had been driving the car at the time of interception of the Mandrax consignment. The appellant's application for a discharge under Section 227 CrPC was rejected by the Special Court. The appellant's petition for quashing the order of the Special Court was rejected by the High Court. Before the High Court the appellant had relied on one document each from the Mozambique Police and the South African Police, dated August 1996 and 3-4-1997 respectively, to the effect that no material had been till then collected to connect the appellant with the contraband consignment. The appellant contended that identification by photo was illegal and could not be used. Dismissing his appeal,

Held :

The two communications from the police of the foreign countries revealed only what the police then felt on the materials they could unearth till then. Such a view expressed by the police in those countries cannot foreclose the investigating force in India from arriving at the right conclusion, nor even the police authorities of those countries themselves from taking a different view subsequently. (Para 6)

If the allegations are correct, there is an undeniable position that a serious offence under Section 23 of the NDPS Act had been committed in respect of the aforesaid contraband articles. It is for the prosecution to establish the persons who have committed the offence. Four persons who were already charge-sheeted are said to be those engaged at the exporting end. There must have been human persons at the importing stage and it is for the prosecution to establish who they were. The investigation revealed that the appellant was the Chairman of the clearing agency. This is a very material and incriminating circumstance which, if established, would take the prosecution a long way off. (Paras 7 and 8)

At the stage of framing charge the court is not expected to go deep into the probative value of the materials on record. If on the basis of materials on record the court could come to the conclusion that the accused would have committed the offence the court is obliged to frame the charge and proceed to the trial. There is no scope for contending in the present case that the court cannot frame charge under Section 29 read with Section 23 of the NDPS Act. The trial court and the High Court rightly repelled the plea of the appellant in that regard. (Paras 15 and 18). Umar Abdul Sakoor Sorathia v. Narcotic Control Bureau, (2000) 1 SCC 138: 2000 SCC (Cri) 200: AIR 1999 SC 2562: 1999 Cri LJ 3972.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-1999]

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104, distinguished

State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820, followed

See also State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568

[2823] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Bombay Bomb Blast case — Framing of charge — Appellant allegedly facilitating landing, transportation and distribution of arms, ammunition and RDX by sending his men and jeeps — Appellant also providing financial aid to the co-accused which was used for blast purpose — Appellant's scooter used as scooter bomb — Held, the alleged fact that the jeeps provided by the appellant had cavities to conceal arms, etc. and that the jeeps were recovered at the instance of the appellant in which were found traces of RDX would prima facie show that the appellant had abetted the terrorist act within the meaning of S. 109 IPC — Alleged financial assistance would attract the enlarged definition of abetment given in S. 2(1)(a)(iii), TADA Act — Charges maintained — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 109 and 120-B — TADA, 1987, Ss. 3(3) and 2(1)(a)(iii). State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820: AIR 1996 SC 1744.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and B.L. Hansaria and S.C. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1996]

[2824] — Ss. 228 and 227 — Bombay Bomb Blast case — Framing of charge against the accused — Allegation that the appellant in question permitted the co-accused to park motor vehicles laden with arms, ammunition and explosives in his premises — Material on record showing that immediately after coming to know about parking of the vehicles the appellant asked the co-accused to remove the vehicles from his compound — Held, conduct of the appellant is indicative of the fact that he was neither in conscious possession of the arms, ammunition, etc. nor had he aided the co-accused in any way in the terrorist act — Appellant discharged — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-B — TADA, 1987, Ss. 3(3) and 6. State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820: AIR 1996 SC 1744.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and B.L. Hansaria and S.C. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1996]

[2825] — Ss. 228, 167, 173, 2(g) & (h), 190 and 309 — Suspension of President or Vice-President of Municipality — Provision for suspension on detention in prison during "trial" — Scope — (Per majority, S.B. Sinha, J., contra) Detention in judicial custody during investigation, held, covered — Purposive interpretation applied — Plea to give a restricted meaning to "trial" so as to include only the proceedings subsequent to framing of charges, rejected — Gujarat Municipalities Act, 1963 (34 of 1964), S. 40(1) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 307, 143, 147, 148 and 149 — Arms Act, 1959, S. 25(1)(c) — Bombay Police Act, 1951 (22 of 1951), S. 135

The appellant herein was elected as President of a municipality in Gujarat. His term of office was to expire on 30-6-2002. Two FIRs were lodged against him for offences under Sections 307, 143, 147, 148 and 149 IPC read with Section 25(1)(c) of the Arms Act and under Section 135 of the Bombay Police Act. During investigation, the appellant was arrested and detained in judicial custody from 13-6-2001 to 6-7-2001. Exercising the power under Section 40 of the Gujarat Municipalities Act, 1963 (for short "the Act"), the authorised officer suspended the appellant from his office. The Appellate Authority dismissed his appeal. Then the appellant filed before the High Court a writ petition, which was later dismissed by a Single Judge. A Division Bench affirmed that decision. Then the appellant filed the instant SLP and a contempt petition. The appellant contended that as the offence alleged to have been committed by him was triable by a Court of Session, the trial thereof in contradistinction to the term "investigation" or "inquiry" would commence from the stage of Section 228 CrPC. That an investigation and/or an inquiry could not be said to be a "trial" within the meaning of Section 40 of the Act. The appellant strongly relied upon the distinction between two parts of Section 40(1) of the Act regarding offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act, Bombay Prohibition Act, Gujarat Municipalities Act on the one hand and other enactments on the other.

Dismissing the SLP by a majority, and dropping the contempt proceedings unanimously

Held :

Per Rajendra Babu, J.

Section 40(1) is disjunctive in nature. It consists of two parts. The second part deals with the suspension of a President or Vice-President who has been detained in a prison during trial under the provisions of any law. The present petition falls under the second part. (Para 46)

The manifest intention and obvious purpose of Section 40 is to ensure the proper functioning of the office of the President or Vice-President of the Municipalities by keeping the public confidence. The Act aims to keep those persons, against whom serious criminal proceedings are initiated or who are detained in prisons, away from the public office of the President or Vice-President of the Municipalities until they are cleared of the charge. Actual conviction for the alleged offence is not a necessary precondition for suspension under Section 40. The cardinal dictum that the legislature laid down vide Section 40 is to allow only those persons against whom there are no criminal proceedings to man the office of the Municipal President or Vice-President. (Paras 47 and 52)

The proper meaning of the words "detained in prison during trial" in Part II of Section 40(1) should be in perfect tune with the spirit of Section 40. Otherwise, the purpose of the section will be defeated. Therefore, the word "trial" used in the expression "detained in prison during trial" cannot be singled out and cannot be accorded a restricted meaning. (Paras 48 and 52)

The word "trial" in Section 40 of the Act cannot be supplanted with a straitjacket meaning so as to cover all situations. The purpose of Section 40 could only be promoted if the word "trial" is given a broad meaning. This intention is vividly displayed by choosing the expression "under the provisions of any law for the time being in force" in Part II of Section 40(1), which means the provision is designed to cover any "detention in prison" under provisions of any law. Only by this interpretation, the textual meaning of "during trial" matches the contextual spirit of Section 40 that aims to ensure the smooth functioning of the office and to keep the confidence of the people in the institution. (Paras 51, 52 and 47)

Therefore, the word "trial" should not be given a restricted meaning so as to include only proceedings after the accused is actually arraigned before the competent court for framing and facing of charges. Thus, detention in the present case took place during the process of trial. It served as a step in aid for trial. (Paras 53 and 55)

The appellant's reliance on the distinction between the two parts of Section 40(1), is not proper. Many offences arising under other laws adverted to in the latter part of Section 40(1) of the Act are no less serious than those adverted to in the former part thereof. For that matter they may be far more serious. Further, for practical reasons, if a person is kept in prison, whatever may be the nature of the offence whether falling under the first part or the second part of Section 40(1), the working of the Act will be put in jeopardy unless he is suspended. Treating one who has committed an offence under the Bombay Prohibition Act as liable to be suspended immediately on being accused of such an offence and arrested, while treating the other who has committed a murder as not so liable would lead to anomalous results as in the categorisation of offences no scientific basis is discernible. Thus two classes are created, one more onerous than the other and, therefore, may lead to being irrational and arbitrary so as to violate Article 14. (Para 54)

Per Dr. AR. Lakshmanan, J.

Section 40 of the Act requires purposive interpretation. The object of the provision is to keep criminal elements away from local bodies and to allow public offices to be held by persons with apparent integrity and moral conduct. The first and second parts of Section 40(1) are disjunctive as indicated by putting the word or between the first and second parts. The first part of the section is not attracted to the facts of the present case. Therefore, the petitioner's case is to be considered for applicability of the last part. As rightly pointed out by the High Court, the word "trial" cannot be given a fixed meaning as is to be understood from CrPC and it has to be given the meaning as is to be understood from the law applicable to the trial in question during which the holder of the elected office has been detained. (Para 58)

Moreover, the word "trial" has not been expressly defined in CrPC. It should not be given a restrictive meaning to include only proceedings after the accused is actually arraigned before the competent court for framing and facing the charge. (Para 59)

The High Court has rightly held that the "detention in jail during trial" as mentioned in the second part of Section 40(1) of the Act should be interpreted as "detention in jail during the process of trial" which period shall include the period from the trial" which period shall include the period from the date of filing of the FIR till the end of the trial and the detention of the President or Vice-President at any time during the period in jail shall attract the second part of Section 40(1) of the Act and the authority is competent to take a decision whether such President or Vice-President who has been detained in connection with the alleged criminal offence should be suspended or not. The word "trial" should be interpreted to achieve the object of the Act. (Para 60)

Considering the gravity of the situation that the person was in judicial custody his insistence on holding the office as an officer of the Municipality is impermissible. Likewise, the general principle for a public office is that by any act or omission if a person or officer is imprisoned or is in judicial custody, he should be suspended from the post. (Para 61)

Per S.B. Sinha, J. (minority view)

In Section 40(1), the legislature advisedly has used two different terms as regards different offences for achieving the same object. Whereas, the President or Vice-President of a Municipal Council may be placed under suspension upon institution of a case under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and the Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949, but in relation to other cases the order of suspension can be passed only when he has been detained in a prison during trial. (Para 12)

The expression "trial" although has not been defined in CrPC must be construed in the light of the expression "inquiry" or "investigation" as contained in Sections 2(g) and 2(h) thereof. The very fact that an inquiry or investigation will not be "trial" is a clear pointer to the fact that so long as an investigation or an inquiry does not come to an end a trial does not commence. Thus, whereas in an inquiry or investigation evidence is collected, the same is adduced during trial. Evidence may be collected behind the back of the accused, but the same has to be adduced only in his presence. (Paras 13 to 15)

Detention of an accused either in police custody or judicial custody is not a matter of much relevance for the purpose of interpretation of Section 40 of the Act. (Para 17)

A statute is to be construed according to the intention of the legislature. The golden rule of interpretation of a statute is that it has to be given its literal and natural meaning. The intention of the legislature must be found out from the language employed in the statute itself. (Paras 19 to 21)

It is also well settled that when two different expressions are used by the legislature, the same must be held to have intended to convey two different meanings. Section 40 uses the term "instituted" in relation to offences under the statutes specified therein; whereas in relation to the others, the term "during the trial" has been used. (Paras 22 and 23)

Detention of an accused when a case is instituted and during trial is provided in different chapters of CrPC. An accused may be detained in custody during investigation in terms of Section 167 CrPC whereas, he has to be detained after receipt of the charge-sheet and during inquiry or trial in terms of Section 309 thereof. (Para 24)

What is imperative for the purpose of commencement of trial is that cognizance of the offence has been taken which can be done under Section 190 CrPC only upon receiving the report of the investigating officer upon completion of investigation, under Section 173. So far as the sessions trial is concerned, the same begins upon framing of charge as provided for under Chapter XVIII CrPC. However, it is also a fact that the word trial, may in different situations be interpreted differently, having regard to the text and context thereof. (Paras 25, 26 and 29)

Moreover, Section 40 of the Act provides for a disqualification to hold an elected office. A strict construction of the second part of Section 40 is, therefore, called for, having regard to the fact that the act of suspension from holding an office would be quasi-criminal in nature. It is trite that a law leading to disqualification to hold an office should be clear and unambiguous like a penal law. In the event a statute is not clear, recourse to strict interpretation must be made for construction thereof. (Paras 30 and 31)

Moreover, in service rules it is ordinarily mentioned that a holder may be placed under suspension if he is detained in custody either during investigation or trial. Thus, whenever the legislature thinks fit to provide for suspension of a holder of a post when he is in custody, the stages of the case are specifically mentioned. (Para 40)

While providing for different standards in the matter of issuance of order of suspension, the legislature must have kept in mind the impact of institution of cases which, in its opinion, would amount to moral turpitude. So far as offences under the statutes other than specified in the first part of the statute are concerned, the legislature did not evidently intend that an order of suspension be issued automatically without making an investigation in relation thereto. (Para 41)

Therefore, in my opinion, the impugned judgment of the High Court cannot be sustained. (Para 42). Bipinchandra Parshottamdas Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 4 SCC 642: 2003 SCC (Cri) 831: AIR 2003 SC 2256.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu[2], S.B. Sinha[1] and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 14-4-2003]

State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, AIR 1957 SC 389: 1957 SCR 279: 1957 Cri LJ 567, relied on

Bipinchandra Parshottamdas Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 1 Guj LR 319, affirmed

— S. 228(1) See Ss. 223 and 228(1)

See also Ss. 227 & 228(1) and 239 & 240(1)

See also Ss. 408(1), 406, 407, 228(1), 227 and 26(a)(ii)

— S. 228(1)(b) See Ss. 227, 228(1)(b) and 397/401

— S. 229 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 313, 229, 228 and 226

See also S. 319 r/w Ss. 209 and 193, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231 and 482

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2826] — Ss. 229, 233, 235, 241 and 248 — Admission of guilt before court by accused after close of prosecution evidence and his examination under S. 313, Criminal Procedure Code — Conviction, held on facts, was affected by the admission and hence, cannot be sustained — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, S. 16 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 18

When there is an admission of guilt made by the accused as a result of plea bargaining or otherwise, the evaluation of the evidence by the Court is likely to become a little superficial and perfunctory and the Court may be disposed to refer to the evidence not critically with a view to assessing its credibility but mechanically as a matter of formality in support of the admission of guilt. In the present case, the Magistrate was affected by the admission of guilt made by the appellant and in the circumstances, it would not be right to sustain the conviction of the appellant. Ganeshmal Jashraj v. Govt. of Gujarat, (1980) 1 SCC 363: 1980 SCC (Cri) 239: AIR 1980 SC 264: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 474: (1980) 21 GLR 429: (1980) 1 SCR 1114.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-10-1979]

[2827] — Ss. 229, 241 and 223 — Several accused facing trial jointly — Conviction of some of them at the stage of recording of their pleas — Held, that would not amount to separating their trial from that of the other accused persons unless there is a separate order in that regard — TADA, 1987, S. 15(3) proviso

There has been no order separating the trial of A-7 to A-9 from that of these appellants and it is evident that the same trial continued even after A-7 to A-9 were convicted based on their pleas. Therefore, the argument of the appellants that A-7 to A-9 were not tried in the same trial as the appellants, cannot be countenanced. (Para 52). Jameel Ahmed v. State of Rajasthan, (2003) 9 SCC 673.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-2003]

[2828] — Ss. 229, 241, Ch. XX-A (Ss. 265-A to 265-L) and 368, 399 and 401 — Plea bargaining — Neither the trial court nor the High Court has the jurisdiction to bypass on the basis of a plea-bargain the minimum sentence prescribed by law — Contention rejected that it was not open to trial court to enhance the sentence for conviction under Ss. 392 r/w 397 Penal Cod e, 1860 to rigorous imprisonment for seven years because the practice of plea-bargaining had been adopted at the trial — High Court was within jurisdiction in confirming the minimum sentence of 7 years awarded by the trial court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 397 r/w 392 (Para 4). Kirpal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1999) 5 SCC 649: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1025.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-1999]

Thippaswamy v. State of Karnataka, (1983) 1 SCC 194: 1983 SCC (Cri) 160, distinguished [2829] — Ss. 229, 241, Ch. XX-A (Ss. 265-A to 265-L) and 368, 399 & 401 — Plea bargaining — Enhancement or imposition of sentence in revision or appeal after the accused had plea-bargained for a lighter sentence or mere fine in the trial court, held, would not be reasonable, just or fair and thereby offend Art. 21 — Proper course in such instances is to order retrial giving opportunity to the accused to defend himself — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-A — Constitution of India — Article 21. Thippaswamy v. State of Karnataka, (1983) 1 SCC 194: 1983 SCC (Cri) 160: AIR 1983 SC 747: 1983 Cri LJ 1271.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, R.S. Pathak and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-11-1982]

— S. 230 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also S. 319 r/w Ss. 209 and 193, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231 and 482

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

—S. 231 See S. 286, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1124 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 231 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 213, 231 and 232

See also Ss. 226 and 231

See also Ss. 226, 231 and 225

See also Ss. 235, 231 & 233 and 248, 242 & 243

See also S. 319 r/w Ss. 209 and 193, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231 and 482

See also Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283

See also Ss. 391 and 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 & 247

See also Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

See also CRIMINAL TRIAL — 'Appreciation of Evidence',

CRIMINAL TRIAL — 'Witnesses', and

CRIMINAL TRIAL — 'Prosecution' in Vol. 3

[2830] — S. 231 — Evidence for prosecution — Once the prosecution case is believed the non-examination of some other witnesses, held, not to affect the testimony of those already believed. Nirpal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1977) 2 SCC 131: 1977 SCC (Cri) 262: AIR 1977 SC 1066: (1977) 2 SCR 901: 1977 Cri LJ 642.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-1977]

[2831] — Ss. 231, 242 and 244 — Cross-examination of PW before Commissioner — When permissible — Applicability — Witness not able to make himself available for cross-examination due to old age and ill-health — Appointment of Commissioner for cross-examination — Despite two opportunities being granted to defence for cross-examining the IO, defence failing to do so — However, said IO recalled for cross-examination by order dated 7-8-2003 — Between 2003 to 2006 said IO not making himself available for his cross-examination due to his old age and prolonged illness — Hence, held, S. 33 inapplicable — However, directed that if the said witness is not capable of giving evidence by appearing in court, the prosecution may file an application for his cross- examination through a Commissioner which may be allowed by the trial Judge — Thereafter it would be for the Commissioner to consider as to whether IO is capable of deposing before him or not — Further clarified that said order was passed in exercise of jurisdiction under Art. 142 and not be construed as a precedent — Constitution of India, Arts. 142 and 141 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 33 (Paras 3 to 5 and 11 to 13). State of Orissa v. Prasanna Kumar Mohanty, (2009) 7 SCC 412: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 428: (2009) 78 AIC 269 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-2009]

Gopal Saran v. Satyanarayana, (1989) 3 SCC 56, considered

[2832] — S. 231 — Examination of defence witnesses as prosecution witnesses — Not unfair when the witnesses examined only from the point of view of bringing the whole transaction before court martial. Major G.S. Sodhi v. Union of India, (1991) 2 SCC 382: 1991 SCC (Cri) 357: AIR 1991 SC 1617: (1991) 1 LLN 365: 1991 Cri LJ 1947.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

[2833] — S. 231 — Eyewitness account of three witnesses found acceptable by the courts below — Non-examination of other witness is inconsequential. Girish Yadav v. State of M.P., (1996) 8 SCC 186: 1996 SCC (Cri) 552: AIR 1996 SC 3098.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-3-1996]

[2834] — S. 231 — Failure of prosecution to examine persons mentioned in the FIR — Held, detrimental — CrPC, 1898, S. 286. State of U.P. v. Hari Prasad, (1974) 3 SCC 673: 1974 SCC (Cri) 203: AIR 1974 SC 1740: (1974) 2 SCR 588: 1974 Cri LJ 1274.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.H. Beg and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-1973]

[2835] — S. 231 — Failure of prosecution to produce eyewitnesses — Prosecution stating that two witnesses, whose evidence was necessary for unfolding the case have been won over by the defence — Held, such a bald assertion unsupported by any data is insufficient to absolve the prosecution from its duty to examine witnesses. Balak Ram v. State of U.P., (1975) 3 SCC 219: 1974 SCC (Cri) 837: AIR 1974 SC 2165: 1974 Cri LR (SC) 530: 1974 Cri LJ 1486.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.R. Khanna and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-1974]

[2836] — S. 231 — Failure of prosecution to produce witnesses who were not eyewitnesses, held, not to be fatal on the facts. Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 4 SCC 332: 1979 SCC (Cri) 968: AIR 1979 SC 1173: 1979 Cri LJ 700.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-1979]

[2837] — S. 231 — Choice of witness for prosecution — Power of prosecutor — Child produced as eyewitness instead of his mature elder brother and sister who had also seen the incident — Held, it was for Public Prosecutor to decide whether mature witnesses should be examined or not and whether child witness had no role in the matter — Defence never requested trial court to call upon Public Prosecutor to examine the elder brother and sister — Defence also failed to examine them as defence witnesses or to make a prayer to examine them as court witnesses — Held, for non-examination of elder brother and sister, child witness could not be blamed, nor could his evidence be brushed aside in a casual manner (Paras 38 to 40). State of U.P. v. Krishna Master, (2010) 12 SCC 324: AIR 2010 SC 3071: 2010 Cri LJ 3889: (2010) 94 AIC 257: (2010) 5 All LJ 423.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-2010]

[2838] — S. 231 — Material witnesses — Non-examination of — Explained on the basis of their being relatives of the accused or won over by them and therefore not likely to speak the truth — No adverse inference against the prosecution can therefore be drawn

Per Fazal Ali, J.

There is no duty on the prosecution to examine witnesses who might have been gained over by the accused and even if those witnesses are not produced by the prosecution there is nothing to stop the accused from applying to the court for examining such witnesses under S. 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In the instant case it has been seen that the Public Prosecutor has given a statement that the witnesses concerned were either relatives of the accused or that they had been gained over by the accused and were therefore not likely to speak the truth. In view of this explanation it cannot be said that the witnesses were deliberately withheld or unfairly kept back and therefore no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for non- examination of those witnesses. Dalbir Kaur v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 158: 1976 SCC (Cri) 527: AIR 1977 SC 472: 1977 Cri LJ 273: (1977) 1 SCR 280.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta[2] and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-8-1976]

[2839] — S. 231 — Non-examination by prosecution of certain witnesses mentioned in the FIR, held, would cause no infirmity if the evidence actually led by the prosecution is reliable and trustworthy. Pal Singh v. State of U.P., (1979) 4 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 981: AIR 1979 SC 1116: 1979 Cri LJ 917.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-1979]

[2840] — S. 231 — Non-examination of independent witnesses of locality though statement of some of the witnesses recorded — Held, that by itself would not detract from the veracity of the eyewitness account. Ram Sanjiwan Singh v. State of Bihar, (1996) 8 SCC 552: 1996 SCC (Cri) 701: AIR 1996 SC 3265.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-1996]

[2841] — S. 231 — Non-examination of non-material witness by prosecution, held, inconsequential — CrPC, 1898, S. 286(2). Boya Ganganna v. State of A.P., (1976) 1 SCC 584: 1976 SCC (Cri) 102: AIR 1976 SC 1541: 1976 Cri LJ 1158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-1975]

[2842] — S. 231 — Non-examination of residents of locality inconsequential if no evidence to show that they were present and witnessed the occurrence — Adverse inference only justified only if shown that material witnesses had actually seen the occurrence but had been deliberately withheld — No presumption regarding their presence can be drawn merely because they own houses near scene of occurrence. Pattad Amarappa v. State of Karnataka, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 389: 1990 SCC (Cri) 179: AIR 1989 SC 2004: 1989 Cri LJ 2167: (1989) 3 Crimes 39.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-1989]

[2843] — S. 231 — Non-examination of witnesses of locality though statements of some of the residents recorded — No explanation forthcoming — Held, prosecution version doubtful — Genesis of the crime suppressed

The locality where the incident occurred was a thickly populated one. There were several residential quarters as well as shops and dispensaries nearby. At the time of the occurrence, there were several persons who had come out to purchase vegetables from the nearby lane. The halwai shop as well as the dispensaries of two medical practitioners near the place of occurrence were open. On hearing the commotion several persons had come out of their houses. Even though statements of a few including one of the medical practitioners were recorded none was called to the witness box.

Held :

Non-examination of witnesses of locality whose presence would be natural creates doubt regarding the truth of the prosecution version. State of U.P. v. Madan Mohan, (1989) 3 SCC 390: 1989 SCC (Cri) 585: AIR 1989 SC 1519: 1989 Cri LJ 1485.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-4-1989]

[2844] — S. 231 — Non-production without cause of material prosecution witness already cited in the calendar of witnesses — Held, prejudiced fair trial and amounted to an irregularity. S. Harnam Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1976) 2 SCC 819: 1976 SCC (Cri) 324: AIR 1976 SC 2140: 1976 Cri LJ 913.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-1976]

[2845] — S. 231 — Occurrence taking place in a barber shop — Non-examination of barber not fatal to the prosecution case which stood well established on record by the eyewitness account of other witnesses — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114 Ill. (g). Ram Sanjiwan Singh v. State of Bihar, (1996) 8 SCC 552: 1996 SCC (Cri) 701: AIR 1996 SC 3265.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-1996]

[2846] — S. 231 — Dowry death — Evidence — Where sufficient, non-production of remaining evidence, if necessary — Where there was sufficient evidence to prove the charges under Ss. 304-B and 498-A, mere non-production of certain letters allegedly written by the deceased to her parents, held, did not falsify the prosecution case — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B and 498-A — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 113-B. Ram Kumar v. State of Haryana, (1998) 9 SCC 1: 1998 SCC (Cri) 833: AIR 1999 SC 1491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and M. Srinivasan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-1998]

[2847] — S. 231 — Prosecution evidence — No capital can be made out of failure to examine a witness of no use to the prosecution. State of Gujarat v. Bai Fatima, (1975) 2 SCC 7: 1975 SCC (Cri) 384: AIR 1975 SC 1478: (1975) 12 ACC 243: 1975 Cri LJ 1079.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A. Alagiriswami and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-3-1975]

[2848] — S. 231 — Prosecution not bound to produce each and every witness of the occurrence irrespective of the consideration whether such witness is essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution case is based — On facts held, non-examination of some of the witnesses not fatal. Rajbir v. State of Haryana, (1996) 7 SCC 86: 1996 SCC (Cri) 178.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-1994]

[2849] — S. 231 — Prosecution not bound to produce every possible witness — Adverse inference only justified if a material witness kept out — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114, Ill. (g)

The onus of providing the prosecution case rests entirely on the prosecution and it follows as a logical corollary that the prosecution has complete liberty to choose its witnesses if it is to prove its case. The court cannot compel the prosecution to examine one witness or the other as its witness. At the most, if a material witness is withheld, the court may draw an adverse inference against the prosecution. But it is not the law that the omission to examine any and every witness even on minor points would undoubtedly lead to rejection of the prosecution case or drawing of an adverse inference against the prosecution. The law is well settled that the prosecution is bound to produce only such witnesses as are essential for unfolding of the prosecution narrative. In other words, before an adverse inference against the prosecution can be drawn it must be proved to the satisfaction of the court that the witnesses who had been withheld were eyewitnesses who had actually seen the occurrence and were therefore material to prove the case. It is not necessary for the prosecution to multiply witnesses after witnesses on the same point: it is the quality rather than the quantity of the evidence that matters. Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 369: 1976 SCC (Cri) 646: AIR 1976 SC 2304: 1976 Cri LJ 1787.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, A.C. Gupta and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-8-1976]

[2850] — S. 231 — Persons who may be produced as witnesses — Persons not named in charge-sheet — Held, prosecution is entitled to produce any person as witness even though such person is not named in the earlier charge-sheet (Para 22). Rama Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2009) 6 SCC 346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-2009]

[2851] — Ss. 231, 234, 242, 244 and 293 — Expert opinion — Doubts — Duty/Obligation of prosecution — Helping expert with factual information to arrive at correct explanations regarding commission of offence — Expert ruling out commission of unnatural offence under S. 377 IPC — Doubt regarding disappearance of lacerations due to delayed medical examination — Held, it is obligatory on the part of the prosecution to draw the attention of expert to such doubt so as to enable him to furnish an explanation — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 45 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 377

When an expert categorically ruled out the commission of an unnatural offence having regard to his expertise, it was obligatory on the part of the prosecution to draw his attention so as to enable him to furnish an explanation. It was contended that lacerations are likely to disappear if the examination is made after two to three days and nature of injuries would also depend upon several factors. PW 3, doctor in his evidence stated that the tissues around the anus are hard and rough. At the time of answering the calls of nature, the extra skin will be expanded. Immediately after it will come to original status. By examination it was found that the boy was not habitually used for anal intercourse. If there is continuous act of intercourse for about a week or even 2, 3 days it can be found out as to whether he had had any intercourse or not. (Paras 30, 29 and 28)

It may be true that absence of medical evidence by itself may not be a crucial factor in all cases, but, the same has to be taken into consideration as a relevant factor when other evidence points towards the innocence of the appellant. It is not a case where only one view was possible. It is a well-settled principle of law that where two views are possible, the High Court would not ordinarily interfere with the judgment of acquittal. (Paras 30 and 38). Gowrishankara Swamigalu v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 14 SCC 411.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2008]

Ejaj Ahmad: Sexual Offences; Modi: Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, referred to

[2852] — S. 231 — Prosecution not producing witnesses won over by opposite party — It would be unreasonable to insist tendering such witnesses before Court — CrPC, 1898, S. 286(2)

It is undoubtedly the duty of the prosecution to lay before the Court all material evidence available to it which is necessary for unfolding its case, but it would be unsound to lay down as a general rule that every witness must be examined even though his evidence may not be very material or even if it is known that he has been won over or terrorized. Bava Haji Hamsa v. State of Kerala, (1974) 4 SCC 479: 1974 SCC (Cri) 515: AIR 1974 SC 902: 1974 Cri LJ 755.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.H. Beg, Y.V. Chandrachud and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-1974]

[2853] — S. 231 — Prosecution producing all the necessary witnesses for unfolding the narrative — Held, all persons who saw the incident need not be produced — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114, Ill. (g). Verghese Thomas v. State of Kerala, (1976) 4 SCC 348: 1976 SCC (Cri) 643: AIR 1977 SC 701: 1977 Cri LJ 343: 1976 Cri LJ 643.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-1975]

[2854] — S. 231 — Prosecution though generally not bound to produce every witness must examine all the eyewitnesses when some of them are interested and require corroboration — Adverse inference on non-examination of independent eyewitnesses mentioned in the FIR held, justified. Bir Singh v. State of U.P., (1977) 4 SCC 420: 1977 SCC (Cri) 640: AIR 1978 SC 59: 1978 Cri LJ 177: 1978 ALJ 365.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-8-1977]

[2855] — S. 231 — Version of prosecution witnesses — Alleged to be false — All necessary evidence brought on record, defence cross examined the prosecution witnesses effectively and evidence against the accused existing — In the circumstances it was for the court martial to arrive at a conclusion on the basis of the evidence — Supreme Court cannot reappreciate the evidence under Art. 32 to find the veracity of the version of the witnesses. Major G.S. Sodhi v. Union of India, (1991) 2 SCC 382: 1991 SCC (Cri) 357: AIR 1991 SC 1617: (1991) 1 LLN 365: 1991 Cri LJ 1947.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

[2856] — S. 231 — Witnesses for the prosecution — Dacoity and murder — Independent witnesses present at scene of occurrence — Duty of prosecution to examine — Failure to examine witnesses named in FIR held fatal. Ram Lakhan Singh v. State of U.P., (1977) 3 SCC 268: 1977 SCC (Cri) 474: AIR 1977 SC 1936: 1977 Cri LJ 1566.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.K. Goswami, A.C. Gupta and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1977]

[2857] — Ss. 231, 242, 243, 244 and 247 — Recording of evidence — Objection against — New practice directions — Procedure to be followed by trial court at evidence-taking stage when any objection is raised regarding admissibility of any material or any item of oral evidence — Practice of passing detailed order allowing or rejecting the objection and then giving time by suspending trial to enable the parties concerned to move the higher court against such interlocutory order, held, not proper — Instead court should make a notice of such objection and decide it at the last stage of the final judgment — This procedure has to be followed except where the objection relates to deficiency in stamp duty of a document — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 5 and 3

In this case on different occasions the trial Judge had chosen to decide questions of admissibility of documents or other items of evidence, as and when objections thereto were raised and then detailed orders were passed either upholding or overruling such objections. After passing the orders the trial court waited for days and weeks for the parties concerned to go before the higher courts for the purpose of challenging such interlocutory orders.

Held :

It is an archaic practice that during the evidence-collecting stage, whenever any objection is raised regarding admissibility of any material in evidence the court does not proceed further without passing order on such objection. Such practices when realised through the course of long period to be hindrances which impede steady and swift progress of trial proceedings must be recast or remoulded to give way for better substitutes which would help acceleration of trial proceedings. (Para 13)

When so recast, the practice which can be a better substitute is this: Whenever an objection is raised during evidence-taking stage regarding the admissibility of any material or item of oral evidence the trial court can make a note of such objection and mark the objected document tentatively as an exhibit in the case (or record the objected part of the oral evidence) subject to such objections to be decided at the last stage in the final judgment. If the court finds at the final stage that the objection so raised is sustainable the Judge or Magistrate can keep such evidence excluded from consideration. There is no illegality in adopting such a course. (Para 14)

However, if the objection relates to deficiency of stamp duty of a document the court has to decide the objection before proceeding further. For all other objections the procedure suggested above can be followed. (Para 14)

The above procedure, if followed, will have two advantages. First is that the time in the trial court, during evidence-taking stage, would not be wasted on account of raising such objections and the court can continue to examine the witnesses. The witnesses need not wait for long hours, if not days. Second is that the superior court, when the same objection is recanvassed and reconsidered in appeal or revision against the final judgment of the trial court, can determine the correctness of the view taken by the trial court regarding that objection, without bothering to remit the case to the trial court again for fresh disposal. This measure would not cause any prejudice to the parties to the litigation and would not add to their misery or expenses. (Para 15)

Therefore, the above is made as a procedure to be followed by the trial courts whenever an objection is raised regarding the admissibility of any material or any item of oral evidence. (Para 16). Bipin Shantilal Panchal v. State of Gujarat, (2001) 3 SCC 1: 2001 SCC (Cri) 417: AIR 2001 SC 1158: 2001 Cri LJ 1254.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-2001]

[2858] — Ss. 231, 242, 243, 246 and 326 — Cross-examination — Opportunity of — Stage at which to be availed — Held, party which fails to avail of said opportunity at the appropriate stage is precluded from taking plea of non-observance of natural justice at a later stage — On facts, plea as to non-cross-examination raised only at stage of arguments before High Court — High Court rejecting plea at that stage — Held, proper — CPC, 1908, Or. 18 Rr. 4 and 5 — Contempt of Courts Act, 1971, S. 17

A party which fails to avail of the opportunity to cross-examine at the appropriate stage is precluded from taking the plea of non-observance of principles of natural justice at a later stage. Such a plea would not be tenable. Therefore, having regard to the fact that contempt proceedings are to be decided expeditiously in a summary manner the convictions have been recorded without extending the opportunity to the contemners to cross-examine those who had deposed against them on affidavits. (Paras 30 and 31)

The High Court in its order has noted that the learned counsels appearing for both the parties have taken a stand that all possible fair and proper opportunities were extended to them. In view of the statements made by the counsel for the parties it will not be open to the counsel for the parties at this stage to take the stand that in the absence of cross-examination of the concerned persons, reliance could not be placed on the statements which were made on oath. Counsel who had appeared for the contemners before the High Court did not claim the right of cross-examination. Only at the stage of arguments was a submission made that opportunity to cross-examine the concerned persons was not given which vitiated the trial. High Court rejected this contention by holding that such a stand could not be taken at that stage of the proceedings. (Paras 30 and 13). Daroga Singh v. B.K. Pandey, (2004) 5 SCC 26: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1521: 2004 Cri LJ 2084.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-2004]

Vinay Chandra Mishra, In re, (1995) 2 SCC 584, followed
Arun Paswan, SI v. State of Bihar, (2004) 5 SCC 53, relied on

[2859] — Ss. 231, 242, 244, 309 and 437 & 439 — Delay in conduct of trial — Power of Magistrate to close the case of prosecution — Grant of bail — Other reliefs that can be granted in case of — Propositions laid down in Abdul Rehman Antulay case, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93 supplemented by additional directions — In the instant case FIR regarding offence under S. 5(2) & (1)(e) of Prevention of Corruption Act was lodged 16 long years ago and charge-sheet was submitted three years later but the prosecution had till 1-6-1995 examined only three out of forty witnesses — However, the accused was never incarcerated as his bail application was allowed on the day he had appeared before the court — In such, circumstances, the relief of quashment of the entire prosecution including FIR, not granted — Instead, the trial court directed to pass appropriate orders in pursuance of the present judgment — Constitution of India — Art. 21 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(2) and (1)(e)

A case regarding an offence under Sections 5(2) & (1)(e) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 was registered against the petitioner on 2-11-1982. A charge-sheet was submitted on 30-8-1985 by the CBI. The Special Judge, CBI took cognizance of the offences on 14-11-1986 and issued summons. On 24-4-1987, the petitioner appeared before the Court, applied for, and obtained, bail. The charges were framed by the Special Judge on 4-3-1993. Three out of forty witnesses were examined by the prosecution till 1-6-1995. The petitioner, by a writ petition before the Patna High Court, sought the quashment of the entire prosecution including the FIR on the ground that the long delay since the institution of the FIR had violated his right to speedy trial. Allowing the appeal, without passing an order on merits of the case,

Held :

The legal position adumbrated by the Supreme Court in Abdul Rehman Antulay case that the right to speedy trial flows from Article 21 and encompasses the stages right from the date of registration of the FIR and onwards, remains unaltered. But it has become necessary to consider the matter at some length and lay down additional guidelines in view of the large pendency of the cases before the Special Court, Patna for more than two decades by now.

The Code of Criminal Procedure is comprehensive enough to enable the Magistrate to close the prosecution if the prosecution is unable to produce its witnesses in spite of repeated opportunities. Section 309(1) CrPC supports the above view as it enjoins expeditious holding of the proceedings and continuous examination of witnesses from day to day. The section also provides for recording reasons for adjourning the case beyond the following day.

(i) Where the offence is punishable with imprisonment for a period not exceeding seven years, whether the accused is in jail or not, the court shall close the prosecution evidence on completion of a period of two years from the date of recording the plea of the accused on the charges framed whether the prosecution has examined all the witnesses or not within the said period and the court can proceed to the next step provided by law for the trial of the case.

(ii) In such cases, if the accused has been in jail for a period of not less than one-half of the maximum period of punishment prescribed for the offence, the trial court shall release the accused on bail forthwith on such conditions as it deems fit.

(iii) If the offence under trial is punishable with imprisonment for a period exceeding 7 years, whether the accused is in jail or not, the court shall close the prosecution evidence on completion of three years from the date of recording the plea of the accused on the charge framed, whether the prosecution has examined all the witnesses or not within the said period and the court can proceed to the next step provided by law for the trial of the case, unless for very exceptional reasons to be recorded and in the interest of justice the court considers it necessary to grant further time to the prosecution to adduce evidence beyond the said time-limit.

(iv) But if the inability for completing the prosecution within the said period is attributable to the conduct of the accused in protracting the trial, the time-limit for closing the prosecution evidence mentioned in the preceding clause would not apply.

Where the trial has been stayed by orders of the court or by operation of law, the period of such stay shall be excluded from the said period for closing the prosecution evidence. The above directions will be in addition, and without prejudice, to the directions issued by the Supreme Court in "Common Cause" A Registered Society v. Union of India [(1996) 4 SCC 33] as modified in "Common Cause" A Registered Society v. Union of India [(1996) 6 SCC 775].

[The Supreme Court set aside the impugned order of the High Court and directed the Special Judge, CBI, South Bihar, Patna to pass appropriate orders in the case of the petitioner in pursuance of the instant judgment.]. Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1998) 7 SCC 507: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1692: AIR 1998 SC 3281.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and M. Srinivasan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1998]

Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93, affirmed and supplemented

"Common Cause" A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 4 SCC 33: 1996 SCC (Cri) 589; "Common Cause" A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 6 SCC 775: 1997 SCC (Cri) 42, followed

Hussainara Khatoon (I) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 81: 1980 SCC (Cri) 23; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248; Hussainara Khatoon (IV) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 98: 1980 SCC (Cri) 40; State of Maharashtra v. Champalal Punjaji Shah, (1981) 3 SCC 610: 1981 SCC (Cri) 762; Madhu Mehta v. Union of India, (1989) 4 SCC 62: 1989 SCC (Cri) 705, relied on

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899, explained

Partly overruled in P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578*

See also State v. Dr. Narayan Waman Nerukar, (2002) 7 SCC 6*

Clarified in Supdt. of Police, Karnataka Lokayukta v. B. Srinivas, (2008) 8 SCC 580*

[2860] — Ss. 231, 242 and 243 — Power of power-of-attorney holder to "act" on behalf of principal — Word "acts" in Or. 3 Rr. 1 and 2 CPC — Scope — Power to depose on behalf of principal — Scope — Power to depose in place of principal, held, extends only to depositions in respect of "acts" done by power-of-attorney holder in exercise of power granted by the instrument — Term "acts" would not include deposing in place of and instead of the principal for acts done by principal and not by power-of-attorney holder — Similarly power-of-attorney holder cannot depose for principal in respect of matters of which only principal can have personal knowledge and in respect of which principal is liable to be cross-examined — If principal is unable to appear in court, a commission for recording his evidence may be issued — Auction of attached property and recovery of debt — Determination of share in attached property — Burden of proving co-ownership of property concerned, extent of their share therein, independent source of income if any and that their share was purchased from such independent income placed on appellants on remand by Supreme Court in Janki Vashdeo Bhojwani (I), (2004) 3 SCC 584 — Therefore, held, it was obligatory for them to have entered the witness box and discharged the burden by themselves — Questions on remand above could only have been answered by appellants themselves and not by a mere holder of power of attorney from them — Power of attorney does not have personal knowledge of these matters of the appellants and therefore he can neither depose on his personal knowledge nor can he be cross-examined on such facts — Hence appellants failed to establish that they had any independent source of income and contributed therefrom for the purchase of their share in the property — This being the core question, appeal liable to be dismissed — However, even on an appraisal of the documentary evidence on record by the Supreme Court, it is seen that there is no proof that the source of purchase of the purported share of the appellants in the property is from the independent income of the appellants — Further held, appellants have not approached the Court with clean hands — From the conduct of the parties it is apparent that the litigation has been a ploy to salvage the property from sale in execution of the decree — Hence appeals dismissed with costs — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. 41 R. 1 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 106, 137 and 138 — Recovery of Debts Due to Banks and Financial Institutions Act, 1993, S. 25(a) — CPC, 1908, Or. 3 Rr. 1 and 2, Or. 18 Rr. 4 and 19, Or. 10 R. 4, Or. 11 R. 1 and Or. 26 (Paras 12 to 14, 16, 18, 10, 22, 23, 25, 27 and 30). Janki Vashdeo Bhojwani v. Indusind Bank Ltd., (2005) 2 SCC 217: AIR 2005 SC 439: (2004) 123 Comp Cas 154: (2005) 2 KLT 265: (2005) 1 Mah LJ 1170.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.M. Dharmadhikari and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2004]

Vidhyadhar v. Manikrao, (1999) 3 SCC 573, relied on

Shambhu Dutt Shastri v. State of Rajasthan, (1986) 2 WLN 713 (Raj); Ram Prasad v. Hari Narain, AIR 1998 Raj 185: (1998) 3 Cur CC 183; Pradeep Mohanbay (Dr.) v. Minguel Carlos Dias, (2000) 1 Bom LR 908, approved

Humberto Luis v. Floriano Armando Luis, (2002) 2 Bom CR 754, overruled

[2861] — Ss. 231, 242 and 244 — Non-examination of material witnesses, held, fatal to the prosecution case. S.P. Bhatnagar v. State of Maharashtra, (1979) 1 SCC 535: 1979 SCC (Cri) 323: AIR 1979 SC 826: 1979 Cri LJ 566.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Jaswant Singh and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-1979]

[2862] — Ss. 231, 242 and 244 — Prosecution evidence — Material witness will be one whose evidence is necessary to the unfolding of the prosecution narrative — Omission to examine the person who merely informed the police of the going on of the fight not fatal. Sitaram v. State of M.P., 1980 Supp SCC 338: 1981 SCC (Cri) 276: AIR 1979 SC 1235: 1979 Cri LJ 1028.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-3-1979]

[2863] — Ss. 231, 311 and 313 — Re-examination of witness — Prosecution evidence closed and accused examined under S. 313 CrPC — Prosecution not moving trial judge at any stage for recalling prosecution witness — Order of High Court in revision reserving liberty to prosecution to recall a witness for re-examination, held, uncalled for — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 138. Mir Mohd. Omar v. State of W.B., (1989) 4 SCC 436: 1989 SCC (Cri) 750: AIR 1989 SC 1785: 1989 Cri LJ 2070: (1989) 2 Crimes 698.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-1989]

[2864] — Ss. 231, 233, 242 and 243 — Conviction under S. 8 r/w S. 20(b)(ii), NDPS Act confirmed by High Court — Allegation of mala fides — Unsubstantiated pleas — Allegation that accused was falsely implicated as the accused had met with an accident with a police jeep driven by the investigating officer (PW 6) — Allegation that panch witnesses were not locals and stock witnesses of the police — Held, in the absence of any suggestion or material in cross-examination such lame pleas cannot be accepted — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 8 and 20(b)(ii) (Paras 4 and 5). Ghasita Sahu v. State of M.P., (2008) 3 SCC 52: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 605: AIR 2008 SC 1425: 2008 Cri LJ 2060.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-1-2008]

[2865] — Ss. 231 and 233 — Equal treatment, held on facts, given to evidence of prosecution and defence witnesses (Para 15). Anil Sharma v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 5 SCC 679: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1706: AIR 2004 SC 2294: 2004 Cri LJ 2527.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-2004]

[2866] — Ss. 231 and 242 — Adverse inference — When may be drawn — Held on facts, the same could not be drawn against prosecution for not examining the three injured witnesses — Those witnesses were not ready to depose on behalf of the prosecution out of fear of the accused persons — Evidence of other eyewitnesses could not be discarded merely because of the said non-examination — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 114 Ill. (g), 134 and 135 (Para 11). Rajan Rai v. State of Bihar, (2006) 1 SCC 191: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 209: AIR 2006 SC 433: 2006 Cri LJ 163: (2005) 36 AIC 10 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-11-2005]

[2867] — Ss. 231 and 242 — Grounds for non-examination of witnesses — Witnesses not present during incident — Non-examination of witnesses on ground that witnesses not present dur- ing incident — Conclusion based on the fact that statements of such witnesses purportedly recorded in language not known to them — Held, not a ground by itself sufficient to conclude that such witnesses were not present, for it was not a requirement of law that the language of statement recorded under S. 161 CrPC be known to the witness — Moreover, merely because witnesses could only speak the said language, and were not literate in it was not enough to conclude that they did not know the language

It is not a requirement in law that the statement under Section 161 CrPC has to be recorded in the language known to the person giving the statement. As a matter of fact, the person giving the statement is not required to sign the statement as is mandated in Section 162 CrPC. (Para 71)

The High Court noted that the statements of certain witnesses under Section 161 CrPC were recorded in Gujarati language though the witnesses did not know Gujarati, and therefore concluded that they were not present during the incident and, therefore, question of their statement being recorded by the police did not arise. There was no material before the High Court for coming to a finding that the persons did not know Gujarati since there may be a person who could converse fluently in a language though not literate to read and write. The reasoning is erroneous for more reasons than one and the conclusion of the High Court holding that the persons were not present during the incident is untenable. (Para 71). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[2868] — Ss. 231 and 242 — Non-examination of witnesses — Permissible grounds for — Particular order of examination of witnesses set — Departure from — When permissible — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 134 and 135

It is true that the prosecution is not bound to examine each and every person who has been named as a witness. A person named as a witness may be given up when there is material to show that he has been gained over or that there is no likelihood of the witness speaking the truth in court. (Para 71)

The reasons indicated by the High Court to justify non-examination of the eyewitnesses are not sustainable. In respect of one it has been said that whereabouts of the witness may not be known. There is nothing on record to show that efforts were made by the prosecution with any meticulous care or seriousness to produce the witness for tendering evidence, and yet the net result was "untraceable". Another aspect which has been lightly brushed aside by the High Court is that one person who was to be examined on a particular date was examined earlier than the date fixed. This unusual conduct by the prosecutor should have been seriously taken note of by the trial court and also by the High Court. (Para 71)

So far as non-examination of some injured relatives is concerned, the High Court has held that in the absence of any medical report, it appears that they were not present during the incident and, therefore, held that the prosecutor might have decided not to examine them because there was no injury. This is nothing but a wishful conclusion based on presumption. (Para 73). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[2869] — Ss. 231 and 242 — Prosecution evidence — Failure to examine material eyewitnesses — Held, not fatal when he was related to the accused and won over — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 257-A (7), 286(2) and 244. Soma Bhai v. State of Gujarat, (1975) 4 SCC 257: 1975 SCC (Cri) 515: AIR 1975 SC 1453: 1975 Cri LJ 1201.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-1975]

[2870] — Ss. 231 & 242 and 173 & 157 — Investigating officer — Presence of during trial

Time and again, the Supreme Court has stressed upon the need of the investigating officer being present during trial unless compelling reasons exist for a departure. In the instant case, this does not appear to have been done, and there is no explanation whatsoever why it was not done. Even the Public Prosecutor does not appear to have taken note of this desirability. (Para 71). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Shailendra Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 655: 2002 SCC (Cri) 230: (2001) 8 Supreme 13, relied on [2871] — Ss. 231 and 340 — Evidence for prosecution — Once a witness is examined as a prosecution witness, he cannot be allowed to perjure himself by resiling from the testimony given in court on oath — Affidavit filed by a person stating that whatever he had deposed before court as PW was not true and was done so at the instance of the police, held, rightly rejected by Sessions Court and High Court (Paras 38 and 39). Yakub Ismailbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 12 SCC 229: AIR 2004 SC 4209: 2004 Cri LJ 4205.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-2004]

[2872] — Ss. 231(2) and 246(5), 162(1) proviso, Expln. and Ss. 161 & 172 — Re-examination of witness — Explanation to any contradiction in the evidence of a PW brought forth by the defence by using a part his statement recorded under S. 161 — Failure to give said explanation — Effect — When a part of the statement of a witness recorded under S. 161 is used by defence for contradicting the witness during cross-examination, prosecution is entitled to use any other part of the statement during re-examination for explaining it — If prosecution fails to do so, it is not open to the court to invoke S. 172 to trace out from the case diary any earlier statement of the witness recorded under S. 161 for explaining such contradiction — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 138, 145 and 157

According to the prosecution while the deceased and PW 1 were on the evening stroll, A-1 stabbed the deceased with a knife in his abdomen and when the deceased tried to escape, he was intercepted by A-1 as well as by A-2 to A-4 and they all inflicted blows on him which resulted in his death. Thereafter A-1 went to a Judicial Magistrate, exhibited a knife and requested the Magistrate to record his confession. The Magistrate recorded his confession after administering oath to him and got it signed by the confessor. Soon after the incident PW 1 informed about it to his father (PW 10) who then lodged the FIR on that basis. However, PW 1, in his statement recorded two days after the incident (on 14-10-1991) under Section 161 CrPC, except for the knife-blow wielded by A-1, attributed no other role to the remaining accused. The prosecution examined PW 1 as the solitary eyewitness to the occurrence and PW 10 to speak about the version reported to him by PW 1. The Judicial Magistrate who recorded the confession of A-1 was examined as PW 2. The defence counsel used the statement of PW 1 recorded on 14-10-1991 under Section 161 CrPC for the purpose of contradicting the evidence of PW 1 that he had "also stated before the police that all the accused had further started beating" the deceased. The trial court, placing reliance on the testimony of PW 1 and also on the confession of A-1 besides the evidence of PW 10 as a piece of corroboration, came to the conclusion that the deceased was incessantly stabbed by A-1 alone. The trial court was not satisfied with the evidence against the remaining accused. Hence it convicted A-1 alone under Section 302 IPC and sentenced him to life imprisonment and acquitted A-2 to A-4.

The State filed appeal before the High Court against the acquittal of the three accused, while A-1 filed a separate appeal challenging the conviction and sentence passed on him. The High Court while confirming the conviction and sentence passed on A-1 made a scathing attack on the Sessions Judge for the reasoning advanced in support of the order of acquittal of the other three accused. One of the reasonings which the High Court pointed out was that PW 1 was confronted only with the statement recorded under Section 161 of the Code on 14-10-1991, whereas that witness was interrogated by the investigating officer on 12-10-1991; the earlier interrogation record should have been traced out by the trial Judge from the case diary of the police. The High Court expressed the view that the Sessions Judge had a duty to peruse the case diary prepared as per Section 172 of the Code for satisfying himself whether the witness had stated any particular fact during the interrogation. The High Court scrutinised the case diary and copiously used the entries therein for driving the point home. From the oral statement of PW 1 and that of the investigating officer, supported by the police case diaries, it found that the statement of PW 1 was actually recorded in the morning of 12-10-1991 and "the findings recorded by the learned trial Judge to the contrary are absolutely erroneous". It further observed that not only the police had let off the co-accused of A-1 but even the Magistracy "has failed in imparting justice and had fallen prey to the evil propensities of police indulged by the higher officers, as is well made out from the statement of the investigating officer", who had stated that the higher officers thought that the co-accused of A-1 were innocent. Thus the High Court reversed the acquittal of A-2 to A-4 and convicted them also under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC and sentenced them to imprisonment for life. They filed appeal before the Supreme Court as of right under Section 379 CrPC and Section 2 of the Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 1970. A-1 filed appeal by special leave. Dismissing the appeal filed by A-1 but allowing the appeals filed by A-2 to A-4,

Held :

It would have been desirable that the High Court did not make such strong remarks castigating the police and the subordinate judiciary, when the situation did not warrant such castigation. Judicial restraint should have dissuaded the High Court from making such unnecessary castigation. (Para 10)

That apart, the legal proposition propounded by the High Court regarding the use of Section 172 of the Code is erroneous. The whole exercise made by the High Court on that aspect was in the wake of what PW 1 said, that he was questioned by the investigating officer on 12-10-1991. That might be so but the defence counsel used the statement as recorded on 14-10-1991 under Section 161 of the Code for the purpose of contradicting PW 1. The omission in the statement recorded under Section 161 CrPC by PW 1 dated 14-10-1991 regarding the role attributed to A-2 to A-4 relates to a very material aspect and hence it amounted to contradiction. When any part of such statement is used for contradicting the witness during cross-examination the Public Prosecutor has the right to use any other part of the statement, during re-examination, for the purpose of explaining it. The said right of the Public Prosecutor is explicitly delineated in the last part of the proviso to Section 162(1) CrPC. (Paras 10 and 11)

If a Public Prosecutor failed to get the contradiction explained as permitted by the last limb of the proviso to Section 162(1) of the Code, it is not permissible for the court to invoke the powers under Section 172 CrPC for explaining such contradiction which deals with the diary of proceedings in investigation. Sub-section (2) of Section 172 CrPC makes it clear that the discretion given to the court to use such diaries is only for aiding the court to decide on a point. The court is forbidden from using the entries of such diaries as evidence. What cannot be used as evidence against the accused cannot be used in any other manner against him. If the court uses the entries in a case diary for contradicting a police officer it should be done only in the manner provided in Section 145 of the Evidence Act i.e. by giving the author of the statement an opportunity to explain the contradiction, after his attention is called to that part of the statement which is intended to be so used for contradiction. In other words, the power conferred on the court for perusal of the diary under Section 172 is not intended for explaining a contradiction which the defence has winched to the fore through the channel permitted by law. The interdict contained in Section 162, debars the court from using the power under Section 172 for the purpose of explaining the contradiction. (Paras 13 and 14)

The assertion of PW 1 that A-2 to A-4 had given blows to the deceased thus stands contradicted by his own previous statement. Such a contradiction is on a crucial aspect pertaining to the complicity of A-2 to A-4. The trial court was well justified in holding that the evidence of PW 1 is not sufficient to convict those three accused for the offence under Section 302 with the aid of Section 34 IPC. (Para 15)

That apart, there should have been strong and good reasons for the High Court for converting an order of acquittal into one of conviction. The reasons set out by the High Court for disturbing the order of acquittal of A-2 to A-4 were not satisfactory. (Paras 16 and 17)

However, there is no reason to dissent from the finding regarding reliability of the testimony of PW 1 so far as A-1 is concerned. (Para 17)

Thus the conviction and sentence passed on A-1 are confirmed. But the conviction and sentence passed on A-2 to A-4 by the High Court are set aside and the order of acquittal passed in their favour by the trial court will stand restored. (Para 24). Mahabir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 7 SCC 148: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1262: AIR 2001 SC 2503.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-7-2001]

Dhanna v. State of M.P., (1996) 10 SCC 79: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1192, relied on

— S. 232 See also S. 289, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1131 in Vol. 2

— S. 232 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 213, 231 and 232

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2873] — Ss. 232, 235, 248 and 255 — Acquittal of co-accused — Effect — Held, does not by itself entitle the other accused in the same case to acquittal as a single significant detail may alter the entire aspect — Criminal Trial — Acquittal of co-accused — Constitution of India — Art. 141

Circumstantial flexibility, one additional or different fact may make a world of difference between conclusions in two cases or between two accused in the same case. Each case depends on its own facts and a close similarity between one case and another is not enough because a single significant detail may alter the entire aspect. It is more pronounced in criminal cases where the backbone of adjudication is fact-based. (Para 18). Megh Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 8 SCC 666: AIR 2003 SC 3184.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-9-2003]

— S. 233 See also S. 289, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1131 in Vol. 2

— S. 233 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 229, 233, 235, 241 and 248

See also Ss. 231 and 233

See also Ss. 231, 233, 242 and 243

See also Ss. 235, 231 & 233 and 248, 242 & 243

See also Ss. 303, 304, 233 and 243

See also Ss. 311, 233, 243 and 315

See also Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283

See also Ss. 391 and 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 & 247

See also Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247

See also Ss. 482, 190(1), 204, 233 & 243

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2874] — S. 233 — "Every distinct offence"

The expression 'every distinct offence' must have a different content from the expressions 'every offence' or 'each offence'. A separate charge is required for every distinct offence and not necessarily for each separate offence. 'Distinct' means 'not identical'. It stresses characteristics that distinguish while the word 'separate' would stress the 'two things not being the same'. Two offences would be distinct if they be not in any way interrelated. If there be some interrelation, there would be no distinctness and it would depend on the circumstances of the case in which the offences were committed whether there be separate charges for those offences or not. Banwarilal Jhunjhunwala v. Union of India, AIR 1963 SC 1620: 1963 Supp (2) SCR 338: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 529.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Subba Rao and Raghubar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-1962]

[2875] — Ss. 233 and 313 — Accused stating that the death of the victims occurred due to the shots fired by one S with the gun of P — Where it was undisputed that the gun from which the shots had been fired at the two deceased did belong to the accused, held, the circumstances in which the gunshot injuries were sustained by the deceased ought to have been explained satisfactorily by the defence — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 106

The fact that the gun from which shots had been fired at the deceased did belong to the accused was not adverted to by the High Court at all. A different theory which was sought to be set up by the defence, by stating that the death of the victims had occurred due to shots fired by S with the gun belonging to one P, was disbelieved by the Sessions Judge for good reasons. However, that aspect was totally ignored by the High Court. If the gunshot injuries had been sustained by the two deceased from the licensed gun belonging to the accused, the circumstances in which the injuries were sustained by them ought to have been explained satisfactorily by the defence. (Paras 12 and 10). State of Haryana v. Ram Sarup, (2002) 7 SCC 250: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1691: AIR 2002 SC 3114.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-9-2002]

[2876] — Ss. 233 and 313 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 7 and 16, R. 61 proviso and Appendix B Item A.11.02.08 — Accused taking stand that he used vegetable ghee which is not brominated vegetable oil — Prosecution to prove affirmatively that the sample was adulterated and any stand taken by accused cannot be used as evidence unless its veracity otherwise established. Kishan Chand v. Delhi Admn., (1979) 4 SCC 709: 1980 SCC (Cri) 165: AIR 1979 SC 1128: 1979 Cri LJ 921.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-1979]

[2877] — Ss. 233(3) and 311 — Defence witness — Prosecution witness when may be called as — Accused's application for compelling attendance of any prosecution witness, who had been examined, cross-examined and discharged, to be juxtaposed as defence witness, held, not maintainable — Court has power to reject such application on ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice — Where two witnesses were examined as eyewitnesses and then cross-examined and discharged but about 5 years after recording of their statements as prosecution witnesses, they were allowed to be examined as defence witnesses when they resiled completely from their previous statements as prosecution witnesses, held, their subsequent statements cannot be acted upon — Such defence witnesses are liable to be charged under S. 193 IPC

The respondents were charged under Sections 302/34 IPC for committing murder. Statements of PW 8, brother of the deceased and PW 9, a friend of the deceased, were recorded under Section 164 CrPC before the Magistrate on 21-9-1989. Thereafter they were examined by the prosecution as eyewitnesses and their statements were recorded before the Sessions Judge on 18-12-1990. They were then cross-examined and discharged. An application under Section 311 CrPC was filed for recalling and re-examining them but the same was rejected by the court on 2-9-1994. However, PW 8 and PW 9 filed an affidavit on 16-8-1994 that the statements made before the Magistrate by them were under pressure and tutored by the police. Thereupon they were recalled by the trial court purportedly in exercise of power under Section 233(3) CrPC and examined as DW 1 and DW 2 on behalf of the accused and their statements were recorded on 17-7-1995 when they completely resiled from their previous statements as PWs. In between 18-12-1990, the day on which their statements were recorded before the Sessions Judge as PWs, and their statements as defence witnesses which were recorded on 17-7-1995 as DWs, no complaint whatsoever was made by DW 1 and DW 2 to any court or to any authority that they gave statements on 18-12-1990 due to coercion, threat or being tutored by the police. The trial court after threadbare discussion of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses including the said two witnesses, convicted the accused under Sections 302/34 IPC. But the High Court relying upon the testimony of DW 1 and DW 2 reversed the judgment of the trial court and acquitted the accused.

Allowing the State's appeal,

Held :

The High Court reversed the order of conviction and recorded the order of acquittal, which is perverse. (Para 11)

Section 233 itself deals with entering upon defence by the accused. The application for recalling and re-examining persons already examined, as provided under Section 311 CrPC, was already rejected. The power to summon any person as a witness or recall and re-examine any person already examined is the discretionary power of the court in case such evidence appears to it to be essential for a just decision of the case. Under Section 233 CrPC the accused can enter upon defence and he can apply for the issue of any process for compelling the attendance of any witness in his defence. The provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 233 cannot be understood as compelling the attendance of any prosecution witness examined, cross-examined and discharged to be juxtaposed as DWs. In the present case PW 8 and PW 9 were juxtaposed as DW 1 and DW 2. This situation is not one what was contemplated by sub-section (3) of Section 233 CrPC. (Para 14)

When such frivolous and vexatious petitions are filed, a judge is not powerless. He should have used his discretionary power and should have refused relief on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. (Para 15)

The order of the High Court is accordingly set aside and the order of the trial court convicting the respondent under Sections 302/34 IPC is restored. (Para 8)

Prima facie, PW 8 and PW 9 in their subsequent affidavits made a false statement which they believed to be false or did not believe to be true. Hence, they are liable for perjury for giving false evidence punishable under Section 193 IPC. Therefore, the Additional Sessions Judge is directed to file a complaint under Section 193 of the Penal Code and initiate proceedings against them and pass necessary orders in accordance with law. (Para 19). State of M.P. v. Badri Yadav, (2006) 9 SCC 549: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 337: AIR 2006 SC 1769: 2006 Cri LJ 2128: (2006) 3 KLT 205.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-2006]

Yakub Ismailbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 12 SCC 229: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 196, relied on

— S. 234 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 231, 234, 242, 244 and 293

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

— S. 235 See also S. 309, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1138 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 235 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 229, 233, 235, 241 and 248

See also Ss. 232, 235, 248 and 255

See also Ss. 313 and 235

See also Ss. 401, 397, 235, 248 and 255

See also Ss. 401 & 399 and 354 & 235

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

See also CRIMINAL TRIAL — 'Sentence' in Vol. 3

[2878] — Ss. 235 and 215 — Where charge was framed for offence under S. 302 IPC only, whether conviction can be awarded under S. 304-B IPC — In view of conflicting decisions rendered by two-Judge Benches of the Supreme Court in Lakhjit Singh and Sangaraboina Sreenu cases, question to be decided by a larger Bench of the Court — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 304-B. Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 3 SCC 698: 2000 SCC (Cri) 738.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and A.P. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-1999]

Matter now resolved in (2004) 5 SCC 334

[2879] — Ss. 235, 231 & 233 and 248, 242 & 243 — Appreciation of evidence — Stage for when arises at the trial — Held, stage for appreciating the evidence for the purpose of arriving at conclusion whether prosecution was able to bring home the charge against the accused or not would arise only after all the evidence is brought on record at the trial (Para 9). Hem Chand v. State of Jharkhand, (2008) 5 SCC 113: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 537: AIR 2008 SC 1903.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-2008]

[2880] — Ss. 235 and 286 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court — Whether High Court justified in sentencing the accused persons to a term of imprisonment without affording them an opportunity of hearing on the question of sentence — Question not decided. Padmanabhan Vijaykumar v. State of Kerala, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 156: 1994 SCC (Cri) 892: AIR 1993 SC 2641.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-2-1993]

[2881] — S. 235 — Sessions Court — Appreciation of evidence by — Trial court though finding that prosecution established its case beyond doubt that appellant lit the matchstick when deceased herself poured kerosene on her body, concluding that appellant had no intention to kill his wife — It was further held that accused had no knowledge that the burn injuries were likely to cause death of deceased, but his act would certainly cause hurt to a person and accordingly found appellant guilty under S. 324 IPC — Anguish expressed over the manner in which trial court had dealt with the matter — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/304 Pt. I and S. 324 (Paras 9 and 10). Ongole Ravikanth v. State of A.P., (2009) 13 SCC 647: AIR 2009 SC 2129: (2009) 79 AIC 1 (SC): (2009) 3 APLJ 1 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 3944.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B. Sudershan Reddy and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-6-2009]

[2882] — Ss. 235(1) and (2) — It is illegal to convict and impose sentence on the same day. Burn Standard Co. Ltd. v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 467: AIR 1991 SC 1784.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Singh and Kuldip Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-7-1991]

— S. 235(2) See Ss. 28 & 29 and 235(2)
See also Ss. 235(1) and (2)
See also Ss. 248(2) and 235(2)
See also Ss. 309(2) third proviso and 235(2)
See also Ss. 354(3) and 235(2)
See also Ss. 354(3), 235(2) and 307
See also Ss. 354(3), 368 and 235(2)
See also Ss. 360 & 235(2)

[2883] — S. 235(2) — Nature and object of explained — If grievance is made in the higher Court of the failure of trial Court to give such opportunity, held, a remand does not necessarily follow — The superior court can invite the submissions and dispose of the question of sentence accordingly

The imperative language of sub-section (2) of S. 235 leaves no room for doubt that after recording the finding of guilt and the order of conviction, the Court is under an obligation to hear the accused on the question of sentence unless it released him on probation of good conduct or after admonition under S. 360. The right to be heard on the question of sentence has a beneficial purpose for a variety of facts and considerations bearing on the sentence can, in the exercise of that right, be placed before the Court which the accused, prior to the enactment of the Code of 1973, had no opportunity to do. The social compulsions, the pressure of poverty, the retributive instinct to seek an extra-legal remedy to a sense of being wronged, the lack of means to be educated in the difficult art of an honest living, the parentage, the heredity — all these and similar other considerations, can hopefully and legitimately, tilt the scales on the propriety of sentence. The mandate of S. 235(2) must, therefore, be obeyed in its letter and spirit.

However, it is not true that failure on the part of the Court, which convicts an accused, to hear him on the question of sentence must necessarily entail a remand to that Court in order to afford to the accused an opportunity to be heard on the question of sentence. The accused may exercise that right either by instructing his counsel to make oral submissions to the higher Court or he may, on affidavit or otherwise, place in writing before the higher Court whatever he desires to place before it on the question of sentence. The Court may in appropriate cases, have to adjourn the matter in order to give to the accused sufficient time to produce the necessary data and to make his contentions on the question of sentence. That, perhaps, must inevitably happen where the conviction is recorded for the first time by a higher Court.

Hence, for a proper and effective implementation of the provision contained in S. 235(2), it is not always necessary to remand the matter to the Court which has recorded the conviction. The fact that the Supreme Court in Santa Singh case [(1976) 4 SCC 190] remanded the matter to the Sessions Court does not spell out the ratio of the judgment to be that in every such case there has to be a remand. Remand is an exception, not the rule, and ought therefore to be avoided as far as possible in the interest of expeditious though fair, disposal of cases. (Para 78). Dagdu v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 3 SCC 68: 1977 SCC (Cri) 421: AIR 1977 SC 1579: (1977) 3 SCR 636: 1977 Cri LJ 1206.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud[1], P.K. Goswami[2] and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-1977]

Applied in Kamalakar Nandram Bhavsar v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 10 SCC 192

[2884] — Ss. 235(2) and 465 — Nature and scope of — Accused on conviction must be heard before award of sentence — Hearing implies opportunity to place full and adequate material before the court and if necessary to lead evidence — Provision mandatory and cannot be treated as a mere irregularity curable under S. 465, CrPC, 1973 — Failure to give opportunity therefore vitiates the award of sentence

Per Bhagwati, J.

Section 235(2) is clear and explicit and does not admit of any doubt. The court must in the first instance, deliver a judgment convicting or acquitting the accused. If the accused is acquitted, no further question arises. But if he is convicted, then the court has to "hear the accused on the question of sentence, and then pass sentence on him according to law".

A proper sentence is the amalgam of many factors such as the nature of the offence, the circumstances — extenuating or aggravating — of the offence, the prior criminal record, if any, of the offender, the age of the offender, the record of the offender as to employment, the background of the offender with reference to education, home life, sobriety and social adjustment, the emotional and mental condition of the offender, the prospects for the rehabilitation of the offender, the possibility of return of the offender to normal life in the community, the possibility of treatment or training of the offender, the possibility that the sentence may serve as a deterrent to crime by the offender or by others and the current community need, if any, for such a deterrent in respect to the particular type of offence. These factors have to be taken into account by the court in deciding upon the appropriate sentence.

The hearing contemplated by S. 235(2) is not confined merely to hearing oral submissions, but it is also intended to give an opportunity to the prosecution and the accused to place before the court facts and material relating to various factors bearing on the question of sentence and if they are contested by either side, then to produce evidence for the purpose of establishing the same. Of course, care would have to be taken by the court to see that this hearing on the question of sentence is not abused and turned into an instrument for unduly protracting the proceedings. The claim of due and proper hearing would have to be harmonised with requirement of expeditious disposal of proceedings.

The non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 235(2) cannot be treated as a mere irregularity curable under S. 465 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. It is much more serious. It amounts to bypassing an important stage of the trial and omitting it altogether so that the trial cannot be said to be that contemplated in the Code. This deviation constitutes disobedience to an express provision of the Code as to the mode of trial. It goes to the root of the matter and the resulting illegality is of such a character that it vitiates the sentence.

When no opportunity has been given to the appellant to produce material and make submissions in regard to the sentence to be imposed on him, failure of justice must be regarded as implicit. S. 465 cannot, in the circumstances, have any application.

Per Fazal Ali, J.

Under S. 235(2) the accused must be given an opportunity of making his representation only regarding the question of sentence and for this purpose he may be allowed to place such materials as he may think fit but which may have a bearing only on the question of sentence.

There may be a number of circumstances of which the court may not be aware and which may be taken into consideration by the court while awarding the sentence, particularly a sentence of death. He has to be heard on his personal, social and domestic circumstances before the sentence is given. Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 190: 1976 SCC (Cri) 546: AIR 1976 SC 2386: 1976 Cri LJ 1875.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati[1] and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-1976]

Explained in Dagdu v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 3 SCC 69: 1977 SCC (Cri) 421

[2885] — S. 235(2) — Affording opportunity of hearing before passing order of sentence mandatory — Time be given for reflection to elicit reply shedding light on motive — Hence trial courts, after recording conviction, should adjourn the matter to a future date and decide the question of sentence after affording opportunity of hearing to both the parties — Sentence imposed without substantial compliance with S. 235(2) liable to be replaced by an appropriate order of sentence

The choice of sentence has to be made after following the procedure set out in sub-section (2) of S. 235, CrPC. That sub-section satisfies a dual purpose; it satisfies the rule of natural justice by according to the accused an opportunity of being heard on the question of sentence and at the same time helps the court to choose the sentence to be awarded. The provision is mandatory and should not be treated as a mere formality. The choice has to be made after giving the accused an effective and real opportunity to place his antecedents, social and economic background, mitigating and extenuating circumstances, etc. before the court, otherwise the court's decision would be vulnerable. In many cases a sentencing decision has far more serious consequences on the offender and his family members than in the case of a purely administrative decision a fortiori, therefore, the principle of fair play must apply with greater vigour in the case of the former than the latter. An administrative decision having civil consequences, if taken without giving a hearing is generally struck down as violative of the rule of natural justice. Likewise a sentencing decision taken without following the requirements of sub-section (2) of S. 235 of the Code in letter and spirit would also meet a similar fate and may have to be replaced by an appropriate order. As a general rule the trial courts should after recording the conviction adjourn the matter to a future date and call upon both the prosecution as well as the defence to place the relevant material bearing on the question of sentence before it and thereafter pronounce the sentence to be imposed on the offender. In the present case the trial judge did not attach sufficient importance to the mandatory requirement of sub-section (2) of S. 235 of the Code. The High Court also had before it only the scanty material placed before the Sessions Judge when it confirmed the death penalty. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1989 SC 1456: 1989 Cri LJ 1466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1989]

[2886] — S. 235(2) — Affording opportunity of hearing to accused before taking decision on sentence mandatory

The requirement of sub-section (2) of S. 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is mandatory and confers a right on the offender to be heard on the question of sentence. However, the opportunity statutorily afforded to the offender does not absolve the court of its obligation to apply its judicial mind on the question of sentence but casts additional obligations (i) to give the offender an opportunity to make a representation on the question of sentence and (ii) to take into consideration such representation while determining the appropriate sentence to be awarded to the offender. Anguswamy v. State of T.N., (1989) 3 SCC 33: 1989 SCC (Cri) 481.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-4-1989]

Allaudin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5, followed

[2887] — S. 235(2) — Failure to give opportunity on the question of sentence — Remission of case to trial Court on this point, held, does imply de novo trial — Conviction will stand — Fact that another Judge hears the case on question of sentence, held, immaterial

Once the Judge who hears the evidence delivers a judgment of conviction, one part of the trial comes to an end. The second part of the trial is restricted only to the question of sentence and so far as that is concerned, when a case is remitted by the Supreme Court to the Sessions Court for giving a hearing on the question of sentence under S. 235(2) there would be fresh evidence and the principle that the Sessions Judge may not act on evidence already recorded before his predecessor and must conduct a de novo trial would not be violated. Nirpal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1977) 2 SCC 131: 1977 SCC (Cri) 262: AIR 1977 SC 1066: (1977) 2 SCR 901: 1977 Cri LJ 642.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-1977]

[2888] — S. 235(2) — Hearing on question of sentence not given by trial Court — Appellate Court, held, need not remand the case and should itself give such opportunity and dispose of the case on question of sentence. Tarlok Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 3 SCC 218: 1977 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1977 SC 1747: 1977 Cri LJ 1139.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1977]

[2889] — S. 235(2) — Hearing on sentence — Trial court dealing with question of sentence in a rather cryptic manner by a one paragraph order — Order of conviction and sentence pronounced on same day — Held, the manner in which the trial court decided the question of sentence cannot be approved. Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-4-1994]

[2890] — S. 235(2) — Hearing to accused on question of sentence — Hearing given to counsel appointed by accused — Held, is enough — Moreover, on facts, appellant-accused was present in court and he did not make any statement beyond that made by his counsel — He also had liberty to adduce evidence regarding the sentence but did not avail of the same

The contention that the appellant should have been heard in person and not through the counsel appointed by him before imposition of the sentence (the death penalty) cannot be accepted. If the accused had engaged a counsel the court can ask the counsel as to whether he had anything to say about the sentence. The appellant was also present in the court and he did not make any further statement regarding the sentence to be imposed on him. He also had liberty to adduce evidence regarding the sentence but he did not avail that opportunity and the contention that the appellant was not questioned before the sentence was imposed is not correct. (Para 12). Surendra Pal Shivbalakpal v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 3 SCC 127: 2005 SCC (Cri) 653: AIR 2004 SC 4862: 2004 Cri LJ 4642.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-2004]

[2891] — S. 235(2) — If minimum sentence provided under the statute is imposed no question of providing an opportunity under S. 235 would arise — Hence failure to give such opportunity immaterial. Tarlok Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 3 SCC 218: 1977 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1977 SC 1747: 1977 Cri LJ 1139.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1977]

[2892] — S. 235(2) — Mandatory requirement of providing pre-decisional opportunity of hearing to accused on question of sentence — Plea regarding failure to provide such opportunity raised for the first time before Supreme Court — Moreover, judgment of trial court showing that trial court in fact had heard the accused on the same day of passing the judgment — In the circumstances held, plea of non compliance with S. 235(2) does not merit consideration. Jumman Khan v. State of U.P., (1991) 1 SCC 752: 1991 SCC (Cri) 283: AIR 1991 SC 345: 1991 Cri LJ 439.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

[2893] — S. 235(2) — Matters that may be considered under — Confession made by accused before High Court accepting a part of the offence at the stage of hearing under — High Court cannot take the same into consideration in its main judgment in the appeal against conviction but the same can be taken into consideration for the purpose of imposition of punishment

Per Sinha, J.

The stage of hearing an accused under Section 235(2) CrPC is after the judgment of conviction is pronounced and not prior thereto. The appellant herein made a confession before the High Court. The High Court took the same into consideration in the main judgment which could not be done. He had been brought before the High Court only for purpose of fulfilling the requirement of Section 235(2). His statement was taken during midst of hearing. He knew the implications thereof. Despite the same, he made a categorical statement that he was responsible for burying the dead body. He gave an explanation, which might not have found favour with the High Court, but the fact that he had made a confession at least accepting a part of the offence could not have been ignored at least for the purpose of imposition of punishment. He is more than 64 years' old. He is in custody for a period of 16 years. The death sentence was awarded to him by the trial court in terms of its judgment dated 20-5-2005. In a situation of this nature, imposition of a life imprisonment for commission of the crime under Section 302 shall serve the ends of justice. (Para 97). Swamy Shraddananda v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 12 SCC 288: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 322: AIR 2007 SC 2531.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

[2894] — S. 235(2) — Non-compliance — Contention in respect of — Order of sentence passed after hearing the counsel for the accused-appellant on the same date on which the verdict of the guilt was pronounced — Not that the appellant sought for an adjournment or grant of further time for making submission on the sentence but the same was refused — Further, no grievance in that behalf made before the High Court — On facts, held, contention as to alleged non-compliance with S. 235(2) liable to be rejected — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 498-A and 306 (Paras 5 and 6). Moti Lal v. State of M.P., (2004) 2 SCC 469: 2004 SCC (Cri) 573: 2004 Cri LJ 907.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-2004]

Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 190: 1976 SCC (Cri) 546, explained and distinguished on facts

[2895] — S. 235(2) — Non-compliance with — No opportunity for hearing on question of sentence given — Held, no grievance can be made where minimum sentence under the provision has been awarded. Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 190: 1976 SCC (Cri) 546: AIR 1976 SC 2386: 1976 Cri LJ 1875.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati[1] and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-1976]

[2896] — S. 235(2) — Procedure for awarding sentence in accordance with S. 235(2)

Where the accused is convicted for an offence under S. 302, Indian Penal Code, the Court should call upon the Public Prosecutor at the stage of S. 235(2) to state to the Court whether the case is one where the accused as a matter of justice should be awarded the extreme penalty of law or the lesser sentence of imprisonment for life. If the Public Prosecutor informs the Court that the State as prosecutor is of the opinion that the case is not one where extreme penalty is called for and if the Sessions Judge agrees with the submission, the matter should end there. Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P., (1979) 3 SCC 646: 1979 SCC (Cri) 749: AIR 1979 SC 916: 1979 Cri LJ 792.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], D.A. Desai[1] and A.P. Sen[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 9-2-1979]

[2897] — S. 235(2) — Requirement of affording pre-sentence hearing — Parties heard but none of them giving any documentary or oral evidence with regard to sentence — Defence lawyer merely pleading young age and absence of past criminal record of the offender — Held, in the circumstances of the case, requirement of S. 235(2) satisfied

The statute has engrafted in the statute-book the provisions of Sections 235(2) so as to see that proper appreciation of the evidence takes place and proper opportunity of hearing as regards punishment be afforded, but if there is no taker of such an opportunity and in spite of there being lawyers appearing for the accused as well, the question of further adjournment of the matter would not arise. It is true that the obligation is not discharged by putting formal questions to the accused. The Judge is supposed to elicit materials from the accused which will have a bearing on the question of sentence and it is on this requirement of law, it has to be considered as to whether there was in fact such a genuine attempt to elicit materials but as the record depicts there was no taker of this opportunity and the defence lawyer pleaded two facts to be considered in the matter for award of punishment, viz., (a) the accused is aged 22 years, and (b) has no other past criminal record. In the instant case the trial Judge has shown utmost concern and after much deliberation came to the conclusion in the matter of grant of punishment. The judgment was adjourned and the lawyer was asked — and prompt came the reply that the sentence ought to be considered by reason of the age and no past record. Both these aspects have been duly considered by the Sessions Judge and there is no infirmity therein. On the contrary the aggravating situations are galore to support the finding of the Sessions Judge as confirmed by the High Court. (Paras 18 and 20). Jai Kumar v. State of M.P., (1999) 5 SCC 1: 1999 SCC (Cri) 638: AIR 1999 SC 1860.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and M. Srinivasan and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1999]

[2898] — S. 235(2) — Sentence — Opportunity to adduce relevant material and evidence on the question of sentence must be afforded to accused as well as prosecution before passing sentence — Even if accused declined to adduce oral evidence he can show grounds for imposing lesser sentence — Though court should not pass the sentence on the same day of recording conviction, but where accused has already served long term of imprisonment, remanding the matter for reconsideration not considered proper — In the circumstances, sentence of death for committing murder of four persons and attempting to murder another person, converted into sentence of life imprisonment on par with the sentence awarded to the co-accused — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 r/w 34 and 307 r/w 34 — Terrorist Affected Areas (Special Courts) Act, 1984, S. 14(1)

On finding that the accused committed the charged offences, S. 235(2) of the Code empowers the Judge that he shall pass sentence on him according to law on hearing him. Hearing contemplated is not confined merely to oral hearing but also intended to afford an opportunity to the prosecution as well as the accused to place before the court facts and material relating to various factors on the question of sentence and if desired by either side to have evidence adduced to show mitigating circumstances to impose a lesser sentence or aggravating grounds to impose death penalty. Therefore, sufficient time must be given to the accused or the prosecution on the question of sentence, to show the grounds on which the prosecution may plead or the accused may show that the maximum sentence of death may be the appropriate sentence or the minimum sentence of life imprisonment may be awarded, as the case may be. Even though the accused declined to adduce oral evidence, it does not prevent him to show grounds to impose lesser sentence. The sentence awarded on the same day of finding guilt is not in accordance with the law. That would normally have the effect of remanding the case to the Special Court for reconsideration. But in the view of the fact that A-1 was in incarceration for long term of six years from the date of conviction, it needs no remand for further evidence. It is sufficient that the sentence of death awarded to A-1 is converted into rigorous imprisonment for life for causing the deaths of all four deceased. The conviction of A-1 for attempt to murder PW 4 and sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment is also upheld and all the sentences would run concurrently. A-2 is acquitted of all charges. (Para 18). Malkiat Singh v. State of Punjab, (1991) 4 SCC 341: 1991 SCC (Cri) 976.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, V. Ramaswami and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-1991]

Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490; Anguswamy v. State of T.N., (1989) 3 SCC 33: 1989 SCC (Cri) 481, relied on [2899] — S. 235(2) — Sessions Court should question the accused on the sentence whether S. 235(2) governs the matter or not — That would furnish to the court useful data on the question of sentence which is proposed to pass. Suresh v. State of U.P., (1981) 2 SCC 569: 1981 SCC (Cri) 559: AIR 1981 SC 1122: (1981) 3 SCR 259: 1981 Cri LJ 746.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.P. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 17-3-1981]

[2900] — S. 235(2) — Trial court has mandatory duty under sub-section (2) to give the accused opportunity of being heard on the question of sentence — After pronouncing the judgment on conviction on Feb. 16, trial court remanding the accused persons to judicial custody till Feb. 23 and giving them full opportunity of being heard and also fully hearing the advocate for the accused on the question of sentence — On facts, held, no prejudice was caused to the accused on ground of non-compliance of S. 235(2). Shobhit Chamar v. State of Bihar, (1998) 3 SCC 455: 1998 SCC (Cri) 790: AIR 1998 SC 1693.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-3-1998]

Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 190: 1976 SCC (Cri) 546; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490, relied on

[2901] — Ss. 235(2) and 309(2) — Sentence — Accused entitled to opportunity to adduce evidence and get the case adjourned if necessary — But once court after affording the opportunity proposes to award sentence, no further adjournment need be granted

Under S. 235(2), the accused is entitled to an opportunity to adduce evidence and if need be the case is to be adjourned to another date. There is illegality to convict and to impose sentence on the same day. Under S. 309(2) third proviso brought by Amendment Act, 1978 no adjournment should be granted for the purpose only of enabling the accused person to show cause against sentence to be imposed upon him. Under S. 235(2) when the accused has been given right to be heard on the question of sentence it is a valuable right. To make that right meaningful the procedure adopted should be suitably moulded and the accused given an opportunity to adduce evidence on the nature of the sentence. The hearing may be on the same day if the parties are ready or be adjourned to a next date but once the court after giving opportunity proposes to impose appropriate sentence there is no need to adjourn the case any further thereon. In the present case though the Sessions Judge needed to adjourn the case under S. 235(2) to next date but in the High Court the counsel was directed to show any additional grounds on the question of sentence. The High Court observed that the counsel was unable to give any additional ground. Therefore, there is no infirmity in imposition of the sentence. (Para 12). Sevaka Perumal v. State of T.N., (1991) 3 SCC 471: 1991 SCC (Cri) 724: AIR 1991 SC 1463: 1991 Cri LJ 1845.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-1991]

[2902] — S. 235(2) — Failure to give hearing on the question of sentence, held, will not in any way affect the conviction. Tarlok Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 3 SCC 218: 1977 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1977 SC 1747: 1977 Cri LJ 1139.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1977]

[2903] — Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) — Benefit of doubt — Not relevant when considering sentence — Hence benefit of doubt given to co-accused irrelevant

The doctrine of benefit of doubt only would operate in proof of the commission of the offence. If there is any reasonable doubt, not the doubt of vacillating mind of a judge, the accused is entitled to that benefit and be acquitted. The benefit of doubt again does not enter in the area of consideration of imposing sentence. (Para 8). Sevaka Perumal v. State of T.N., (1991) 3 SCC 471: 1991 SCC (Cri) 724: AIR 1991 SC 1463: 1991 Cri LJ 1845.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-1991]

[2904] — S. 235(2) — Non-hearing of accused on the question of sentence — Effect of Contention is that the trial Judge has not heard the appellant on the question of sentence as is provided for under Section 235(2) CrPC. Although it is correct, but keeping in view the fact that the conviction of the appellant was under Section 304 Part I IPC even otherwise the sentence imposed on him is just and proper. Hence, the High Court was not correct in invoking the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958. While setting aside that part of the judgment of the High Court, the judgment of conviction and sentence passed by the trial Judge is restored. (Paras 15 and 16). Bala Baine Linga Raju v. State of A.P., (2009) 6 SCC 706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

[2905] — S. 235(2) — Appellant sentenced to death not heard under S. 235(2) — Supreme Court giving such opportunity and finding appellant not really destitute and in view of the brutal murder of two, death sentence not interfered with. Kuruvi v. State of T.N., (1979) 1 SCC 136: 1978 SCC (Cri) 578: AIR 1978 SC 1397: 1978 Cri LJ 1421.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-1978]

[2906] — S. 235(2) — Failure to give opportunity on the question of sentence — But where the minimum sentence has been awarded held, the case need not be remitted to the trial Court for reconsideration on the question of sentence. Nirpal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1977) 2 SCC 131: 1977 SCC (Cri) 262: AIR 1977 SC 1066: (1977) 2 SCR 901: 1977 Cri LJ 642.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-1977]

[2907] — S. 235(2) — Accused convicted under S. 392, IPC for the first time reversing the judgments of trial court and High Court — Hence accused entitled to an opportunity of being heard on the question of sentence in compliance with S. 235(2) — Accordingly case directed to be put up after 10 days. Suryamoorthi v. Govindaswamy, (1989) 3 SCC 24: 1989 SCC (Cri) 472: AIR 1989 SC 1410: 1989 Cri LJ 1451.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1989]

[2908] — Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 255(2) and 360 — Sentencing — Mitigating circumstances — Factors bearing on the offence and the offender to be considered as a whole — Long period of imprisonment not fruitful — Payment of fine instead more effective — A 19 years' old student belonging to a middle class family sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment and fine of Rs 2000 for scooter theft and 6 months' imprisonment and fine of Rs 500 for car lifting, both the sentences being concurrent — Case coming up before Supreme Court 9 years after — Accused already undergone 6 months' imprisonment and also getting married and having children — Uncle of the accused guaranteeing his good behaviour — On facts, sentences reduced to the extent already undergone but fine imposed not interfered with

The court has to consider the totality of factors bearing on the offence and the offender and fix a punishment which will promote effectively the punitive objective of the law — deterrence and habilitation.

A long period of incarceration in the present condition of prisons may brutalise the boy and blunt his finer sensibilities so that the end-product may perhaps be more criminal than the one at the point of entry. Not that all prison terms are not deterrent but some cases prove to be counter-productive especially when the delinquent is young. The initial few months of jail life are the most painful and, therefore, the most deterrent.

A long protracted litigation is also some deterrent for a young man in his twenties. The youthful age of the accused is a factor which deserves consideration. The offender having served a term of nearly six months must well have realised that the game of crime does not pay. Moreover, the young man has married and has three children. This is a measure of assurance that he will not play recklessly with his freedom. Family life is ordinarily an insurance against a career of crime. Besides, the undertaking given by the uncle of the accused has considerable relevance. A breach of the conditions in the guarantee is to be made actionable on the motion of the State.

Payment of fine brings home the sense of responsibility in a surer fashion than even short terms of imprisonment in some cases. Therefore, the fines of Rs 2000 and Rs 500 imposed on the appellant should remain without interference. Ashok Kumar v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1980) 2 SCC 282: 1980 SCC (Cri) 426: AIR 1980 SC 636: 1980 Cri LJ 444.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-1980]

[2909] — Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 325, 360 and 361 — Punishment/Sentencing — Principles for — Held, presently there are no set principles of sentencing in India and this has given rise to anomalies — There is need to develop principles — Some of the guiding factors stated — Law and practice relating to sentencing in USA, UK and views of some scholars discussed, and stressed that courts while imposing sentence must apply mind to applicable principles — Whether the sentence should be deterrent, reformative or proportional, depends upon facts and circumstances of a case — There are certain offences which touch the social fabric or affect public health — They have to be dealt with sternly — Respondent who was convicted under the Punjab Excise Act, 1914 (1 of 1914), S. 61(1), for carrying 2000 litres of rectified spirit, released by High Court on probation, taking the view that offence was committed 19 years back and respondent had already suffered mental agony — Held, normally, the Supreme Court does not interfere under Art. 136 with the quantum of sentence, but the High Court in this case committed serious error — Six months' simple imprisonment and fine of Rs 5000 therefore imposed — Madhava Menon Committee Report — Malimath Committee Report — Committee on Reforms of the Criminal Justice System, 2003 — Crime and Disorder Act, 1998 (English) — Criminal Justice Act, 2003 (American) — Sentencing Reform Act, 1984 (American) — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 — Constitution of India, Arts. 47 and 136 — Punjab Excise Act, 1914 (1 of 1914), S. 61(1) — Penal Code, 1860, S. 53

The Indian judicial system has not been able to develop legal principles as regards sentencing. The superior courts except making observations with regard to purport and object for which punishment is imposed upon an offender, have not issued any guidelines. Other developed countries have done so. At some quarters, serious concerns have been expressed in this behalf. Some committees as for example Madhava Menon Committee and Malimath Committee have advocated introduction of sentencing guidelines. (Para 2)

Whether the Court while awarding a sentence would take recourse to principle of deterrence or reform or invoke doctrine of proportionality, would no doubt depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. While doing so, however, nature of offence plays an important role. The offences which affect public health must be dealt with severely. For the said purpose, the courts must notice the object for enacting Article 47 of the Constitution. There are certain offences which touch social fabric. Even while introducing doctrine of plea bargaining in CrPC, certain types of offences have been kept out of its purview. While imposing sentences, the said principles should be borne in mind. (Paras 5 and 6)

Although a wide discretion has been conferred upon court, the same must be exercised judiciously. It would depend upon circumstances in which crime has been committed and criminal's mental state and age are relevant factors. (Paras 8 and 15)

What would be the effect of sentencing on the society is a question which has been left unanswered by the legislature. The superior courts have come across a large number of cases which go to show anomalies as regards the policy of sentencing. Whereas quantum of punishment for commission of a similar type of offence varies from minimum to maximum, even where same sentence is imposed, the principles applied are found to be different. Similar discrepancies have been noticed in regard to imposition of fine. (Para 9)

To what extent should the Judges have discretion to reduce the sentence so prescribed under the statute has remained a vexed question. However, in India, the view always has been that the punishment must be proportionate to the crime. Applicability of the said principle in all situations, however, is open to question. Judicial discretion must be exercised objectively having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case. (Para 14)

The courts while imposing sentence must take into consideration principles applicable thereto. It requires application of mind. The purpose of imposition of sentence must also be kept in mind. (Para 31). State of Punjab v. Prem Sagar, (2008) 7 SCC 550: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 183: 2008 Cri LJ 3533.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2008]

Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358; Gentela Vijayavardhan Rao v. State of A.P., (1996) 6 SCC 241: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1290; Shailesh Jasvantbhai v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 2 SCC 359: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 499; Sevaka Perumal v. State of T.N., (1991) 3 SCC 471: 1991 SCC (Cri) 724; State of M.P. v. Bala, (2005) 8 SCC 1: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1947; State of M.P. v. Govind, (2005) 8 SCC 12 (3): 2005 SCC (Cri) 1958 (2); State of Karnataka v. Raju, (2007) 11 SCC 490: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 787; Dalbir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 5 SCC 82: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1208; Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 4 SCC 719: 1980 SCC (Cri) 17; United States v. Booker, 160 L Ed 2d 621: 543 US 220: 125 S Ct 738 (2005); Gall v. United States, 552 US 38 (10-12-2007), relied on

Don M. Gottfredson, "Sentencing Guidelines" in Sentencing by Hyman Gross and Andrew von Hirsch; Kevin R. Reitz: Encyclop'dia of Crime and Justice, 2nd Edn., "Sentencing Guidelines"; Andrew Ashworth: Sentencing and Criminal Justice, 2005, 4th Edn.; Marvin Frankel: Criminal Sentences: Law Without Order; Frank O. Bowman: Federal Sentencing Guidelines: A Structural Analysis, III 105 Colum. L. Rev. 1315, quoted

[2910] — Ss. 235(2), 248(2) and 255(2) — Sentencing — Nature of function of — Held, awarding of sentence subject to any mandatory minimum prescribed by law, and consideration of its adequacy and legality are essentially judicial functions, including in their ambit power to suspend the sentence, pending disposal of the appeal

Awarding sentence, upon conviction, is concededly a judicial function to be discharged by the courts of law established in the country. It is always a matter of judicial discretion, however, subject to any mandatory minimum sentence prescribed by the law. The award of sentence by a criminal court wherever made subject to the right of appeal cannot be interfered or intermeddled with in a way which amounts to not only interference but actually taking away the power of judicial review. Awarding the sentence and consideration of its legality or adequacy in appeal is essentially a judicial function embracing within its ambit the power to suspend the sentence under the peculiar circumstances of each case, pending the disposal of the appeal. (Para 16). Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 437: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528: AIR 2000 SC 3203.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2000]

[2911] — Ss. 235(2), 248(2) and 357 — Therapeutic role of punishment stressed — Basis and purpose of punishment discussed — Humanitarian tone in sentencing stressed — Courts should personalise the sentence proceedings under Ss. 235(2) and 248(2), Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 from a reformative angle — Appropriateness of fine under S. 357, CrPC, 1973 to reimburse the victims of white-collar crimes suggested. Mohd. Giasuddin v. State of A.P., (1977) 3 SCC 287: 1977 SCC (Cri) 496: AIR 1977 SC 1926: 1977 Cri LJ 1557.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1977]

[2912] — S. 235(2) — Death sentence — Murder — Consideration before the Court. Shiv Mohan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1977) 2 SCC 238: 1977 SCC (Cri) 324: AIR 1977 SC 949: 1977 Cri LJ 767.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and V.R. Krishna Iyer, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1977]

— S. 235(2) — Death Sentence See also CRIMINAL LAW — 'Penal Code, 1860, S. 302'

See also CRIMINAL TRIAL — 'Sentence' in Vol. 3

[2913] — S. 235(2) — Reversal of acquittal by High Court — But while recording conviction High Court not giving opportunity to the accused persons to represent against the sentence — Remand in such case by Supreme Court if called for — Held, not always mandatory — Remand can be avoided as far as possible in the interest of expeditious, though fair, disposal of cases — Thus on facts, confirming the conviction, Supreme Court awarding the sentence after giving an opportunity to the accused persons to represent against the quantum of sentence (Paras 11 to 13). Kamalakar Nandram Bhavsar v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 10 SCC 192: AIR 2004 SC 503: 2004 Cri LJ 615: (2004) 14 AIC 336 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-2003]

Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 190: 1976 SCC (Cri) 546: AIR 1976 SC 2386, distinguished

Dagdu v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 3 SCC 68: 1977 SCC (Cri) 421, applied

[2914] — S. 235(2) — Death sentence awarded by Sessions Judge without recording accused's statement and providing him opportunity to produce evidence — Accused sole earning member of a family consisting of five minors — In view of special circumstances and economic condition death sentence reduced to life imprisonment. Keram Ali v. State of U.P., (1977) 4 SCC 433: 1977 SCC (Cri) 637: AIR 1978 SC 35: 1978 Cri LJ 176: 1978 ALJ 364.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-10-1977]

[2915] — S. 235(2) — Requirement of affording pre-sentence hearing — Conviction and sentence of death pronounced on the same day — Where accused persons had already resolved to kill the deceased (Gen. Vaidya who had conducted Operation Blue Star to clear the Golden Temple from terrorists) and were prepared to sacrifice their lives for the cause even before making their confessional statements in examination under S. 313 and executed their resolve in a planned manner without ever praying for lesser sentence despite being aware of the death sentence granted in Kehar Singh case, held, accused were mentally prepared for the extreme penalty and hence requirement of S. 235(2) satisfied in letter and spirit — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307 and 34

Both the accused had mentally decided to own their involvement in the murder of Gen. Vaidya before their statements were recorded under S. 313 of the Code. Not only that, their attitude reveals that they had resolved to kill him as they considered him an enemy of the Sikh community since he was alleged to have desecrated the Akal Takht. They also told the trial court that they were proud of their act and were not afraid of death and were prepared to sacrifice their lives for the article of their faith, namely, the realisation of their dream of a separate State of Khalistan. It is thus apparent that before they made their statements admitting their involvement they had mentally prepared themselves for the extreme penalty and, therefore, if they desired to place any material for a lesser sentence they had ample opportunity to do so. But after the decision of the Supreme Court in Kehar Singh case and having regard to the well planned manner in which they executed their resolve to kill Gen. Vaidya, they were aware that there was every likelihood of the Court imposing the extreme penalty and they would have, if they so desired, placed material in their written statements or would have requested the Court for time when their statements under S. 313 of the Code were recorded, if they desired to pray for a lesser sentence. Their resolve not to do so is reflected in the fact that they have not chosen to file any appeal against their convictions by the Designated Court. Therefore, the requirements of S. 235(2) of the Code have been satisfied in letter and spirit and no prejudice is shown to have occurred to the accused. State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705: AIR 1992 SC 2100.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-1992]

[2916] — Ss. 235(2) and 309(2) third proviso (as introduced by Act 45 of 1978) — Death sentence — Non-compliance with S. 235(2) — Defence contention that trial court did not adjourn the hearing of the case for sentencing after the order of conviction was pronounced — No request made to the trial court for adjournment — Having regard to the law laid down in Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714, held on facts, there was no substance in the contention that the sentence imposed was vitiated for non-compliance with S. 235(2)

In Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714, it was held that the mandate of the legislature is clear that no adjournment can be granted for the purpose only of enabling the accused person to show cause against the sentence proposed to be imposed upon him. Nonetheless, the court can in appropriate cases grant adjournment for the aforesaid purpose, if the proposed sentence is a sentence of death. From the material on record, it does not appear that any request was made to the learned Sessions Judge for adjournment. In the circumstances, there is no substance in the contention that the sentence imposed was vitiated for non-compliance with Section 235(2). (Para 14). Gurdev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 7 SCC 258: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1616: AIR 2003 SC 4187: 2003 Cri LJ 3764.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-8-2003]

Muniappan v. State of T.N., (1981) 3 SCC 11: 1981 SCC (Cri) 617; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490, distinguished on law

Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714: 2001 SCC (Cri) 915, followed

[2917] — Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — Murder of children — Children victims of wrath of accused when their father, the real target, became inaccessible — Motive not clear — Material before court scanty — Death sentence imposed by trial court without affording proper opportunity of hearing to the accused as contemplated under S. 235(2), CrPC — Recording of reasons for award of death sentence mandatory — Failure to do so, effect of — Held on facts and in the circumstances, death sentence not warranted — Sentence of life imprisonment substituted — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

According to the prosecution case when PW 6 was sitting at the entrance of his house, six accused persons came with deadly weapons. On seeing them PW 6 went to the 'osra' (verandah) of his house. When accused 3 started to untie the buffalo tethered in front of his house and the other accused were hurling abuses on PW 6; PW 6 objected. Thereupon, accused 4 and 6 shouted 'sale ko jan se mar do'. Immediately thereafter accused 1 and 2 moved menacingly towards PW 6. At that time two daughters of PW 6, one aged 7 years and the other aged 7 months were playing in the dalan outside the western room. On seeing the two armed accused PW 6 ran into the adjoining room to arm himself with a spear. But his wife who was in the room prevented him from going out. Having failed to get PW 6, accused 1 gave farsa blows on the head, abdomen and left thumb of the elder daughter and accused 2 gave a farsa blow on the head of the younger daughter of PW 6. The injured children were taken to the dispensary where they succumbed to their injuries. The prosecution case was that accused 1 and 2 along with accused 3 to 6 constituted an unlawful assembly with the common object of killing PW 6 and in pursuance of that object accused 1 and 2 caused death of the two minor girls. The trial court convicted accused 1 and 2 under Ss. 302, 452 and 148, IPC and awarded them sentence of death under S. 302 and RI for one year each under Ss. 452 and 148. Accused 3 and 4 were convicted under Ss. 302/149, 447 and 148, IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment under Ss. 302/149 and to RI for one year and 3 months respectively under Ss. 148 and 447. Accused 5 and 6 were convicted under Ss. 302/149, 447 and 147 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment under S. 302/149 and to RI for 3 months and 6 months respectively under Ss. 447 and 147. The High Court confirmed the death sentence awarded to accused 1 and 2. The conviction of the remaining four accused under S. 302/149 was, however, altered to S. 326/149 and sentence of life imprisonment awarded to each of them was substituted by a sentence of RI for seven years. Their convictions and sentences on the other counts were, however, maintained.

Held :

Prosecution evidence was reliable and could be acted upon for confirming the conviction of the accused persons.

However, in the present case the material for choice of sentence for accused 1 and 2 is scanty. The motive for the crime is obscure, the one stated, namely, the quarrel between two infants of both sides, does not seem to be correct. The killings were not for gain. The charge shows that the target was PW 6, the father, and not the two infants. The killing of the two infants was not in the contemplation of any of the accused. Both the girls were the victims of the offenders' ire resulting from frustration at the escape of their target. The circumstances of this case show that the offenders had killed the two girls not because of any hatred for them or to accomplish their objective but out of frustration and anger at having lost their target. There is nothing so uncommon about the crime as to make the case an exceptional one. The mere fact that infants are killed, without more, is not sufficient to bring the case within the category of 'the rarest of rare' cases. As the trial Judge did not give time to the convicts to reflect on the question of sentence, the chance, however remote, of the true motive for the crime surfacing was lost. The antecedents of the accused, their socio-economic conditions, the impact of their crime on the community etc., have not come on record. The absence of these particulars makes the choice of punishment difficult. In view of these aspects and having regard to the circumstances in which the murders took place, the extreme penalty of death is not warranted. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1989 SC 1456: 1989 Cri LJ 1466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1989]

[2918] — Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) — Death sentence — Guilt proved by circumstantial evidence — Effect — Rape and murder of a girl aged 7-8 years — Conviction — Punishment — Conviction of appellants on basis of circumstantial evidence — Sustainability of death sentence — Death sentence imposed by the Sessions Judge confirmed by the High Court — Held, if guilt is proved by circumstantial evidence, ordinarily, death penalty would not be awarded — Moreover, Appellant 1 showed his remorse and repentance and accepted his guilt even in his statement under S. 313 CrPC — Hence, instead of extreme death penalty, punishment of RI for life imposed — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376 and 302 (Paras 57 to 65). Bishnu Prasad Sinha v. State of Assam, (2007) 11 SCC 467: AIR 2007 SC 848: (2007) 53 AIC 166 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1145.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-2007]

State of Rajasthan v. Kheraj Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 224: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1979; State of M.P. v. Munna Choubey, (2005) 2 SCC 710: 2005 SCC (Cri) 559; Sahdeo v. State of U.P., (2004) 10 SCC 682: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1873; Raju v. State of Haryana, (2001) 9 SCC 50: 2002 SCC (Cri) 408; Amrit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 79: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 397; Sk. Ishaque v. State of Bihar, (1995) 3 SCC 392: 1995 SCC (Cri) 534; Ronny v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 3 SCC 625: 1998 SCC (Cri) 859; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, relied on

[2919] — Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) — Pre-sentence hearing — Procedure — Natural justice, while recording of special reasons before imposition of death sentence — Rights of accused and duties of court, stated (per Ganguly, J.)

Per Ganguly, J.

In a criminal trial where the prosecution seeks to make out a case for imposition of death sentence, it has to discharge a very heavy and an onerous burden. In discharging such a burden the prosecution must not only prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused has committed the crime but in order to make out a case for death sentence, it also has to prove beyond any reasonable doubt as to how the crime has been committed and specially the aggravating circumstances which warrant a death penalty and the consequential absence of mitigating circumstances. (Para 83)

The accused must be given a real and effective chance of rebuttal and to disprove the existence of aggravating circumstance. Therefore, apart from his examination under Section 313 CrPC, the accused must be separately heard on the sentence to be imposed on him where he can demonstrate all the mitigating circumstances. Those must be weighed in the balance and they must receive a liberal and expansive interpretation by court. From the records it does not appear that in the instant case adequate and effective hearing was given to the accused by the trial court on the aforesaid basis before imposing the death sentence on him. (Paras 83 and 85)

In a case where the court imposes the death sentence both the aforesaid provisions, namely, Sections 235(2) and 354(3) CrPC assume significance. It gives the accused (i) a right of pre-sentence hearing, on which he can (ii) bring on record material or evidence which may not be (iii) strictly relevant to or connected with the particular crime but (iv) may have a bearing on the choice of sentence. Therefore, it has to be a regular hearing like a trial and not a mere empty formality or an exercise in an idle ritual. Therefore, regardless of whether the accused asks for such a hearing, the same must be offered to the accused and an adequate opportunity for bringing materials on record must be given to him especially in case where Section 354(3) comes into play. It is only after undertaking that exercise that "special reasons" for imposing death penalty can be recorded by the court. (Paras 81, 86 and 89)

Here prosecution has not discharged any burden at all far less the burden referred to above. This is a statutory obligation which is cast on the court in a case where both Section 235(2) read with Section 354(3) apply in view of the law laid down in Bachan Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 684. The constitutional validity of Section 354(3) was also upheld in this case. The mandate of Article 141 of the Constitution cannot be ignored either by the trial court or the High Court. In the order imposing death sentence, the trial Judge has not even once referred to Section 354(3). Therefore, the imposing of death sentence by the trial court is wholly illegal and contrary to the provisions of CrPC and contrary to the law laid down in Bachan Singh case. In the instant case the High Court, unfortunately as the first appellate court, both on facts and in law, has confirmed the death sentence without pointing out these glaring illegalities in sentencing procedure of the trial court and especially in a case where a death penalty has been imposed. Unfortunately in the present case the High Court failed to correct the flawed sentencing procedure followed by the trial court and erred in law by confirming the death sentence which led to an obvious miscarriage of justice. (Paras 88, 81, 90, 98 and 101). Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 5 SCC 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat[1] and A.K. Ganguly[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Muniappan v. State of T.N., (1981) 3 SCC 11: 1981 SCC (Cri) 617; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490; Malkiat Singh v. State of Punjab, (1991) 4 SCC 341: 1991 SCC (Cri) 976; Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204; Anguswamy v. State of T.N., (1989) 3 SCC 33: 1989 SCC (Cri) 481; State of Maharashtra v. Sindhi, (1975) 1 SCC 647: 1975 SCC (Cri) 283, referred to [2920] — Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) — Sentencing policy — Principles/standards/considerations involved (per Ganguly, J.) — Constitution of India, Arts. 14, 19 and 21 — Applicability to sentencing policy of Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) CrPC

Per Ganguly, J.

Fairness, justice and reasonableness which constitute the essence of guarantee of life and liberty epitomised in Article 21 of the Constitution also pervades the sentencing policy in Sections 235(2) and 354(3). Those two provisions virtually assimilate the concept of "procedure established by law" within the meaning of Article 21 of the Constitution. Thus, a strict compliance with those provisions in the way it was interpreted in Bachan Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 684 having regard to the development of constitutional law by the Supreme Court, is a must before death sentence can be imposed. (Para 106)

While the anxiety about the expectation of society to the adequacy of the sentence to the nature of the crime must be kept in mind, at the same time, the courts cannot be oblivious of the person who is alleged to have committed the crime and his rights under a fair and structured sentencing policy. Before imposing death sentence, an abiding concern for the dignity of human life must be shown by court. "Cry for justice" is not answered by frequent awarding of death sentence on a purported faith on "deterrence creed". Before choosing the option for death sentence, the court must consciously eschew its tendency of "retributive ruthlessness". The Court must consider whether there is a possibility of reform or rehabilitation of the man committing the crime and which must be at the heart of the sentencing proceSs. It is only this approach that can keep imposition of death sentence within the "rarest of rare cases". The expression "rarest of rare cases" is not to be read as a mere play on words or a tautologous expression. This is a very loaded expression and is not to be trifled with. It is pregnant with respect for the inviolability of human life. That is why the word "rare" has been used twice and once in a superlative sense. Therefore, the significance of this expression cannot be watered down on a perceived notion of a "cry for justice". This expression "rarest of rare cases" has been interpreted by the Supreme Court even where the accused was found guilty of both murder and rape and death sentence was awarded by the trial court and the High Court confirmed it. (Paras 107 to 111). Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 5 SCC 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat[1] and A.K. Ganguly[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

McGautha v. State of California, 28 L Ed 2d 711: 402 US 183 (1970); Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248; Furman v. Georgia, 33 L Ed 2d 346: 408 US 238 (1972), referred to [2921] — S. 235(2) — Personal family circumstances of accused who did not intend to cause the fatal blow considered and sentence reduced. Tulsi Ram v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 478: 1983 SCC (Cri) 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-1981]

[2922] — Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) — Deprivation of procedural safeguards under, to person committing murder while serving life imprisonment — Held, unjust and arbitrary. Mithu v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 277: 1983 SCC (Cri) 405: AIR 1983 SC 473: 1983 Cri LJ 811: 1983 MLJ (Cri) 485.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], V.D. Tulzapurkar[1], O. Chinnappa Reddy[2] and A. Varadarajan[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-1983]

[2923] — Ss. 235(2) and 360 — Prosecution of company under a provision imposing a minimum term of imprisonment, held, (per majority) not maintainable — AY 1985-86 — Prosecution of companies under Ss. 276-C, 277 and 278 read with S. 278-B, IT Act, 1961 — Maintainability — (Per majority) In view of mandatory provision for imprisonment in Ss. 276-C, 277 and 278 and incapability of a company of being imprisoned, such prosecution, held, not maintainable — Court has no choice but to impose only a fine in such a case — Only Parliament can introduce a change — In the said sections the context does not permit application to the word "person" the definition contained in S. 2(31), IT Act, 1961 — Reports of Law Commission, Finance Minister's speech while introducing the Bill for Taxation Laws (Amendment) Act, 1975, and the text and lapsed IPC (Amendment) Bill, 1972, cl. 72(a) taken into consideration — Maxims "judicis est jus dicere, non dare", doctrine of causus omissus and strict construction applied — (Per Mathur, J., dissenting) In view of Ss. 235(2) & 360 CrPC and S. 326 IPC and incapability of its being imprisoned does not mean that a company should not be prosecuted at all — In case of conviction a fine can be imposed upon it — Taking of a different view would render S. 10-B Essential Commodities Act and S. 35 Drugs and Cosmetics Act otiose Income Tax Act, 1961, Ss. 276-C, 277, 278, 278-B and 2(31) — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 3(42) — Law Commission's 41st Report para 24.7 and 47th Report para 8.3 taken into consideration — Taxation Laws (Amendment) Act, 1975 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 326 — Essential Commodities Act, 1955, S. 10-B — Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940, S. 35 — CPC, 1908, Or. 21 Rr. 32 and 33 — Penal Code (Amendment) Bill, 1972, Cl. 72(a)

Respondent 1 herein was a registered company and Respondent 2 was its Managing Director. In its income tax return for AY 1985-86 the respondent Company showed a loss of Rs 43,940. It claimed deduction of Rs 9,16,442 on account of depreciation and investment allowance etc. on the ground that two new machines worth Rs 14,79,589 were purchased and installed during the relevant previous year. In the absence of any supporting documentary evidence, the assessing officer rejected that claim. However, after the remand of the matter by CIT (Appeals), the assessing officer found that although purchased during the relevant previous year, the machines were installed after the expiry thereof. In such circumstances, the respondent Company sought to abandon its claim to depreciation and other allowances. Subsequently, the CIT by his order dated 26-3-1992 accorded sanction for filing of a criminal complaint under Sections 276-C, 277 read with Section 278-B IT Act (for short "the Act") against the Company and its Managing Director (respondents herein). Allowing a petition filed under Section 482 CrPC, by the respondents, the Karnataka High Court held that as the Company was a juristic person, it could not be punished with imprisonment and therefore its prosecution was purposeless. The High Court further held that since the sanction to prosecute the respondents had been granted without affording them any opportunity of hearing, the principles of natural justice were violated and the order granting sanction was invalid. Therefore, it quashed the complaints but granted liberty to the appellants to accord fresh sanction for prosecution of the Managing Director after giving him an opportunity of hearing. The Revenue then filed the instant appeal by special leave. Three questions arose before the Supreme Court: (i) whether the sanction of the CIT granted under Section 279(1) of the Act without affording prior opportunity to the respondents, was vitiated by violation of principles of natural justice, (ii) whether the mens rea of the person in-charge could be attributed to the company, and (iii) whether a company was liable for punishment of fine alone if the law contemplated punishment by imprisonment only or by imprisonment plus fine.

Dismissing the appeal in respect of Respondent 1 (the Company) and allowing it in respect of Respondent 2 (the Company's Managing Director)

Held :

Per majority

Per Srikrishna, J.

A penal statute is to be construed strictly. If the act alleged against the accused does not fall within the parameters of the offence described in the statute, the accused cannot be held liable. There is no scope for intendment based on the general purpose or object of law. If the legislature has left a lacuna, it is not open to the court to paper it over on some presumed intention of the legislature. The maxim "judicis est jus dicere, non dare" pithily expounds the duty of the court. It is to decide what the law is and apply it; not to make it. (Paras 26 and 27)

The question whether a corporation can be prosecuted for an offence even when the punishment is a mandatory sentence of imprisonment has not been free from doubt is evident from para 24.7 of the 41st Report and para 8.3 of the 47th Report of the Law Commission of India which has recommended specific amendments in order to get over that difficulty. The recommendations show that the law as it exists renders it impossible for a court of law to convict a corporation where the statute mandates a minimum term of imprisonment plus fine. It would not be open to the court of law to hold that a corporation would be found guilty and sentenced only to a fine for that would be rewriting the statute and exercising a discretion not vested in the court by the statute. It is precisely for this reason that the Law Commission recommended that where the offence is punishable with imprisonment, or with imprisonment and fine, and the offender is a corporation, the court should be empowered to sentence such an offender to fine only. These recommendations have not been acted upon, though several other recommendations made by the 47th Report of the Law Commission have been accepted and implemented by Parliament vide the Taxation Laws (Amendment) Act, 1975. Hence, the state of law as noticed by the Law Commission continues. (Paras 28, 29 and 31)

In view of the Finance Minister's speech at the time of introduction of the Bill which culminated in enactment of the Taxation Laws (Amendment) Act, 1975. Hence, it is apparent that the legislative mandate is to prohibit the courts from deviating from the minimum mandatory punishment prescribed by the statute. The court should be slow in interpreting a penal statute in a manner which would amount to virtual rewriting of the statute to prejudice the accused. (Paras 38 and 39)

The view taken herein finds support from the Australian jurisdiction. Faced with the same situation, the legislature in Australia enacted Part 2.5 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act, 1995 to specifically provide: "a body corporate may be found guilty of any offence, including one punishable by imprisonment". This provision has to be read with Section 4-B(3) of the Crimes Act, 1914. That was a case of the legislature stepping in to supply the casus omissus. Therefore, the Supreme Court cannot, in the garb of construction of the penal provisions of Sections 276-C, 277 and 278, impose a punishment of fine in a situation which calls for no punishment by a virtual rewriting of the statute. (Paras 45 and 46)

As regards the definition of "person" in Section 2(31) of the Act, all definitions in the Act apply "unless the context otherwise requires". The context does indicate to the contrary, while reading of the word "person" in the sections concerned. (Para 47)

Therefore, it is held that the respondent Company herein cannot be prosecuted for offences under Sections 276-C and 277 read with Section 278 since each one of these sections requires the imposition of a mandatory term of imprisonment coupled with a fine and leaves no choice to the court to impose only a fine. Therefore, the High Court was justified in quashing the prosecution as far as the respondent Company is concerned. (Paras 49 and 51)

Per Rajendra Babu, J. (concurring)

Corporate criminal liability cannot be imposed without making corresponding legislative changes. For example, the imposition of fine in lieu of imprisonment. Such legislative changes took place in Australia, France, Belgium and Canada. (Para 57)

Under the present Indian law it is not possible to impose fine in lieu of imprisonment though the definition of "person" in the Penal Code includes "company". Parliament has also understood this problem. Besides the reports of the Law Commission of India, as is evident for clause 72(a) of the IPC (Amendment) Bill, 1972. To bring such a fundamental change in the criminal jurisprudence is a legislative function. Only Parliament can do it. That Bill was not passed and lapsed. (Paras 58 to 60)

Per Mathur, J. (dissenting)

Sections 276-C and 277 make the persons committing the offences mentioned therein, liable to punishment by imprisonment and fine. Section 2(31) of the Act defines a "person" and it includes a company and this provision is exactly similar to Section 3(42) of the General Clauses Act. Many other statutes which make a provision for offences by companies contain exactly similar provisions. Reference may be made to Section 35-H of the Wealth Tax Act, Section 14-A of the Employees' Provident Fund and Miscellaneous Provisions Act, Section 141 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, Section 34 of the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, Section 10 of the Essential Commodities Act, Section 6 of the Indian Merchandise Act, Section 38 of the

Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act and Section 17 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. (Paras 9 and 9.1.0)

Sections 276-C and 277 of the Act provide both substantive sentence of imprisonment and fine. It is true that a company cannot be made to undergo a substantive sentence of imprisonment. However, there is no reason why it should not be awarded a sentence of fine only in the event it is found guilty of having committed the offence. Sections 235(2) and 360 CrPC and Section 326 IPC show that even after a person has been convicted and sentenced, it is not absolutely mandatory that he must undergo the whole sentence awarded to him by actually spending that period in jail. There is no way in which a court may compel the parties to actually comply with a decree of restitution of conjugal rights. The remedy provided viz. attachment and sale of the property of the judgment-debtor or payment of periodical sum provided in Order 21 Rules 32 and 33 CPC is hardly a substitute for husband and wife living together and performing their marital obligations. That does not mean that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights should not be passed. Therefore, the mere fact that a company cannot be sent to jail or made to undergo imprisonment cannot lead to an inference that it should not be prosecuted at all. In the event of its conviction, an appropriate fine can be imposed upon it which is also one of the punishments provided under Sections 276-C and 277 of the Act. (Para 14)

Moreover, if a company is not to be prosecuted only on the ground that substantive sentence cannot be awarded to it, the provisions of Section 10-B of the Essential Commodities Act and Section 35 of the Drugs and Cosmetics Act would never come into operation, clearly defeating the legislative intent and the purpose for which they have been enacted. The publication in newspapers about prosecution and conviction of a company is bound to bring bad name to the company and lower its image before the public at large. Section 278-A of the Act makes second conviction punishable with more severe punishment. A company may be blacklisted or may be denied licences with the result that its manufacturing activity may come to a standstill. (Paras 15 and 16)

Courts would be shirking their responsibility of imparting justice by holding that prosecution of a company is unsustainable merely on the ground that being a juristic person it cannot be sent to jail to undergo the sentence. (Para 21). Asstt. Commr. v. Velliappa Textiles Ltd., (2003) 11 SCC 405: (2003) 263 ITR 550.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu³, B.N. Srikrishna² and G.P. Mathur¹, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-2003]

M.V. Javali v. Mahajan Borewell & Co., (1997) 8 SCC 72: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1239; United States v. Union Supply Co., 54 L Ed 87: 215 US 50 (1909), dissented from

MCD v. J.B. Bottling Co. (P) Ltd., 1975 Cri LJ 1148 (Del) (FB); Oswal Vanaspati & Allied Industries v. State of U.P., (1993) 1 Comp LJ 172 (All), overruled

P.V. Pai v. R.L. Rinawma, ILR 1993 Kant 709; Kusum Products Ltd. v. S.K. Sinha, (1980) 126 ITR 804 (Cal); Modi Industries Ltd. v. B.C. Goel, (1983) 144 ITR 496 (All), impliedly approved on this point

Bristol Guardians v. Bristol Waterworks Co., 1914 AC 379: 83 LJCh 393: 110 LT 846 (HL); Tuck & Sons v. Priester, (1887) 19 QBD 629: 56 LJQB 553 (CA); London & North Eastern Rly. Co. v. Berriman, (1946) 1 All ER 255: 1946 AC 278 (HL); R. v. I.C.R. Haulage Ltd., (1944) 1 All ER 691: 1944 KB 551 (CCA), relied on

Tarak Chandra Mukherjee v. Ratan Lal Ghosal, AIR 1957 Cal 257: 61 CWN 263 (FB); State of Maharashtra v. Syndicate Transport Co. (P) Ltd., AIR 1964 Bom 195: (1964) 2 Cri LJ 276, impliedly approved

Tolaram Relumal v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 496: 1954 Cri LJ 1333; Bijaya Kumar Agarwala v. State of Orissa, (1996) 5 SCC 1: 1996 SCC (Cri) 864; Sanjay Dutt v. State (II), (1994) 5 SCC 410: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1433; Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47; State of Maharashtra v. Jugmander Lal, AIR 1966 SC 940: 1966 Cri LJ 707, followed

Doubted in AnZ Grindlays Bank Ltd. v. Directorate of Enforcement, (2004) 6 SCC 531 by a three-Judge Bench and matter referred to a Constitution Bench which has overruled in Standard Chartered Bank v. Directorate of Enforcement, (2005) 4 SCC 530. See also held in Standard Chartered Bank v. Directorate of Enforcement, (2006) 4 SCC 278

[2924] — Ss. 235(2) and 360 — If alcohol had played any role in the commission of the offence State must provide for anti-alcoholic therapy of the prisoner. Dilbag Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 2 SCC 103: 1979 SCC (Cri) 376: AIR 1979 SC 680: 1979 GLR (SC) 390: 1979 Cri LJ 636: 1979 MLJ (Cri) 534: 16 ACC 104 (II).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, D.A. Desai and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-1-1979]

— S. 236 See Ss. 482, 225 to 247

— S. 237 See Ss. 401 and 237

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2925] — S. 237 — Accused charged under Ss. 302/149, IPC convicted under Ss. 302/34, IPC — One of the appellants charged with an offence under Ss. 302/149 — Therefore, courts below committed no illegality or impropriety in convicting him under Ss. 302/34 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 149 and 34 — Charged under Ss. 302/149 but convicted under Ss. 302/34. Gajjan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 1 SCC 233: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1603: AIR 1998 SC 2417.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1998]

[2926] — Ss. 237(2) and 327(2) — Open or public trial — Right to, not absolute — In exceptional circumstances trial can be held in camera (Per curiam). Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899: 1994 Cri LJ 3139.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian[1], M.M. Punchhi[1], K. Ramaswamy[2], S.C. Agrawal[1] and R.M. Sahai[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-3-1994]

[2927] — Ch. XII (Ss. 154 to 176) and S. 190 — Officers of Department of Revenue Intelligence (DRI) invested with powers of officer-in-charge of police station under S. 53, NDPS Act, 1985 — Held, are not police officers within the meaning of S. 25, Evidence Act, 1872 — Consequently confessional statement recorded by such officer in the course of investigation of a person accused of an offence under the Act is admissible as evidence — Officers appointed under S. 53, NDPS Act, 1985 not entitled to exercise all the powers under Chapter XII of CrPC, 1973 including power to submit report or charge-sheet under S. 173, CrPC — Evidence Act, 1872 — S. 25 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 — Ss. 53, 36-A, 52, 52-A, 41, 42, 43 and 44

Officers of the Department of Revenue Intelligence who have been invested with the powers of an officer-in-charge of a police station under S. 53 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, are not "police officers" within the meaning of S. 25 of the Evidence Act, 1872. Therefore, a confessional statement recorded by such officer in the course of investigation of a person accused of an offence under the Act is admissible in evidence as against him. Officer appointed under S. 53 other than a police officer is not entitled to exercise "all" the powers under Chapter XII of the Code including the power to submit a charge-sheet under S. 173, CrPC.

Even if an officer is invested under any special law with powers analogous to those exercised by a police officer-in-charge of a police station investigating a cognizable offence, he does not thereby become a police officer under S. 25, Evidence Act, unless he has the power to lodge a report under S. 173 of the Code. Any person on whom power to investigate under Chapter XII is conferred can be said to be a "police officer", no matter by what name he is called. The nomenclature is not important, the content of the power he exercises is the determinative factor. The important attribute of police power is not only the power to investigate into the commission of cognizable offence but also the power to prosecute the offender by filing a report or a charge-sheet under S. 173 of the Code. There is nothing in the provisions of the Act to show that the legislature desired to vest in the officers appointed under S. 53 of the Act, all the powers of Chapter XII, including the power to submit a report under S. 173 of the Code.

Clause (d) of S. 36-A of 1985 Act makes it clear that if the investigation is conducted by the police, it would conclude in a police report but if the investigation is made by an officer of any other department including the DRI, the Special Court would take cognizance of the offence upon formal complaint made by such authorised officer of the concerned government. Needless to say that such a complaint would have to be under S. 190 of the Code. Raj Kumar Karwal v. Union of India, (1990) 2 SCC 409: 1990 SCC (Cri) 330: AIR 1991 SC 45: (1990) 48 ELT 496.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-3-1990]

State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276: 1962 (1) Cri LJ 217; Raja Ram Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 828: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 705; Badku Joti Sawant v. State of Mysore, AIR 1966 SC 1746: 1966 Cri LJ 1353; Romesh Chandra Mehta v. State of W.B., AIR 1970 SC 940: 1970 Cri LJ 863; Illias v. Collector of Customs, Madras, AIR 1970 SC 1065: 1970 Cri LJ 998; State of U.P. v. Durga Prasad, (1975) 3 SCC 210: 1974 SCC (Cri) 828; Balkishan A. Devidayal v. State of Maharashtra, (1980) 4 SCC 600: 1981 SCC (Cri) 62, followed

Radha Kishun Marwari v. Emperor, AIR 1932 Pat 293 (SB): ILR (1933) 12 Pat 46; Mahesh v. Union of India, (1988) 1 FAC 339 (All); Mangal Singh Bhan Singh Rathod v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 2 FAC 173 (Guj), approved

Affirmed in Kanhaiyalal v. Union of India, (2008) 4 SCC 668

— S. 238 See also S. 251-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1118 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 238 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 207, 238, 228 & 240 and S. 227

See also Ss. 240, 228, 238, 227 and 482

See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2928] — Ss. 238 to 240 and 211 — Proceedings under Ss. 238 to 240 are in the nature of pre-trial or trial proceedings — Framing of charge under S. 240 — Nature of function of the court — Order to frame charge against the accused if final or interlocutory. V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695: AIR 1980 SC 962: 1980 Cri LJ 690: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 664.

Bench Strength 4. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], P.N. Shinghal[2], D.A. Desai[3] and A.P. Sen[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1979]

[2929] — Ss. 238, 239, 244 and 245 — Trial of a warrant case — Difference between case instituted on basis of police report and case instituted otherwise than on police report — Held, in first category, prosecution gets opportunity to lead evidence only after charge is framed whereas in second category complainant gets two opportunities to lead evidence, first before charge is framed and second after charge is framed

The essential difference of procedure in the trial of warrant case on the basis of a police report and that instituted otherwise than on police report is particularly marked in Sections 238 and 239 CrPC on one side and Sections 244 and 245 CrPC on the other. Where a case is instituted on a police report, the prosecution has only one opportunity to lead evidence and that too comes only after the charge is framed. However, in the warrant trial instituted otherwise than the police report, the complainant gets two opportunities to lead evidence, firstly, before the charge is framed and secondly, after framing of the charge. (Paras 19, 20 and 22). Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 14 SCC 115: AIR 2009 SC 2282: 2009 Cri LJ 2824.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2009]

— S. 239 See S. 251-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1118 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 239 See Ss. 91, 227, 228, 239 and 240
See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250
See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250
See also Ss. 190, 198-A, 209, 239, 240, 242 and 323
See also Ss. 197, 220, 221, 227, 239 and 245
See also Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200, 239 and 362 & 482
See also Ss. 227 & 228, 239 & 240, 91 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 & 226 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 245
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 482
See also Ss. 227 & 228(1) and 239 & 240(1)
See also Ss. 227, 239 & 245 and 228 & 240
See also Ss. 227, 239, 245 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 239, 399 and 401
See also Ss. 228 & 227 and 239 & 240 and 245(1) & (2)
See also Ss. 228 & 227 and 240 & 239
See also Ss. 238 to 240 and 211
See also Ss. 245, 227 and 239
See also Ss. 245, 239 and 227
See also Ss. 245(1), 227, 239 and 246
See also Ss. 302 and 239
See also Ss. 320, 239 and 482
See also Ss. 321, 227 and 239
See also Ss. 321, 227, 239 and 397
See also Ss. 321 & 239
See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243
See also Ss. 401, 397 and 239
See also Ss. 482, 190, 203, 211, 227, 239 and 245
See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247
See also Ss. 482 and 227, 239 & 245
See also Ss. 482 and 239, 240, 245
See also Ss. 482, 397, 401, 239, 240 and 173

[2930] — S. 239 — Discharge based on discussion of materials then on record improper — On facts, the discharge was based on surmises and conjectures — State justified in having the order of discharge quashed

All that is required at the stage of framing of charges is to see whether a prima facie case regarding the commission of certain offences is made out. the question whether the charges will eventually stand proved or not can be determined only after evidence is recorded in the case. What the Special Judge has done is to decide the case on merit without giving the prosecution an opportunity to adduce evidence against the accused. The order of the Special Judge is therefore not in accordance with law and is clearly unsustainable. State of H.P. v. Krishan Lal Pardhan, (1987) 2 SCC 17: 1987 SCC (Cri) 270: AIR 1987 SC 773: 1987 Cri LJ 709.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-2-1987]

[2931] — Ss. 239, 190 and 173 — Special Judge finding prima facie case against the accused but replaced by another judge before framing of charge — Second judge discharging the accused by a 16-page order — Held, second judge could not, on the same material on record, come to a different conclusion — The review of the earlier order was illegal. State of H.P. v. Krishan Lal Pardhan, (1987) 2 SCC 17: 1987 SCC (Cri) 270: AIR 1987 SC 773: 1987 Cri LJ 709.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-2-1987]

[2932] — Ss. 239, 240, 227, 190(1), 156(3) and 468 — Discharge after taking cognizance of offence — Permissibility — Complaint under S. 190(1), CrPC for offences under Ss. 498-A and 406 IPC — Magistrate ordering investigation by police — Police, after investigation, submitting charge-sheet (final report) — Thereupon Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and fixing a date for framing charges — Discharging of the accused on the date so fixed, on the ground that the complaint was barred by limitation, held, not impermissible. Arun Vyas v. Anita Vyas, (1999) 4 SCC 690: 1999 SCC (Cri) 629: AIR 1999 SC 2071. Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Venkataswami and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-5-1999]

[Ed.: The Supreme Court directed the Magistrate to consider the question of limitation taking note of Section 473 CrPC in the light of the observations made herein. (Para 17).]

[2933] — Ss. 239, 240, 227 and 245 — No reasons are required to be recorded when charges are to be framed against an accused — Reasons are to be recorded only when accused is to be discharged

On the basis of a complaint lodged with the police an investigation was conducted and a charge-sheet was filed before the Metropolitan Magistrate against the appellants for offences under Sections 454, 380 and 120-B IPC. The Magistrate issued process to the accused and framed charge against the appellants. While framing the charge the Magistrate dismissed the petition filed by the accused for discharging them by a short order stating that prima facie the case was established against the accused persons under the said sections. The appellants then moved the High Court for quashing the charge. A Single Judge of the High Court who set aside the said order of the Magistrate remarked that it was not discernible from the order of the Magistrate that he had taken into consideration the charge-sheet and the other papers submitted therewith for satisfying himself as to whether there is a prima facie case against the accused persons for the aforesaid offences. The Single Judge expressed his helplessness in supporting the order framing charges against the appellants. The Metropolitan Magistrate was thereupon directed to peruse the charge-sheet along with other papers submitted to him and satisfy himself again as to the existence of a prima facie case against the accused.

Disapproving the order of the High Court and yet not setting it aside in the absence of appeal by the State,

Held :

Section 239 shows that the Magistrate is obliged to record his reasons if he decides to discharge the accused. But in view of Section 240 there is no such requirement if he forms the opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused had committed the offence which he is competent to try. In such a situation, he is only required to frame a charge in writing against the accused. If the trial court decides to frame a charge there is no legal requirement that he should pass an order specifying the reasons as to why he opts to do so. Framing of charge itself is prima facie order that the trial Judge has formed the opinion, upon considering the police report and other documents and after hearing both sides, that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence concerned. Even in cases instituted otherwise than on a police report the Magistrate is required to write an order showing the reasons only if he is to discharge the accused. This is clear from Section 245. Even in a trial before a Court of Session, the Judge is required to record reasons only if he decides to discharge the accused (vide Section 227 of the Code). But if he is to frame the charge he may do so without recording his reasons for showing why he framed the charge. (Paras 10 and 8)

In the present case as the Metropolitan Magistrate has chosen to frame the charge, the High Court, when moved by the accused for quashment of the charge, could have re-examined the records to consider whether the charge framed was sustainable or not. If the High Court decides to quash the charge it is open to the High Court to record the reasons thereof. The present order of the High Court is one of setting aside the charge without stating any reason. But the direction to the Magistrate to consider the materials once again and then to frame a charge for the same offence (if the Magistrate reaches the opinion that there is ground for presuming the commission of offence) is simply to repeat what the Metropolitan Magistrate had done once at the first instance. To ask him to do the same thing over again is adding an unnecessary extra work on the trial court. Be that as it may, the State has not challenged the order of the High Court. Hence the impugned order of the High Court need not be set aside. It is for the Metropolitan Magistrate to exercise his functions under Section 239 or Section 240 of the Code as he deems fit in the light of the observations made above. (Para 13). Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303: AIR 2000 SC 522: 2000 Cri LJ 746.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2000]

[2934] — Ss. 239 & 240 and 228 — Matters to be considered at stage of framing charge — At the stage of framing of charge court is required to consider only police report and documents sent with it under S. 173 — Accused has right of being heard and the court may examine him, if it thinks necessary — However, the High Court not justified in looking into the documents filed by the accused and relying upon them to conclude that no offence was committed by them

At the time of framing of a charge, what the trial court is required to, and can consider are only the police report referred to under Section 173 CrPC and the documents sent with it. The only right the accused has at that stage is of being heard and nothing beyond that. Of course, at that stage the accused may be examined but that is a prerogative of the court only. (Para 5)

In the present case the High Court in quashing the proceedings not only looked into the documents filed by the respondent in support of his claim that no case was made out against him even before the trial had commenced — but relied upon them to conclude that no offence was committed by him. This approach of the High Court is also contrary to the settled law of the land. (Para 8). State Anti-Corruption Bureau v. P. Suryaprakasam, (2008) 14 SCC 13.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1996]

Minakshi Bala v. Sudhir Kumar, (1994) 4 SCC 142: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1181, followed

[2935] — Ss. 239, 227, 245 and 482 — Application for discharge — Considerations therefor — Strong suspicion of complicity/culpability if enough to refuse application — Held, complicity of accused person is required to be taken into consideration for purpose of determining application for discharge upon taking a realistic view of the matter — While considering application, it is for the Judge to go into details of allegations made against accused person so as to form an opinion as to whether any case at all is made out as a strong suspicion in regard thereto shall subserve the requirements of law (Para 17). Rumi Dhar v. State of W.B., (2009) 6 SCC 364.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-4-2009]

[2936] — Ss. 239 and 240 — Mere suspicion of motive not a sufficient ground for framing charges — Absence of direct evidence to prove conspiracy — Circumstantial evidence, even if unrebutted or totally accepted creating only a suspicion of motive — Held, accused persons rightly discharged by the courts below

The mere suspicion of motive cannot serve as a sufficient ground for framing the charges in the absence of any material, prima facie showing that the particular motive has passed into action and that the accused is connected with that action in question.

In the present case there is no direct evidence to prove conspiracy except by circumstantial evidence. The circumstantial evidence even if accepted in its entirety creates only a suspicion of motive. Needless to point out that the motive which induces a man to do any particular act is known to him and to him alone. State of U.P. v. Sanjay Singh (Dr), 1994 Supp (2) SCC 707: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1701.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M.M. Punchhi, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-1994]

[2937] — Ss. 239 & 240 and 227 & 228 — The standard of proof required at the final stage is not required before taking a decision to frame the charge or discharge the accused — Accused therefore can produce any reliable material at this stage as would affect the very sustainability of the case

It is trite law that the standard of proof normally adhered to at the final stage is not to be insisted upon at the stage where the consideration is to be confined to find out a prima facie case and decide whether it is necessary to proceed to the next stage of framing the charges and making the accused to stand trial for the same. The Supreme Court has already cautioned against undertaking a roving inquiry into the pros and cons of the case by weighing the evidence or collecting materials, as if during the course or after trial. Ultimately, this would always depend upon the facts of each case and it would be difficult to lay down a rule of universal application and for all times. The fact that in one case the court thought fit to exercise such powers is no compelling circumstance to do so in all and every case before it, as a matter of course and for the mere asking. The court concerned must be allowed a large latitude in the matter of exercise of discretion and unless in a given case the court was found to have conducted itself in so demonstrably an unreasonable manner unbecoming of a judicial authority, the court superior to that court cannot intervene very lightly or in a routine fashion to interpose or impose itself even at that stage. The reason being, at that stage, the question is one of mere proprieties involved in the exercise of judicial discretion by the court and not of any rights concretised in favour of the accused. (Para 6). Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI, (2000) 5 SCC 679: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014: AIR 2000 SC 2335: 2000 Cri LJ 3478.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Saghir Ahmad and Doraiswamy Raju, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2000]

Satish Mehra v. Delhi Admn., (1996) 9 SCC 766: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104; Ashok Kaushik v. State, (1999) 49 DRJ 202, distinguished

Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, (1979) 3 SCC 4: 1979 SCC (Cri) 609, relied on

But see State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568

[2938] — Ss. 239 & 240 and 228 — At the stage of framing of charge court is required to consider only police report and documents sent with it under S. 173 — Accused has right of being heard and the court may examine him, if it thinks necessary — However, the High Court not justified in looking into the documents filed by the accused and relying upon them to conclude that no offence was committed by them

At the time of framing of a charge, what the trial court is required to, and can consider are only the police report referred to under Section 173 CrPC and the documents sent with it. The only right the accused has at that stage is of being heard and nothing beyond that. Of course, at that stage the accused may be examined but that is a prerogative of the court only. (Para 5)

In the present case the High Court in quashing the proceedings not only looked into the documents filed by the respondent in support of his claim that no case was made out against him even before the trial had commenced — but relied upon them to conclude that no offence was committed by him. This approach of the High Court is also contrary to the settled law of the land. (Para 8). State Anti-Corruption Bureau, Hyderabad v. P. Suryaprakasam, 1999 SCC (Cri) 373.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1996]

Minakshi Bala v. Sudhir Kumar, (1994) 4 SCC 142: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1181, followed

[2939] — Ss. 239 and 482 — Criminal proceedings when to be dropped or quashed — Appellants, senior officers of Bank charged under Ss. 467, 468, 420 and 120-B IPC — Appellants applying under S. 239 CrPC to trial Magistrate for being discharged on the ground that no case was made out against them — Rejection of appellant's petitions under Ss. 239 and 482 CrPC, by trial Magistrate and High Court respectively — Held, questions regarding the sufficiency or reliability of the evidence to proceed further are not required to be considered by the trial court under S. 239 and High Court under S. 482 — However, if upon the admitted facts and documents relied upon by the complainant or prosecution, without sifting of evidence, no case is made out, the criminal proceedings instituted against the accused are required to be dropped or quashed — Setting aside impugned orders appellants discharged in terms of S. 239 CrPC — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 467, 468, 420 and 120-B

The inherent powers of the High Court under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can be exercised to quash proceedings, in appropriate cases either to prevent the abuse of process of any court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. Ordinarily the criminal proceedings which are instituted against the accused must be tried and taken to logical conclusions under the Code of Criminal Procedure and the High Court should be reluctant to interfere with the proceedings at an interlocutory stage. However, there may be cases where the inherent jurisdiction to quash proceedings can and should be exercised. Where there is a legal bar against the institution or continuance of the criminal proceedings in respect of the alleged offence, the High Court should not be reluctant to exercise the inherent jurisdiction. Similarly where the allegations in the FIR or the complaint, even if they are taken at their face value do not constitute the offence alleged, or without appreciating the evidence but only merely by looking at the complaint or the FIR or the accompanying documents, the offence alleged is not disclosed, the person proceeded against in such a frivolous criminal litigation has to be saved. (Para 3)

The trial court under Section 239 and the High Court under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not called upon to embark upon an inquiry as to whether evidence in question is reliable or not or evidence relied upon is sufficient to proceed further or not. However, if upon the admitted facts and the documents relied upon by the complainant or the prosecution and without weighing or sifting of evidence, no case is made out, the criminal proceedings instituted against the accused are required to be dropped or quashed. (Para 4)

On facts on a perusal of FIR, the final report under Section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and all other documents accompanying it, no case is made out against any of the appellants and the pendency of the proceedings against them before the Magistrate is an abuse of the process of court. The appeal is allowed and the order of the High Court dated 8-4-1997 and Magistrate dated 6-7-1996 are quashed and the appellants discharged in terms of Section 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. (Para 6). K. Ramakrishna v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 547: 2001 SCC (Cri) 27: AIR 2000 SC 3330.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-2000]

Rajesh Bajaj v. State NCT of Delhi, (1999) 3 SCC 259: 1999 SCC (Cri) 401, relied upon

[2940] — Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300 — Trial of warrant cases — Held, 'discharge' and 'acquittal' are distinct concepts — After framing of charge there cannot be a 'discharge' but only an 'acquittal' based on a finding of not guilty turning on the merits of the case — Hence, High Court could rightfully interfere in revision under S. 439 with an order of discharge passed after the framing of the charge and order retrial — High Court was not barred by plea of autrefois acquit under S. 403(1) — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 253, 254-A & 258 and 439 & 403

In a warrant case instituted otherwise than on a police report 'discharge' or 'acquittal' of accused are distinct concepts applicable to different stages of the proceedings in Court. The legal effect and incidents of 'discharges' and 'acquittal' are also different. An order of discharge in a warrant case instituted on complaint, can be made only after the process has been issued and before the charge is framed. Section 253(1) shows that as a general rule there can be no order of discharge unless the evidence of all the prosecution witnesses has been taken and the Magistrate considers for reasons to be recorded, in the light of the evidence, that no case has been made out. Sub-section (2) which authorises the Magistrate to discharge the accused at any previous stage of the case if he considers the charge to be groundless, is an exception to that rule. A discharge without considering the evidence taken is illegal.

Once a charge is framed in a warrant case, instituted either on complaint or a police report, the Magistrate has no power under the Code to discharge the accused, and thereafter, he can either acquit or convict the accused unless he decides to proceed under Ss. 349 and 562 of the Code of 1898 (which correspond to Ss. 325 and 360 of the Code of 1973).

So that if after framing charge the Magistrate whimsically, without appraising the evidence and without permitting the prosecution to produce all its evidence 'discharges' the accused, such an acquittal, without trial, even if clothed as 'discharge' will be illegal. This is precisely what has happened in the instant case.

[That the Magistrate in discharging the accused was acting in accordance with the judgment of the High Court in revision, is based on a misreading of that judgment.]

Even assuming that the said order of discharge was one of 'acquittal' since it was not passed on merits and without a trial, it was illegal. The High Court has undoubtedly the power to interfere with such a patently illegal order of acquittal in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 439, and direct a retrial.

The High Court's order under appeal, directing the Magistrate to take de novo proceedings against the accused was not barred by the provisions of S. 403, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the earlier proceedings taken by the Magistrate being no trial at all and the order passed therein being neither a valid "discharge" of the accused, nor their acquittal as contemplated by S. 403(1). Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, (1979) 2 SCC 179: 1979 SCC (Cri) 405: AIR 1979 SC 94: 1979 Cri LJ 41.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria, O. Chinnappa Reddy and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-1978]

Followed in Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609

— S. 240 See also S. 251-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1118 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 240 See Ss. 91, 227, 228, 239 and 240
See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250
See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250
See also Ss. 190, 198-A, 209, 239, 240, 242 and 323
See also Ss. 204, 228 and 240
See also Ss. 207, 238, 228 & 240 and S. 227
See also Ss. 211 and 240
See also Ss. 212 and 240
See also Ss. 227 & 228, 239 & 240, 91 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 & 226 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 245
See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 239 & 245 and 228 & 240
See also S. 228, above
See also Ss. 228 & 227 and 239 & 240 and 245(1) & (2)
See also Ss. 228, 227 and 240

See also Ss. 228 & 227 and 240 & 239
See also Ss. 228 and 240
See also Ss. 228 & 240 and Ch. III (Ss. 26 to 35)
See also Ss. 228, 240 and 173
See also Ss. 228, 240 and 227
See also Ss. 238 to 240 and 211
See also Ss. 239 and 240
See also Ss. 239, 240, 227, 190(1), 156(3) and 468
See also Ss. 239 & 240 and 227 & 228
See also Ss. 239, 240, 227 and 245
See also Ss. 239 & 240 and 228
See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300
See also Ss. 321, 228, 240 & 173
See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243
See also Ss. 482, 173 and 240
See also Ss. 482, 190, 228, 240 & 246
See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247
See also Ss. 482, 228 and 240
See also Ss. 482 and 239, 240, 245
See also Ss. 482, 309, 228 and 240
See also Ss. 482, 397, 401, 239, 240 and 173

[2941] — S. 240 — Framing of charge — Powers and functions of Magistrate — Police report to the effect that investigation has not made out any offence against the accused — Framing of charge by Magistrate ignoring the said report — Held, permissible — Not mandatory for the Magistrate to always accept the final police report — There can and has to be an independent examination and application of mind by the judicial officer — Hence, conclusion by the High Court that in view of the final report, the charge-sheet on the basis of which cognisance was taken had lost its force, erroneous

In the instant case, the order framing charge shows that the learned Special Judge was fully alive to the two reports, the different scope of power and functions exercisable by the Magistrate and the police and on facts came to the prima facie view that charge is liable to be framed though reasons thereof have not been mentioned in the order. After perusing the two reports filed by the investigating officer it is evident therefrom that neither the prima facie view reached by the Special Judge can be faulted nor can it be said that the second report was altogether ignored by the Special Judge as was sought to be contended. What has been done by the judge is to ignore and brush aside the conclusion in the second report so as to form an independent opinion on the facts emerging from the report that charge deserves to be framed against the respondent. The course adopted by the Special Judge is permissible in law. (Para 5)

It is not necessary for the Magistrate to always accept the final report. It depends on facts and circumstances of each case. There can and has to be an independent examination and application of mind by the judicial officer. On examination of facts, the judge has to decide to accept or not to accept the conclusion of the police that there is no material to prove the charge. The decision of the judge, at this stage, is prima facie. But the conclusion of the High Court that in view of the final report, the charge-sheet on the basis of which cognisance was taken lost its force is incorrect. (Para 6). State of Orissa v. Habibullah Khan, (2003) 12 SCC 129.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-2003]

[2942] — Ss. 240, 228, 238, 227 and 482 — Whether at the time of framing of charge material produced on behalf of accused can be considered — Held, while framing charges the trial court can only look into the materials produced by the prosecution while giving an opportunity to the accused to show that the said materials were insufficient for the purpose of framing charge — At the stage of framing of charge the submissions on behalf of the accused have to be confined to the material produced by the investigating agency — Accused would get an opportunity to prove the documents subsequently produced by the prosecution on the order of the Court, but the same cannot be relied upon to reopen the proceedings once charge has been framed or for invocation of the High Court's powers under S. 482 (Paras 2 and 19). Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609: 2008 Cri LJ 3540.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-2008]

[2943] — Ss. 240, 241, 251 and 252 — Effect of plea of guilty — Facts set out in the charge are thereby admitted — Exculpatory and extenuating arguments thereby excluded — Only legal defences permissible — Practice of plea-bargaining condemned. Kisan Trimbak Kothula v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 1 SCC 300: 1977 SCC (Cri) 97: AIR 1977 SC 435: 1977 Cri LJ 267: (1977) 2 SCR 102.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, V.R. Krishna Iyer and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-1976]

[2944] — Ss. 240 and 228 — Manner of examination of material placed on record by prosecution at the stage of framing charge — Restated

It is well settled that at the stage of framing of charge the trial court is not to examine and assess in detail the materials placed on record by the prosecution nor is it for the court to consider the sufficiency of the materials to establish the offence alleged against the accused persons. At this stage of charge the court is to examine the materials only with a view to be satisfied that a prima facie case of commission of offence alleged has been made out against the accused persons. It is also well settled that when the petition is filed by the accused under Section 482 CrPC seeking for the quashing of charge framed against them the court should not interfere with the order unless there are strong reasons to hold that in the interest of justice and to avoid abuse of the process of the court the charge framed against the accused needs to be quashed. Such an order can be passed only in exceptional cases and on rare occasions. (Para 7). State of Delhi v. Gyan Devi, (2000) 8 SCC 239: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1486: AIR 2001 SC 40.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-10-2000]

— S. 240(1) See also Ss. 227 & 228(1) and 239 & 240(1)

[2945] — Ss. 240(1), 246(1) and 211 — Framing of charge — Mode of passing the order for — Held, it is not necessary for the trial court to write a reasoned or lengthy order while framing the charges. Munna Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 9 SCC 631: AIR 2002 SC 107.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-2001]

Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of W.B., (2000) 1 SCC 722: 2000 SCC (Cri) 303, relied on [2946] — S. 240(2) — Framing of charge in the absence of accused who had obtained anticipatory bail — Held, defeats the very purpose of S. 240(2) (Para 21). HDFC Bank Ltd. v. J.J. Mannan, (2010) 1 SCC 679.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-2009]

— S. 241 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 229, 235, 241 and 248

See also Ss. 229, 241 and 223

See also Ss. 229, 241, Ch. XX-A (Ss. 265-A to 265-L) and 368, 399 and 401

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 240, 241, 251, 252

See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

— S. 242 See also S. 251-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1118 et seq. in Vol. 2

See also PENAL CODE, 1860, S. 302

See also CRIMINAL TRIAL in Vol. 3

— S. 242 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 198-A, 209, 239, 240, 242 and 323

See also Ss. 226 and 242

See also Ss. 226, 242 and 311

See also Ss. 231, 233, 242 and 243

See also Ss. 231, 234, 242, 244 and 293

See also Ss. 231 and 242

See also Ss. 231 & 242 and 173 & 157

See also Ss. 231, 242 and 243

See also Ss. 231, 242, 243, 244 and 247

See also Ss. 231, 242, 243, 246 and 326

See also Ss. 231, 242 and 244

See also Ss. 231, 242, 244, 309 and 437 & 439

See also Ss. 235, 231 & 233 and 248, 242 & 243

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 313, 242 and 243

See also Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283

See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243

See also Ss. 391 and 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 & 247

See also Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2947] — Ss. 242, 309 and 313 — Evidence for prosecution — Deferment of examination of accused under S. 313 — Permissibility — Where several charge-sheets had been filed against the same accused for similar offences though pertaining to different periods, but only one case reached the stage of examination of the accused under S. 313, held, court has no power to order that recording of statement of accused under S. 313 in that case be deferred till all the other cases against him reach the same stage and then hold trial and record evidence in all the cases simultaneously

Against the accused-respondent 11 charge-sheets relating to misappropriation of bank fund for different periods were filed and cases registered. However, when only one such case reached the stage of arguments, the respondent filed an application under Section 309 CrPC requesting the court to defer the recording of his statement under Section 313 CrPC till all the other 10 cases against him reach the stage of the statement of the accused. The trial court dismissed the application and the revisional court dismissed the revision petition filed by the accused. But petition under Section 482 CrPC filed by the accused was allowed by a Single Judge of the High Court by issuing a direction to the trial court to hold trial and record evidence in all the aforesaid cases simultaneously and dispose of the same simultaneously as far as possible. Submission made on behalf of the respondent that he could not be forced to reveal his defence as it would enable the prosecution to cover up the lacunae in other cases which are pending in trial was accepted. This direction has been issued in the purported exercise of power conferred under Section 242 CrPC which according to the Single Judge gives the jurisdiction to a court to defer cross-examination of the material witnesses until all the material witnesses are examined by the prosecution as part of fair trial.

Allowing the State's appeal,

Held :

The proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 242 CrPC does not deal with either the clubbing of cases registered against the accused or simultaneous trial of different cases registered against an accused. There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure which enables the court to postpone the examination of the accused under Section 313 CrPC till the completion of the trial in other cases. Merely because certain other charge-sheets have been filed against the same accused for similar offences cannot be a ground to postpone the examination of the accused under Section 313 CrPC. The apprehension of the accused-respondent that if his statement is recorded under Section 313 CrPC he would be required to divulge his defence and in that event he would be prejudiced in the trial of other cases filed against him is without any basis and foundation. It may be taken note of that as many as 25 witnesses have already been examined and the witnesses have already been cross-examined by the advocate for the accused. It is reasonable to infer that during the course of his cross-examination the accused-respondent must have disclosed his defence. The charges in other cases against the accused may be under the same provisions of the Penal Code and may also be similar, but documentary or oral evidence may be different which ultimately has to be appreciated and evaluated by the court separately in each case. It can be taken judicial note of and kept in mind that completion of trial in other ten charge-sheets may take some more time. The High Court has materially erred in coming to the conclusion that under the provisions of Section 242 CrPC recording of statement of the accused-respondent under Section 313 could be deferred till the trial in other cases involving similar transactions against the accused is completed. (Paras 7 and 8)

Accordingly, the judgment and order of the Single Judge of the High Court is set aside and those of the courts below are restored. The trial court may now proceed in accordance with law. (Para 9). State of Karnataka v. Annegowda, (2006) 5 SCC 716: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 59: AIR 2006 SC 2641: (2006) 5 All LJ 403.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-2006]

[2948] — Ss. 242 and 244 — Murder trial — Investigating officer must be present at the time of the trial — If he fails to be present, Sessions Judge must issue summons

It was the duty of the Sessions Judge to issue summons to the investigating officer if he failed to remain present at the time of trial of the case. The presence of investigating officer at the time of trial is must. It is his duty to keep the witnesses present. If there is failure on the part of any witness to remain present, it is the duty of the court to take appropriate action including issuance of bailable/non-bailable warrants, as the case may be. It should be well understood that the prosecution cannot be frustrated by such methods and victims of the crime cannot be left in a lurch. In a murder trial it is sordid and repulsive matter that without informing the police station officer-in-charge, the matters are proceeded with by the court and by the APP and tried to be disposed of as if the prosecution has not led any evidence. (Para 9). Shailendra Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 655: 2002 SCC (Cri) 230: AIR 2002 SC 270: 2002 Cri LJ 568: (2002) 1 CHN (Supp) 104.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, B.N. Agrawal and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-2001]

[2949] — Ss. 242 and 244 — Not necessary for prosecution to produce all the witnesses who had joined the chase after the accused had attacked the victim. Shyam Behari v. State of U.P., (1976) 2 SCC 206: 1976 SCC (Cri) 261: AIR 1976 SC 400: 1976 Cri LJ 342.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-9-1975]

[2950] — S. 242(3) — Non-examination of a witness who was also injured in the occurrence, held, would not be fatal to the prosecution case if the evidence of other eyewitnesses is credible enough to found the case — It is not necessary to multiply witnesses to prove the case. State of U.P. v. Hakim Singh, (1980) 3 SCC 55: 1980 SCC (Cri) 534: AIR 1980 SC 184: 1980 ALJ 16.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-1979]

— S. 243 See also S. 251-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1118 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 243 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250
See also Ss. 231, 233, 242 and 243
See also Ss. 231, 242 and 243
See also Ss. 231, 242, 243, 244 and 247
See also Ss. 231, 242, 243, 246 and 326
See also Ss. 235, 231 & 233 and 248, 242 & 243
See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300
See also Ss. 303, 304, 233 and 243
See also Ss. 311, 233, 243 and 315
See also Ss. 313, 242 and 243
See also Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283
See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243
See also Ss. 391 and 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 & 247
See also Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247
See also Ss. 482, 190(1), 204, 233 & 243
See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

[2951] — S. 243 — "Fair trial" — Meaning and scope of — Held, it includes fair and proper opportunities allowed by law to prove innocence of accused — Adducing evidence in support of the defence is a valuable right — Denial of that right means denial of fair trial — "fair trial" — Constitution of India — Art. 21 (Para 12). Kalyani Baskar v. M.S. Sampoornam, (2007) 2 SCC 258: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 577: (2007) 135 Comp Cas 197: (2007) 50 AIC 381 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2006]

[2952] — S. 243(1) [as amended for S. 22 of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988] — Defence witnesses — Number of witnesses to be examined — Requirement to file list of witnesses before Special Judge — Object of, is to ensure speedy trial of cases — Accused has no right to examine any number of witnesses — Court has power to peruse the list and if it considers that some unnecessary persons have been included in the list then it is the duty of the court to shortlist such persons — If court considers that the list is intended to delay the proceedings, then it can reject even the entire list — Accused-appellant submitting a list of 267 persons for the defence — Trial court shortlisting the same on ground of delay and High Court only marginally increasing the number — Held, Supreme Court's interference not called for — After examining the witnesses as permitted by orders of the courts, accused can seek trial court's permission to examine some more witnesses in the interest of justice, if he considers such a course necessary — Trial court can either grant such permission or can exercise powers under S. 311 CrPC in respect of such witnesses — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 22(a) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 7-A

The appellant and three persons were arraigned before the Special Court for facing a charge for offence under Section 13(1)(c) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 read with Section 109 IPC. Section 5(1) of the PC Act requires the Special Judge to follow the procedure prescribed by the court for trial of warrant cases by Magistrates. Chapter XIX of the Code contains the provisions for such trial and Section 243 falls within the said chapter. The prosecution examined a number of witnesses by summoning 41 persons. When the case reached the stage envisaged in Section 243(1) CrPC the appellant submitted a list of 267 witness for defence. The Special Judge made a scrutiny of the list and dissected the names into four divisions. The first division consisted of names shown as Nos. 1 to 8. The second division consisted of names shown as Nos. 9 to 117 in the list. The third division consisted of names figuring in the list as Nos. 118 to 177. The fourth division consisted of names of 178 to 267 witnesses. The Special Judge permitted persons shown as Nos. 4 and 8 in the first division to be examined as he found them alone in the said division as necessary witnesses and the others were found unnecessary for the purpose of defence plea. As regards the second division, the court felt that instead of examining the huge number of witnesses for speaking about the masonry works, wood-works, painting works etc., examination of one or two engineers would be sufficient as that would save time also. About the third division the Special Judge observed that since all of them were cited only to speak about the "agriculture and business income" of the accused the appellant could advisedly confine to ten witnesses in that division. Regarding the last division the Special Judge opined that a huge list of witnesses was unnecessary in view of Section 134 of Evidence but he allowed 10 witnesses for examination. When the appellant approached the High Court, a Single Judge of the High Court felt that from the first division mentioned above the appellant can examine witnesses shown as Nos. 6 and 7 also and from the remaining divisions the appellant can choose ten more persons. Disposing of the present appeal,

Held :

The position of an accused who is involved in a trial under the PC Act is more cumbered than an accused in other cases due to legislative curbs. One of them is envisaged in Section 22 of the PC Act which amended sub-section (1) of Section 243 CrPC. Unlike an accused in other cases, the accused under the PC Act need be called upon to enter on his defence only after the trial Judge has occasion to peruse the names of the witnesses as well as the purpose of examination of each one of them, and also the nature of the documents which he proposed to adduce as his evidence. The legislative intent for the aforesaid change in the procedure is mainly for achieving expeditiousness of the trial. It is true that the concept of speedy trial must apply to all trials, but in the trials for offences relating to corruption the pace must be accelerated with greater momentum due to a variety of reasons. Parliament expressed grave concern over the rampant ever-growing corruption among public servants which has been a major cause for the demoralisation of the society. When corrupt public servants are booked they try to take advantage of the delay-proned procedural trammels of our legal system by keeping the penal consequences at bay for a considerable time. It was this reality which impelled Parliament to chalk out measures to curb procrastinating procedural clues. Section 22 of the PC Act is one of the measures evolved to curtail the delay in corruption cases. So the construction of Section 243(1) CrPC as telescoped by Section 22 of the PC Act must be consistent with the aforesaid legislative intent. (Paras 13 and 16)

The purpose of furnishing a list of witnesses and documents to the court before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence is to afford an occasion to the court to peruse the list. On such perusal, if the court feels that examination of at least some of the persons mentioned in the list is quite unnecessary to prove the defence plea and the time which would be needed for completing the examination of such witnesses would only result in procrastination, it is the duty of the court to shortlist such witnesses. We may also add that if the court feels that the list is intended only to delay the proceedings, the court is well within its powers to disallow even the whole of it. (Para 17)

In the present case it was the ground of delay which the Special Judge countenanced as the ground for pruning down the massive list of witnesses presented by the appellant. No doubt the time which would consume for completely examining all the 267 witnesses on the defence side would be unimaginably long if a court is compelled by law to exhaust such a whopping list in its full swing. The criminal trial would only limp badly and procrastination would be the inevitable consequence. Normally no court would mind if the list contains only a handful of names because the court would not then bother much about the delay factor. But when the list contains such a crowd of names of witnesses the court will certainly make a serious exercise to ascertain whether examination of all those witnesses is necessary in the interest of justice even at the risk of such procrastination. The High Court as per the impugned order has further enlarged the number of witnesses to be examined on the defence side. As it is, the appellant cannot complain now that he did not get the opportunity to adduce his evidence. At any rate, it is not necessary for the Supreme Court to interfere with the impugned orders as the pruning exercise undertaken by the trial court and the High Court was within the limits permitted by law. (Paras 10 and 19)

Nevertheless, after the appellant completes his evidence in accordance with the permission now granted as per the impugned orders, it is open to the appellant to convince the trial court that some more persons need to be examined in the interest of justice, if the appellant then thinks that such a course is necessary. The trial court will then decide whether it is essential for a just decision of the case to examine more witnesses on the defence side. If the Court is so satisfied, the Special Judge can permit the appellant to examine such additional witnesses the examination of whom he considers essential for a just decision of the case or he can exercise the powers envisaged in Section 311 CrPC in respect of such witnesses. At present it is not possible to oversee the situation as to how the trial court could then reach such a satisfaction. Hence, it is left to the trial court to do the needful at the appropriate stage. (Para 20). Arivazhagan v. State, (2000) 3 SCC 328: 2000 SCC (Cri) 638: AIR 2000 SC 1198: 2000 Cri LJ 1714.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2000]

Ronald Wood Mathams v. State of W.B., AIR 1954 SC 455: (1955) 1 SCR 216: 1954 Cri LJ 1161, distinguished [2953] — S. 243(2) — Right to fair trial — Accused has a right to defend himself as a part of his human as also fundamental right as enshrined under Art. 21 of the Constitution of India — Right to defend oneself and for that purpose to adduce evidence is recognised by Parliament in terms of S. 243(2) CrPC — Constitution of India — Art. 21 (Para 8). T. Nagappa v. Y.R. Muralidhar, (2008) 5 SCC 633: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 677: AIR 2008 SC 2010: (2008) 3 KLT 158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2008]

[2954] — S. 243(2) — Appellant filed application under S. 243 CrPC wrongly mentioned as S. 293 CrPC — Effect — Held, it is now a well-settled principle of law that non-mentioning or wrong mentioning of provision of law would not be of any relevance, if the court had the requisite jurisdiction to pass an order (Para 13). T. Nagappa v. Y.R. Muralidhar, (2008) 5 SCC 633: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 677: AIR 2008 SC 2010: (2008) 3 KLT 158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2008]

[2955] — S. 243(2) — Power of Magistrate under — Issuance of process at the instance of accused, scope of — Discussed — What should be the nature of evidence is not a matter which should be left only to the discretion of the court — It is the accused who knows how to prove his defence — Court being the master of the proceedings must determine as to whether the application filed by the accused in terms of S. 243(2) is bona fide or not or whether thereby he intends to bring on record a relevant material — But ordinarily an accused should be allowed to approach the court for obtaining its assistance with regard to summoning of witnesses, etc. — If permitted to do so, steps therefor, however, must be taken within a limited time as the accused should not be allowed to unnecessarily protract the trial or summon witnesses whose evidence would not at be all relevant — Rejection of bona fide application of appellant under S. 243(2) for issuing process to substantiate his defence in respect of the cheque, held, improper — S. 20 of the NI Act confers only a prima facie right upon the holder of the negotiable instrument and the same being subject to the right of the accused to defend his case — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 20 (Paras 9 and 10). T. Nagappa v. Y.R. Muralidhar, (2008) 5 SCC 633: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 677: AIR 2008 SC 2010: (2008) 3 KLT 158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2008]

Kalyani Baskar v. M.S. Sampoornam, (2007) 2 SCC 258: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 577, followed

[2956] — S. 243(2) — Presumption in favour of holder of cheque, extent of, discussed — A complaint was filed by respondent against appellant under S. 138 of the NI Act — Appellant filed an application under S. 243 CrPC, wrongly mentioned as S. 293 CrPC, for referring the cheque in question for examination by the Director of Forensic Science Laboratory for determining the age of his signature, contending that the respondent had obtained a signed cheque from him in the year 1999 as a security for a hand loan of Rs 50,000 which had been paid back, but instead of returning the cheque, the same had been misused by entering a huge amount, which he did not owe to the appellant — Magistrate dismissed the said application, a revision application filed thereagainst had also been dismissed by the High Court — Held, regardless of the presumption that can be raised under S. 118(a) or S. 139 of the NI Act, opportunity of rebuttal must be granted to the accused for adducing evidence — Law places the burden on the accused, he must be given an opportunity to discharge it — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 118(a), 138 and 139 (Para 7). T. Nagappa v. Y.R. Muralidhar, (2008) 5 SCC 633: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 677: AIR 2008 SC 2010: (2008) 3 KLT 158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2008]

[2957] — S. 243(2) — Sending of document for expert opinion — Cheque bouncing and proceedings initiated under S. 138 of NI Act, 1881 — Accused (appellant) denying execution of disputed documents (exhibits) — Whether court obliged to permit accused to take all defences to establish a document as not genuine — Appellant praying for sending exhibits for examination by handwriting expert — Trial court rejecting appellant's plea in view of possibility of variance because of time gap between execution of two signatures — Sustainability — Held, right of accused to lead evidence in his defence is not absolute —

Such right has to be used only for furthering the cause of justice but not subverting it — Accused cannot take recourse to such right for purpose of delaying proceedings — On facts, accused filing successive applications for the same purpose — Held, it shows intention of accused to delay disposal of the matter — However, in view of peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, opportunity to examine expert at own cost of appellant granted — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 73 and 45 (Paras 11, 12, 14 and 15). G. Someshwar Rao v. Samineni Nageshwar Rao, (2009) 14 SCC 677.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2009]

[2958] — S. 243(2) — Power of Magistrate under — Scope of — Sending of document for expert opinion — Dishonoured cheque an offence under S. 138, NI Act — Prayer by accused to send that cheque for opinion of handwriting expert to ascertain genuineness of signature on it — Rejection of — Propriety of — Held, was improper — Magistrate should have granted such a request unless he considered that the object of the accused was vexation or delaying the criminal proceedings — Accused was entitled to rebut the case of complainant — Cheque on which complainant relied upon for initiating criminal proceedings against the accused furnished good material for rebutting that case — By declining to send the said document for examination and opinion of handwriting expert, the Magistrate deprived the accused of an opportunity of rebutting it — Accused could not be convicted without an opportunity being given to her to present her evidence — Denial of the said opportunity would lead to an unfair trial — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 45

The present appeal involved a question with regard to the scope of the powers of the Magistrate under Section 243 CrPC.

A complaint was filed against the appellant and her husband for the offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. In the complaint it was alleged that the appellant along with her husband jointly signed and issued a cheque for discharging their liability, but the said cheque got dishonoured due to "insufficient funds" in the account. The accused appeared before the Magistrate and filed an application under Section 245 CrPC raising inter alia preliminary objections that: (1) the accused had not signed the cheque nor issued it to the complainant, (2) the cheque in question was drawn from the individual account of the accused and therefore, as alleged by the complainant, the appellant and her husband could not have jointly signed and issued the cheque; (3) the signature on the cheque may be sent for expert opinion to ascertain bona fides of the same; and (4) neither the appellant nor her husband owe any debt to the complainant.

The Magistrate dismissed the said application on the ground that the genuineness of the signature could be questioned only at the time of trial of the complaint. During the trial, the appellant preferred an application under Section 243 CrPC, requesting the Magistrate to send the cheque in question for expert opinion to ascertain the correctness and genuineness of the appellant's signature appearing thereon. The Magistrate dismissed the said application on the ground that it was not mandatory that every disputed document or signature must be sent to an expert for opinion, that the original document filed in the court cannot be sent out for any reason and that every document filed before the court should be safe till the disposal of the litigation. The challenge made to the said order was rejected by the High Court. Hence, the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Section 243(2) CrPC is clear that a Magistrate holding an inquiry under CrPC in respect of an offence triable by him does not exceed his powers under Section 243(2) if, in the interest of justice, he directs to send the document for enabling the same to be compared by a handwriting expert because even in adopting this course, the purpose is to enable the Magistrate to compare the disputed signature or writing with the admitted writing or signature of the accused and to reach to his own conclusion with the assistance of the expert. (Para 12)

The appellant in this case requested for sending the cheque in question for the opinion of the handwriting expert after the respondent had closed her evidence. The Magistrate should have granted such a request unless he thinks that the object of the appellant is vexation or delaying the criminal proceedings. The appellant is entitled to rebut the case of the respondent and if the document viz. the cheque on which the respondent has relied upon for initiating criminal proceedings against the appellant would furnish good material for rebutting that case, the Magistrate having declined to send the document for the examination and opinion of the handwriting expert has deprived the appellant of an opportunity of rebutting it. The appellant cannot be convicted without an opportunity being given to her to present her evidence and if it is denied to her, there is no fair trial. "Fair trial" includes fair and proper opportunities allowed by law to prove her innocence. Adducing evidence in support of the defence is a valuable right and denial of that right means denial of fair trial. It is essential that rules of procedure designed to ensure justice should be scrupulously followed, and the courts should be jealous in seeing that there is no breach of them. The view of the High Court that the petitioner has filed application under Section 243 CrPC without naming any person as witness or anything to be summoned, which are to be sent for handwriting expert for examination, could not be appreciated. (Para 12). Kalyani Baskar v. M.S. Sampoornam, (2007) 2 SCC 258: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 577: (2007) 135 Comp Cas 197: (2007) 50 AIC 381 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2006]

Followed in T. Nagappa v. Y.R. Muralidhar, (2008) 5 SCC 633*

— S. 244 See also S. 252, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1119 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 244 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 231, 234, 242, 244 and 293

See also Ss. 231, 242, 243, 244 and 247

See also Ss. 231, 242 and 244

See also Ss. 231, 242, 244, 309 and 437 & 439

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 242 and 244

See also Ss. 246(6) and 244

See also Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283

See also Ss. 391 and 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 & 247

See also Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

See also Ss. 482 and 244 & 245

[2959] — Ss. 244 to 247 — Nature of safeguard provided in procedure under — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 252 to 258

When cognizance is taken on a private complaint, that is, otherwise than on a police report, the Special Judge has to try the case according to the procedure prescribed for trial of warrant cases instituted otherwise than on police report by a Magistrate. The procedure in this regard under Ss. 252 to 258, CrPC provides more adequate safeguard than the investigation by police officer of designated rank and therefore, search for fresh or additional safeguard is irrelevant. A.R. Antulay v. Ramdas Sriniwas Nayak, (1984) 2 SCC 500: 1984 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 1984 SC 718: 1984 Cri LJ 647: 1984 Bom LR 228.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: D.A. Desai, R.S. Pathak, O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-1984]

— S. 245 See also S. 253, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1120 in Vol. 2

— S. 245 See Ss. 11(1) proviso, 4(1) & (2), 3(4)(a), 26 and 245

See also Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 197, 220, 221, 227, 239 and 245

See also Ss. 197 and 245

See also Ss. 200, 203, 204 and 245

See also Ss. 202 and 245

See also Ss. 227, 228, 239, 240 and 245

See also Ss. 227 and 239, above,

See also Ss. 227, 239 & 245 and 228 & 240

See also Ss. 227, 239, 245 and 482

See also Ss. 227 and 245

See also Ss. 239, 227, 245 and 482

See also Ss. 239, 240, 227 and 245

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 244 to 247

See also Ss. 319, 245 and 398

See also Ss. 482, 190, 203, 211, 227, 239 and 245

See also Ss. 482 and 202, 203 & 245

See also Ss. 482, 203, 227 and 245

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

See also Ss. 482 and 227, 239 & 245

See also Ss. 482 and 239, 240, 245

See also Ss. 482 and 244 & 245

See also Ss. 482, 245, 397 and 399

[2960] — Ss. 245, 227 and 239 — Compared with Ss. 227 and 239

Per Ranganath Misra, J. (Bhagwati, C.J., concurring)

Sections 227 and 239 provide for discharge being ordered before the recording of evidence and the consideration as to whether charge has to be framed or not is required to be made on the basis of the record of the case, including documents and oral hearing of the accused and the prosecution or the police report, the documents sent along with it and examination of the accused and after affording an opportunity to the two parties to be heard. The stage for discharge under S. 245, on the other hand, is reached only after the evidence referred to in S. 244 has been taken. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256: AIR 1986 SC 2045: 1986 Cri LJ 1922.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and Ranganath Misra[2], J. [Date of decision: 17-4-1986]

[2961] — Ss. 245, 258 and 300(1) & (5) — Summons case — Stopping of proceedings and its subsequent reopening — Reasons for — Necessary requirement of — Effect of the order passed under S. 258 whether is either acquittal or discharge — Held, reasons have to be assigned for reopening the case against accused — Further held, since appellant was not arrested in the present case, she cannot claim the benefit of discharge as no release order was passed — As such proceedings could be revived — But revival by an unreasoned order was bad — Hence matter remitted for fresh consideration — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 447, 341, 323 and 427

A first information report was lodged for commission of offences punishable under Sections 447, 341, 323 and 427 IPC. On filing of the charge-sheet cognizance of offences was taken in 2002. Processes were issued against the appellant-accused. The same having not been served, non-bailable warrant was issued. In 2004 the Magistrate, in view of non-service of non-bailable warrant passed an order under Section 258 CrPC that further proceedings against the appellant be stopped.

In 2006, a requisition was filed praying for issuance of non-bailable warrant of arrest to the accused upon reopening the case. On the basis of the said purported requisition, the case was reopened and a non-bailable warrant of arrest was issued against the appellant.

The appellant filed an application under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court which was dismissed.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

An order of discharge can be passed in terms of Section 245 CrPC. For passing an order under the aforesaid provision, reasons are required to be recorded. It was obligatory on the part of the Magistrate to apply his mind with regard thereto. (Para 14)

In this case, no order for release of the accused was passed. No order of releasing the accused was necessary to be passed as the appellant was not before the court. She had not even been arrested. Non-bailable warrant of arrest issued against her had not been executed. The benefit of effect of discharge could have been claimed by the appellant had she been directed to be released, the effect of discharge being correlated with release. If she had not been released, the question of her obtaining the benefit of the effect of discharge does not arise. (Paras 13 and 14)

Although the High Court was correct that the Magistrate in a situation of this nature could revive the proceedings, but, the Magistrate committed an error in not recording the reasons therefor. The Magistrate is directed to pass an appropriate order upon consideration of the requisition filed by the police authorities afresh. (Paras 14 and 15). Renuka v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 14 SCC 345: (2009) 76 AIC 147 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 2245.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-2-2009]

Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82, relied on

[2962] — Ss. 245, 227, 397 and 482 — Discharge — Private complaint — Discharge of 3 out of 4 accused persons perusing same evidence against all of them — Propriety of — Trial court discharging all the accused persons (Respondents 1-4) against whom a complaint under Ss. 506/452/323/34 r/w S. 120-B IPC was filed by the petitioner's husband — Sessions Court dismissing petitioner's revision petition against Respondents 1-3, but allowing it only as against Respondent 4 — High Court upholding order passed by the courts below — Under the circumstances, when there was no justification to proceed against Respondents 1-3, held, courts below were justified in discharging them — Matter, held, was not liable to be interfered with under Art. 136 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 506/452/323/34 r/w S. 120-B

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has considered both oral and documentary evidence. It is no doubt true that referring to the statements of the complainant and his wife, the learned Additional Sessions Judge has said that their evidence is positive. But, on scrutiny and after examination of evidence, both oral and documentary, he did not find any justification to proceed with the criminal case against Respondents 1-3. On perusal of the impugned order, it appears that the complainant was bearing some ill will against one of the respondents. It has also been pointed out that the names of Respondents 1-3 have not been anywhere mentioned by the complainant. Further, neither the medical examination has been got done nor the photographs of the alleged breaking of the door have been placed on the record. Under the circumstances, Additional Sessions Judge rightly dismissed the revision petition against Respondents 1-3 after considering both oral and documentary evidence. (Para 4). Surjit Kaur v. D.S. Kapoor, (2001) 9 SCC 468.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

[2963] — Ss. 245, 239 and 227 — Discharge — On facts not justified — Former Chief Minister, Minister and certain officers of State Government and of State Electricity Board arraigned under Ss. 120-B and 409 IPC and S. 13(2), Prevention of Corruption Act for entering into a conspiracy to import coal for State Electricity Board for securing huge pecuniary gains for themselves and thereby causing loss of 6.5 crore rupees to the State exchequer — Tenders invited from foreign suppliers but after opening, the standards of the requisite coal relaxed and prices permitted to be enhanced — Government Secretary raising strong objections against the proposal to import coal at so high prices but the Chief Minister granting approval to the proposal — Trial court discharging the Chief Minister and the Minister on the ground that they could not notice the Secretary's objections as the pages containing the said objections had been mysteriously removed from the file before, and were restored therein after the Minister's and Chief Minister's approval — However, against the remaining accused persons, the trial court framing the charge of criminal conspiracy to misappropriate government funds — High Court upholding the decision — Meanwhile the accused Minister dying — However, Supreme Court finding that a GO required the State undertakings to refer to the Chief Minister for scrutiny and prior approval of tenders involving more than one crore rupees — Moreover, material in the said file showing that the Chief Minister was persuaded by the then Union Minister for Coal as well as by the Prime Minister not to import coal as the stock position was comfortable and even further supply was available locally — Documents in the file further showing that on the insistence of the Chief Minister, the Central Government permitted the import subject to the condition that the import would be routed through the Central Government but the Chief Minister did not follow that condition — Moreover, the said file found to contain letters from State Government Secretary and Secretary Ministry of Coal addressed to State Electricity Board, warning against import of poor quality coal — The file contained recommendations from Joint Secretary and Secretary to State Government for rejecting the tenders — In the presence of such materials in the file, and in view of the charge of criminal conspiracy framed by the trial court against the other accused persons, discharge of the Chief Minister at this premature stage, held, was improper — Until a satisfactory explanation was given, held, the Court could presume that the Chief Minister knew the resulting loss to the State and that reasonable grounds existed to believe that the Chief Minister was involved in the conspiracy as per S. 10, Evidence Act — However, such presumptions were rebuttable — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 10 and 114 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B and 409 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(2) (Paras 28 to 35). State of T.N. v. J. Jayalalitha, (2000) 5 SCC 440: 2000 SCC (Cri) 981: AIR 2000 SC 1589.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.C. Lahoti, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-2000]

[2964] — Ss. 245, 397, 399 and 482 — Prosecution under S. 276-B, Income Tax Act, 1961 for failure to credit TDS amount in time — AY 1989-1990 — Oldness of the case — If a ground for relief — Complaint filed more than 15 long years ago — Delay in trial attributable to accused assessee and not to failure, negligence or inaction on the part of the prosecuting agency — In such circumstances, plea for dropping the criminal trial on the ground of delay, rejected — IT Act, 1961, Ss. 276-B and 194-C

It is true that the matter related to remote past. Alleged non-payment of TDS pertained to 1989-1990. The complaint was filed in the beginning of 1992 and more than fifteen years have passed. But, it cannot be ignored that prosecution could not be over because applications were made by the appellants for their discharge under Section 245 CrPC initially in the trial court, then in the Sessions Court and then in the High Court. Even after dismissal of the petition by the High Court, the appellants approached the Supreme Court and obtained interim stay of further proceedings. It was because of the pendency of proceedings and grant of interim relief that the case remained pending. It, therefore, cannot be urged that there was failure, negligence or inaction on the part of the prosecuting agency in not proceeding with the matter. The ground of delay, therefore cannot help the appellants. (Para 52). Madhumilan Syntex Ltd. v. Union of India, (2007) 11 SCC 297: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 143: AIR 2007 SC 1481: (2007) 210 ELT 484: (2007) 290 ITR 199.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-2007]

[2965] — Ss. 245 and 473 — Discharge — Application filed by accused under S. 245 for being discharged on ground that cognisance of offence could not be taken under S. 13(3) of Official Secrets Act as complaint regarding offence under S. 5(4) r/w Ss. 5(2) and (3) of the Act was barred by limitation — Held, mere expiry of limitation period would not entitle the accused to be discharged as complainant has right to seek extension of time under S. 473 by explaining the cause of delay — On facts, held, delay properly explained

The mere fact that the complaint was filed 25 days after the expiry of the period of limitation, did not entitle the accused to seek his discharge under Section 245 CrPC because the complainant has, under law, a right to seek for extension of time under Section 473 CrPC. The complainant could satisfy the Magistrate on the facts and circumstances of the case that the delay was explainable which was occasioned on account of their bona fide belief to obtain the sanction for the purpose of filing the complaint. After noticing the averments made in the complaint and perusing the record particularly the order of the Government of India dated 21-4-1988, authorising the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Central Bureau of Investigation, New Delhi to lodge the complaint, it can be safely held that the complainant was entitled to extension of period of limitation under Section 473 CrPC. No useful purpose would be served by again directing the complainant to approach the trial Magistrate for the purposes of seeking extension of the period of limitation. The complainant is held to have explained the delay in filing the complaint which required extension. The complaint is, therefore, held to be within time and the petitioner is not entitled to be discharged on this ground. (Para 10). Rakesh Kumar Jain v. State, (2000) 7 SCC 656: 2001 SCC (Cri) 208: AIR 2000 SC 2754: 2000 Cri LJ 3973.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-2000]

Electrical Mfg. Co. Ltd. v. D.D. Bhargava, AIR 1968 SC 247: 1968 Cri LJ 236: (1968) 1 SCR 394, relied on

(1998) 75 Delhi LJ 741, reversed

— S. 245(1) See Ss. 228 & 227 and 239 & 240 and 245(1) & (2)

See also Ss. 482 & 399(3) and 245(1) & 246(1)

[2966] — S. 245(1) — Whether charges to be framed or not has to be considered only after taking all prosecution evidence — But non-observance of this procedure, on facts held, not fatal

Per Ranganath Misra, J. (Bhagwati, C.J., concurring)

The use of the words "if, upon taking of the evidence referred to in S. 244" in S. 245(1) is suggestive of the statutory intention that until "all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" is taken, the stage for judicial consideration as to whether charge is to be framed is not reached. Although in the present case several prosecution witnesses remained to be examined when the trial court framed the charges, but since the prosecution instead of objecting to the premature framing of charges had itself invited the court to take up the matter of framing charges, no complaint could be made by the prosecution in that regard. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256: AIR 1986 SC 2045: 1986 Cri LJ 1922.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and Ranganath Misra[2], J. [Date of decision: 17-4-1986]

[2967] — Ss. 245(1), 245(2) and 244(1) — Discharge of accused in a warrant case instituted otherwise than on police report — Discharge under S. 245(1) on ground that no case had been made out against accused and discharge under S. 245(2) on ground that charge is groundless — Significance of expression "(discharge) at any previous stage of the case" occurring in S. 245(2) — Held, "previous stage" under S. 245(2) is before prosecution evidence under S. 244(1) is completed, or at any stage prior to that, namely, the stages prescribed in Ss. 200 to 204 CrPC — Magistrate can therefore discharge accused after recording reasons, even at stage when accused appears in response to summons or warrant but no prosecution evidence has been led — Application for discharge is therefore maintainable at that stage

On the issue whether the court can discharge an accused before examining prosecution evidence under Section 244(1),

Held :

There is difference in Sections 245(1) and 245(2) CrPC. Under Section 245(1), the Magistrate has the advantage of the evidence led by the prosecution before him under Section 244 and he has to consider whether, the conviction of the accused would be warranted if the evidence remains unrebutted. If there is no discernible incriminating material in the evidence, then the Magistrate proceeds to discharge the accused under Section 245(1) CrPC. The situation under Section 245(2) CrPC is, however, different. There, the Magistrate has the power of discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case i.e. even before such evidence is led. However, for discharging an accused under Section 245(2) CrPC, the Magistrate has to come to a finding that the charge is groundless. There is no question of any consideration of evidence at that stage, because there is none. The Magistrate can take this decision before the accused appears or is brought before the court or the evidence is led under Section 244 CrPC. The previous stage would be before the evidence of the prosecution under Section 244(1) CrPC is completed or any stage prior to that. Previous stage could be from Sections 200 to 204 CrPC and till the completion of the evidence of prosecution under Section 244 CrPC. Thus, the Magistrate can discharge the accused even when the accused appears, in pursuance of the summons or a warrant and even before the evidence is led under Section 244 CrPC, and makes an application for discharge. (Paras 24 to 26, 29 and 31)

The Magistrate has the power to discharge the accused under Section 245(2) CrPC at any previous stage i.e. before the evidence is recorded under Section 244(1) CrPC. An accused can thus make an application for discharge at that stage. (Paras 35 to 37). Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 14 SCC 115: AIR 2009 SC 2282: 2009 Cri LJ 2824.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2009]

Cricket Assn. of Bengal v. State of W.B., (1971) 3 SCC 239: 1971 SCC (Cri) 446, relied on

Luis de Piedade Lobo v. Mahadev Vishwanath Parulekar, 1984 Cri LJ 513 (Bom); Manmohan Malhotra v. P.M. Abdul Salam, 1994 Cri LJ 1555 (Ker); Mohd. Sheriff Sahib v. Abdul Karim Sahib, AIR 1928 Mad 129 (1); Gopal Chauhan v. Satya, 1979 Cri LJ 446 (HP), approved

[2968] — Ss. 245(1), 227, 239 and 246 — Whether accused should be discharged or not — Test to be applied by trial court and appellate court — Held, on facts, prima facie case made out against accused-respondent and trial court erred in refusing to frame charges in respect of some of the alleged offences and discharging him in respect thereof — S. 245 compared with Ss. 227 and 239 — Constitution of India — Article 136

The respondent at the material time was the Chief Minister of Maharashtra. The appellant lodged a complaint against the respondent and others alleging commission of offences under Ss. 161, 165, 384 and 420 r/w 120-B, IPC as also Ss. 5(2) r/w 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. It was alleged that during the respondent's tenure as Chief Minister, he created seven trusts, one of them being the Indira Gandhi Pratibha Pratishthan shown to be a Government trust, and that he extended favours to those who made donations to the said trusts. The complaint was registered as a special case and transferred to the High Court of Bombay for trial under an order of the Supreme Court. A Single Judge of the High Court commenced the trial. As many as 43 draft charges were placed before the trial court on the basis of the evidence of 57 prosecution witnesses and a large volume of documents. The trial court framed 21 charges against the respondent and discharged him in respect of the remaining 22 charges relating to cheating, extortion and conspiracy. The appellant thereupon filed the present appeal by special leave against the order of the Single Judge of the High Court refusing to frame charges on 22 heads of charges.

The stage at which the magistrate is required to consider the question of framing of charge under S. 245(1) is a preliminary one and for the purposes of all the aforesaid three sections the test to be applied by the trial court should be that of its prima facie satisfaction regarding making out a case against the accused. The trial court has to sift and weigh the evidence for this limited purpose only. If it is satisfied that the prosecution evidence in support of the charges is such that a prima facie case is made out against the accused which unless rebutted, would make the accused liable to conviction, then the charges have to be framed under S. 246.

In order to decide whether the order of discharge should be sustained or set aside. Supreme Court will also have to consider whether on the material on record, a prima facie case had been made out on behalf of the prosecution.

Even if the accused makes a statement in appeal before Supreme Court about his willingness to face trial on those charges also in respect of which trial court had made a discharge order, Supreme Court in exercise of its appellate jurisdiction under Art. 136 would direct the trial Judge to frame charges only after vacating the trial court's order of discharge and setting aside its reasons therefor. Such direction would be on the footing that prosecution evidence in support of the charges was such that unless rebutted the accused would be liable to be convicted.

In the present case the trial court had prima facie taken a wrong view and it was a fit case where the charges in respect of which the trial court had made a discharge order should have also been framed. The trial court extracted at great length both the oral evidence as also the contents of documents but there was not much of analysis to justify rejection of the material. It adopted two different standards in the matter of weighing the same evidence, when it agreed to frame 21 charges which were interlinked and interconnected with the rest of the prosecution story with reference to which the 22 draft charges had been given. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256: AIR 1986 SC 2045: 1986 Cri LJ 1922.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and Ranganath Misra[2], J. [Date of decision: 17-4-1986]

[2969] — Ss. 245(1) & (2), 227, 239, 228, 240, 231 and 242 — Framing of charges — Appreciation of evidence — Scope for — Held, charges can be framed where two views are possible — But where only one view is possible, accused should not be put to trial considering his right to fair inquiry and trial under Art. 21 of Constitution (Para 54). State of M.P. v. Sheetla Sahai, (2009) 8 SCC 617: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 901.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2009]

State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820, relied on [2970] — Ss. 245(1) and 246 — Whether charges should be framed against named and unnamed Government officers alleged to be involved as co-conspirators — Facts that a long period elapsed and meanwhile some of the officers already retired from service, relevant for determining the question. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256: AIR 1986 SC 2045: 1986 Cri LJ 1922.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and Ranganath Misra[2], J. [Date of decision: 17-4-1986]

[2971] — S. 245(1) — Presumption under S. 4, PC Act, 1947 to be taken into account both when court considers whether charge should be framed or not as well as after charge is framed — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 4

Per Bhagwati, C.J. (Ranganath Misra, J. concurring)

When the court is called upon to consider whether a charge should be framed or not the question to which the court has to address itself under S. 245(1), CrPC is whether the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution is such that if unrebutted it would justify the conviction of the accused and the court has, therefore, to examine the evidence as it stands without rebuttal and come to a conclusion whether on the basis of such evidence the court would convict the accused and where the offence charged against the accused is under S. 161 or S. 165, IPC or clause (a) or (b) of S. 5(1), PC Act the court must necessarily apply the presumption under S. 4, PC Act while considering whether on the basis of the unrebutted evidence which is before it the court would convict the accused. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256: AIR 1986 SC 2045: 1986 Cri LJ 1922.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and Ranganath Misra[2], J. [Date of decision: 17-4-1986]

[2972] — S. 245(1) — Offence under Ss. 380, 465, 467, 468 and 471 IPC alleged — On facts held, trial court was justified in concluding that evidence adduced was insufficient to make out a prima facie case against appellant and on that basis discharging the appellant under S. 245(1) CrPC — High Court was not justified in setting aside the order of discharge. Tomy Jacob Kattikkaran v. Dr. Thomas Manjaly, (1997) 11 SCC 24: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1184: AIR 1998 SC 366.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-1997]

— S. 245(2) See Ss. 228 & 227 and 239 & 240 and 245(1) & (2)

See also Ss. 482 and 245(2)

[2973] — S. 245(2) — Dishonour of cheque — Offence by partnership firm — Vicarious liability of partners — Burden of proof — Requisite averments in complaint — Absence of — Discharge — Legality of — Held, S. 141, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 does not make all partners liable — Liability is fastened only on those who, at the time of the commission of the offence, were in charge of and were responsible to the firm for the conduct of its business — Primary responsibility is on complainant to make necessary averments in complaint and establish the fact that when the offence was committed the accused were in charge of and responsible to the firm for the conduct of its business — Obligation of accused to prove to the contrary arises thereafter only — There is no presumption that every partner knows about the transaction — On facts, except stating in the title of the complaint that appellant sisters were partners in firm, no averments against them made in the complaint — Partnership deed not filed with complaint or made part thereof but filed later — Held, partnership deed filed later is of no consequence for deciding the issue and hence in the absence of requisite averments, the order of Magistrate discharging the appellants was proper — Hence, restored — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138 and 141 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 101 and 103 (Paras 6 to 8). Monaben Ketanbhai Shah v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 7 SCC 15: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1857: AIR 2004 SC 4274: (2004) 3 KLT 428.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-2004]

K.P.G. Nair v. Jindal Menthol India Ltd., (2001) 10 SCC 218: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1038; Katta Sujatha v. Fertilizers & Chemicals Travancore Ltd., (2002) 7 SCC 655: 2003 SCC (Cri) 151, relied on

[Ed.: See also (1981) 2 SCC 335: 1981 SCC (Cri) 453: (1998) 5 SCC 343: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1315: (2000) 1 SCC 1: 2001 SCC (Cri) 174]

[2974] — S. 245(2) — Offence by company, under S. 276-B of IT Act — Maintainability of prosecution against company and nature of sentence to be imposed on the company and the individuals liable for the offence — Such prosecution, held, maintainable — However, the company (in this case, a firm) would be punished only with fine, while the mandatory sentence of imprisonment and fine would be imposed on the individuals — Harmonious construction applied and Law Commission's 47th Report also taken into consideration for the purpose of interpretation of S. 276-B — Income Tax Act, 1961, Ss. 276-B, 278-B and 279(1)— Law Commission Report — 47th Report, paras 8.1 and 8.3

The appellant, an Assistant CIT, filed a complaint in the Special Court for Economic Offences alleging the commission of an offence under Section 276-B read with Section 278-B of the IT Act by the respondent-firm and its three partners. The Special Court discharged all the accused persons, under Section 245(2), CrPC on the ground of denial of hearing to them by the sanctioning authority before granting sanction for prosecution under Section 279(1) of the IT Act. Without examining the ground stated by the Special Court, the High Court upheld the order of acquittal on a different ground, viz., that the prosecution of the respondent-firm under Section 276-B was not maintainable as even if found to be guilty the respondent-firm could not be awarded the mandatory substantive sentence. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

From a plain reading of Section 276-B of the IT Act, it is manifest that if an offence under the Act is committed by a company the persons who are liable to be proceeded against and punished are: (i) the company, (which includes a firm); (ii) every person, who at the time the offence was committed, was in charge of, and was responsible to the company for the conduct of the business; and (iii) any director (who in relation to a firm means a partner), manager, secretary or other officer of the company with whose consent or connivance or because of neglect attributable to whom, the offence has been committed. The words "as well as the company" appearing in the section also make it unmistakably clear that the company alone can be prosecuted and punished even if the persons mentioned in categories (ii) and (iii), who are for all intents and purposes vicariously liable for the offence, are not arraigned, for it is the company which is primarily guilty of the offence.

Even though in view of Section 278-B, a company can be prosecuted and punished for an offence committed under Section 276-B (besides other offences under the Act), the sentence of imprisonment which has got to be imposed thereunder cannot be imposed, it being a juristic person. This apparent anomalous situation can be resolved only by a proper interpretation of the section. Keeping in view the recommendations contained in paras 8.1 and 8.3 of 47th Report of Law Commission of India and principles of interpretation, the only harmonious construction that can be given to Section 276-B is that the mandatory sentence of imprisonment and fine is to be imposed where it can be imposed, namely on persons coming under categories (ii) and (iii) above, but where it cannot be imposed, namely on a company, fine will be the only punishment. Two other alternative interpretations could also be given: (i) that a company cannot be prosecuted (as held in the impugned judgment); or (ii) that a company may be prosecuted and convicted but not punished, but these interpretations will be dehors Section 278-B or wholly inconsistent with its plain language.

Therefore, it is not possible to sustain the impugned order of the High Court so far as it held that the prosecution of the respondent-firm was legally impermissible. Equally unsustainable is the order of the High Court dismissing the revision petition qua the other respondents in absence of any finding to indicate that it agreed with the reasoning of the trial court for their discharge. M.V. Javali v. Mahajan Borewell & Co., (1997) 8 SCC 72: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1239: AIR 1997 SC 3964.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and M. Jagannadha Rao, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-1997]

[2975] — S. 245(3) (as inserted by W.B. Act 24 of 1988) — Discharge of accused on ground of complainant's failure to adduce evidence within the period of 4 years — Complaint under Ss. 494/109 IPC by the wife against her husband and others — Delay caused by dilatory tactics adopted by the accused in raking up a vexatious enquiry under S. 340 CrPC — Evidence of complainant already recorded, which could be treated as evidence within the meaning of S. 245(3), though she was not subjected to cross-examination — Held, in the circumstances of the case, the accused cannot take advantage of their own wrong — It would not be in the interest of justice to discharge the accused — Matter restored on file of Magistrate — Directed to undertake the trial and conclude it expeditiously. Swarnalata Sarkar (Smt) v. State of W.B., (1996) 4 SCC 733: 1996 SCC (Cri) 855: AIR 1996 SC 2158.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-1996]

[2976] — S. 245(3) (as inserted by W.B. Amendment Act 24 of 1988) — Nature & scope — Discharge of accused in warrant case — Discharge not automatic on prosecution's failure to adduce all evidence within the prescribed period of four years — Magistrate, on being satisfied on the basis of evidence that discharge would not be in the interest of justice, can reject the application for discharge — Deposition of complainant already recorded, even in absence of cross-examination, can be treated as evidence for the purposes of sub-section (3) — Nature of offence relevant factor which can be taken into account by Magistrate — Private complaint filed in 1977 by respondent alleging inhuman torture by appellant police officials — High Court in 1980 directing that the matter be tried as warrant case — Since then case not proceeding beyond examination-in-chief of the complainant due to various proceedings taken by the accused in superior courts — Application filed by accused under sub-section (3) soon after its insertion by the Amending Act in 1988 — Magistrate as well as High Court on consideration of relevant evidence and circumstances satisfied that discharge would not be in the interest of justice — Held, no interference under Art. 136 called for

Section 245, which occurs in Chapter XIX-B relating to procedure for trial of warrant cases, recognises and incorporates the principle of speedy trial implicit in Art. 21 of the Constitution. The section applies only to private complaints.

The evidence of complainant already recorded is 'evidence' within the meaning of S. 245(3) of the Act, though the complainant has not yet been subjected to cross-examination. The nature of offence alleged is relevant and should be taken into consideration.

Discharge of the accused under sub-section (3) is not automatic once it is found that the prosecution has failed to adduce all the evidence referred to in S. 244 within four years of the appearance of the accused. If the Magistrate is satisfied that it will not be in the interest of justice to do so, he will not discharge the accused. But the said satisfaction has to be formed on the basis of evidence already recorded and for special reasons which, of course, he may have to record in his order. In this case, both the Magistrate and the High Court have referred to the nature of the crime, the several attempts made by the accused to protract the trial by various means and all other relevant circumstances in support of their satisfaction that discharging the accused would not be in the interest of the justice. On the basis of the facts relating to the progress of the case over the last several years, it is clear that the Magistrate has exercised his discretion and judgment properly in dismissing the application filed by the accused under S. 245(3). The High Court sitting in revision did not find any error in the approach and conclusion arrived at by the Magistrate. Therefore, no interference is called for in the matter by the Supreme Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution. Santosh De v. Archna Guha, (1994) 2 SCC 420: 1994 SCC (Cri) 546: (1994) 1 Crimes 548: (1994) 31 ACC 250.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Jeevan Reddy and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-1994]

— S. 246 See also Ss. 254, 255 and 256, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1120 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 246 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 231, 242, 243, 246 and 326

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 244 to 247

See also Ss. 245(1), 227, 239 and 246

See also Ss. 245(1) and 246

See also Ss. 482, 190, 228, 240 & 246

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

— S. 246(1) See Ss. 240(1), 246(1) and 211

See also Ss. 482 & 399(3) and 245(1) & 246(1)

[2977] — Ss. 246(1) and 401 — Magistrate's order framing charges under S. 254 CrPC, 1898 when not open to interference by High Court in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 439 — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 254, 438 and 439

The Magistrate on consideration of evidence formed an opinion that there was ground for presuming that the accused had committed an offence triable by him and accordingly framed a charge under S. 254, CrPC, 1898 against him in each of four matters. Four revisional applications filed under S. 435 of the Code by the accused against the Magistrate's order framing the charges were rejected by the Sessions Judge. However, in one of the revisional applications the Sessions Judge formed the opinion that the Magistrate's order was not legal and proper and made a report to the High Court under S. 438. The High Court in an elaborate judgment allowed the applications, accepted the opinion of the Sessions Judge and quashed the charge framed against the accused.

Allowing the State's special leave appeals Supreme Court,

Held :

Since the Magistrate had formed the opinion that there were grounds to presume that the accused had committed the offence and since it cannot be said that the prosecution was false, frivolous or vexatious or one which was by way of abuse of the process of law, the High Court should not have quashed the charge in exercise of the revisional and reference powers. State of U.P. v. Man Mohan, (1986) 2 SCC 587: 1986 SCC (Cri) 214: AIR 1986 SC 1652: 1986 Cri LJ 1245.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and G.L. Oza, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-4-1986]

Man Mohan v. State of U.P., 1975 Cri LJ 1241 (All), reversed

[2978] — Ss. 246(1), 245(2) and 244 — Rejection of discharge application filed under S. 245(2) — Thereafter, framing of charge straightaway by trial court under S. 246(1) without evidence being taken under S. 244, held, improper — Significance of expression "at any previous stage of the case" occurring in S. 246(1) — Held, right of cross-examining prosecution witness before framing of charge is a valuable right available to accused — He has to be afforded this opportunity so that he may argue that no charge should be framed against him and he should be discharged — Charge can therefore be framed only after accused has been afforded this opportunity — Further held, import of expression "at any previous stage of the case", in S. 245(2) and S. 246(1), is different

The Registrar General of Patna High Court filed an official complaint against appellant and some other officials of Indian School of Mines that they produced before the High Court a letter dated 9-6-1992 which was not genuine. The appellant at the relevant time was Director of the School. The allegation against the appellant was that he as a Director was "fully involved and in the know of all material concerned". The Chief Judicial Magistrate took cognizance of the offence. At one stage, the matter reached the Supreme Court in SLP. The Supreme Court dismissed the SLP permitting the petitioners to raise all their contentions before trial court including their plea for discharge. The Supreme Court also directed that petitioners would be released on bail in case they appeared before trial court and applied for bail. The appellant applied for discharge but his application was rejected and the trial court straightway proceeded to frame charge against him. The order of the trial court was upheld by the High Court.

Issue before the Supreme Court was whether trial court, after rejecting appellant's discharge application, could straightway proceed to frame charge against appellant, without first asking the prosecution to lead evidence and allowing appellant to cross-examine prosecution witnesses.

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

The language of Section 246 suggests that it is on the basis of evidence offered by the complainant at the stage of Section 244(1) CrPC that the charge is to be framed, if the Magistrate is of the opinion that there is any ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under Chapter XIX, CrPC (trial of warrant cases by Magistrate). Therefore, ordinarily, when the evidence is offered under Section 244 CrPC by the prosecution, the Magistrate has to consider the same, and if he is convinced, the Magistrate can frame the charge. (Para 39)

The word used in Section 246 CrPC is "evidence", so also, in Section 244 CrPC the word used is "evidence". Therefore, ordinarily, the scheme of Section 246 CrPC is that it is only on the basis of any evidence that the Magistrate has to decide as to whether there is a ground to presume that the accused has committed an offence triable under Chapter XIX CrPC. (Para 40)

While Section 245(2) CrPC speaks about the discharge of the accused on the ground that the charge is groundless, Section 246(1) operates in an entirely different sphere. An order under Section 245(2) CrPC results in discharge of the accused, whereas an order under Section 246 CrPC creates a situation for the accused to face a full-fledged trial. Therefore, the two sections would have to be interpreted in slightly different manner, keeping in mind the different spheres in which they operate. The words "or at any previous stage of the case" appearing in Section 246 CrPC would include Section 245 also, where the accused has not been discharged under Section 245 CrPC while the similar term in Section 246(2) can include the stage even before any evidence is recorded. It cannot, therefore, be held that the words "at any previous stage of the case" as appearing in Section 245 CrPC would have to be given the same meaning when those words appear in Section 246 CrPC. (Para 41)

The right of cross-examination is a very salutary right and the accused would have to be given an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses, who have been offered at the stage of Section 244(1) CrPC. The accused can show by way of cross-examination that there is no justifiable ground against him for facing the trial and for that purpose the prosecution would have to offer some evidence.

While interpreting Section 246(1), the prejudice likely to be caused to the accused in his losing an opportunity to show to the court that he is not liable to face the trial on account of there being no evidence against him, cannot be ignored. (Para 51)

Opportunity to the accused in the present case to cross-examine witnesses is lost as the trial court has straightaway proceeded to frame the charge. In that view, the order framing the charge has to be quashed. The matter will go back before the trial court where the prosecution may offer the witnesses under Section 244(1) CrPC and opportunity to cross-examine would be offered to the accused. It is only thereafter, that the trial court would proceed to decide as to whether the charge is to be framed or not. (Paras 53 and 55). Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 14 SCC 115: AIR 2009 SC 2282: 2009 Cri LJ 2824.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2009]

Sambhaji Nagu Koli v. State of Maharashtra, 1979 Cri LJ 390 (Bom); T.K. Appu Nair v. Earnest, AIR 1967 Mad 262; Malepati Srihari Rao, In re, AIR 1964 AP 226; P. Ugender Rao v. J. Sampoorna, 1990 Cri LJ 762 (AP), approved

Verendra Kumar v. Aashraya Makers, 1999 Cri LJ 4206 (AP), overruled

— S. 246(5) See Ss. 231(2) and 246(5), 162(1) proviso, Expln. and Ss. 161 & 172

[2979] — Ss. 246(6) and 244 — Scope — Supplementary list of witnesses — Power of Magistrate to entertain — Held, power of Magistrate should not be fettered either under S. 244 or S. 246(6) CrPC and full latitude should be given to the Magistrate to exercise discretion to entertain supplementary list of witnesses — However, while accepting supplementary list, Magistrate shall exercise his discretion judiciously for advancement of the cause of justice and not to give a handle to the complainant to harass the accused — Also, discretion conferred on Magistrate should only be used in appropriate cases for reasons to be recorded — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 323, 406 and 498-A — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, Ss. 3 and 4

The question was whether a supplementary list of witnesses could be furnished by the complainant and the Magistrate could summon those witnesses to be examined. The question was whatever witnesses who had been examined under Section 244 CrPC, whether the Magistrate could not entertain any further list of witnesses to be examined by the complainant to substantiate his allegation in the complaint. It is true that under Section 244 CrPC, if the charge is framed, then the prosecution has to examine the evidence produced by it in support of its case. After that the accused will have the right to cross-examine and the matter will proceed to be decided under Section 246 CrPC. But before the matter is decided and during the pendency of the trial could the Magistrate entertain any petition filed by the prosecution for examining additional evidence in support of its case. (Para 9)

The discretion of the Magistrate is nowhere fettered by any of the provisions contained in CrPC. In Section 244(1) CrPC, the expression used is, "the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the prosecution and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution". Similarly, in Section 246(6) CrPC, the expression used is, "the evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken". Therefore, the Magistrate has discretion, before he closes the trial, to summon the witnesses if it advances the cause of justice. However, there is a word of caution that the discretion which has been conferred on the Magistrate under Section 244(2) and Section 246(6) CrPC should only be used in appropriate cases for reasons to be recorded. The discretion should not be used fancifully and for a mala fide purpose to harass the accused. It is quite possible that sometimes when the complainant fails to substantiate the allegation, he may resort to dilatory tactics and thereby harass the accused by giving supplementary list to prolong the continuance of the case. This should be checked but in case it is found that in fact the application for summoning the additional witnesses is made for bona fide purpose and to substantiate the allegations made in the complaint, then the Magistrate may exercise such power in appropriate case. (Para 11)

The power of the Magistrate should not be fettered either under Section 244 or under Section 246(6) CrPC and full latitude should be given to the Magistrate to exercise the discretion to entertain a supplementary list of witnesses. But while accepting the supplementary list, the Magistrate shall exercise his discretion judiciously for the advancement of the cause of justice and not to give a handle to the complainant to harass the accused. (Para 19). Sayeeda Farhana Shamim v. State of Bihar, (2008) 8 SCC 218: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 449: AIR 2008 SC 2373: (2008) 2 KLT 1011.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.K. Mathur and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-5-2008]

Jamuna Rani v. S. Krishna Kumar, 1993 Cri LJ 32; Nawal Kishore Shukla v. State of U.P., 1992 Cri LJ 1554; S. Vivekanantham v. R. Viswanathan, 1977 Cri LJ 425; V. Ratna Shenoy v. S.A. Prabhu, AIR 1967 Ker 233; State of Bombay v. Janardhan, AIR 1960 Bom 513; K. Somasundaram v. Gopal, AIR 1958 Mad 341, approved

Hari Pada Banerjee v. Hem Kanta Sen, AIR 1969 Cal 421, overruled

— S. 247 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 231, 242, 243, 244 and 247

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 244 to 247

See also Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283

See also Ss. 386, 401 and 247

See also Ss. 391 and 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 & 247

See also Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247

See also Ss. 482, 225 to 247

— S. 248 See also Ss. 251-A & 258, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1118 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 248 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 229, 233, 235, 241 and 248

See also Ss. 232, 235, 248 and 255

See also Ss. 235, 231 & 233 and 248, 242 & 243

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 401, 397, 235, 248 and 255

[2980] — S. 248 — Raid by Excise and Customs party in the jewellery shop of the complainant and adjoining chaubara where two licensed gold-smiths were present — Raiding party receiving injuries by blunt weapons mostly in the head region, and one of the gold-smiths sustaining gun-shot wounds on the dorsal aspect of his right forearm — Complaint, held prima facie false as the complainant party appears to have resisted the raid and manhandled the raiding party before the raiding party themselves resorted to violence — In view of Section 108, Gold (Control) Act, 1968 complainant alleging offences under Sections 387, 452, 504, 342 and 148 read with Section 149, IPC cannot be pursued to its logical conclusion i.e. to that of conviction or acquittal — Gold (Control) Act, 1968, S. 108 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 76. Bhappa Singh v. Ram Pal Singh, 1981 Supp SCC 12: 1981 SCC (Cri) 602: AIR 1982 SC 779.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.D. Koshal, V. Balakrishna Eradi and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-2-1981]

— S. 248(2) See Ss. 235(2), 248(2) and 255(2)

See also Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 255(2) and 360

See also Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 325, 360 and 361

See also Ss. 235(2), 248(2) and 357

[2981] — Ss. 248(2) and 235(2) — Courts should personalize the sentence under, from a reformative angle

There is a great discretion vested in the Judge, especially when pluralistic factors enter his calculations. Even so, the Judge must exercise this discretionary power, drawing his inspiration from the humanitarian spirit of the law, and living down the traditional precedents which have winked at the personality of the crime-doer and been swept away by the features of the crime. What is dated has to be discarded. What is current has to be incorporated. Therefore innovation, in all conscience, is in the field of judicial discretion. Mohd. Giasuddin v. State of A.P., (1977) 3 SCC 287: 1977 SCC (Cri) 496: AIR 1977 SC 1926: 1977 Cri LJ 1557.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1977]

— S. 249 See also S. 259, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1123 in Vol. 2

— S. 249 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 256 and 249

See also Ss. 256, 249, 2(y) and Ch. XV

[2982] — Ss. 249, 256(1) and 482 — Dismissal of complaint — Accused acquitted for non-compliance — Held, magistrate has no jurisdiction to restore and revive the dismissed complaint on a subsequent application of the complainant

So far as the accused is concerned, dismissal of a complaint for non-appearance of the complainant or his discharge or acquittal on the same ground is a final order and in the absence of any specific provision in the Code, a magistrate cannot exercise any inherent jurisdiction. The magistrate cannot restore a complaint to his file by revoking his earlier order dismissing it for the non-appearance of the complainant and proceed with it when an application is made by the complainant to revive it. A second complaint is permissible in law if it could be brought within the limitations imposed by Supreme Court in Pramatha Nath Taluqdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar. Filling of a second complaint is not the same thing as reviving a dismissed complaint after recalling the earlier order of dismissal. The CrPC does not contain any provision enabling a magistrate to exercise an inherent jurisdiction which he otherwise does not have. A.S. Gauraya v. S.N. Thakur, (1986) 2 SCC 709: 1986 SCC (Cri) 249: AIR 1986 SC 1440: 1986 Cri LJ 1074.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V. Khalid and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-1986]

Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. Kali Singh, (1977) 1 SCC 57: 1977 SCC (Cri) 33, followed

Ram Prosad Maitra v. Emperor, AIR 1928 Cal 569: 48 CLJ 90: 29 Cri LJ 798, approved

B.D. Sethi v. V.P. Dewan, (1971) 7 DLT 162, overruled

[2983] — Ss. 249 and 482 — Complaint filed by respondent alleging cutting of fishing nets and taking away fish caught in those nets by a foreign trawler dismissed and accused discharged under S. 249 — On a second complaint on the same allegations, process issued against appellant by Judicial Magistrate — Appellant then approaching High Court under S. 482 — High Court holding that the second complaint not barred and that defendant-appellant required to establish his innocence by showing his absence at the time of occurrence — Neither appellant mentioned in the complaint, nor was he present at the time of occurrence in the trawler, nor was he captain of the trawler — Held, on facts, matter involved civil liability hence criminal proceedings quashed. Anees Noorani v. Jadav Dava Ghola, 1987 Supp SCC 70: 1987 SCC (Cri) 628.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-2-1987]

[2984] — S. 249 — Continuance of criminal proceedings under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, by complainant company?s successor — Permissibility — Cheques issued by appellants to BCCI bouncing — BCCI lodging complaint under S. 138 and the Magistrate taking cognizance thereof -Subsequently, BCCI wound up and succeeded by SBICIB — In such circumstances, SBICIB, held, fully entitled to pursue the said criminal proceedings — More so when there was an agreement between BCCI and SBICIB to that effect — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Para 5). Bombay Offshore Services Ltd. v. Shankar Narayan, (2000) 10 SCC 375.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, M. Srinivasan and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-1999]

— S. 250 See also S. 250, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1117 in Vol. 2

— S. 250 See Ss. 190 to 210, 225 to 235 and 238 to 250

See also Ss. 190, 193, 238 to 250

See also Ss. 482 and 250

[2985] — S. 250 — Compensation for accusation without reasonable cause — Succeeding Magistrate cannot continue with the proceeding initiated by his predecessor — Same Magistrate alone competent to initiate action and pass final orders

The pecuniary jurisdiction of the Magistrate is equivalent to his jurisdiction to impose fine on an accused. The Magistrate of the First Class can impose fine to the extent of Rs 2000 only and a Magistrate of lesser denomination can impose lesser fines as enjoined under the law. In this case the Chief Judicial Magistrate had acquitted the appellant. His jurisdiction to impose fine was only up to Rs 2000. Thus, the scope of enquiry under Section 250 CrPC is only an effort to award to the accused a bare sum of Rs 2000, if at all, after hearing the complainant. The enquiry in the nature being so small and narrow, the legislature perhaps thought that it should be in the nature of an addenda to the main enquiry or trial. Therefore, the same Magistrate alone can initiate action and pass final orders. Nandkumar Krishnarao Navgire v. Jananath Laxman Kushalkar, (1998) 2 SCC 355: 1998 SCC (Cri) 637.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Venkataswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-1997]

Rajaram Majhi v. Panchanan Ghosh, AIR 1929 Cal 762: 33 CWN 861; Emperor v. Mohd. Alan, AIR 1935 Sind 321 (sic); Ram Nath v. Bashir-Ud-Din, AIR 1953 Punj 213: 55 Punj LR 218, approved

[2986] — Ch. XX (Ss. 251 to 259) — Discharge from summons case — Held, not contemplated — Once plea of accused is recorded under S. 252, procedure contemplated under Ch. 20 has to be followed, which is to take the trial to its logical conclusion

Once a plea is recorded in a summons case it is not open to the accused person to seek a discharge. The case involving a summons case is covered by Chapter 20 CrPC which does not contemplate a stage of discharge like Section 239 which provides for a discharge in a warrant case. Therefore once the plea of the accused is recorded under Section 252 CrPC the procedure contemplated under Chapter 20 has to be followed which is to take the trial to its logical conclusion. The only remedy available to an aggrieved accused to challenge an order in an interlocutory stage is the extraordinary remedy under Section 482 CrPC and not by way of an application to recall the summons or to seek discharge, which is not contemplated in the trial of a summons case. (Paras 16 and 17). Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 13 SCC 324: 2005 SCC (Cri) 242: AIR 2004 SC 4711: 2004 Cri LJ 4609: (2005) 1 Mah LJ 626.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927, affirmed

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88, held to have been overruled

— S. 251 See also S. 242, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1116 in Vol. 2

— S. 251 See Ss. 240, 241, 251, 252

See also Ss. 262 (Ch. XXI), 251, 254(1)(Ch. XX), 319 and 2(g)

See also Ss. 317 and 273, 251 & 205

See also Ss. 482 and 251

[2987] — Ss. 251, 254 and 273 — Departure from, in Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — Nature and scheme of the provisions discussed in detail — Departure from and overriding of CrPC — Extent to which summary procedure may be adopted under Ss. 143 to 147: only "as far as possible" — Protection available to accused — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 143 to 147 [as inserted by Negotiable Instruments (Amendment and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 2002]

The provisions of the newly inserted Chapter XVII, on coming into force with effect from 1-4-1989, brought in a veritable deluge of cases in the criminal court system. Complaints under Section 138 of the Act came to be filed in such large numbers that it became impossible for the courts to handle them within a reasonable time and it also had a highly adverse effect on the courts' normal work in ordinary criminal matters. Therefore, the legislature took action by introducing further amendments in the Act by the Negotiable Instruments (Amendment and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 2002 which inserted in the Act Sections 143 to 147. These newly introduced sections laid down a special code for trial of offences under Chapter XVII of the Act and intended to do away with all the stages and processes in a regular criminal trial that normally cause inordinate delay in its conclusion and to make the trial procedure as expeditious as possible without in any way compromising on the right of the accused for a fair trial. Thus, Sections 143 to 147 were designed especially to lay down a much simplified procedure for the trial of dishonoured cheque cases with the sole object that the trial of those cases should follow a course even swifter than a summary trial. (Paras 15, 16, 25 and 29)

The provisions of Sections 143, 144, 145 and 147 expressly depart from and override the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the main body of adjective law for criminal trials. The provisions of Section 146 similarly depart from the principles of the Evidence Act. Section 143 makes it possible for the complaints under Section 138 of the Act to be tried in the summary manner, except, of course, for the relatively small number of cases where the Magistrate feels that the nature of the case is such that a sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding one year may have to be passed or that it is, for any other reason, undesirable to try the case summarily. (Para 20)

It is, however, significant that the procedure of summary trials is adopted under Section 143 subject to the qualification "as far as possible", thus, leaving sufficient flexibility so as not to affect the quick flow of the trial process. Even while following the procedure of summary trials, the non obstante clause and the expression "as far as possible" used in Section 143 coupled with the non obstante clause in Section 145 allow for the evidence of the complainant to be given on affidavit, that is, in the absence of the accused. This would have been impermissible (even in a summary trial under the Code of Criminal Procedure) in view of Sections 251 and 254 and especially Section 273 CrPC. The accused, however, is fully protected, as under sub-section (2) of Section 145 he has the absolute and unqualified right to have the complainant and any or all of his witnesses summoned for cross-examination. (Para 21). Mandvi Cooperative Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore, (2010) 3 SCC 83.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Tarun Chatterjee and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-1-2010]

[2988] — Ss. 251 and 205 — Where attendance of accused is dispensed with, Magistrate can record plea of the accused

Sections 251 and 205(1) make it clear that in appropriate cases the Magistrate can allow an accused to make even the first appearance through a counsel. The Magistrate is empowered to record the plea of the accused even when his counsel makes such plea on behalf of the accused in a case where the personal appearance of the accused is dispensed with. Bhaskar Industries Ltd. v. Bhiwani Denim & Apparels Ltd., (2001) 7 SCC 401: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1254: AIR 2001 SC 3625.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2001]

— S. 252 See Ss. 240, 241, 251, 252

— S. 253(2) See Ss. 354(3) and 253(2)

— S. 254(1)(Ch. XX) See Ss. 262 (Ch. XXI), 251, 254(1)(Ch. XX), 319 and 2(g)

— S. 255 See Ss. 232, 235, 248 and 255

See also Ss. 401, 397, 235, 248 and 255

— S. 255(2) See Ss. 235(2), 248(2) and 255(2)

See also Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 255(2) and 360

— S. 256 See also S. 247, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1117 in Vol. 2

[2989] — S. 256 — Complaint case for dishonour of cheque — Dismissal on the ground of default of complainant — Tenability — Complainant closing case without examining herself and without cross-examining defence witnesses — Accused had been examined under S. 311 CrPC — Personal attendance and cross-examination of defence witnesses by prosecution, held, were not absolutely necessary — Dismissal on those grounds, therefore, was improper — The case should have been disposed of on the merits of the matter — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138 and 143

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The complainant did not examine herself as a witness. She was sought to be summoned again for cross-examination. The said prayer had not yet been allowed. But, that would not mean that on that ground the court would exercise its discretionary jurisdiction under Section 256 CrPC at that stage or the defence would not examine his witnesses. When the prosecution has closed its case and the accused has been examined under Section 311 CrPC, the court was required to pass a judgment on merit of the matter. (Paras 14 and 15)

Before passing the impugned order of acquittal, the High Court did not choose to serve notice upon the appellant opining that no useful purpose would be served in keeping the appeal pending and appointed a legal aid counsel. Although, the manner in which the appeal had been disposed of by the High Court was not approved, it is not a fit case for exercise of jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution of India. (Paras 6 and 19). S. Anand v. Vasumathi Chandrasekar, (2008) 4 SCC 67: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 178: AIR 2008 SC 1296: 2008 Cri LJ 1943.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-2008]

[2990] — S. 256 — Death of complainant — Effect — Complaint filed under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act — Dismissal of complaints for non-prosecution — Challenge to, by brother of complainant — Whether such orders can be recalled — Having regard to the facts and circumstances, held, interests of justice required that the order of the Magistrate acquitting the accused for non-prosecution, as affirmed by the High Court, deserved to be recalled so that the complaints could be tried on merits — Further held, there is no hard-and-fast rule for recalling of such orders — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Paras 3 and 4). Aseem Shabanli Merchant v. Brij Mehra, (2005) 11 SCC 412.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-4-2005]

[2991] — Ss. 256, 249, 2(y) and Ch. XV — Complainant — Meaning of — Complaint by a company — Complainant would be the person who represents such company in the court — Different persons may represent such company at different times — Only Magistrate's permission necessary — Magistrate cannot insist that the person whose statement was taken on oath at the first instance alone can represent the company — Position under old Code same — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 247 and 259 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 11

The scheme of Chapter XV of the new Code makes it clear that complainant must be a corporeal person who is capable of making physical presence in the court. Its corollary is that even if a complaint is made in the name of an incorporeal person (like a company or corporation) it is necessary that a natural person represents such juristic person in the court and it is that natural person who is looked upon, for all practical purposes, to be the complainant in the case. In other words, when the complainant is a body corporate it is the de jure complainant, and it must necessarily associate a human being as de facto complainant to represent the former in court proceedings.

However, no magistrate shall insist that the particular person, whose statement was taken on oath at the first instance, alone can continue to represent the company till the end of the proceedings. There may be occasions when a different person can represent the company e.g. the particular person who represents the company at the first instance may either retire from the company's services or may otherwise cease to associate therewith or he would be transferred to a distant place. In such cases it would be practically difficult for the company to continue to make the same person represent the company in the court. In any such eventuality it is open to the de jure complainant company to seek permission of the court for sending any other person to represent the company in the court. At any rate, absence of the complainant envisaged in Section 249 or Section 256 of the new Code would include absence of the corporeal person representing the incorporeal complainant.

As the corresponding provisions in the old Code are the same for all practical purposes, the legal position discussed above is applicable to the complaint filed under the old Code as well. Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, (1998) 1 SCC 687: 1998 SCC (Cri) 475: AIR 1998 SC 596: (1998) 91 Comp Cas 361: 1998 Cri LJ 856: (1998) 1 KLT 179.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1997]

Associated Cement v. Keshav Nand, 1997 Cri LJ 3898 (J&K), reversed

[2992] — Ss. 256 and 200 — Offence under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act — One singular default in appearance on the part of complainant — Dismissal of complaint — Held, not proper — Cause shown by the complainant that he wrongly noted the date was not disbelieved and therefore it was a valid ground for restoration of the complaint — Further, even if the complainant failed to examine the witnesses on earlier dates, held, the same could not be a ground to dismiss his complaint for his absence on one single day — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138. Mohd. Azeem v. A. Venkatesh, (2002) 7 SCC 726.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2002]

[2993] — Ss. 256 and 249 — Non-appearance of complainant — Magistrate not justified in acquitting the accused unless presence of complainant on that date found necessary — Discretion to acquit the accused or proceed with the trial must be exercised judicially and fairly — On facts, held, Magistrate not justified in acquitting the accused particularly when the complainant and another witness had already been examined — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 247 and 259

The appellant-Company prosecuted the respondent in the Court of Judicial Magistrate (First Class), Jammu, alleging the offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, but the learned Magistrate acquitted the respondent on 24-8-1996 solely on the ground that the complainant was absent. The appellant-Company filed an appeal before the High Court of Jammu & Kashmir with leave but that appeal was dismissed. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Section 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 (Section 256 of new Code) affords some deterrence against dilatory tactics on the part of a complainant who set the law in motion through his complaint. An accused who is per force to attend the court on all posting days can be put to much harassment by a complainant if he does not turn up to the court on occasions when his presence is necessary. The section, therefore, affords protection to an accused against such tactics of the complainant. But that does not mean if the complainant is absent, the court has a duty to acquit the accused in invitum.

Reading Section 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 (Section 256 of new Code) in its entirety would reveal that two constraints are imposed on the court for exercising the power under the section. The first is, if the court thinks that in a situation it is proper to adjourn the hearing then the Magistrate shall not acquit the accused. The second is, when the Magistrate considers that personal attendance of the complainant is not necessary on that day the Magistrate has the power to dispense with his attendance and proceed with the case. When the court notices that the complainant is absent on a particular day the court must consider whether personal attendance of the complainant is essential on that day for the progress of the case and also whether the situation does not justify the case being adjourned to another date due to any other reason. If the situation does not justify the case being adjourned the court is free to dismiss the complaint and acquit the accused. But if the presence of the complainant on that day was quite unnecessary then resorting to the step of axing down the complaint may not be a proper exercise of the power envisaged in the section. The discretion must therefore be exercised judicially and fairly without impairing the cause of administration of criminal justice. Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, (1998) 1 SCC 687: 1998 SCC (Cri) 475: AIR 1998 SC 596: (1998) 91 Comp Cas 361: 1998 Cri LJ 856: (1998) 1 KLT 179.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1997]

Associated Cement v. Keshav Nand, 1997 Cri LJ 3898 (J&K), reversed

[2994] — Ss. 256 and 302 — Permission to continue prosecution after complainant's death — Right of legal heirs of deceased complainant — Held, they can file petition under S. 302 CrPC seeking the said permission — If any such permission is sought for by the said heirs, the same has to be considered in its perspective by the court dealing with the matter — CrPC, 1898, S. 495 (Para 7). Balasaheb K. Thackeray v. Venkat, (2006) 5 SCC 530: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 630: (2006) 102 Cut LT 323: (2006) 3 KLT 509.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-7-2006]

Ashwin Nanubhai Vyas v. State of Maharashtra, (1967) 1 SCR 807: AIR 1967 SC 983: 1967 Cri LJ 943; Jimmy Jahangir Madan v. Bolly Cariyappa Hindley, (2004) 12 SCC 509: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 317, followed

— S. 256(1) See also Ss. 249, 256(1) and 482

[2995] — S. 256(1) — Right to speedy trial — Is a fundamental right of the accused — Complainant cannot allow case to remain pending indefinitely — Constitution of India — Art. 21

There exists a distinction between a civil case and a criminal case. Speedy trial is a fundamental right of an accused. The orders passed by the competent court of law as also the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be construed having regard to the constitutional scheme and the legal principles in mind. (Para 16). S. Rama Krishna v. S. Rami Reddy, (2008) 5 SCC 535: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 645: AIR 2008 SC 2066: 2008 Cri LJ 2625.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2008]

[2996] — Ss. 256(1) and 378(1) — Ingredients of S. 256(1) — Acquittal of accused on non-appearance of complainant — Exercise of jurisdiction by Magistrate under S. 256(1) — Scope of — Conduct of the complainant significant — Interference of High Court under S. 378(1) in appeal against acquittal of accused recorded by Magistrate in exercise of discretion under S. 256(1) whether justified — Complaint filed against appellant for dishonour of cheque on 6-6-2001 — After death of complainant his heirs did not press their application for substitution — On 14 dates between 18-4-2005 to 23-1-2006 nobody represented the complainant — Accused kept appearing on most dates — Noticing respondent heirs' failure to attend court for a long time, Magistrate under S. 256 acquitted the appellant on 23-1-2006 — High Court in appeal under S. 378(1), despite finding that respondent heirs were not interested in getting the matter prosecuted, set aside the order of acquittal on ground that lis between the parties should be decided on merits and directed that respondents be given one more opportunity — Held, High Court in appeal against acquittal erred in interfering with the discretion exercised by Magistrate under S. 256(1)

The ingredients of Section 256(1) are: (i) summons must have been issued on a complaint; (ii) the Magistrate should be of the opinion that for some reasons, it is not proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other date; and (iii) the date on which the order under Section 256(1) can be passed is the day appointed for appearance of the accused or any day subsequent thereto, to which the hearing of the case has been adjourned. (Para 9)

Section 256(1) mandates the Magistrate to acquit the accused unless for some reason he thinks it proper to adjourn the hearing of the case. If an exceptional course is to be adopted, it must be spelt out. The discretion conferred upon the Magistrate, however, must be exercised with great care and caution. The conduct of the complainant for the said purpose is of immense significance. He cannot allow a case to remain pending for an indefinite period. (Para 13)

There exists a distinction between a civil case and a criminal case. Speedy trial is a fundamental right of an accused. The orders passed by the competent court of law as also the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be construed having regard to the constitutional scheme and the legal principles in mind. (Para 16)

In this case it is not a case where the proviso appended to Section 256(1) CrPC was applicable. (Para 10)

The matter remained pending for more than five years. It was obligatory on the part of the respondents to press their application for substitution. They did not file attendance of their witnesses. The case was fixed for hearing. On the other hand the appellant had been attending the court for a long time, except on some dates where he remained absent or was otherwise represented by his advocate. He had to remain present in court. He attended the court on not less than 20 occasions after the death of the original complainant. If in the aforementioned situation, the Magistrate exercised his discretionary jurisdiction, the same should not have been ordinarily interfered with. The Magistrate in terms of Section 256(1) exercises wide jurisdiction. Although an order of acquittal is of immense significance, the discretion in this case had been properly exercised by the Magistrate. (Paras 11, 13 and 12)

The appeal preferred by the respondents was against a judgment of acquittal. The High Court should have, therefore, exercised its jurisdiction keeping in view the limited role it had to play in the matter. (Para 14)

The High Court itself had come to the finding that the respondents were not interested in getting the matter prosecuted. Despite the same, it allowed their appeal, opining that any lis between the parties should be decided on merits rather than on technicalities. On what basis such a statement of law was made is not known. No precedent was cited; no reason has been assigned. The High Court failed to take into consideration the fact that it was dealing with an order of acquittal and, thus, the principle of law which was required to be applied was that, if two views are possible, a judgment of acquittal should not ordinarily be interfered with. (Para 15)

The High Court therefore, misdirected itself in passing the impugned judgment. It cannot therefore be sustained. (Para 17). S. Rama Krishna v. S. Rami Reddy, (2008) 5 SCC 535: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 645: AIR 2008 SC 2066: 2008 Cri LJ 2625.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2008]

—S. 257 See also S. 248, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1117 in Vol. 2

— S. 257 See also Ss. 406, 257 and 320

[2997] — S. 257 — Withdrawal of complaint — Complainant after pursuing his case against quashing of the criminal proceedings up to Supreme Court, not justified in seeking withdrawal of his complaint — Instead he ought to have submitted to the discipline of the court, especially when he had initiated the proceedings as a public interest litigant — Constitution of India, Art. 136. Sampat Singh v. State of Haryana, (1993) 1 SCC 561: 1993 SCC (Cri) 376.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-1992]

[2998] — S. 257 — Withdrawal of complaint — Prerequisite for permitting withdrawal — Trial Magistrate acquitting the accused, in absence of any request for the withdrawal of the case, without complying with the provisions of S. 257 CrPC — Refusal by High Court to grant leave against the order of acquittal — Having regard to the possibility of the amount in question being paid during the pendency of criminal proceedings, held, for exercising power under S. 257 CrPC, there must exist a request of the complainant with sufficient grounds and recording to the satisfaction of the Magistrate on such grounds that are good for allowing the complainant to withdraw the complaint — In absence of the compliance with pre-condition for exercising jurisdiction under the section, order passed by the Magistrate and thereafter refusal by High Court to grant leave in matter concerned, held, erroneous — Matter directed to be decided by the trial court in accordance with law. Provident Fund Inspector, Tirupati v. Madhusudana Chaudhury, (2000) 9 SCC 506: 2001 SCC (Cri) 637.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-1999]

[2999] — Ss. 257, 199 and 482 — Withdrawal of prosecution for purported defamation of Chief Minister, Ministers and other public officials — Appellants agreeing to telecast clarification in respect of allegedly defamatory telecast, and State agreeing to withdraw prosecution — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 499 and 500. Ramoji Rao v. State of A.P., (2006) 8 SCC 321: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 480: AIR 2006 SC 3384.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-10-2006]

—S. 258 See also S. 249, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1117 in Vol. 2

— S. 258 See Ss. 309, 311, 258 and 482

See also Ss. 482, 309, 311 and 258

[3000] — S. 258 — Applicability — Does not apply to cases instituted upon complaint — Words "and in any other case" in last part of the section — Import of

Summons cases are generally of two categories: those instituted upon complaints and those instituted otherwise than upon complaints. The latter category would include cases based on police reports. Section 258 of the Code is intended to cover those cases belonging to one category alone i.e. "summons cases instituted otherwise than upon complaints". Thus it has no application to cases instituted upon complaints. The segment separated at the last part of the section by the words "and in any other case" is only a sub-category or division consisting of "summons cases instituted otherwise than upon complaints". That sub-category is not intended to cover all summons cases other than those instituted on police report. In fact, Section 258 vivisects only "summons cases instituted otherwise than on complaints" into two divisions. One division consists of cases in which no evidence of a material witness was recorded. The section permits the court to acquit the accused prematurely only in those summons cases instituted otherwise than on complaints wherein the evidence of material witnesses was recorded. But the power of the court to discharge an accused at midway stage is restricted to those cases instituted otherwise than on complaints wherein no material witness was examined at all. (Paras 9 and 8)

The present is a case which was instituted on a complaint. Hence the endeavour made by the accused to find help from Section 258 of the Code is of no avail. (Para 9). John Thomas v. Dr. K. Jagadeesan, (2001) 6 SCC 30: 2001 SCC (Cri) 974: AIR 2001 SC 2651: (2001) 106 Comp Cas 619.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-7-2001]

[3001] — S. 258 — True import of, deciphered with the aid of S. 249 of 1898 Code which is a corresponding provision

A first information report was lodged for commission of offences punishable under Sections 447, 341, 323 and 427 IPC. On filing of the charge-sheet cognizance of offences was taken in 2002. Processes were issued against the appellant-accused. The same having not been served, non-bailable warrant was issued. In 2004 the Magistrate, in view of non-service of non-bailable warrant passed an order under Section 258 CrPC that further proceedings against the appellant be stopped.

In 2006, a requisition was filed praying for issuance of non-bailable warrant of arrest to the accused upon reopening the case. On the basis of the said purported requisition, the case was reopened and a non-bailable warrant of arrest was issued against the appellant.

The appellant filed an application under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court which was dismissed.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

An order of discharge can be passed in terms of Section 245 CrPC. For passing an order under the aforesaid provision, reasons are required to be recorded. It was obligatory on the part of the Magistrate to apply his mind with regard thereto. (Para 14)

In this case, no order for release of the accused was passed. No order of releasing the accused was necessary to be passed as the appellant was not before the court. She had not even been arrested. Non-bailable warrant of arrest issued against her had not been executed. The benefit of effect of discharge could have been claimed by the appellant had she been directed to be released, the effect of discharge being correlated with release. If she had not been released, the question of her obtaining the benefit of the effect of discharge does not arise. (Paras 13 and 14)

Although the High Court was correct that the Magistrate in a situation of this nature could revive the proceedings, but, the Magistrate committed an error in not recording the reasons therefor. The Magistrate is directed to pass an appropriate order upon consideration of the requisition filed by the police authorities afresh. (Paras 14 and 15). Renuka v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 14 SCC 345: (2009) 76 AIC 147 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 2245.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-2-2009]

Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82, relied on

[3002] — Ss. 258, 239, 245, 249, 118 and 300 — Discharge/Release — Accused not arrested though purportedly discharged, held, cannot be released — Hence, discharge shall not come into effect — Case can be reopened against such accused

A first information report was lodged for commission of offences punishable under Sections 447, 341, 323 and 427 IPC. On filing of the charge-sheet cognizance of offences was taken in 2002. Processes were issued against the appellant-accused. The same having not been served, non-bailable warrant was issued. In 2004 the Magistrate, in view of non-service of non-bailable warrant passed an order under Section 258 CrPC that further proceedings against the appellant be stopped.

In 2006, a requisition was filed praying for issuance of non-bailable warrant of arrest to the accused upon reopening the case. On the basis of the said purported requisition, the case was reopened and a non-bailable warrant of arrest was issued against the appellant.

The appellant filed an application under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court which was dismissed.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

An order of discharge can be passed in terms of Section 245 CrPC. For passing an order under the aforesaid provision, reasons are required to be recorded. It was obligatory on the part of the Magistrate to apply his mind with regard thereto. (Para 14)

In this case, no order for release of the accused was passed. No order of releasing the accused was necessary to be passed as the appellant was not before the court. She had not even been arrested. Non-bailable warrant of arrest issued against her had not been executed. The benefit of effect of discharge could have been claimed by the appellant had she been directed to be released, the effect of discharge being correlated with release. If she had not been released, the question of her obtaining the benefit of the effect of discharge does not arise. (Paras 13 and 14)

Although the High Court was correct that the Magistrate in a situation of this nature could revive the proceedings, but, the Magistrate committed an error in not recording the reasons therefor. The Magistrate is directed to pass an appropriate order upon consideration of the requisition filed by the police authorities afresh. (Paras 14 and 15). Renuka v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 14 SCC 345: (2009) 76 AIC 147 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 2245.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-2-2009]

Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82, relied on

[3003] — Ss. 262 (Ch. XXI), 251, 254(1)(Ch. XX), 319 and 2(g) — Court's power to implead a dealer, manufacturer or distributor under S. 20-A, Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 held, can neither be invoked before the stage of adducing evidence in the trial nor after the conclusion of trial — Further held, "trial" for offences under the PFA Act begins when under S. 251 CrPC the Magistrate asks the accused whether he pleads guilty or not — Evidence can be adduced only after recording the plea of the accused — Hence, exercise of the power under S. 20-A before the evidence was adduced, held, premature and without jurisdiction — However, the trial court not barred from considering the question afresh at the appropriate stage — Distinction between the court's power under S. 20-A of the Act and under S. 319 CrPC pointed out — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 20-A, 16-A, 16(1), 20 and 2(l)

A sample of toor dal drawn by the Food Inspector from the business premises of the first accused was found by the public analyst to be not conforming to the prescribed standards and was found to contain kesari dal, a prohibited substance. Since the first accused alleged to have purchased the same from the second and third accused and the latter alleged the same to have purchased from the fourth and fifth accused, a complaint under Section 16(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act was filed by the Food Inspector against all the said five persons. The 5th accused soon after entering appearance in the Court filed a petition to implead the appellant firm as an accused in the case on the premise that the 5th accused had purchased the toor dal from the appellant Company. Although by then the plea of any of the accused was not recorded nor was any of them asked by the Magistrate to plead, the Magistrate ordered impleadment of the appellant. The High Court upheld that order. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

One of the differences between Section 319 CrPC and Section 20-A of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act is that while in the former even if it appears to the court from the evidence (either during inquiry or trial of the offence), that another person is to be tried along with the already arraigned accused, then the court can proceed against that other person, while in the latter the satisfaction of the court that such manufacturer (distributor or dealer) is also concerned with that offence must be gathered from "the evidence adduced before it during the trial". In other words, the power under Section 20-A cannot be invoked until the trial begins and after the trial ends. (Para 8)

The word "trial" is not defined either in the Act or in CrPC. However, CrPC has distinguished the trial from inquiry as could be noted from Section 2(g) CrPC wherein the word "inquiry" is defined. The term "trial" cannot be given a fixed meaning to be applied in all cases uniformly. The connotation of that word changes with the difference in the context in which the term is employed in a particular provision of any statute. (Paras 9 and 10)

The scrutiny of Section 16-A of the Act and Sections 262 (Ch. XXI), 251 and 254(1) (Ch. XX) CrPC reveals that the trial of offences under the Act begins when the Magistrate asks the accused whether he pleads guilty or not as envisaged in Section 251 CrPC, if the Magistrate opts to hold summary trial. Hence, evidence in a trial under the Act can be adduced only after recording the plea of the accused as envisaged in the said section. Thus, it is clear that a Magistrate can implead any person under Section 20-A of the PFA Act only after reaching the stage envisaged in Section 254(1) CrPC. (Para 12)

Therefore, Section 20-A cannot be invoked before the stage of adducing evidence in the trial, nor can it be invoked after the conclusion of the trial. In the present case, the Magistrate has chosen to exercise the power prematurely and hence the action is without jurisdiction. However, the instant decision would not preclude the Magistrate from considering the question afresh at the appropriate stage. (Para 16). Omparkash Shivprakash v. K.I. Kuriakose, (1999) 8 SCC 633: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 1999 SC 3870.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-11-1999]

State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, AIR 1957 SC 389: 1957 SCR 279, relied on

Bhagwan Das Jagdish Chander v. Delhi Admn., (1975) 1 SCC 866: 1975 SCC (Cri) 410, clarified

Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. v. State of M.P., (1995) 6 SCC 62: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1024, distinguished

MCD v. R. Sahai, (1979) 2 SCC 387: 1979 SCC (Cri) 504, followed

Omprakash Shivprakash v. K.I. Kuriakose, 1999 Cri LJ 3836 (Ker), reversed

— S. 264 See also Ss. 354, 355, 361, 264, 412 and 384(3)

[3004] — S. 264 — Summary trial — Magistrate not obliged to write a judgment containing a brief statement of reasons but he must record the substance of the evidence — When substance of accusation is not put to the accused his entering upon any kind of plea is no plea at all

When the accused does not plead guilty, Section 264 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enjoins upon the Magistrate that he shall (i) record the substance of the evidence; and (ii) a judgment containing a brief statement of the reasons for the finding. Conversely put, when the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate may not be obliged to write a judgment containing a brief statement of the reasons, but the Magistrate is not absolved of the obligation to record the substance of the evidence. Otherwise, it would be difficult to conceive as to what could the accused have pleaded to. His plea of guilt is an admission to whatever factual data the prosecution lays before the court about the commission of the offence. Pleading guilty by the accused to the violation of a provision of law is no plea at all, as he would have to be confronted with the substance of the allegation, in order to enter upon a plea, one way or the other. When the substance of the allegations is not put to the accused, his entering any kind of plea is no plea legally, due to the non-observance of such procedural requirement of utmost importance. Sections 375 and 376 CrPC provide a sequitur to it. Pawan Kumar v. State of Haryana, (1996) 4 SCC 17: 1996 SCC (Cri) 583: AIR 1996 SC 3300.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-1996]

[3005] — S. 264 — Conviction for offence involving moral turpitude — Moral turpitude — What amounts to — Policy decision of Haryana Govt. laying down tests for determination of moral turpitude — Summary trial of the appellant for offence under S. 294 IPC — Appellant sentenced to a fine of Rs 20 on his pleading guilty — Copy of summary register neither disclosing the substance of allegations nor the words in which the plea of guilt was entered — Held, conviction of the appellant under S. 294 IPC per se would not establish moral turpitude unless the tests laid down in the policy decision are satisfied — Need for making provision that punishment of fine up to a certain limit, say up to Rs 2000 or so, on a summary/ordinary conviction shall not be treated as conviction at all for any purpose, especially entering govt. service, stressed — Penal Code, 1860, S. 294

The appellant was appointed on a Class IV post on ad hoc basis. While in service, the appellant came to be convicted in a summary trial for offence under Section 294 IPC (for causing annoyance to others by doing an obscene act in public or singing/reciting an obscene song in public) and was ordered to pay a fine of Rs 20 which he paid there and then. When steps were afoot to regularise his services, papers were moved to the office of the Superintendent of Police to verify about the character and antecedents of the appellant. The office of the Superintendent of Police reported back the factum of conviction of the appellant under Section 294 IPC, but otherwise verified that the appellant was of a good character. The services of the appellant were terminated as no longer required. The appellant challenged the order of his termination before the civil court. The trial court decided the case against him and the appellate court and the High Court in second appeal affirmed the same. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

"Moral turpitude" is an expression which is used in legal as also societal parlance to describe conduct which is inherently base, vile, depraved or having any connection showing depravity. The Government of Haryana while considering the question of rehabilitation of ex-convicts took a policy decision on 2-2-1973 that ex-convicts who were convicted for offences involving moral turpitude should not however be taken in government service. Significantly Section 294 IPC is not found enlisted in the list of offences constituting moral turpitude.

The copy of the summary register neither discloses the substance of the allegations put to the appellant, nor the words in which the plea of guilt was entered. It is of no significance that the appellant treats himself a convict as he had pleaded guilty. Assuming that the conviction is not open to challenge at the present juncture one cannot but deprecate the action of the respondents in having proceeded to adversely certify the character and antecedents of the appellant on the basis of the conviction per se, opining to have involved moral turpitude, without satisfying the tests laid down in the policy decision of the Government. All the three courts below, even when invited to judge the matter in the said perspective, went on to hold that the act/s involved in conviction under Section 294 IPC per se established moral turpitude. They should have been sensitive to the changing perspectives and concepts of morality to appreciate the effect of Section 294 IPC on today's society and its standards, and its changing views of obscenity.

The attention of Parliament was drawn to step in and perceive the large many cases which per law and public policy are tried summarily, involving thousands and thousands of people throughout the country appearing before summary courts and paying small amounts of fine, more often than not, as a measure of plea-bargaining. Foremost among them being traffic, municipal and other petty offences under the Indian Penal Code, mostly committed by the young and/or the inexperienced. The cruel result of a conviction of that kind and a fine of payment of a paltry sum on plea-bargaining is the end of the career, future or present, as the case may be, of that young and/or inexperienced person, putting a blast to his life and his dreams. Life is too precious to be staked over a petty incident like this. Immediate remedial measures are therefore necessary in raising the toleration limits with regard to petty offences especially when tried summarily. Provision need be made that punishment of fine up to a certain limit, say up to Rs 2000 or so, on a summary/ordinary conviction shall not be treated as conviction at all for any purpose and all the more for entry into and retention in government service. This can brook no delay, whatsoever. Pawan Kumar v. State of Haryana, (1996) 4 SCC 17: 1996 SCC (Cri) 583: AIR 1996 SC 3300.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-1996]

— S. 273 See also S. 353, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1168 in Vol. 2

— S. 273 See Ss. 164, 273 and 327(2)

See also Ss. 285, 284 and 273

See also Ss. 303 and 2(q), 205, 273

See also Ss. 317 and 273, 251 & 205

See also Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283

— S. 273 Expln. See also Ss. 167, 202(1), 204, 273 Expln. and 319

[3006] — S. 273 — Evidence to be taken in presence of accused — The term "presence" used in S. 273 — Meaning of — Held, does not mean actual physical presence in court — Since plain meaning brought out what was intended, dictionary meaning not considered (Para 12). State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Praful B. Desai, (2003) 4 SCC 601: 2003 SCC (Cri) 815: AIR 2003 SC 2053: 2003 Cri LJ 2033: (2003) 2 Mah LJ 868: (2003) 2 MPLJ 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2003]

[3007] — S. 273 — Object of — Recording of evidence by way of video-conferencing — Held, satisfies the object of S. 273 that evidence be recorded in the presence of the accused

Recording of evidence by video- conferencing also satisfies the object of Section 273 that evidence be recorded in the presence of the accused. The accused and his pleader can see the witness as clearly as if the witness was actually sitting before them. In fact the accused may be able to see the witness better than he may have been able to if he was sitting in the dock in a crowded courtroom. They can observe his or her demeanour. In fact the facility to play back would enable better observation of demeanour. They can hear and rehear the deposition of the witness. The accused would be able to instruct his pleader immediately and thus cross-examination of the witness is as effective, if not better. The facility of play back would give an added advantage whilst cross-examining the witness. The witness can be confronted with documents or other material or statement in the same manner as if he/she was in court. Thus no prejudice, of whatsoever nature, is likely to be caused to the accused. (Para 20). State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Praful B. Desai, (2003) 4 SCC 601: 2003 SCC (Cri) 815: AIR 2003 SC 2053: 2003 Cri LJ 2033: (2003) 2 Mah LJ 868: (2003) 2 MPLJ 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2003]

[3008] — S. 273 — Recording of evidence by way of video-conferencing — Held, permissible — So long as the accused and/or his pleader are present when the evidence is recorded by the said way, held, that evidence is being recorded in the "presence" of the accused and would thus fully meet the requirements of S. 273 — Hence, recording of such evidence would be as per the "procedure established by law" — No prejudice caused to the accused by recording of evidence in such manner

The prosecution made an application before the trial court to examine a witness, who was in USA, through video-conferencing. The trial court allowed the said application. But the High Court, on an interpretation of Section 273 CrPC, held that the evidence could not be recorded by way of video-conferencing.

Setting aside the impugned judgment of the High Court

Held :

The first duty of the court is to do justice. As has been held by this Court in the case of Nageshwar Shri Krishna Ghobe v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 4 SCC 23 courts must endeavour to find the truth. It has been held that there would be failure of justice not only by an unjust conviction but also by acquittal of the guilty for unjustified failure to produce available evidence. Of course the rights of the accused have to be kept in mind and safeguarded, but they should not be overemphasized to the extent of forgetting that the victims also have rights. (Para 13)

The question for consideration is whether in a criminal trial, evidence can be recorded by video-conferencing. (Para 3)

Section 273 contemplates constructive presence. This shows that actual physical presence is not a must. This indicates that the term "presence", as used in this section, is not used in the sense of actual physical presence. (Para 12)

Further, evidence can be both oral and documentary and electronic records can be produced as evidence. This means that evidence, even in criminal matters, can also be by way of electronic records. This would include video-conferencing. (Para 12)

That apart, the doctrine "contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege" has no application when interpreting a provision of an ongoing statute/Act like CrPC. (Para 18)

It was submitted that video-conferencing could not be allowed as the rights of an accused under Article 21 cannot be subjected to a procedure involving "virtual reality". Such an argument displays ignorance of the concept of virtual reality and also of video-conferencing. Virtual reality is a state where one is made to feel, hear or imagine what does not really exist. Video-conferencing has nothing to do with virtual reality. Video-conferencing is an advancement in science and technology which permits one to see, hear and talk with someone far away, with the same facility and ease as if he is present before you i.e. in your presence. In fact he/she is present before you on a screen. Except for touching, one can see, hear and observe as if the party is in the same room. In video-conferencing both parties are in the presence of each other. So long as the accused and/or his pleader are present when evidence is recorded by video-conferencing, that evidence is being recorded in the "presence" of the accused and would thus fully meet the requirements of Section 273 CrPC. Recording of such evidence would be as per "procedure established by law". (Para 19)

Recording of evidence by video- conferencing also satisfies the object of Section 273 that evidence be recorded in the presence of the accused. The accused and his pleader can see the witness as clearly as if the witness was actually sitting before them. In fact the accused may be able to see the witness better than he may have been able to if he was sitting in the dock in a crowded courtroom. They can observe his or her demeanour. In fact the facility to play back would enable better observation of demeanour. They can hear and rehear the deposition of the witness. The accused would be able to instruct his pleader immediately and thus cross-examination of the witness is as effective, if not better. The facility of play back would give an added advantage whilst cross-examining the witness. The witness can be confronted with documents or other material or statement in the same manner as if he/she was in court. Thus no prejudice, of whatsoever nature, is likely to be caused to the accused. (Para 20)

The advancement of science and technology is such that now it is possible to set up video-conferencing equipment in the court itself. In that case evidence would be recorded by the Magistrate or under his dictation in open court. If that is done then the requirements of Sections 274 and 275, requiring evidence be taken down in writing by the Magistrate himself or by his dictation in open court, would be fully met. To this method there is, however, a drawback. As the witness is now in court there may be difficulties if he commits contempt of court or perjures himself and it is immediately noticed that he has perjured himself. Therefore, as a matter of prudence, evidence by video-conferencing in open court should be only if the witness is in a country which has an extradition treaty with India and under whose laws contempt of court and perjury are also punishable. (Para 21)

That apart, in cases where the attendance of a witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience, the court could consider issuing a commission to record the evidence by way of video-conferencing. In the present case G has refused to come to India to give evidence. His evidence appears to be necessary for the ends of justice. (Para 22)

Since G is willing to give evidence, an official of the court can be deputed to record evidence on commission by way of video-conferencing. The evidence will be recorded in the studio/hall where the video-conferencing takes place. The court in Mumbai would be issuing commission to record evidence by video-conferencing in Mumbai. Hence the commission would be addressed to the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Mumbai who would depute a responsible officer (preferably a judicial officer) to proceed to the office of VSNL and record the evidence of the witness G (Dr. Greenberg) in the presence of the accused-respondent. The officer shall ensure that the accused and his counsel are present when the evidence is recorded and that they are able to observe the demeanour and hear the deposition of G. The officers shall also ensure that the respondent has full opportunity to cross-examine G. It must be clarified that adopting such a procedure may not be possible if the witness is out of India and not willing to give evidence. (Para 24)

Further, fixing of time for recording evidence on commission is always the duty of the officer who has been deputed to so record evidence. Thus the officer recording the evidence would have the discretion to fix up the time in consultation with VSNL, who are experts in the field and who will know which is the most convenient time for video-conferencing with a person in USA. The respondent and his counsel will have to make it convenient to attend at the time fixed by the officer concerned. If they do not remain present, the Magistrate will take action, as provided in law, to compel attendance. The officer who will be deputed would be one who has authority to administer oaths. That officer will administer the oath. By now science and technology has progressed enough to not worry about a video image/audio interruptions/distortions. Even if there are interruptions they would be of temporary duration. Undoubtedly, an officer would have to be deputed, either from India or from the Consulate/Embassy in the country where the evidence is being recorded who would remain present when the evidence is being recorded and who will ensure that there is no other person in the room where the witness is sitting whilst the evidence is being recorded. That officer will ensure that the witness is not coached/tutored/prompted. It would be advisable, though not necessary, that the witness be asked to give evidence in a room in the Consulate/Embassy. The officer deputed will ensure that the respondent, his counsel and one assistant are allowed in the studio when the evidence is being recorded. The officer will also ensure that the respondent is not prevented from bringing into the studio the papers/documents which may be required by him or his counsel. It is possible to put documents or written material to the witness in cross-examination. One can show to a party, with whom video-conferencing is taking place, any amount of written material. The officer concerned will ensure that once video-conferencing commences, as far as possible, it is proceeded with without any adjournments. Further, if it is found that G is not attending at the time(s) fixed, without any sufficient cause, then it would be open for the Magistrate to disallow recording of evidence by video-conferencing. If the officer finds that G is not answering questions, the officer will make a memo of the same. Finally, when the evidence is read in court, this is an aspect which will be taken into consideration for testing the veracity of the evidence. (Para 26)

As the evidence is being recorded on commission, that evidence will subsequently be read in court. Thus no question arises of the witness insulting the court. If on reading the evidence the court finds that the witness has perjured himself, just like in any other evidence on commission, the court will ignore or disbelieve the evidence. (Para 26)

Undoubtedly, the costs of video-conferencing would have to be borne by the State. (Para 26). State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Praful B. Desai, (2003) 4 SCC 601: 2003 SCC (Cri) 815: AIR 2003 SC 2053: 2003 Cri LJ 2033: (2003) 2 Mah LJ 868: (2003) 2 MPLJ 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2003]

Nageshwar Shri Krishna Ghobe v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 4 SCC 23: 1973 SCC (Cri) 664, relied on

Francis Bennion: Statutory Interpretation, 2nd Edn., p. 617, relied on National Textile Workers' Union v. P.R. Ramakrishnan, (1983) 1 SCC 228: 1983 SCC (Tax) 2: 1983 SCC (L&S) 72; CIT v. Podar Cement (P) Ltd., (1997) 5 SCC 482; State v. S.J. Choudhary, (1996) 2 SCC 428: 1996 SCC (Cri) 336; SIL Import, USA v. Exim Aides Silk Exporters, (1999) 4 SCC 567: 1999 SCC (Cri) 600; Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, followed

A.K. Gopalan v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 27; Nazir Ahmad v. King Emperor, AIR 1936 PC 253 (2): 37 Cri LJ 897, distinguished

Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, (1972) 3 SCC 793: 1972 SCC (Cri) 861, considered and distinguished on facts

[3009] — Ss. 273 and 284 — Evidence — Recording of, on commission by video-conferencing — Costs — Held, costs of video-conferencing would have to be borne by the State (Para 26). State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Praful B. Desai, (2003) 4 SCC 601: 2003 SCC (Cri) 815: AIR 2003 SC 2053: 2003 Cri LJ 2033: (2003) 2 Mah LJ 868: (2003) 2 MPLJ 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2003]

[3010] — Ss. 273 and 294 — Admission of items of evidence (documents, explosives, guns, etc.) without formal proof — Discretion of counsel for accused — Necessity of instructions in this regard from accused — Objections raised by accused — Later formal identification of evidence concerned — Opportunity of cross-examination to accused — Relevance

On 5-6-2002 all the counsel appearing for the accused agreed that all the items of evidence (documents, explosives, guns, etc.) should be considered as undisputed evidence without formal proof which resulted in dropping of considerable number of witnesses for the prosecution. Whether or Afzal's counsel had instructions in this regard there is nothing wrong in the conduct of the advocate in agreeing for admission of formal documents without formal proof or in agreeing for the framing of charges. The counsel had exercised her discretion reasonably. The accused-appellant did not object to this course adopted by the amicus throughout the trial. No doubt, some of the documents admitted contained particulars of identification of the deceased terrorists by the appellant Afzal, but, the factum of identification was independently proved by the prosecution witnesses and opportunity of cross-examination was available to the accused. In the circumstances it cannot be said that there was a reasonable possibility of prejudice on account of admission of the said documents without formal proof. (Para 166). State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715: 2005 Cri LJ 3950: (2005) 122 DLT 194.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2005]

Strickland v. Washington, 466 US 668 (1984); Engle v. Isaac, 456 US 107 (1982), followed

[3011] — Ss. 273 and 317 — Applicability — Video conference facilities — Provision of — On facts, as appellant lodged in jail in Delhi while trial being conducted in Patna, video conference facilities being provided to appellant in order to enable him to oversee proceedings in trial — Held, while every effort be made to provide video conference facilities to appellant but in light of Ss. 273 and 317 trial will go on to its conclusion even if they are not available (Para 11). Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2008) 1 SCC 667: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 305: AIR 2008 SC 942: 2008 Cri LJ 1033.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-2007]

[3012] — Ss. 273 to 275, 284, 285 and 327 — Requirements of — If can be met by video-conferencing — Physical presence of accused during taking of evidence — Exception to rule — When permissible — Transfer of undertrial prisoner to prison outside State in interest of justice — Frequent visits from place of detention (Tihar Jail, Delhi) to court of trial (in Bihar) likely to prejudice security of both respondent and others involved in case, apart from being a heavy burden on State exchequer — Hence, held, given peculiar circumstances of the case under which respondent had been transferred to Tihar Jail, requirements of said sections could be met by holding trial by video-conferencing — However, respondent permitted to apply to Sessions Judge for transfer to court of trial for sole purpose of being present during recording of statement of any particular witness, but in a rare and important situation only — In case of such transfer of respondent to court of trial, special police were to be deputed by authorities of Tihar Jail, who were at all times to bear in mind circumstances in which respondent had been transferred from Patna to Delhi — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 137 and 138

It is true that in a normal trial the Criminal Procedure Code requires the accused to be present at the trial but in the peculiar circumstances of this case a procedure will have to be evolved, which will not be contrary to the rights given to an accused under the Criminal Procedure Code but at the same time protect the administration of justice. The requirements and provisions of Sections 273 to 275, 284, 285 and 327 could be met by directing the trial to be held by video-conferencing facility. This is one of those rare cases wherein a frequent visit from the place of detention to the court of trial in Bihar would prejudice the security of both the respondent and others involved in the case, apart from being a heavy burden on the State exchequer. (Para 43)

The trial of the case in Patna shall continue without the presence of the appellant by the court, dispensing such presence, and to the extent possible shall be conducted with the aid of video-conferencing. However, in the event of the respondent making any application for his transfer for the sole purpose of being present during the recording of the statement of any particular witness, the same will be considered by the Sessions Judge on its merit and if he thinks it appropriate, he may direct the authorities of Tihar Jail to produce the accused before him for that limited purpose. This, however, will be in a rare and important situation only and if such transfer order is made the respondent shall be taken from Tihar Jail to the court concerned and if need be, detained in an appropriate jail at the place of trial and under the custody and charge of the police to be specially deputed by the authorities of Tihar Jail who shall bear in mind the factual situation in which the respondent has been transferred from Patna to Delhi. (Para 45). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 3 SCC 284: 2005 SCC (Cri) 705: AIR 2005 SC 972: 2005 Cri LJ 1441.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-2005]

— S. 274 See also Ss. 273 to 275, 284, 285 and 327

[3013] — Ss. 274 and 275 — Recording of evidence — By way of video-conferencing in open court — Held, would satisfy the requirements of the provisions requiring the recording of the evidence by the Magistrate himself or under his dictation in open court — But considering the drawback of this method in case the witness commits contempt of court or perjures himself, held, evidence by video-conferencing in open court should be only if the witness is in a country which has an extradition treaty with India and under whose laws contempt of court and perjury are also punishable

The advancement of science and technology is such that now it is possible to set up video-conferencing equipment in the court itself. In that case evidence would be recorded by the Magistrate or under his dictation in open court. If that is done then the requirements of Sections 274 and 275, requiring evidence be taken down in writing by the Magistrate himself or by his dictation in open court, would be fully met. To this method there is, however, a drawback. As the witness is now in court there may be difficulties if he commits contempt of court or perjures himself and it is immediately noticed that he has perjured himself. Therefore, as a matter of prudence, evidence by video-conferencing in open court should be only if the witness is in a country which has an extradition treaty with India and under whose laws contempt of court and perjury are also punishable. (Para 21). State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Praful B. Desai, (2003) 4 SCC 601: 2003 SCC (Cri) 815: AIR 2003 SC 2053: 2003 Cri LJ 2033: (2003) 2 Mah LJ 868: (2003) 2 MPLJ 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2003]

— S. 275 See Ss. 273 to 275, 284, 285 and 327

See also Ss. 274 and 275

[3014] — Ss. 276, 281 and 378 & 386 — Appeal against acquittal — Reconstructed records of the case before High Court — Non-consideration of merits of the case and acquittal by giving benefit of doubt on surmises and conjectures, on facts, held not justified — Records of the case including those called for from trial court, found missing before hearing of the appeal — Records reconstructed by trial court in compliance with order of High Court — High Court doubting genuineness of the reconstructed case file and without going into merits of the case allowing the appeal and acquitting the accused — Held on facts, High Court erred in doubting the authenticity of the reconstruction of records which were made by trial court after due verification and in acquitting the accused without going into merits of the case

The respondents were convicted and awarded punishment for various offences under IPC. The respondents preferred appeals before the High Court. In regard to hearing of the appeals the High Court passed an order to expedite the preparation of records and to list the appeals for final hearing. But before actual hearing of those appeals, all the records including those which were called for from the trial court, were found missing in the High Court. The High Court directed the trial court to reconstruct the record. Accordingly the trial court took steps to reconstruct the records. The fact that the copies of the statements and other documents were given to the complainant, had been spoken to by the advocates of the parties before the Sessions Judge. That fact was corroborated by verifying the authenticity of the carbon copies of the statements of the witnesses produced by the appellant appearing along with his advocate. To dispel the doubt expressed by one of the respondents who appeared before the Sessions Judge, time was granted to him to produce copies of the statements which he admitted to be in his possession. In the absence of such copies being filed the Sessions Judge satisfied himself about the correctness of the copies produced by the complainant by examining all those persons connected with the reconstructed records. He gave notice to both the counsel for the prosecution as well as of the accused to render necessary assistance in the construction of the file. The counsel rendered assistance to the extent they could. On the basis of statements recorded by him in the course of reconstruction of records, the Sessions Judge concluded that the copies of the statement of witnesses supplied to the complainant were in the handwriting of one of the Readers of his court, who in his statement identified the originals having been prepared by him and that the copies were also in his handwriting. Accordingly, he submitted the reconstructed file to the High Court along with all other necessary papers. When the case came up for hearing, the High Court without going into the merits of the case, allowed the appeals by setting aside the conviction and sentences ordered by the trial court and acquitted the respondents of all the charges. There were two reasons for the High Court for doing so. The first was that the carbon copies of the statements of the witnesses were not countersigned by the Reader of the court and that there was no endorsement on the carbon copies as contemplated in the circulars of the High Court, so it was doubted that the copies were supplied to the complainant. The second was that even a seemingly slight variation in the evidence recorded at the trial with the alleged carbon copies can change the entire complexion of the case.

Allowing the complainant's appeals,

Held :

The reason given by the High Court for doubting the authenticity of the reconstructed records, is untenable. There is no valid reason to doubt the genuineness of the copies of the statements of witnesses examined at the trial. The Additional District and Sessions Judge had reconstructed the file in the best possible manner. On the facts of the case it is not possible to accept the contention that as the respondents did not have an opportunity to cross-examine the Peshkar (Reader) and that before the accused appeared in court the statement of the Peshkar was already recorded, so it cannot be relied upon in verification of the copies furnished by the complainant to reconstruct the record. Mere suspicion or doubt expressed by the advocates of the respondents (appellants before the High Court) cannot destroy or discredit the authenticity of the record reconstructed by the Sessions Judge. Since there was a properly reconstructed file, the High Court erred in not going into the merits of the case and acquitting the appellant convicts before it by allowing the appeals. (Paras 21 to 23 and 25)

A distinction must be made between a case where the trial court reports that the reconstruction of file is impossible or the reconstructed file is scanty and incomplete lacking in material documents of which no extracts are to be found in the judgment of the trial court and a case where the trial court after due verification reconstructs the file. In the former case, declining to go into the merits may be justifiable but in the latter case, it is impermissible. (Para 24)

There can be no doubt that jurisprudentially, an accused is presumed to be innocent till he is found to be guilty by a competent court. In giving its verdict the court will give benefit of doubt arising on consideration of evidence brought on record by the prosecution or on account of absence of material evidence which ought to have been adduced but is not brought on record, to the accused person and acquit him of the offence charged against. But a doubt arising on the basis of surmises and conjectures should never be allowed to influence the verdict of the court as in such cases giving benefit of doubt to the accused will be counterproductive and destructive of the system of delivery of justice in criminal cases having repercussions on the existence of every civilised and peaceful society. The courts will have to be cautious and prudent to secure the ends of justice. (Para 24). Kunwar Bahadur Singh v. Shiv Baran Singh, (2001) 9 SCC 149: 2002 SCC (Cri) 428: AIR 2003 SC 2066.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-2000]

— S. 278 See also S. 360, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1169 in Vol. 2

[3015] — S. 278 — Object and scope of — Corrections in recorded statement of witness intended to change earlier version not permissible — Where correction slips unsigned and not properly filed failure of trial judge to make memorandum thereon of objection, held, inconsequential — Substantial compliance of provisions sufficient

The object of S. 278 is twofold: firstly to ensure that the evidence of the witness as recorded is accurate and secondly to give the witness concerned an opportunity to point out mistakes, if any. If the correction suggested by the witness is one which the judge considers necessary he will make it at once as required by sub-section (1) but if the correction is such that the judge does not consider necessary, sub-section (2) requires that a memorandum of the objection be made and the judge add his remarks, if any, thereto. In the present case, the trial Judge corrected all the typographical errors which he considered necessary but, refused to carry out the substantive part of the deposition. The section is not intended to permit a witness to resile from his statement in the name of correction. The trial Judge was justified in refusing to effect the change which he thought was intended to change the earlier version. He did not make a memorandum as the correction slip was unsigned and was not properly filed. Now, since the correction slip as well as the remarks of the trial Judge submitted to the High Court on appeal have become a part of the record, nothing more need be done as the provisions of S. 278 are substantially complied with. Mir Mohd. Omar v. State of W.B., (1989) 4 SCC 436: 1989 SCC (Cri) 750: AIR 1989 SC 1785: 1989 Cri LJ 2070: (1989) 2 Crimes 698.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-1989]

— S. 281 See Ss. 164, 281 and 463

See also Ss. 276, 281 and 378 & 386

— S. 283 See Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283

— S. 284 See also S. 503, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1276 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 284 See Ss. 273 to 275, 284, 285 and 327

See also Ss. 273 and 284

See also Ss. 285, 284 and 273

[3016] — S. 284 — Commission to record the evidence by way of video-conferencing — Held, can be issued by the court where the attendance of a witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience (Para 22). State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Praful B. Desai, (2003) 4 SCC 601: 2003 SCC (Cri) 815: AIR 2003 SC 2053: 2003 Cri LJ 2033: (2003) 2 Mah LJ 868: (2003) 2 MPLJ 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2003]

Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, (1972) 3 SCC 793: 1972 SCC (Cri) 861, considered and distinguished on facts

— S. 285 See also S. 504(3), Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1277 in Vol. 2

— S. 285 See also Ss. 273 to 275, 284, 285 and 327

[3017] — Ss. 285, 284 and 273 — Evidence — Recording of, on commission by way of video-conferencing — Commission to whom to be issued — Such evidence how to be recorded — Trial at Mumbai — Witness in USA and willing to give evidence — Held, an official of the court can be deputed to record evidence on commission by way of video-conferencing — Evidence would be recorded in the studio/hall where the video-conferencing takes place — The court in Mumbai would be issuing commission to record evidence by video-conferencing in Mumbai — Hence, the commission would be addressed to the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Mumbai who would depute a responsible officer (preferably a judicial officer) to proceed to the office of VSNL and record the evidence of the witness in the presence of the accused-respondent — Duties and responsibilities of the officer deputed to record the evidence in the said manner, stated — Adopting such a procedure when may not be possible, clarified

In cases where the attendance of a witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience, the court could consider issuing a commission to record the evidence by way of video-conferencing. In the present case G has refused to come to India to give evidence. His evidence appears to be necessary for the ends of justice. (Para 22)

Since G is willing to give evidence, an official of the court can be deputed to record evidence on commission by way of video-conferencing. The evidence will be recorded in the studio/hall where the video-conferencing takes place. The court in Mumbai would be issuing commission to record evidence by video-conferencing in Mumbai. Hence the commission would be addressed to the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Mumbai who would depute a responsible officer (preferably a judicial officer) to proceed to the office of VSNL and record the evidence of the witness G (Dr. Greenberg) in the presence of the accused-respondent. The officer shall ensure that the accused and his counsel are present when the evidence is recorded and that they are able to observe the demeanour and hear the deposition of G. The officers shall also ensure that the respondent has full opportunity to cross-examine G. It must be clarified that adopting such a procedure may not be possible if the witness is out of India and not willing to give evidence. (Para 24)

Further, fixing of time for recording evidence on commission is always the duty of the officer who has been deputed to so record evidence. Thus the officer recording the evidence would have the discretion to fix up the time in consultation with VSNL, who are experts in the field and who will know which is the most convenient time for video-conferencing with a person in USA. The respondent and his counsel will have to make it convenient to attend at the time fixed by the officer concerned. If they do not remain present, the Magistrate will take action, as provided in law, to compel attendance. The officer who will be deputed would be one who has authority to administer oaths. That officer will administer the oath. By now science and technology has progressed enough to not worry about a video image/audio interruptions/distortions. Even if there are interruptions they would be of temporary duration. Undoubtedly, an officer would have to be deputed, either from India or from the Consulate/Embassy in the country where the evidence is being recorded who would remain present when the evidence is being recorded and who will ensure that there is no other person in the room where the witness is sitting whilst the evidence is being recorded. That officer will ensure that the witness is not coached/tutored/ prompted. It would be advisable, though not necessary, that the witness be asked to give evidence in a room in the Consulate/Embassy. The officer deputed will ensure that the respondent, his counsel and one assistant are allowed in the studio when the evidence is being recorded. The officer will also ensure that the respondent is not prevented from bringing into the studio the papers/documents which may be required by him or his counsel. It is possible to put documents or written material to the witness in cross-examination. One can show to a party, with whom video-conferencing is taking place, any amount of written material. The officer concerned will ensure that once video-conferencing commences, as far as possible, it is proceeded with without any adjournments. Further, if it is found that G is not attending at the time(s) fixed, without any sufficient cause, then it would be open for the Magistrate to disallow recording of evidence by video-conferencing. If the officer finds that G is not answering questions, the officer will make a memo of the same. Finally, when the evidence is read in court, this is an aspect which will be taken into consideration for testing the veracity of the evidence. (Para 26). State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Praful B. Desai, (2003) 4 SCC 601: 2003 SCC (Cri) 815: AIR 2003 SC 2053: 2003 Cri LJ 2033: (2003) 2 Mah LJ 868: (2003) 2 MPLJ 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2003]

Ratilal Bhanji Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, (1972) 3 SCC 793: 1972 SCC (Cri) 861, considered and distinguished on facts

— S. 286 See Ss. 235 and 286

— S. 293 See also S. 510, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1278 in Vol. 2

— S. 293 See also Ss. 231, 234, 242, 244 and 293

[3018] — S. 293 — Examination of the scientific expert — If obligatory — Smuggling of liquor — Report of Excise Control Laboratory confirming samples submitted tested positive as whisky — Absence of examination of witnesses to prove the laboratory report in trial court — Necessity of — Held, a bare reading of Ss. 293(1) and (2) shows that it is not obligatory that an expert who furnishes his opinion on the scientific issue of the chemical examination of substance, should be of necessity made to depose in proceedings before the court — Punjab Excise Act, 1914 (1 of 1914), S. 61

The appellants were alleged to have been indulging in smuggling of liquor from Haryana to Delhi. The raising party recovered eighteen cartons containing 12 bottles of "Bonnie Scot" special malt whisky, each being an 750 ml bottle. Two sample bottles were taken out separately as samples from each carton. An FIR was lodged and a site plan was prepared. The appellants were arrayed as the accused and arrested. The Excise Control Laboratory opined that the samples submitted tested positive as whisky. The appellants were charged with having committed offence under Section 61 of the Punjab Excise Act, 1914.

The Metropolitan Magistrate by judgment and order found the appellants guilty and sentenced them to six months' simple imprisonment with fine of Rs 2000 and in default a further three months' simple imprisonment. The appeal preferred by the petitioners to the Additional Sessions Judge was dismissed. Before the High Court the only stand was that there was delay in dispatch of the sample and none was examined to prove the reports. The High Court found that there was no substance in the plea. It was noted that there was no necessity for examining any witness to prove the Excise Control Laboratory report as documents were marked in terms of Section 293 CrPC.

The appellants are in appeal thereagainst before the Supreme Court by special leave.

Disposing the appeal, in terms below,

Held :

A bare reading of sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 293 shows that it is not obligatory that an expert who furnishes his opinion on the scientific issue of the chemical examination of substance, should be of necessity made to depose in proceedings before the court. There is no substance in the revision petition so far as the conviction is concerned. (Para 9)

As the appellants have already suffered custody for more than three months, and the occurrence took place nearly 13 years back, while upholding the conviction, the sentence is reduced to the period already undergone. (Para 10). Rajesh Kumar v. State Govt. of NCT of Delhi, (2008) 4 SCC 493: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 366: (2008) 1 KLT 985.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-2-2008]

Ukha Kolhe v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 1531; Bhupinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1988) 3 SCC 513: 1988 SCC (Cri) 694, followed

[3019] — S. 293 — Conviction reversed — Reliance on opinion of handwriting expert without examining him in court — Effect of — Appellant and other co-accused K and M employees of State Electricity Board — K and M demanded Rs 2000 from complainant — Appellant neither demanded money nor present at spot when raid conducted — He connected with offence on basis of Ext. PR, a piece of paper on which he had allegedly jotted down meter reading — Ext. PR proved by handwriting expert that it was handwriting of appellant, but expert not examined in court — Held, when trial court relied on report of handwriting expert, it ought to have examined handwriting expert in order to give accused opportunity of cross-examining the expert — There is no material to indicate that accused admitted report of expert — Furthermore, trial court and High Court erred in shifting onus onto appellant to disprove said expert opinion without it being formally proved — Expert opinion cannot be relied upon unless expert is examined —

PW 5 also stating that he had not authorised appellant and K to check meter reading — Therefore appellant excluded from operation of S. 7 — As appellant neither received amount nor was he present at spot, his case has to be treated differently — Benefit of doubt given to appellant — Conviction set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 120-A and 120-B — Corruption cases, Ss. 120-B and 34 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 45, 73 and 101 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7 and 13(1)(d) (Paras 14 to 17, 11 and 19). Keshav Dutt v. State of Haryana, (2010) 9 SCC 286.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-2010]

State of Maharushtra v. Damu, (2000) 6 SCC 269: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1088, relied on [3020] — S. 293 — Opinion of doctor based on report of chemical examiner — Report of chemical examiner available in records — Held, such report can be used by the court in evidence. State of A.P. v. Gangula Satya Murthy, (1997) 1 SCC 272: 1997 SCC (Cri) 325: AIR 1997 SC 1588: 1997 Cri LJ 774.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-1996]

[3021] — Ss. 293 and 294 — Documents sought to be relied upon must be originals — Photocopy of ballistic report — Admissibility in evidence — Effect of tampering — Evidence not produced to show that said photocopy had been compared and scrutinised with original and then placed on record — Held, assuming though not admitting that photocopy was admissible, but still the same loses credence in light of fact that perusal of forwarding letter and report show that there was some tampering with said documents since sequence of numbering of parcel as between forwarding letter and report was changed, which fact remained unexplained, casting doubt on genuineness of said report — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 64, 65 and 45 (Paras 170 and 171). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-4-2010]

[3022] — S. 293 — Report of chemical examiner in murder by poisoning case — Should be read with the doctor's opinion on the report — Mere absence of statement in the report that lethal dose of the poison was detected would not render the report unreliable where the Doctor conducting autopsy opined that death was by poisoning — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 45 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

It was submitted that it was not enough for the chemical examiner merely to state in his report that the organo-phosphorus compound was present in the substance sent to him for examination. He should have also stated that a lethal dose of the organo-phosphorus compound was detected in the substance. Further, his report should be full and complete to take the place of evidence which he would have given if he were called to court as witness, and in the absence of such particulars, the death by poisoning cannot be inferred

Held :

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as regards the value to be attached to the report of the chemical examiner. The chemical examiner does not, as a rule, give an opinion as to the cause of death but merely gives report of the chemical examination of the substance sent to him. The report by itself is not crucial. It is a piece of evidence. The only protection to it is that it does not require any formal proof. It is, however, open to the court, if it thinks fit, to call the chemical examiner and examine him as to the subject-matter of the report. The report should normally be forwarded to the doctor who conducted the autopsy. In the instant case, that was done. The doctor who conducted the autopsy was given a copy of the report of the chemical examiner. The doctor in the light of the report gave his opinion that the death of the deceased was by poisoning i.e. organo-phosphorus compound. The report of the chemical examiner coupled with the opinion of the doctor is, therefore, sufficient to hold that it was a death by poisoning. Bhupinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1988) 3 SCC 513: 1988 SCC (Cri) 694: AIR 1988 SC 1011.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Dutt and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-4-1988]

Followed in Rajesh Kumar v. State Govt. of NCT of Delhi, (2008) 4 SCC 493

[3023] — S. 293 — Report of Serologist — Held, can be used as evidence without any formal proof (Para 39). Dhanajaya Reddy v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 4 SCC 9: 2001 SCC (Cri) 652: AIR 2001 SC 1512: 2001 Cri LJ 1712.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-2001]

[3024] — S. 293 — Recovery of pistol at the instance of the accused — Opinion of ballistic expert that the bullet recovered from the body of the deceased could have been fired from the said pistol — Held, this circumstance should be kept in mind while considering the legal implication of the evidence relating to the recovery of the pistol — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 27. State of Rajasthan v. Bhup Singh, (1997) 10 SCC 675: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1032: (1997) 1 An LT (Cri) 588.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-1997]

[3025] — S. 293 — Certified copies of sale deeds regarding similarly situated or neighbouring land — Held, it is open to court to treat such copies as evidence, but court is under no compulsion to accept them as such — To weigh pros and cons and decipher the true significance of such documents in relation to the market value of the land concerned is within court's jurisdiction — Reference Court fixing market value of disputed land at Rs 65,762 per acre after taking into account certified copies of only those sale deeds whose vendor or vendee had been examined as witnesses — Held, Division Bench of High Court was within jurisdiction in allowing respondent's appeal, taking into account two other sale deeds for which nobody connected with the transactions had been examined and in enhancing land value to Rs 75,000 per acre — Land Acquisition Act, 1894, Ss. 23 and 51-A — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, S. 13(5) — Registration Act, 1908, S. 57(5) — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 64 and 65(f)

If the only purpose served by Section 51-A is to enable the court to admit the copy of the document in evidence there was no need for a legislative exercise because even otherwise the certified copy of the document could have been admitted in evidence. (Para 11)

The State has the burden to prove the market value of the lands acquired by it for which the State may have to depend upon the prices of lands similarly situated which were transacted or sold in the recent past, particularly those lands situated in the neighbouring areas. The practice had shown that for the state officials it was a burden to trace out the persons connected with such transactions mentioned in the sale deeds and then to examine them in court for the purpose of proving such transactions. It was in the wake of the aforesaid practical difficulties that the new Section 51-A was introduced in the LA Act. When the section says that certified copy of a registered document "may be accepted as evidence of the transaction recorded in such document" it enables the court to treat what is recorded in the document, in respect of the transactions referred to therein, as evidence. (Para 13)

The words "may be accepted as evidence" in the section indicate that there is no compulsion on the court to accept such transaction as evidence, but it is open to the court to treat them as evidence. Merely accepting them as evidence does not mean that the court is bound to treat them as reliable evidence. What is sought to be achieved is that the transactions recorded in the documents may be treated as evidence, just like any other evidence, and it is for the court to weigh all the pros and cons to decide whether such transaction can be relied on for understanding the real price of the land concerned. (Para 14)

There are similar enabling provisions in other statutes by which the courts are allowed to treat the facts stated in certain documents as evidence. However what value is to be attached to such evidence must necessarily be for the court to consider and decide. (Para 15)

Under Section 51-A of the Land Acquisition Act it is open to the court to act on the documents regarding the transaction recorded in such documents. However, that will not prevent any party who supports or opposes the said document or the transaction recorded therein to adduce other evidence to substantiate their stand regarding such transactions. But it is not possible to hold that even after the introduction of Section 51-A the position would remain the same as before. (Para 16)

The High Court cannot, therefore, be faulted for relying on the transactions recorded in Exts. A-2 and A-4 though no one was examined for proving such transactions. No evidence had been adduced by the State for creating any doubt regarding the bona fides or genuineness of the transactions mentioned therein. It is true that the area of lands involved in those sale deeds were relatively very small. Nonetheless, learned Judges persuaded themselves to consider the sale price indicated therein along with the prices shown in other transactions mentioned in Exts. A-1 and A-3 also, for reaching the conclusion that the market value of the acquired land should have been Rs 75,000 per acre. The increase made by the High Court is not so substantial as to warrant interference from the Supreme Court. (Para 18). Land Acquisition Officer & Mandal Revenue Officer v. V. Narasaiah, (2001) 3 SCC 530: AIR 2001 SC 1117.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2001]

Collector, Raigarh v. Dr. Harisingh Thakur, (1979) 1 SCC 236: AIR 1979 SC 472, distinguished by implication

Inder Singh v. Union of India, (1993) 3 SCC 240; P. Ram Reddy v. Land Acquisition Officer, (1995) 2 SCC 305, overruled by implication

Mangaldas Raghavji Ruparel v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1966 SC 128: 1966 Cri LJ 106, relied on

See fully Cement Corpn. of India Ltd. v. Purya, (2004) 8 SCC 270

[3026] — Ss. 293 and 391 — Expert opinion — Ballistic reports — Reliability — Use of word "appear" in report — Failure of accused to cross-examine the expert — Effect — On facts held, the reports were vague and ambiguous and hence, could not be relied upon — Submissions, inter alia, by accused rejected that: (i) prosecution tried to suppress report of ballistic expert R Ext. PW 89-DB since it was not favourable to them; (ii) weapon of offence was not required to show whether two empties were fired from same gun; (iii) Ext. PW 89-DB supports PW 2; (iv) prosecution sought favourable expert opinion from PW 95; and (v) in spite of application under S. 391 CrPC, prosecution chose not to call R and cross-examine him — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 45

The opinion of R, ballistic expert exhibited as Ext. PW 89-DB only says that "it appears that the two cartridge cases are from two different pistols". Such a vague opinion of the expert can neither be relied upon nor can be any basis to come to a conclusion that there were two persons who had fired two different shots. [Paras 163, 164 and 303(5)]

The moment R uses the word "appear" his opinion unsupported by reasons becomes inconclusive and stands discredited for the purpose of placing reliance on. Besides, clearly an option was available to the accused under Section 293 CrPC to call for the witness and ascertain from him for sure that the two empties were in fact fired from two different weapons. However, the accused did not choose to do so. (Para 179)

Similar is the case with the expert opinion of PW 95 which is again inconclusive. There is no evidence on record to suggest that PW 95 gave an opinion to oblige the prosecution. On the contrary, his response to the court question reveals that he was extremely confused as to the issue which had to be addressed by him in the capacity of an expert. In the concluding part of his testimony he reaffirms the opinion given by him which is that without test firing the empties from the weapon of offence no conclusive opinion can be given. (Para 180)

The stand of the defence that to opine whether the two cartridge cases are from the same weapon or not the pistol is not required, and the pistol is only required when the opinion is sought whether they are from that particular weapon or not, cannot be accepted. It is well settled that when pressure is built inside the cartridge case, which results in the pushing out of the bullet from the barrel, there is difference in the marks to the extent that it may be either clear or unclear and flattened or deepened thus no opinion can be rendered on account of this dissimilarity in the absence of the weapon of offence and test firing, as in the present case. Further, once the report of R is rendered inadmissible the two gun theory of the defence becomes wholly inadmissible and what remains is that the two empties found at the spot were .22" bore cartridges, that the live bullet found in the Tata Safari (used by the principal accused, the appellant M to commute to and from the place of the incident) was a .22" cartridge and that the gun belonging to the appellant was a .22" bore pistol which was used for the commission of the crime of murder of Jessica Lal. (Paras 172 and 178)

The argument that the weapon of offence is not required to determine whether the two bullets have been fired from the same gun is based on the wrong premise that the two empties would necessarily consist of features which would enable an expert in determining the said fact. For instance, as in the case of a handwriting expert who has to give an opinion about two different sets of near identical questioned documents and as to whether the same belong to different persons, if the argument of the accused has to be accepted then the expert should be able to give such an opinion without having in his possession the specimen handwriting and the admitted handwriting of the accused. It is stated that such an approach would render the opinion as that of a layman and not an expert. Similar would be case of a fingerprint expert who undertakes the process of discovering two different sets of fingerprint which are in question, without having the specimen or the admitted fingerprint of the accused in question. In other words, an expert is only an expert if he follows the well-accepted guidelines to arrive at a conclusion and supports the same with logical reasoning. (Para 178)

It is well settled that while giving reports after the ballistic examination, the bullets, cartridge cases and the cartridges recovered and weapon of offence recovered are carefully examined and test firing is done at the FSL by the said weapon of offence and then only a specific opinion is given. (Para 164)

The defence sought to rely upon the testimony of PW 2 with regard to the two gun theory and sought to corroborate that part of PW 2's testimony with the testimony of the two ballistic experts. It has also been contended by the defence that the testimony of a hostile witness must be corroborated by the other reliable evidence on record in order to be admissible. The law is very clear that where a witness for the prosecution turns hostile, the court may rely upon so much of the testimony, which supports the case of the prosecution and is corroborated by other evidence. PW 2's testimony as regards the identity of the person shooting, is certainly not corroborated by the testimony of the experts since both the experts have given opinions which cannot qualify as conclusive opinion of experts. (Paras 182 and 97). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-4-2010]

A.E.G. Carapiet v. A.Y. Derderian, AIR 1961 Cal 359, referred to [3027] — Ss. 293(1) and (4) — Report of ballistic expert — Signed by Junior Scientific Officer (Ballistic) — Held, can be used as evidence in terms of sub-section (1) — View that he being not an officer enumerated under sub-section (4), his evidence cannot be read in evidence, cannot be accepted — Sub-section (4) envisages that court is to accept the documents issued by any of the six officers enumerated therein as valid evidence without examining the author of the documents (Para 6). State of H.P. v. Mast Ram, (2004) 8 SCC 660.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2004]

— S. 293(4) See also Ss. 293(1) and (4)

[3028] — S. 293(4)(e) — "Director" — Held, includes Joint Director — Report signed by Joint Director of Forensic Science Laboratory is admissible in evidence

On a true construction of Section 293(4) CrPC it has to be held that Joint Director is comprehended by the expression "Director". The amendment made in clause (e) of Section 293(4) now indicates that clearly. If the Joint Director was not comprehended within the expression Director then the legislature would have certainly named him while amending the clause and providing that Section 293 applies to the Deputy Director or Assistant Director of a Central Forensic Science Laboratory or a State Forensic Science Laboratory. A Joint Director is a higher officer than a Deputy Director or an Assistant Director and, therefore, it would be unreasonable to hold that a report signed by Joint Director is not admissible in evidence though a report signed by the Deputy Director or Assistant Director is now admissible. The High Court was right in holding that the report made by the Joint Director was admissible in evidence and that it deserved to be relied upon. Ammini v. State of Kerala, (1998) 2 SCC 301: 1998 SCC (Cri) 618: AIR 1998 SC 260: 1998 Cri LJ 481.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and M. Jagannadha Rao, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-1997]

— S. 294 See also Ss. 273 and 294

[3029] — S. 294 — Complainant giving evidence on affidavit — Admissibility and proof of enclosed documents — Affidavit should contain formal proof of enclosed documents — If objections are raised by accused as regards proof of the documents and objections are sustained by court, prosecution can seek to summon the witnesses and get the defect in proof of documents corrected — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 145(1)

There is also no merit in the submission that in giving evidence on affidavit, the deponent (the complainant or any of his witnesses) can introduce hearsay or irrelevant facts in evidence to which the accused could have objected if the deposition was made in court as examination-in-chief and hence the accused must have the right to call the complainant (or his witness giving evidence on affidavit) into the witness box for examination-in-chief so as to get the inadmissible parts in the affidavit excluded from his evidence. Section 145 with its non obstante clause makes it possible for the evidence of the complainant to be taken in the absence of the accused. But the affidavit of the complainant (or any of his witnesses) may be read in evidence "subject to all just exceptions". "Subject to all just exceptions" simply means that the evidence given on affidavit must be admissible and it must not include inadmissible materials such as facts not relevant to the issue or any hearsay statements. In case the complainant's affidavits contain statements that are not admissible in evidence, it is always open to the accused to point those out to the court and the court would then surely deal with the objections in accordance with law. (Paras 40 and 23)

There is no substance in the further submission that when the complainant gives his evidence on affidavit, then the documents produced along with the affidavit(s) are not proved automatically and unless the accused admits those documents under Section 294 CrPC, the documents must be proved by oral testimony. There is no reason why the affidavits should not also contain the formal proof of the enclosed documents. In case, however, the accused raises any objections with regard to the validity or sufficiency of the proof of the documents submitted along with the affidavit and if the objections are sustained by the court, it is always open to the prosecution to have the witness concerned summoned and get the lacuna in the proof of the documents corrected. (Para 41). Mandvi Cooperative Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore, (2010) 3 SCC 83.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Tarun Chatterjee and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-1-2010]

[3030] — Ss. 294, 242, 243 and 244 — Proof of a document — Held, a document is proved by examining its author — A document is therefore not admissible unless it is proved — Further held, if a document has been marked as an exhibit and it is not objected to by the opposite party, such party is estopped from questioning its admissibility later on — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 64, 62, 67 and 115

Ordinarily if a party to an action does not object to a document being taken on record and the same is marked as an exhibit, he is estopped and precluded from questioning admissibility thereof at a later stage. However, a document becomes inadmissible in evidence unless its author is examined; contents thereof cannot be held to have been proved unless he is examined and subjected to cross-examination in court of law. The document which is otherwise inadmissible cannot be taken in evidence only because no objection to admissibility thereof was taken. In a criminal case, subject to shifting of burden depending upon statutes and/or the decisions of superiors courts, right of an accused is protected in terms of Article 21 of the Constitution. The procedure laid in that behalf, therefore, must be strictly complied with. Exhibits 4, 5 and 6 (medical opinions relating to proper treatment that ought to have been given to the deceased patient in the present case) are not admissible in evidence in criminal trial. The said exhibits are however admissible before the Consumer Court. This is because provisions of the Evidence Act are not applicable to the Consumer Court. The Commission is merely to comply with the principles of natural justice, save and except the ones laid down under Section 13(4) of the Consumer Protection Act. Proceedings before the National Commission are although judicial proceedings, yet at the same time, it is not a civil court within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure. It may have all the trappings of a civil court yet it cannot be called a civil court. (Paras 37 to 39, 43 and 45). Malay Kumar Ganguly v. Dr. Sukumar Mukherjee, (2009) 9 SCC 221: (2009) 3 CPJ 17 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-8-2009]

Bharat Bank Ltd. v. Employees, AIR 1950 SC 188: 1950 SCR 459; Nahar Industrial Enterprises Ltd. v. Hong Kong & Shanghai Banking Corpn., (2009) 8 SCC 646; J.J. Merchant (Dr.) v. Shrinath Chaturvedi, (2002) 6 SCC 635; R.V.E. Venkatachala Gounder v. Arulmigu Viswesaraswami & V.P. Temple, (2003) 8 SCC 752, relied on

[3031] — S. 294(3) — Non-examination of medical officer concerned — Effect — Held, where genuineness of injury report and post-mortem report had been admitted by defence, the same could be read as substantive evidence to prove correctness of its contents without doctor being examined

Argument that non-examination of the medical officers concerned is fatal for the prosecution also liable to be rejected because defence admitted the genuineness of the injury reports and the post-mortem examination reports before the trial court. So the genuineness and authenticity of the documents stands proved and would be treated as valid evidence under Section 294 CrPC. It is settled position of law that if the genuineness of any document filed by a party is not disputed by the opposite party it can be read as substantive evidence under sub-section (3) of Section 294 CrPC. Accordingly, the post-mortem report, if its genuineness is not disputed by the opposite party, the said post-mortem report can be read as substantive evidence to prove the correctness of its contents without the doctor concerned being examined. (Para 21). Akhtar v. State of Uttaranchal, (2009) 13 SCC 722: (2009) 78 AIC 172 (SC): (2009) 4 All LJ 544.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.B. Sinha, B. Sudershan Reddy and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-2009]

— S. 296 See also S. 510-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1278 in Vol. 2

— S. 296 See also Ss. 313 and 296

[3032] — S. 296 — Evidence of formal character given by affidavit — Failure of prosecution to examine the deponent police official — Rejection of said evidence — Propriety of — Stating the object and purpose of S. 296, held, High Court erred in using such a premise for setting aside the conviction and sentence of the accused-respondent — Opium Act, 1878, S. 9

The respondent was charge-sheeted by the police for the offence under Section 9 of the Opium Act. He was found in possession of 4.5 kg of opium wrapped in glazed paper, the sample of which was forwarded to the Chemical Examiner, who, after testing the same, reported that it was opium. Two police personnel produced affidavits regarding the role played by them in forwarding the sample to the Chemical Examiner. The trial Magistrate found that the evidence of the prosecution was enough to convict him of the offence under Section 9 of the Opium Act. The Sessions Court upheld the conviction and sentence passed by the trial court. In revision, the High Court quashed the conviction and sentence passed on the accused-respondent by rejecting the evidence of policemen tendered by means of affidavit. The prosecution challenged the said verdict of the High Court in the instant appeal. Setting aside the impugned judgment,

Held :

The normal mode of giving evidence is by examining the witness in court. But that course involves, quite often, spending of time of the witness, the trouble to reach the court and wait till he is called by the court, besides all the strain in answering questions and cross-questions in open court. It also involves costs which on many occasions are not small. The enabling provision of Section 296 is thus a departure from the usual mode of giving evidence. The object of providing such an exception is to help the court to gain the time and cost, besides relieving the witness of his troubles, when all that the said witness has to say in court relates only to some formal points. (Para 7)

Quite often different steps adopted by police officers during the investigation might relate to formalities prescribed by law. Evidence, if necessary on those formalities, should normally be tendered by affidavits and not by examining all such policemen in court. If any party to a lis wishes to examine the deponent of the affidavit, it is open to him to make an application before the court that he requires the deponent to be examined or cross-examined in court. When any such application is made, it is the duty of the court to call such person to the court for the purpose of being examined. (Para 8)

In the present case, the facts stated in the affidavit were purely of a formal character. At any rate, even the defence could not dispute that aspect because no request or motion was made on behalf of the accused to summon the deponents of those affidavits to be examined in court. In such a situation, it was quite improper that the High Court used such a premise for setting aside the conviction and sentence passed on the respondent. (Para 10). State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33: AIR 2001 SC 3955.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, (1978) 4 SCC 453: 1979 SCC (Cri) 74, relied on [3033] — S. 296 — Police Officer taking fingerprints of accused not examined — He however submitting an affidavit — Held, to be admissible evidence — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 45 — CrPC, 1898, S. 510-A. Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, (1978) 4 SCC 453: 1979 SCC (Cri) 74: AIR 1978 SC 1399: 1978 Cri LJ 1414.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria, N.L. Untwalia and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-1978]

[3034] — S. 296 — Provisions under S. 296 for giving evidence of formal nature by affidavit — Object and purpose of — Held, apart from relieving the witness of his troubles, it is to help the court to gain the time and cost. (Para 7). State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33: AIR 2001 SC 3955.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, (1978) 4 SCC 453: 1979 SCC (Cri) 74, relied on [3035] — S. 296 — Time-bound expeditious disposal in criminal cases — Applicability and implications of S. 145(2), NI Act and S. 296 CrPC. Radhey Shyam Garg v. Naresh Kumar Gupta, (2009) 13 SCC 201: (2009) 80 AIC 54 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

[3036] — S. 296 — Non obstante clause of S. 143, NI Act, held, bars applicability of pari materia provision of S. 296 CrPC — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 143 and 145. Radhey Shyam Garg v. Naresh Kumar Gupta, (2009) 13 SCC 201: (2009) 80 AIC 54 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

[3037] — Ss. 296 and 61 — Whether S. 145(2), NI Act permits directing examination-in-chief of person whose evidence has been given on affidavit — Pre-summoning and post-summoning evidence of complainant recorded by way of affidavits — Complainant cross-examined — Accused's application under S. 145(2) for examination-in-chief of complainant — Maintainability — Held, S. 145(2), NI Act does not include within its scope examination-in-chief — Reasons for, discussed — S. 145(2) however includes the complainant's right to re-examination in terms of Evidence Act — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 137 and 138 — CPC, 1908, Or. 19 R. 1 and Or. 18 R. 4 — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 145(2)

The respondent filed a complaint petition against the appellant-accused for commission of an alleged offence under Section 138, NI Act. Pre-summoning evidence by the complainant was recorded by way of an affidavit. Cognizance of the offence was taken and summons was issued. Post-summoning evidence was also adduced by the complainant by way of an affidavit. The appellant-accused's application under Section 145(2), NI Act was dismissed by the Magistrate and was not interfered with by the High Court by reason of the impugned order under Section 482 CrPC.

Dismissing the appeal with costs assessed at Rs 25,000,

Held :

The words "examine any person giving evidence on affidavit as to the facts contained therein" in Section 145(2), NI Act, would mean for the purpose of cross-examination and not examination-in-chief. Although Section 145(1) uses the term "may" and Section 145(2) uses the term "shall", both the clauses must be read together. If an affidavit in terms of the provisions of Section 145 is to be considered to be an evidence, it is difficult to comprehend as to why the court will ask the deponent of the said affidavit to examine himself with regard to the contents thereof once over again. He may be cross-examined and upon completion of his evidence, he may be re-examined. (Paras 19 and 10)

Section 145(2), NI Act and Section 296 CrPC should be interpreted assuming the possibilities that a party examining his own witnesses including the complainant may not affirm an affidavit or would like to examine himself in court. (Para 15)

There is no dispute with regard to the proposition of law that the court only interprets the law and cannot legislate it. However, while interpreting a provision, the court must be able to assign a meaning thereto. A plain meaning or literal interpretation should not lead to absurdity or an anomalous situation. (Para 16)

Section 145, NI Act, which seeks to attend a salutary purpose, must be read reasonably. The Statement of Objects and Reasons of the NI Act is for the purpose of expedition of the trial. A criminal trial even otherwise is required to be expeditiously held. Therefore, there is no justification for arriving at a finding that a witness can again be summoned for his examination-in-chief in the court despite affirming affidavit in that behalf. Further Section 145, NI Act contains a non obstante clause. Thus the provisions of CrPC like the pari materia Section 296 CrPC are not attracted. (Paras 10, 19 and 20)

On the other hand, the issue of exemption from summoning a complainant by having regard to Section 61 CrPC also has no application to the facts and circumstances of this case. (Para 21)

The appellant has not been prejudiced in any manner whatsoever. The respondent was cross-examined at length. His cross-examination runs into nine typed pages. Evidence by way of an affidavit was filed both in the civil proceedings as also in the criminal proceedings. (Paras 9 and 3). Radhey Shyam Garg v. Naresh Kumar Gupta, (2009) 13 SCC 201: (2009) 80 AIC 54 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

Ameer Trading Corpn. Ltd. v. Shapoorji Data Processing Ltd., (2004) 1 SCC 702, relied on

State of Jharkhand v. Govind Singh, (2005) 10 SCC 437: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1570, clarified and distinguished

Sushil Kumar Sharma v. Union of India, (2005) 6 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1473, distinguished [3038] — S. 296(1) — "Evidence of formal character" — Meaning of — Held, depends upon the facts of the case (Para 8). State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33: AIR 2001 SC 3955.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

[3039] — S. 296(2) — Not identical to S. 145(2), Negotiable Instruments Act — Distinguishing features — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 145(2)

There is no merit in the submission that Section 145(2) of the Act is identical to Section 296(2) CrPC. Neither Section 296(2) CrPC nor the decision in Naib Din case, (2001) 8 SCC 578, has any relevance or application to the trial concerning a dishonoured cheque under Sections 143 to 146 of the Act. (Para 38)

Moreover, the crucial difference between Section 296(2) CrPC and Section 145(2) of the Act is that the former deals with the evidence of a formal nature whereas under the latter provision, all evidences including substantive evidence may be given on affidavit. Section 296 is part of the elaborate procedure of a regular trial under CrPC while the whole object of Section 145(2) of the Act is to design a much simpler and swifter trial procedure departing from the elaborate and time-consuming trial procedure of CrPC. Hence, notwithstanding the apparent verbal similarity between Section 145(2) of the Act and Section 296(2) CrPC, it would be completely wrong to interpret the true scope and meaning of the one in the light of the other. (Para 39)

There is also no merit in the submission that in giving evidence on affidavit, the deponent (the complainant or any of his witnesses) can introduce hearsay or irrelevant facts in evidence to which the accused could have objected if the deposition was made in court as examination-in-chief and hence the accused must have the right to call the complainant (or his witness giving evidence on affidavit) into the witness box for examination-in-chief so as to get the inadmissible parts in the affidavit excluded from his evidence. Section 145 with its non obstante clause makes it possible for the evidence of the complainant to be taken in the absence of the accused. But the affidavit of the complainant (or any of his witnesses) may be read in evidence "subject to all just exceptions". "Subject to all just exceptions" simply means that the evidence given on affidavit must be admissible and it must not include inadmissible materials such as facts not relevant to the issue or any hearsay statements. In case the complainant's affidavits contain statements that are not admissible in evidence, it is always open to the accused to point those out to the court and the court would then surely deal with the objections in accordance with law. (Paras 40 and 23). Mandvi Cooperative Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore, (2010) 3 SCC 83.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Tarun Chatterjee and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-1-2010]

State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33, distinguished [3040] — S. 296(2) — Evidence of formal nature given by affidavit — Duty of court, when application is made for examining the deponent — Held, is to call such person to the court for the purpose of being examined. (Paras 7 and 8). State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33: AIR 2001 SC 3955.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, (1978) 4 SCC 453: 1979 SCC (Cri) 74, relied on

[3041] — S. 299(1) — Evidence of witnesses recorded in absence of accused — S. 299(1) is an exception to S. 33 of Evidence Act and therefore, all the conditions precedent for utilising such evidence viz. (1) accused absconded; and (2) "deponent is dead or incapable of giving evidence or cannot be found or his presence cannot be procured" must be established by the prosecution — First condition proved by prosecution in this case — As regards the second condition, prosecution case was that summons were issued but process-server reported that the deponents were dead — But trial court not recording its conclusion that on material it was satisfied that the deponents were dead — However, High Court, having regard to the original records, finding that the factum of death of the deponents was proved — In view of the appellate court's finding, held, the pre-conditions of S. 299(1) satisfied — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 33

According to the FIR version the appellant, who was serving in the army, came and indiscriminately fired with the army rifle killing four persons. However, the appellant could not be found and was declared a proclaimed offender. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate thereupon recorded statement of 27 witnesses under Section 299 CrPC. The appellant was later arrested and then on being committed by the Magistrate to the Court of Session, the Sessions Judge tried him for the offences charged. Out of the 27 witnesses who had been examined under Section 299 CrPC, five of them had died by the time charges were framed against the appellant. Their statements recorded under Section 299 CrPC were, therefore, exhibited during the trial. 22 other witnesses who had also been examined under Section 299 CrPC were examined as prosecution witnesses during trial but they did not support the prosecution and, therefore, they were cross-examined by the Public Prosecutor and were declared hostile. So far as the appellant, being the author of the crime, was concerned, the Sessions Judge relied upon the statement of the five deceased eyewitnesses, which had been recorded under Section 299 CrPC. Though according to the prosecution case, it was only after summons being issued and the process-server having reported those persons to be dead, their former statements were tendered as evidence in trial, no order was made by the trial court, recording a conclusion that on the materials, he was satisfied that the persons who were examined by the Magistrate under Section 299(1) were dead. On the basis of the evidence of the deceased witnesses the Sessions Judge convicted the appellant under Section 302 and under Section 307 IPC as well as under Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act. On appeal, the High Court upheld the conviction of the appellant, relying upon the selfsame materials namely the statement recorded under Section 299 CrPC of those five persons. The High Court looked into the original records and it was found that the summons had been sent by the trial Judge, summoning the witnesses repeatedly to appear before the trial court and on every occasion, the summons were received back with the report that the persons had already died. The sole question that arose for consideration was under what circumstances and by what method, the statements of five persons could have been tendered in the case for being admissible under Section 33 of the Evidence Act and whether they can form the basis of conviction. Dismissing the appeal of the accused,

Held :

Section 299(1) CrPC consists of two parts: The first part speaks of the circumstances under which witnesses produced by the prosecution could be examined in the absence of the accused and the second part speaks of the circumstances when such deposition can be given in evidence against the accused in any inquiry or trial for the offence with which he is charged. This procedure contemplated under Section 299 CrPC is thus an exception to the principle embodied in Section 33 of the Evidence Act inasmuch as under Section 33, the evidence of a witness, which a party has no right or opportunity to cross-examine is not legally admissible. Being an exception, it is necessary, therefore, that all the conditions prescribed, must be strictly complied with. For taking the benefits of Section 299, the conditions precedent therein must be duly established and the prosecution, which proposes to utilise the said statement as evidence in trial, must, therefore, prove about the existence of the preconditions before tendering the evidence. It is only then, the statements of witnesses recorded under Section 299 CrPC before the arrest of the accused can be utilised in evidence in trial after the arrest of such accused. In other words, before recording the statement of the witnesses produced by the prosecution, the court must be satisfied that the accused has absconded or that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, as provided under the first part of Section 299(1). When the accused is arrested and put up for trial, if any such deposition of any witness is intended to be used as evidence against the accused in any trial, then the court must be satisfied that either the deponent is dead or incapable of giving evidence or cannot be found or his presence cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience, which would be unreasonable. (Para 4)

In the case in hand, there is no grievance about non-compliance with any of the requirements of the first part of sub-section (1) of Section 299 CrPC. As regards the second part of Section 299(1), it is true that the Sessions Judge had not recorded any order and it would have certainly been in compliance with the requirement of Section 299 that the Court, while such statements are tendered in evidence should have recorded as to how the preconditions of the second part of Section 299 had been complied with. But when the appellate court examines the records of the proceedings and comes to a conclusion that in fact those persons have died long before the summons on them to appear as witness, could be issued, the evidence thus tendered cannot be ignored from consideration, particularly, in a case like the one where all other eyewitnesses, 22 in number did not support the prosecution on being examined and there has been a gruesome murder inasmuch as the appellant killed four persons by indiscriminately shooting at them from his rifle, which was given to him in the cantonment. The accused never raised the contention even in the Supreme Court that the persons are not dead but raised the sole contention that it had not been established by the prosecution that the persons were not dead. The High Court did record a conclusion on examining the records of the proceedings that the witnesses were dead and, therefore, their former statements under Section 299 could be treated as evidence. There is no infirmity with the said conclusion of the High Court and, therefore, the preconditions of Section 299(1) have been complied with. Once the statements of those witnesses, are considered, and the Sessions Judge as well as the High Court have relied upon the same and based the conviction, there is no infirmity requiring the Supreme Court's interference with the conviction and sentence recorded by the High Court. In the aforesaid circumstances, it must be held that the prosecution case has been proved beyond reasonable doubt. (Paras 4 and 5). Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 4 SCC 41: 2000 SCC (Cri) 740: AIR 2000 SC 1416: 2000 Cri LJ 1803.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-3-2000]

Chainchal Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1946 PC 1: 1945 All LJ 550; Jose v. State of Kerala, (1973) 3 SCC 472: 1973 SCC (Cri) 372, relied on

Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana, 1998 Cri LJ 1008 (P&H), affirmed

[3042] — S. 299 — Application — Deprivation of an absconding accused's right of cross-examination — Ground of estoppel on account of waiver of right of cross-examination — If established — When cognizance under S. 14(1) had not been taken and there was no chance of trial, the accused cannot be presumed to have waived his right of cross-examination — Further, ordinarily, an accused would not be presumed to have waived such valuable right — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 137 and 138 — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, Ss. 14(5) and (1)

The issue of waiver of the appellant-accused's right to cross-examination could have arisen only if he had been facing trial. Undoubtedly in the order dated 30-12-1993, while framing charges his name had been shown as an absconding accused. He was, therefore, not before the court. He could not have taken part in the trial. He was arrested formally in certain other cases only on 4-8-1993 and charges were framed against him only on 15-11-2003. All the witnesses expired prior to framing of charges on 15-11-2003. It is not the contention of the respondents that the Magistrate despite the said chargesheet dated 27-8-1993 filed in the instant case had taken cognizance against the appellant-accused. It is incorrect to contend that such a right to cross-examination could be exercised at any date prior thereto. (Paras 52 and 51)

Ordinarily, an accused would not be presumed to have waived his right to cross-examination. The right of an accused to watch the prosecution witnesses deposing before a court of law indisputably is a valuable right. Such a valuable right cannot create any prejudice. A right to examine, cross-examine and re-examine a witness, apart from being a natural right is a statutory right under Sections 137 and 138 of the Evidence Act. Such an opportunity is to be granted. An accused has not only a valuable right to represent himself, he has also the right to be informed thereabout. If an exception is to be carved out, the statute must say so expressly or the same must be capable of being inferred by necessary implication. There are statutes like the Extradition Act, 1962 which excludes taking of evidence vis-à-vis opinion. (Paras 49, 18, 57 and 24)

Further, an order which is a nullity cannot be brought into effect for invoking the principles of estoppel, waiver or res judicata. Where an order is passed without jurisdiction as in the present case, the same would be a nullity and would not attract these procedural principles. (Para 49). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

Sarabjit Rick Singh v. Union of India, (2008) 2 SCC 417: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 449; Chief Justice of A.P. v. L.V.A. Dixitulu, (1979) 2 SCC 34: 1979 SCC (L&S) 99; Noor Aga v. State of Punjab, (2008) 16 SCC 417; Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; Cholan Roadways Ltd. v. G. Thirugnanasambandam, (2005) 3 SCC 241: 2005 SCC (L&S) 395; Vimlaben Ajitbhai Patel v. Vatslaben Ashokbhai Patel, (2008) 4 SCC 649; S.L. Kapoor v. Jagmohan, (1980) 4 SCC 379; A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372; State of Haryana v. State of Punjab, (2004) 12 SCC 673; Rajasthan SRTC v. Zakir Hussain, (2005) 7 SCC 447: 2005 SCC (L&S) 945, relied on

[3043] — S. 299 — Applicability — Proof of jurisdictional facts under — Relevant date — Held, for the purposes of S. 299, the jurisdictional facts must be existing on the date of passing of the order

Jurisdictional facts for invoking Section 299 CrPC must be existing on the date of passing of the order. For invoking Section 299 CrPC, the Designated Judge was required to hold on the date of passing of the order, namely, 1-1-1994 that the appellant-accused had been absconding on that date. In view of the nature of evidence which had been brought on record, it was not possible for him to hold so. (Paras 33 and 42). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

[3044] — S. 299 — Application under — Non-absconding accused (in custody of other investigating agencies), held, has a right to know about any application under S. 299 — Scope of accused's right and entitlements under, discussed — Prosecution when informed that accused not absconding, held, is duty-bound to inform accused of S. 299 CrPC application — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 22. Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

[3045] — S. 299 — Approach to be followed in exercising power under — Relevance of conduct of accused — Judicial dignity and decorum prescribed — Constitution of India, Art. 21 — Prescription for judges — Considering the valuable nature of rights arising out of Art. 21, judicial dignity and decorum, prescribed for infringing such rights on the abovestated grounds — Relevance of conduct of accused

Though the present case has been decided on the basis that the right of confrontation is not a fundamental right or whereby the accused's fundamental right has not been breached, Article 21 envisages a fair trial, a fair procedure and a fair investigation. By reason of such a right alone the appellant-accused was entitled not only to be informed about his fundamental rights and statutory rights but it was obligatory on the part of the Special Public Prosecutor to place on record the requisite materials before the Designated Judge to show that the appellant, after his arrest in certain Delhi cases on 23-7-1993 was not an absconder and thus the provisions of Section 299 CrPC were not attracted. (Para 53)

For invocation of the provisions of Section 299 CrPC, the principle of natural justice is inbuilt in the right of an accused. Although the accused is entitled to fair and speedy trial, he cannot, by his conduct, interfere with the governmental priority to proceed with the trial. In such an event several options are open to courts. What, however, is necessary is to maintain judicial dignity and decorum by taking within its umbrage the principle of natural justice. (Para 23)

The larger question, namely, as to whether right to confront a witness by an accused is a fundamental right or not, need not be gone into in these proceedings as the appellant does not question the constitutionality of either Section 299 CrPC or Section 14(5) TADA or Section 33, Evidence Act. There is no express provision for such a right in our Constitution nor have the courts accepted it as a fundamental right within the meaning of Article 21 of the Constitution. Therefore, in the present case, it has to be considered as a statutory right. (Paras 19 and 18)

Fundamental rights are not absolute being subject to reasonable restrictions. Even in the United States of America, the accused's right of confrontment under the Sixth Amendment is not absolute and is subject to just exceptions, including an orderly behaviour in the courtroom. (Paras 20 and 22). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution, relied on

Goldberg v. Kelly, 25 L Ed 2d 287: 397 US 254 (1969); Greene v. McElroy, 3 L Ed 2d 1377: 360 US 474 (1958); Illinois v. Allen, 397 US 337 (1970), relied on

[Ed.: Though Art. 19 itself provides for reasonable restrictions on the freedoms mentioned therein, the issue as to whether the rights of undertrials under Art. 21 are subject to reasonable restrictions provided for by different statutory schemes came up for consideration in Kalyan Chandra Sarkar case, (2005) 3 SCC 284, wherein it was held that the rights of undertrials under Art. 21 are not absolute and are circumscribed by relevant statutes imposing reasonable restrictions thereon.]

[3046] — S. 299 — Constitutionality of — Issue, left open — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, Ss. 19 and 14(5). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

[3047] — S. 299 — Deprivation of an absconding accused's right of cross-examination — Approach and conditions precedent — Duty of court/prosecution in proving establishing the jurisdictional fact i.e. the fact of absconding — Recording of evidence in absence of accused — Procedural safeguards — Compliance with — Extreme importance of — Necessity of recording reasons — Procedural safeguards of the nature of just manner and approach and mandatory duty of court/prosecution in establishing the existence of the jurisdictional fact i.e. fact of absconding, stressed — The accused's right of cross-examination being a valuable right, its deprivation, held, is an exception which should be for just causes — The approach should be judicious with total application of mind — The duty of court/prosecution should be to prove and establish by way of leading and appreciating evidence, respectively, regarding existence of the jurisdictional fact i.e. the fact of absconding — And the final imperative duty of court should be to record the evidence and rationale requiring the urgency involved in such deprivation — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 33 — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 22 and 14 — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, S. 14(5). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

[3048] — S. 299 — Invocation of — Relative scope vis-à-vis S. 14(5), TADA — Procedure for — Imperative necessity to record reasons — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 33 — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, S. 14(5)

The main issue in these appeals was the applicability of Section 299 CrPC, Section 14(5) TADA and Section 33 of the Evidence Act, 1872. The appellant-accused was involved in several cases. In the present case offence of alleged murder which took place in Mumbai in 9-10-1989, the appellant-accused was declared as an absconder under Section 82 CrPC on 9-2-1993 and was also booked under TADA.

On 27-8-1993 charge-sheet was filed against twelve accused persons, but eight accused persons including appellant were shown to be absconding. On 23-7-1993, the appellant-accused was arrested in Delhi in connection with other cases. Investigating officer in his letter dated 1-9-1993 informed the Special Judge, TADA (Mumbai) that the appellant had been arrested in Delhi cases. On 23-10-1993, the appellant was arrested by Maharashtra Police in connection with other cases of 1992. On 24-10-1993, the appellant was produced before CJM and was remanded to police custody. On 20-11-1993, the appellant was arrested in two other cases and remained in judicial custody till 21-12-1993. On 23-11-1993, an SLP order (arising out an SLP filed by appellant) directed splitting of the present case of absconding accused from other cases. On 30-12-1993 charges were framed by the Magistrate in the present case. On 1-1-1994, an application under Section 299 CrPC was presented before the Special Judge, TADA and which was allowed on the same day. On 19-12-1994, the Delhi High Court dismissed a writ filed by State of Maharashtra to secure the custody of the appellant. On 11-7-1995, the investigating officer (through Public Prosecutor) filed a Section 83 CrPC application that the appellant was not absconding. On 4-8-1997, the appellant was formally arrested in the present case. A supplementary charge-sheet was filed on 19-8-1997. Charges were framed against six accused persons including the appellant on 15-11-2003. In the said proceeding two applications were filed by the Public Prosecutor on 25-9-1996 and 11-10-2006 for exhibiting the depositions of PW 36 and nine other witnesses, who had since expired, which by reason of the impugned order dated 6-3-2007 had been allowed. These ten witnesses had been examined starting from 6-11-1995 (PW 36) and 18-12-1995 (PW 60) to 22-1-1997 (PW 83). And they had died between 5-9-1997 (PW 72) and 22-6-2004 (PW 83).

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

For the purpose of passing an order, be it under Section 299 CrPC or Section 14(5), TADA, the court is required to exhibit total application of mind to arrive at a definitive finding as regards the existence of the jurisdictional facts, in absence whereof, the order must be held to be arbitrary and without jurisdiction. Mere existence of evidence is not enough. Application of mind by the court for analysing/appreciating such evidence/material and recording of cogent reasons for the urgency of recording evidence in absence of an accused or his pleader is imperative in character. Supposing there is evidence regarding absconding (which is not the case in the present case) and absence of prospects of arrest, even then there can be no presumption in law that the Magistrate has done his duty if he fails to record evidence. (Paras 25, 28, 29, 35 and 44)

The accused ordinarily and subject to just exceptions must be facing trial. The alleged fact of absconding has to be tried and established. It is the only safeguard to check an arbitrary exercise of power. It expressly preserves the right of the accused to recall the witness for cross-examination. A judicious approach is imperative. The courts must bear in mind that an accused has fundamental rights as also human rights. (Paras 14, 35, 36, 44, and 45)

It is not a case wherein Section 14(5) of the Act would have been attracted since the order of the TADA Court specifically invoked Section 299 CrPC. No application was filed under Section 14(5). For invocation of Section 14(5), NDPS Act, materials are required to be brought on record so as to enable the court to arrive at a finding that it is necessary so to do. The condition precedent therefor is "if it thinks fit". For the said purpose the Designated Court is to record reasons. Such an order could be passed with a view to continue with the trial. It may be for a day or for a few days. The accused ordinarily and subject to just exceptions must be facing the trial. In other words, the court is required to opine that recording of evidence is urgent or there existed certain and cogent reasons which would enable him to record evidence in absence of an accused or his pleader. Recording of reasons is imperative in character. It is the only safeguard which had been provided to check an arbitrary exercise of power. TADA was enacted to make special provisions for the prevention of, and for coping with, terrorist and disruptive activities and for matters connected or incidental thereto. It does not contemplate a situation like the one under Section 299 CrPC. By reason of the said provision even the relevance of the evidence as envisaged under Section 33 of the Evidence Act is not taken away. (Paras 52, 44 and 12)

On a bare perusal of the provisions of Section 299 CrPC and Section 14(5), TADA, it would be evident that they operate in different fields. The ingredients of the said provisions are different. Materials, which are, thus, required to be brought on record by the prosecution for application of the aforementioned provisions may be different, although they may be overlapping to some extent. (Para 50). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

Shiv Chander Kapoor v. Amar Bose, (1990) 1 SCC 234; Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 4 SCC 41: 2000 SCC (Cri) 740, relied on

Rustom v. Emperor, AIR 1915 All 411; State of Mysore v. Sanjeeva, AIR 1956 Mys 1; Manbodh v. Emperor, AIR 1944 Nag 274; Nazir Ahmad v. Emperor, AIR 1936 PC 253(2): 17 Lah 629; Ghurbin Bind v. Queen Empress, ILR (1884) 10 Cal 1097, approved

Bhagwati v. Emperor, AIR 1918 All 60, disapproved

[3049] — S. 299 — Word "absconding" — Meaning and implication for the purposes of S. 299

The term "absconding" has been defined in several dictionaries. The primary meaning of the word is to hide. It means to depart secretly or suddenly, especially to avoid arrest, prosecution or service of process. (Para 40). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

Black's Law Dictionary; P. Ramanatha Aiyar; Oxford English Dictionary; Words and Phrases, referred to [3050] — Ss. 299 and 82 — Recording of evidence in absence of absconding accused — Conditions precedent for i.e. (1) proof that accused has absconded, and (2) there is no immediate prospect of arresting the accused, whether conjunctive or disjunctive — Importance of the word "proved" in S. 299(1) — Material that must be placed before court and considered by it before passing order under S. 299 — Special Judge allowing recording of evidence under S. 299 in the absence of the accused only on the ground that he had been declared a proclaimed absconder under S. 82 — Legality — Special Judge passing order under S. 299 without considering prospects of accused's immediate arrest in the background that accused was already in custody of other investigating agencies/authorities in connection with other cases — Held, both conditions contained in the first part of S. 299 must be read conjunctively and not disjunctively — Therefore, invocation of S. 299 without considering the second condition as to whether there was immediate prospect of securing the presence of accused, held, was unjust and unsustainable — Further held, the term "proved" in S. 299, providing for an exception to the general rule, is required to be strictly construed — An ipse dixit of the court would not be sufficient for attracting an extraordinary provision

Section 299(1) CrPC is in two parts—the first part provides for proof of jurisdictional fact in respect of absconding of an accused person and the second that there was no immediate prospect of arresting him. Both the conditions contained in the first part of Section 299 CrPC must be read conjunctively and not disjunctively. Satisfaction of one of the requirements is not sufficient. (Paras 29, 30 and 16)

The term "absconding" has been defined in several dictionaries. The primary meaning of the word is to hide. It means to depart secretly or suddenly, especially to avoid arrest, prosecution or service of process. (Para 40)

Whether there was no prospect of securing the appellant-accused's immediate presence was required to be considered by the Special Judge before passing an order under Section 299 CrPC. However, despite the fact that the appellant had already been in custody of Delhi Police vis-à-vis Maharashtra Police, he was termed as an absconder. The application under Section 299 CrPC having been filed by the Special Public Prosecutor and the order having been passed on the same date (i.e. on 1-1-1994), it is beyond any cavil that no other material was placed before the Special Court except the fact that a proclamation of absconding under Section 82 CrPC had been issued against the appellant. (Paras 28 and 26)

The facts regarding arrest and custody of the appellant in other cases were required to be brought to the notice of the court. Much prior to the Section 299 CrPC application dated 1-1-1994 filed by the Special Public Prosecutor, the appellant had been arrested as far back as on 23-7-1993. By a letter dated 1-9-1993 the investigating officer himself had informed the court in regard thereto. Admittedly, at least in two cases the appellant had been arrested and produced before the courts in Maharashtra and remanded to the police custody. The court's attention should have also been drawn to these facts and the aforementioned letter dated 1-9-1993. There are enough materials on record to show that the appellant had made all attempts to be tried along with the other accused persons. (Paras 27 and 45 to 48)

Although Section 299 CrPC expressly provides for the power of the court to record evidence in absence of the accused, Section 299 CrPC must be strictly construed considering the effect of Section 273 CrPC which mandates recording of evidence in the presence of the accused or his pleader. Scrupulous compliance therewith is imperative in character. It is a well-known principle of interpretation of statute that any word defined in the statutory provision should ordinarily be given the same meaning while construing the other provisions thereof where the same term has been used. The term "proved" in Section 299, providing for an exception to the general rule, is required to be strictly construed. It is not an ipse dixit of the court that would be sufficient for attracting an extraordinary provision. In the present case moreover the appellant had not been absconding after he was arrested. (Paras 25, 16, 15, 35 and 39)

Jurisdictional facts for invoking Section 299 CrPC must be existing on the date of passing of the order. For invoking Section 299 CrPC, the Designated Judge was required to hold on the date of passing of the order, namely, 1-1-1994 that the appellant-accused had been absconding on that date. In view of the nature of evidence which had been brought on record, it was not possible for him to hold so. (Paras 33 and 42)

Once a person is arrested and/or is otherwise capable of being brought to court, a proclamation declaring accused as an absconder under Section 82 CrPC ceases to have any effect. It is not a law that once a proclaimed offender shall all along be treated to be so. If he had a right to take part in the trial, the trial court was duty-bound to provide for the same. In any event, in the present case the Designated Judge did not rely on the proclamation issued under Section 82 in February 1993. (Para 43). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

Black's Law Dictionary; P. Ramanatha Aiyar; Oxford English Dictionary; Words and Phrases, referred to

Janu v. Emperor, AIR 1947 Sind 122, approved

[3051] — Ss. 299 and 273 — S. 299 being an exception to S. 273, held, should be strictly construed

Although Section 299 CrPC expressly provides for the power of the court to record evidence in absence of the accused, Section 299 CrPC must be strictly construed considering the effect of Section 273 CrPC which mandates recording of evidence in the presence of the accused or his pleader. Scrupulous compliance therewith is imperative in character. It is a well-known principle of interpretation of statute that any word defined in the statutory provision should ordinarily be given the same meaning while construing the other provisions thereof where the same term has been used. The term "proved" in Section 299, providing for an exception to the general rule, is required to be strictly construed. It is not an ipse dixit of the court that would be sufficient for attracting an extraordinary provision. In the present case moreover the appellant had not been absconding after he was arrested. (Paras 25, 16, 15, 35 and 39). Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2009]

Janu v. Emperor, AIR 1947 Sind 122, approved

— S. 300 See also S. 403, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1181 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 300 See Ss. 200, 190(1)(a), 204, 300 and 482

See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300

See also Ss. 303, 300, 202 and 319

See also Ss. 437, 439, 300 and Chs. XXIX (Ss. 372 to 394) and XXX (Ss. 395 to 405)

See also Ss. 437(1) & 439(2) and S. 300

[3052] — S. 300 — Double jeopardy — Protection against, when available — Protection not available where conviction and sentence in earlier case not yet recorded — Same act or omission may constitute offences under two different Acts — Wild Life (Protection) Act, 1972, S. 56 proviso — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2) — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 26 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 71

The proviso to S. 56 is a facet of the fundamental and salutary principle that permeates penology and is reflected in analogous provisions of S. 26 of General Clauses Act, 1897; S. 71 IPC; S. 300 of the CrPC, 1973, and constitutionally guaranteed under Art. 20(2).

Broadly speaking, a protection against a second or multiple punishment for the same offence, technical complexities aside, includes a protection against re-prosecution after acquittal, a protection against re-prosecution after conviction and a protection against double or multiple punishment for the same offence. These protections have since received constitutional guarantee under Art. 20(2).

In order that the prohibition is attracted the same act must constitute an offence under more than one Act. If there are two distinct and separate offences with different ingredients under two different enactments, a double punishment is not barred.

The same set of facts, in conceivable cases, can constitute offences under two different laws. An act or an omission can amount to and constitute an offence under the IPC and at the same time constitute an offence under any other law.

However, in the present case there had been no prior conviction and sentence for an offence under S. 429 IPC even assuming that the two offences, one under S. 9(1) r/w S. 50 of the Wild Life (Protection) Act and the other under S. 429 IPC are substantially the same offence. Therefore, the bar of double jeopardy will not operate. State of Bihar v. Murad Ali Khan, (1988) 4 SCC 655: 1989 SCC (Cri) 27: AIR 1989 SC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-10-1988]

[3053] — S. 300 — Double jeopardy — Nature and scope — Principles reiterated — Burden of proof — Initial burden of proof to benefit from plea of double jeopardy, held, is on accused — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 26 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 101 and 102 — Constitution of United States of America — Vth Amendment — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2) (Paras 26 to 39)

Article 20(2) embodies protection against a second trial and conviction for the same offence. The fundamental right guaranteed under Article 20(2) has its roots in the common law maxim nemo debet bis vexari — a man shall not be brought into danger for one and the same offence more than once. If a person is charged again for the same offence, he can plead, as a complete defence, his former conviction, or as it is technically expressed, take the plea of autrefois convict. In order for the protection of Article 20(2) to be invoked there must be a prosecution as well as punishment in respect of the same offence before a court of law of competent jurisdiction or a tribunal. The proceedings contemplated are in the nature of criminal proceedings and prosecution in this context would mean initiation of criminal proceedings in accordance with prescribed procedure in the statute. (Paras 22 to 25)

Furthermore, the fundamental right guaranteed under Article 20(2) of the Constitution is in the nature of an injunction against the State prohibiting it to prosecute and punish any person for the same offence more than once but the initial burden is upon the accused to take the necessary plea and establish the same. (Para 36). Monica Bedi v. State of A.P., (2011) 1 SCC 284.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B. Sudershan Reddy and S.S. Nijjar, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-11-2010]

Maqbool Hussain v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 325: 1953 Cri LJ 1432: 1953 SCR 730, relied on

S.A. Venkataraman v. Union of India, AIR 1954 SC 375: 1954 Cri LJ 993: 1954 SCR 1150, considered

[3054] — S. 300 — Double jeopardy — Expression "for the same offence" occurring in Art. 20(2) of Constitution — Import of — Held, a person can be prosecuted and punished more than once even on substantially same facts, provided ingredients of both offences are totally different and they did not form same offence — Test is to ascertain whether the two offences are the same and it is not identity of allegations that matters but identity of ingredients of the offences — Thus, same facts may give rise to different prosecutions and punishment and in such an event protection afforded by Art. 20(2) is not available — A-3 was alleged to have obtained a fake passport by submitting false documents with help of A-4 to A-9, which was used by her to travel to Lisbon, Portugal — She had to face prosecution and suffer conviction and sentence in Portugal therefor — On facts held, prosecution and punishment by a competent court of jurisdiction at Lisbon was no bar for appellant A-3's prosecution and punishment under relevant provisions of IPC as conviction of appellant in Portugal was not for the same offence — Moreover, no factual foundation was laid as such by appellant taking plea of double jeopardy before trial court, nor was any such statement made in her examination under S. 313 CrPC — Lastly, perusal of judgment of Constitutional Court at Lisbon clearly shows that A-3's plea of double jeopardy is totally untenable — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2) (Paras 26 to 39)

A-3 was alleged to have obtained a fake passport by submitting false documents with the help of A-4 to A-9, which was used by her to travel to Lisbon, Portugal. She had to face the prosecution and suffer conviction and sentence in Portugal.

The trial court found her guilty of the offences punishable under Sections 120-B, 419 and 420 IPC, A-5 was found guilty of the offences under Section 120-B, Section 419 read with Section 109, Section 420 read with Section 109, Section 468 IPC and Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, A-7 guilty of the offence under Section 468 IPC, while A-8 was held guilty of the offences under Sections 120-B, 420, Section 419 read with Section 109 IPC, Section 420 read with Section 109 IPC and under Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. In appeal filed thereagainst, the High Court while confirming conviction of A-3, reduced the sentence of RI on all counts while maintaining the fine imposed. The conviction of A-5 and A-8 was also upheld but sentence imposed was reduced. As far as A-7 is concerned his conviction was altered from Section 468 IPC to Section 465 IPC and sentence of RI for 6 months and fine of Rs 500 with default stipulation was imposed. Hence, instant appeals by the appellant-accused. Monica Bedi v. State of A.P., (2011) 1 SCC 284.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B. Sudershan Reddy and S.S. Nijjar, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-11-2010]

Leo Roy Frey v. Supdt., District Jail, AIR 1958 SC 119: 1958 Cri LJ 260: 1958 SCR 822; State of Bombay v. S.L. Apte, AIR 1961 SC 578: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 725: (1961) 3 SCR 107; Bhagwan Swarup Lal Bishan Lal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1965 SC 682: (1965) 1 Cri LJ 608; State of Rajasthan v. Hat Singh, (2003) 2 SCC 152: 2003 SCC (Cri) 451; T.W. Morgan v. Alfonso J. Devine, 59 L Ed 1153: 237 US 632 (1914); United States v. Vito Lanza, 67 L Ed 314: 260 US 377 (1922), relied on

United States v. Rabinowich, 59 L Ed 1211: 238 US 78 (1914), referred to

Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd Edn., Vol. IX, relied on [3055] — S. 300 — Double jeopardy — Applicability of S. 300(1) CrPC and Art. 20(2) of the Constitution — Same facts giving rise to distinct and separate offences — Offences for which appellant was tried and convicted in USA and for which he was now being tried in India, were distinct and separate — In this view, the provisions of S. 300(1) CrPC or Art. 20(2) of the Constitution, held, not attracted — Hence, the order of High Court dismissing the appellant's writ petition seeking quashing of the present proceedings and grant of interim bail on the ground of double jeopardy, not liable to be interfered with — General Clauses Act, 1897, Ss. 26 and 3(38) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 3 and 4 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 29, 8(c), 12, 20(b)(ii)(C), 23 and 24 — Controlled Substances Act (USA) — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2) — International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966, Art. 14(7)

The question involved in the present appeal pertained to applicability of the concept of double jeopardy within the meaning of Article 20(2) of the Constitution of India and Section 300 CrPC.

On 17-10-2002, the officers of the US Drug Enforcement Agency, along with officers of the Narcotics Bureau, India, seized a consignment of 565.2 kg of hashish in Newark, USA. During the investigation, it transpired that one N and the appellant were engaged in trafficking hashish out of India into USA and Europe and that the seized contraband had been smuggled out of India by the appellant and N along with one K. The officers of the Drug Enforcement Agency, USA arrested the appellant in Austria on 5-12-2002 and extradited him to the USA. Soon thereafter, the Deputy Director General of the Narcotics Control Bureau (NCB) visited USA and recorded the appellant's statement. Thereafter, the officers of NCB arrested N, K and one G in India and prosecution was launched against the said persons in India.

While N and others were being proceeded with before the Special Judge in Mumbai, the appellant, who had been extradited to the USA, was tried before the District Court at Michigan, USA. On pleading guilty of the charge of conspiracy to possess with intention to distribute controlled substances, which was an offence under Section 846 of Title 21, United States Code (USC) (Controlled Substances Act), the appellant was sentenced to imprisonment for a total term of 54 months. Although the appellant could have been prosecuted for other offences under Title 21 USC, the other charges against the appellant were dropped as he had pleaded guilty to the offence of conspiring to possess controlled substances. After serving out the aforesaid sentence, the appellant was deported to India on 5-4-2007, and on his arrival at New Delhi, he was arrested by officers of NCB and was taken to Mumbai and on 10-4-2007, he was produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate and was remanded to judicial custody.

While dealing with the appellant's application that the proceedings against him in India would amount to double jeopardy, the Special Judge, Mumbai, rejected the appellant's contention upon holding that the charges which had been dropped against the appellant in the proceedings in the USA had not been dealt with while imposing sentence against him in the District Court of Michigan, USA. The Special Judge extended the judicial custody of the appellant and subsequently rejected his prayer for bail. The appellant then approached the High Court by filing a writ petition seeking quashing of the proceedings initiated by NCB and grant of interim bail in the said matter on the ground of double jeopardy. The said petition was dismissed upon holding that the ingredients of the offences with which the appellant had been charged in India were totally different from the offences with which he had been charged and punished in the USA. The High Court concluded that merely because the same set of facts gave rise to different offences in India under the NDPS Act and in the USA under its drug laws, the different circumstances and the law applicable would not debar the Special Judge, Mumbai, from dealing with matters which attracted the provisions of the local laws and hence the application of the principle of double jeopardy was not available in the facts of the present case. Aggrieved by the said order, the appellant preferred the present appeal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The offences for which the appellant was tried and convicted in the USA and for which he is now being tried in India, are distinct and separate and do not, therefore, attract either the provisions of Section 300(1) CrPC or Article 20(2) of the Constitution. (Para 42)

The offence for which the appellant was tried in the USA was in respect of a charge of conspiracy to possess a controlled substance with the intention of distributing the same, whereas the appellant is being tried in India for offences relating to the importation of the contraband article from Nepal into India and exporting the same for sale in the USA. While the first part of the charges would attract the provisions of Section 846 read with Section 841 of Title 21 USC (Controlled Substances Act), the latter part, being offences under the NDPS Act, 1985, would be triable and punishable in India, having particular regard to the provisions of Sections 3 and 4 of the Penal Code read with Section 3(38) of the General Clauses Act, which has been made applicable in similar cases by virtue of Article 367 of the Constitution. Apart from the offence for which the appellant had been tried and convicted in the USA, he could not have been tried in the USA for commission of offences which were also triable under the NDPS Act, 1985, as the contents thereof are different from the provisions of Title 21 USC (Controlled Substances Act) which deal with possession and distribution of controlled substances within the USA. (Paras 41 to 43)

Thus, in view of the above, there is no reason to interfere with the order of the High Court rejecting the appellant's prayer for quashing the instant proceedings and grant of interim bail on the ground of double jeopardy. (Paras 40 and 45). Jitendra Panchal v. Narcotics Control Bureau, (2009) 3 SCC 57.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2009]

[3056] — S. 300 — Simultaneous prosecution under these provisions of 1949 Act as well as under IPC — Can be initiated but accused cannot be punished twice in view of Art. 20(2) of Constitution r/w S. 26 of General Clauses Act and S. 300 CrPC — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2) — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 26 — Chartered Accountants Act, 1949', Ss. 24, 24-A and 26

The respondent could have been simultaneously prosecuted for contravention of Sections 24, 24-A and 26 of the Act and for the offences defined under IPC but in view of the bar contained in Article 20(2) of the Constitution read with Section 26 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 and Section 300 CrPC, he could not have been punished twice for the same offence. (Para 25). Institute of Chartered Accountants of India v. Vimal Kumar Surana, (2011) 1 SCC 534.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.S. Singhvi and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-12-2010]

[3057] — S. 300 — Applied — Distinction with Art. 20(2), Constitution of India, stated — Appellant having been convicted under S. 138, NI Act, held, cannot be prosecuted under S. 420 IPC for the same set of facts — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2) — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Paras 3, 5 and 6). Kolla Veera Raghav Rao v. Gorantla Venkateswara Rao, (2011) 2 SCC 703.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and Gyan Sudha Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2011]

[3058] — S. 300 — Bar under — When operates — A-1 and A-2 tried and convicted for offence of bigamy on complaint made by wife of A-2 — Second trial at the instance of husband of A-1 is barred — Penal Code, 1860, S. 494

Sub-section (1) of S. 300 bars a fresh trial if a person had been tried and convicted or acquitted by a court of competent jurisdiction for the same offence. The offence of bigamy is committed when a husband or wife in the lifetime of his spouse marries. When a person is tried and convicted for such an offence on the complaint of a person, authorised by law to do so, he or she cannot be prosecuted and tried a second time for the same offence on another complaint filed by another person. The bar under S. 300 is for trial and conviction of the same offence. Since offence remains the same the appellants cannot be tried and convicted for it once again. Vijayalakshmi v. Vasudevan, (1994) 4 SCC 656: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1317.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.M. Sahai and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-4-1994]

[3059] — S. 300 — Doctrine of autrefois acquit — Applicability — Instant case closely connected with another case of kidnapping of one $^{\underline{V}}$ for ransom — Arrest of appellant M with arms and ammunition in a notified area when he came to receive ransom amount — Conviction under S. 5, TADA Act and S. 25(1-B), Arms Act by TADA Court — Said court proceeding on the allegation of the prosecution and observing that it was M who masterminded the kidnapping of V — M already acquitted in kidnapping case by a competent court — Said decision became final — In such circumstances, held, doctrine of autrefois acquit was attracted — Conviction not proper — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, S. 5 — Arms Act, 1959, S. 25(1-B) — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2) (Paras 28, 25 and 26). Mukhtiar Ahmed Ansari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2005) 5 SCC 258: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1037: AIR 2005 SC 2804: 2005 Cri LJ 2569.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-2005]

Pritam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 415: 1956 Cri LJ 805, relied on [3060] — S. 300 — Issue estoppel — Cannot apply to appeal against the lower court proceedings. Brathi v. State of Punjab, (1991) 1 SCC 519: 1991 SCC (Cri) 203: AIR 1991 SC 318: 1991 Cri LJ 402.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-10-1990]

[3061] — S. 300 — Issue-estoppel — Does not apply in case of acquittal of co-accused in a separate trial — In both trials approver's evidence submitted to base the conviction — Issue-estoppel distinct from operation of autrefois acquit — CrPC, 1898 — S. 403

In order to invoke the rule of issue-estoppel not only the parties in the two trials must be the same but also the fact-in-issue proved or not in the earlier trial must be identical with what is sought to be reagitated in the subsequent trial.

Issue-estoppel does not prevent the trial of an offence as does autrefois acquit but only precludes evidence being led to prove a fact-in-issue as regards which evidence has already been led and a specific finding recorded at an earlier criminal trial before a court of competent jurisdiction. Ravinder Singh v. State of Haryana, (1975) 3 SCC 742: 1975 SCC (Cri) 202: AIR 1975 SC 856: (1975) 3 SCR 453: 1975 Cri LJ 765.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, P.K. Goswami and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-1975]

Manipur Admn. v. Thakchom, Bira Singh, (1964) 7 SCR 123, 133: (1965) 1 Cri LJ 120, followed [3062] — S. 300 — Issue-estoppel — Principle of — Two separate trials of accused — One for murder and the other for offence under S. 27 of Arms Act — Main case of murder decided first and that under Arms Act subsequently — In both the cases accused admitting that gun in question was recovered from his possession — In the case under Arms Act trial Court erroneously acquitting accused — Appeal filed against the murder case but not against the acquittal in the case under Arms Act — Held — Appellate Court while deciding the murder case not precluded from holding that the accused was in possession of the gun — Principle of issue-estoppel not applicable — CrPC, 1898, S. 403. Bhoor Singh v. State of Punjab, (1974) 4 SCC 754: 1974 SCC (Cri) 664: AIR 1974 SC 1256: 1974 Cri LJ 929.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-1974]

[3063] — S. 300 — Overlapping between the two offences contained in IPC and other enactment — Effect of — Overlapping between the two offences contained in IPC and other enactment — Effect of — Held, merely because there may be some overlapping between the two offences, it would not mean that the accused could not be tried in relation to offence under IPC — Said issue would be decided by the court concerned on the basis of the evidence led before it — Thus, merely because the appellant could be tried under S. 132, Customs Act, 1962, it did not mean that he could not be tried for the offence committed under IPC — Customs Act, 1962, S. 132 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(d) — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2) — Penal Code, 1860, S. 1 and S. 120-B r/w Ss. 420, 467 and 471 (Para 39). M. Natarajan v. State, (2008) 8 SCC 413: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 507: (2008) 226 ELT 679.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.P. Naolekar and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-2008]

[3064] — S. 300 — Scope — Double jeopardy — Maxim "nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa" — S. 300 compared with Art. 20(2) of the Constitution — Second trial, on mere ground that some more allegations were not made in the first trial, cannot be allowed — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2)

Per Thomas, J.

The well-known maxim "nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa" (no person should be twice vexed for the same offence) embodies the well-established common law rule that no one should be put to peril twice for the same offence. The principle which is sought to be incorporated into Section 300 CrPC is that no man should be vexed with more than one trial for offences arising out of identical acts committed by him. When an offence has already been the subject of judicial adjudication, whether it ended in acquittal or conviction, it is negation of criminal justice to allow repetition of the adjudication in a separate trial on the same set of facts. (Para 236)

Though Article 20(2) of the Constitution of India embodies a protection against a second trial after a conviction of the same offence, the ambit of the clause is narrower than the protection afforded by Section 300 CrPC. If there is no punishment for the offence as a result of the prosecution, Article 20(2) has no application. While clause (2) of Article 20 embodies the principle of autrefois convict Section 300 CrPC combines both autrefois convict and autrefois acquit. (Para 237)

Section 300 has further widened the protective wings by debarring a second trial against the same accused on the same facts even for a different offence if a different charge against him for such offence could have been made under Section 221(1) CrPC, or he could have been convicted for such other offence under Section 221(2) CrPC. (Para 238)

As the contours of the prohibition are so widely enlarged it cannot be contended that the second trial can escape therefrom on the mere premise that some more allegations were not made in the first trial. (Para 239). State v. Nalini, (1999) 5 SCC 253: 1999 SCC (Cri) 691: AIR 1999 SC 2640: 1999 Cri LJ 3124.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[1], D.P. Wadhwa[2] and S.S.M. Quadri[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1999]

[3065] — Ss. 300 and 319 — Applicability — Expression "any person not being the accused" — Scope — Power under S. 319(1) — Nature of — Said power when to be exercised — Person accused in another case, though in respect of the same occurrence but with different version, held, can be summoned under S. 319 — Petitioners not accused in complaint case summoned under S. 319 by the trial court in that case — But petitioners were accused in police case in respect of the same occurrence — Version of both the said cases different — Power under S. 319(1), held, discretionary in nature and is required to be used sparingly — On facts, said power, held, rightly exercised — Order of High Court upholding trial court's order and directing the said cases before the trial court to be decided at the same time, held, justified — No violation of Art. 20(2) of the Constitution

Power under Section 319 of the Code can be resorted to only when a person is not an accused before court and in the course of any inquiry into, or trial of, an offence, it appears from the evidence that such person has committed any offence for which he can be tried together with the accused. The court has discretion to proceed against such person for the offence which he appears to have committed. The inquiry into or trial is of "an offence" and not the offender. (Para 7)

Section 319 does not exclude from its purview a person who is not an accused before court in a case in which order for his summoning is passed despite the fact of such a person being an accused in another case though in respect of the same occurrence but with a different version. The words "any person not being the accused" in Section 319 would cover any person who is not already before the court in the case in which order under Section 319 is passed. It is the duty of the court to bring before it any person who appears to have committed an offence and to convict and pass an appropriate order of sentence on proof of such person having committed the offence. (Para 8)

The power of summoning under Section 319(1) is required to be sparingly used, it being a discretionary power but on facts of the present case, it cannot be held that the discretionary power has not been properly and legally used. The power is to be exercised to achieve criminal justice. Though the occurrence is the same but there are two versions — one in the police case and the other in the case in which the petitioners have been directed to be summoned. In case the petitioners are not before the Court as accused in the case in hand, the Court would not be in a position to convict and appropriately sentence them even if the version of the occurrence as given by Respondent 2 is accepted and held proved beyond reasonable doubt against the petitioners. (Para 15)

The High Court, while noticing that the police case and the complaint case are before the trial court, has observed that both cases must necessarily be decided at the same time. (Para 6)

The principles laid down in Harjinder Singh case, (1985) 1 SCC 422, are squarely applicable to the present case as well. The High Court in principle and in substance has adopted a similar course in the impugned order. The course adopted would not result in causing any prejudice to the accused-petitioners. It is the duty of the court to sift the grain from the chaff and punish the guilty while, at the same time, ensuring that there is no violation of Article 20(2) of the Constitution. The impugned order squarely satisfies all these requirements. (Para 14). Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2003) 9 SCC 328: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1814: AIR 2003 SC 4081: 2003 Cri LJ 2307.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-2003]

S.S. Khanna (Dr.) v. Chief Secy., Patna, (1983) 3 SCC 42: 1983 SCC (Cri) 562, distinguished and limited to its facts

Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1985) 1 SCC 422: 1985 SCC (Cri) 93, applied

[3066] — Ss. 300, 319, 202 and 203 — Proceedings under S. 319 can be initiated against a person even after inquiry under S. 202 and dismissal of complaint under S. 303 — Principle of autrefois convict or acquit not applicable — Constitution of India, Art. 20

An inquiry under S. 202 is not in the nature of a trial for, a trial can commence only after process is issued to the accused. The proceedings under S. 202 are not strictly proceedings between the complainant and the accused. A person against whom a complaint is filed does not become an accused until it is decided to issue process against him. Even if he participates in the proceedings under S. 202, he does so not as an accused but as a member of the public. The object of the inquiry under S. 202 is the ascertainment of the fact whether the complaint has any valid foundation calling for the issue of process to the person complained against or whether it is a baseless one on which no action need be taken.

There is therefore, no legal bar based on the principle of issue estoppel to proceed under S. 319 against a person complained against if on the same material the court has dismissed a complaint under S. 203. But it is not necessary to express any final opinion on that question since in the instant case, the magistrate decided to take action under S. 319 on the basis of fresh evidence which was brought on record in the course of the proceedings that took place after the enquiry contemplated under S. 202 was over and in the course of the trial against the co-accused. The Magistrate had good reason to summon the appellant under S. 319 as it appears from the evidence led at the trial that there was a strong case made out against the appellant for joining him in the criminal case as an accused. The principle of autrefois convict or acquit adumbrated in S. 300 cannot apply to this case. S.S. Khanna v. Chief Secy., (1983) 3 SCC 42: 1983 SCC (Cri) 562: AIR 1983 SC 595: 1983 Cri LJ 1044.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1983]

Limited to its facts Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2003) 9 SCC 328

[3067] — Ss. 300, 482, 465 and 227 — Initiation of fresh trial after the accused was discharged due to invalid sanction for prosecution — Contention that since accused faced ordeal of trial for a long time, it would not be in the interest of justice to put them on trial once again, held, not sustainable — However, trial court directed to dispose of the matters at an early date preferably within six months from the date of communication of the instant order — Accused could approach High Court if trial not completed within the said period — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 7 and S. 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) (Paras 26 and 31). State of Karnataka v. C. Nagarajaswamy, (2005) 8 SCC 370: AIR 2005 SC 4308.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2005]

State of M.P. v. Bhooraji, (2001) 7 SCC 679: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1373, considered and distinguished

Mahendra Lal Das v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 149; P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 830, relied on [3068] — Ss. 300, 482, 465 and 227 — Provision under S. 300 that persons once convicted or acquitted not to be tried again for the same offence — Applicability of — Essential conditions for — Fresh proceedings after the accused was discharged on the ground of invalid sanction for prosecution — Initiation of, held, not barred by S. 300 — The trial court was not bound to record either a judgment of conviction or acquittal after holding the sanction to be invalid — Even if a judgment of conviction or acquittal was recorded, S. 300 could not be invoked as the said judgment would have been illegal and without jurisdiction — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19

Criminal Appeal No. 1279 of 2002

Proceedings were initiated against the respondent under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. The trial court discharged the respondent on the ground that the sanction for prosecution accorded by PW 11 was illegal. Subsequently, a fresh charge-sheet was filed after obtaining an order of sanction which came to be challenged before the High Court by the respondent in an application filed under Section 482 CrPC.

Criminal Appeal No. 137 of 2003

Criminal proceedings in this case were initiated by alleging that the respondent, a Manager in State Bank of Mysore, misappropriated a sum of Rs 40,000 from the said Bank. The question as regards sanction accorded by the Managing Director of the Bank was raised by the respondent herein before the trial court. The said court released the respondent on the ground that the sanctioning authority was not competent to issue the said sanction order. Thereafter, a second charge-sheet was filed after almost eleven years on the ground that as the respondent had been dismissed from the service, no sanction was required for her prosecution. Cognizance was taken by an order dated 31-8-2001. The respondent filed an application under Section 482 CrPC for quashing the criminal proceedings as also the said order dated 31-8-2001.

In the first matter, the High Court allowed the application under Section 482 CrPC on the ground that when an accused faces a full-fledged trial, having regard to the provisions of CrPC, the trial court must either record a judgment of conviction or acquittal and the accused cannot be discharged in terms of Section 227 CrPC after a full-fledged trial. In the second matter, the High Court observed that no fresh trial is permissible in law. Hence the present appeals by the State.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

The essential conditions for invoking the bar under Section 300(1) CrPC are:

(i) the court had requisite jurisdiction to take cognizance and tried the accused; and

(ii) the court has recorded an order of conviction or acquittal, and such conviction/acquittal remains in force. (Para 18)

Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 mandates that no court shall take cognizance of offence punishable under the provisions specified therein except with the previous sanction by the authorities specified therein. Grant of proper sanction by a competent authority is a sine qua non for taking cognizance of the offence. Ordinarily, the question as to whether a proper sanction has been accorded for prosecution of the accused persons or not is a matter which should be dealt with at the stage of taking cognizance. But, even if a cognizance of the offence is taken erroneously and the same comes to the court's notice at a later stage a finding to that effect is permissible. Even such a plea can be taken for the first time before an appellate court. (Paras 13, 15, 14 and 16)

In view of the authoritative pronouncements, it is not possible to agree with the decision of the High Court that the trial court was bound to record either a judgment of conviction or acquittal, even after holding that the sanction was not valid. Even if a judgment of conviction or acquittal was recorded, the same would not make any distinction for the purpose of invoking the provisions of Section 300 CrPC as, even then, it would be held to have been rendered illegally and without jurisdiction. (Para 25). State of Karnataka v. C. Nagarajaswamy, (2005) 8 SCC 370: AIR 2005 SC 4308.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2005]

Budha Mal v. State of Delhi, Criminal Appeal No. 17 of 1952 disposed of on 3-10-1952; Baij Nath Prasad Tripathi v. State of Bhopal, 1957 SCR 650: AIR 1957 SC 494: 1957 Cri LJ 597; Mohd. Safi v. State of W.B., (1965) 3 SCR 467: AIR 1966 SC 69: 1966 Cri LJ 75; State of Goa v. Babu Thomas, (2005) 8 SCC 130, followed

Basdeo Agarwalla v. King Emperor, 1945 FCR 93: AIR 1945 FC 16: 46 Cri LJ 510; Yusofalli Mulla Noorbhoy v. R., AIR 1949 PC 264: 50 Cri LJ 889: 76 IA 158; Ashok Sahu v. Gokul Saikia, 1990 Supp SCC 41: 1990 SCC (Cri) 611; Birendra K. Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 8 SCC 498: 2001 SCC (Cri) 17; B. Saha v. M.S. Kochar, (1979) 4 SCC 177: 1979 SCC (Cri) 939; K. Kalimuthu v. State, (2005) 4 SCC 512: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1291, relied on

[3069] — S. 300 and Ch. XXIX (Ss. 372 to 394) — Appeal — Finality of judgment under appeal — Res judicata in criminal proceedings — Finality of judgment under appeal — Finality of judgment where appeal therefrom rendered infructuous — Held, filing of an appeal destroys the finality of the judgment under appeal — Further held, the judgment of the appellate court refusing to dwell upon the correctness of the judgment under appeal due to the lis having been rendered infructuous, had the effect of leaving the matter at large — Constitution of India — Arts. 32 & 226 — CPC, 1908, Ss. 11, 96 and 100

Filing of an appeal destroys the finality of the judgment under appeal. The decision of the learned Single Judge in CWP No. 9120 of 1990 was not left unchallenged. In fact, the correctness of the judgment of the learned Single Judge was put in issue by the Union of India by filing an intra-court appeal. The issues determined by the learned Single Judge were open for consideration before the Division Bench. However, the Division Bench was denied the opportunity of hearing and the aggrieved party could also not press for decision of the appeal on merits, as before the appeal could be heard it was rendered infructuous on account of the Ordinance itself having ceased to operate. The Union of India, howsoever it may have felt aggrieved by the pronouncement of the learned Single Judge, had no remedy left available to it to pursue. The judgment of the Division Bench refusing to dwell upon the correctness of the judgment of the Single Judge had the effect of leaving the matter at large. Upon the lapsing of the earlier Ordinance pending an appeal before a Division Bench, the judgment of the Single Judge about the illegality of the earlier Ordinance, cannot any longer bar the Supreme Court from deciding about the validity of a fresh law on its own merits, even if the fresh law contains similar provisions. (Para 69). Dharam Dutt v. Union of India, (2004) 1 SCC 712: AIR 2004 SC 1295.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-2003]

Shri Prithvi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Broach Borough Municipality, (1969) 2 SCC 283; Misrilal Jain v. State of Orissa, (1977) 3 SCC 212: 1977 SCC (Tax) 439; Madan Mohan Pathak v. Union of India, (1978) 2 SCC 50: 1978 SCC (L&S) 103; Union of India v. Raghubir Singh, (1989) 2 SCC 754; Indian Aluminium Co. v. State of Kerala, (1996) 7 SCC 637; Welfare Assn., A.R.P. v. Ranjit P. Gohil, (2003) 9 SCC 358; People's Union for Civil Liberties (PUCL) v. Union of India, (2003) 4 SCC 399; Indira Nehru Gandhi v. Raj Narain, 1975 Supp SCC 1, relied on

President Aharon Barak: A Judge on Judging: The Role of a Supreme Court in Democracy, Harvard Law Review, Vol. 116, No. 1, November 2002, at pp. 135-37, referred to [3070] — S. 300 — Double jeopardy — Ingredients of — There must be punishment for the offence as a result of the prosecution and the prosecution must be for the same offence and not for distinct offences — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2). Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1985) 1 SCC 422: 1985 SCC (Cri) 93: AIR 1985 SC 404.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-12-1984]

[3071] — S. 300 — Second trial — What does not amount to — Offence committed by appellant while deployed on deputation in BSF — No commencement of trial — Entire proceedings against him before the competent authority under the BSF Act stood abandoned without being taken to any logical conclusion — Appellant repatriated to his parent department and, thus, ceased to be an officer with BSF — Cognizance of the complaint in respect of the same offence taken by the Special Court, CBI after the BSF authorities ceased to have any jurisdiction on the appellant — On facts, held, the trial by the Special Court, CBI did not amount to a second trial — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2)

There is no question of a second trial by the CBI Court. The entire proceedings against the appellant before the competent authority stood abandoned without being taken to any logical conclusion and, therefore, the appellant is not correct in contending alternatively that a trial under the BSF Act had actually commenced and was pending. Until and unless the competent authority convenes GCM and GCM assembles to consider the charge and examines whether they would proceed with the trial, the trial does not commence. In the instant case, since the competent authority has not even decided to convene a General Court Martial, the contention of the appellant that a trial has commenced by the initiation of a preliminary enquiry cannot be accepted. (Paras 22 to 24). Shiv Parshad Pandey v. CBI, (2003) 11 SCC 508: 2004 SCC (Cri) 203: AIR 2003 SC 1974: (2003) 4 LLN 491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2003]

Union of India v. Major General Madan Lal Yadav (Retd.), (1996) 4 SCC 127: 1996 SCC (Cri) 592, followed

Delhi Special Police Establishment v. Lt. Col. S.K. Loraiya, (1972) 2 SCC 692: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1101; Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, W.B. v. Usha Ranjan Roy Choudhury, 1986 Supp SCC 190: 1986 SCC (Cri) 311; Union of India v. Major S.K. Sharma, (1987) 3 SCC 490: 1987 SCC (Cri) 584, explained and distinguished

[3072] — S. 300 — Prosecution and punishment for offences under both Ss. 5 and 6(3) of Rajasthan Sati (Prevention) Ordinance/Act, 1987, held, not violative of Art. 20(2) or rule against double jeopardy as offences under each section are distinct from each other — Same set of facts may constitute offence punishable under S. 5 as well as under S. 6(3) — Emphasised that in a situation where offence under S. 6(3) (violation of prohibitory order) is not made out, but ingredients of offence under S. 5, the commission of any act for glorification of sati, are established, accused would be liable to be punished under S. 5 — Held, High Court erred in holding that prosecution under S. 6(3) against respondent-accused persons was not maintainable and in directing that all prosecutions be quashed — Rajasthan Sati (Prevention) Act, 1987 (40 of 1987), Ss. 5 and 6 — Maxims — "Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa" — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 26 — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2) — Penal Code, 1860, S. 71

On 6-10-1987, the Collector and District Magistrate of Jaipur issued an order under Section 6(2) of the Rajasthan Sati (Prevention) Ordinance, 1987 [later replaced by the Rajasthan Sati (Prevention) Act, 1987] prohibiting "with immediate effect, the glorification of the commission of sati in any manner in District Jaipur, by any person or association of persons". On 8-10-1987, 20-10-1987 and 28-10-1987, incidents, including a mass rally, took place which led to the registration of FIRs against various persons for violation of the prohibitory order under Section 6 and of the provisions under Section 5. Some accused persons filed petitions from jail, which the High Court treated as habeas corpus petitions, whereas some filed petitions under Section 482 CrPC. All challenged the vires of the Ordinance/Act.

The High Court, while upholding the vires of the Ordinance/Act, barring Section 19, held that the provisions of Sections 5 and 6 overlapped each other; that after the issuance of a prohibitory order under Section 6(2) the provisions of Section 5 would merge with those of Section 6; that then a person could be found guilty only of the offence of contravening a prohibitory order under either Section 6(1) or 6(2). The High Court also found that the order had not been published in accordance with law so that the prosecution under Section 6(3) was not maintainable and could not be proceeded with. The High Court directed that all prosecutions be quashed.

Allowing the State's appeal,

Held :

Article 20(2) of the Constitution provides that no person shall be prosecuted and punished for the same offence more than once. To attract applicability of Article 20(2) there must be a second prosecution and punishment for the same offence for which the accused has been prosecuted and punished previously. A subsequent trial or a prosecution and punishment are not barred if the ingredients of the two offences are distinct. (Para 8)

The rule against double jeopardy is stated in the maxim nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa. It is a significant basic rule of criminal law that no man shall be put in jeopardy twice for one and the same offence. The rule provides foundation for the pleas of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict. The manifestation of this rule is to be found contained in Section 26 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, Section 300 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 and Section 71 of the Indian Penal Code. (Para 9)

The offences under Section 5, under Section 6(1) read with Section 6(3) and Section 6(2) read with Section 6(3) of the Rajasthan Sati (Prevention) Act, 1987 are three distinct offences. They are not the same offences. This is clear from a bare reading of Sections 5 and 6. While Section 5 makes the commission of an act an offence and punishes the same; the provisions of Section 6 are preventive in nature and make provision for punishing contravention of prohibitory order so as to make the prevention effective. Commission of sati may or may not have taken place and may not actually take place (after the issuance of prohibitory order), yet the prohibitory order under sub-section (1) or (2) of Section 6 can be issued. Section 5 punishes "any act for the glorification of sati". The words "glorification" and "sati" are both defined in the Act. What is prohibited by the Collector and District Magistrate under Section 6(1) is "any act towards the commission of sati" subject to his forming an opinion that sati is being committed or is about to be committed.

The prohibition is against abetment of sati or doing of any act, which would aid or facilitate the commission of sati. On such prohibitory order being promulgated, its contravention would be punishable under Section 6(3) without regard to the fact whether sati is committed or not and whether such act amounts to glorification of sati or not. Under Section 6(2), the Collector and District Magistrate may prohibit "the glorification in any manner" of the commission of sati. The expression "the glorification in any manner" carries a wider connotation than the expression "the glorification of sati" as employed in Section 5. In case of prosecution under Section 6(2) read with Section 6(3), what would be punishable is such defiance or contravention of the order of the Collector and District Magistrate, as has the effect of the glorification in any manner of the commission of sati. In distinction therewith, it is the actual doing of an act for the glorification of sati which is made punishable under Section 5. (Para 12)

The gist of the offence under Section 5 is the commission of an act, which amounts to glorification of sati. It is the commission of the act by itself, which is made punishable on account of the same having been declared and defined as an offence by Section 5 of the Ordinance/Act. The gist of the offence under Section 6 of the Ordinance/Act is the contravention of the prohibitory order issued by the Collector and District Magistrate. Section 5 punishes the glorification of sati. Section 6 punishes the contravention of prohibitory order issued by the Collector and District Magistrate, which is a punishment for the defiance of the lawful authority of the State to enforce law and order in the society. What is punished under Section 5 is the criminal intention for glorification of sati; what is punishable under Section 6 is the criminal intention to violate or defy the prohibitory order issued by the lawful authority. (Para 13)

It is not possible to agree with the High Court that the ingredients of the offences contemplated by Section 5 and Section 6(3) are the same or that they necessarily and in all cases overlap or that prosecution and punishment for the offences under Sections 5 and 6(3) both are violative of Article 20(2) of the Constitution or of the rule against double jeopardy. (Para 13)

It is therefore concluded that in a given case, same set of facts may give rise to an offence punishable under Section 5 and Section 6(3) both. There is nothing unconstitutional or illegal about it. So also an act which is alleged to be an offence under Section 6(3) of the Act and if for any reason prosecution under Section 6(3) does not end in conviction, if the ingredients of offence under Section 5 are made out, may still be liable to be punished under Section 5 of the Act. (Para 14). State of Rajasthan v. Hat Singh, (2003) 2 SCC 152: 2003 SCC (Cri) 451: AIR 2003 SC 791: 2003 Cri LJ 884. Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-2003]

Maqbool Hussain v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 325: 1953 Cri LJ 1432; State of Bombay v. S.L. Apte, AIR 1961 SC 578: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 725; Om Parkash Gupta v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 458: 1957 Cri LJ 575; State of M.P. v. Veereshwar Rao Agnihotri, AIR 1957 SC 592: 1957 Cri LJ 892; Roshan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 1413: (1965) 2 Cri LJ 426, relied on

[3073] — S. 300 — Acquittal for offences under S. 409 IPC and S. 5 Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — Held, does not bar trial under S. 135 Customs Act, 1962 and S. 85, Gold (Control) Act, 1968 — Ingredients of offences in the previous and the subsequent trial are distinct — CrPC, 1898, S. 403 — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2) — Double jeopardy — Maxims — 'Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa'

The appellants were working as Customs Inspector and Sepoys of the Customs Department. It was alleged that they recovered 99 pieces of gold bars from an agricultural field. But they prepared a false panchnama showing recovery of 90 pieces of gold bars. The remaining pieces were distributed by the appellants amongst themselves and a few others. They were tried under Section 409 IPC and Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act. They were acquitted. After obtaining required sanction under Section 137 of the Customs Act another case was filed by the Customs authorities against them. This trial ended in conviction of the appellants under Section 135 Customs Act and Section 85 Gold (Control) Act. Their conviction was confirmed by the appellate court and the High Court and their plea based on Section 403 CrPC, 1898 and Article 20(2) of the Constitution was rejected. Dismissing their special leave petition

Held :

The ingredients of the offences for which the appellants were charged in the first trial are entirely different. The second trial envisages a different fact-situation and the enquiry for finding out facts constituting offences under the Customs Act and the Gold (Control) Act in the second trial is of a different nature. Also, the second trial has been initiated after obtaining necessary sanction for prosecuting the appellants. Not only the ingredients of offences in the previous and the second trial are different, the factual foundation of the first trial and such foundation for the second trial is also not identical. Accordingly, the second trial was not barred under Section 403 CrPC of 1898 as alleged by the appellant. A.A. Mulla v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 11 SCC 606: AIR 1997 SC 1441.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-1996]

V.K. Agarwal, Asstt. Collector of Customs v. Vasantraj Bhagwanji Bhatia, (1988) 3 SCC 467: 1988 SCC (Cri) 679; P.V. Mohd. Barmay Sons v. Director of Enforcement, 1993 Supp (2) SCC 724: 1993 SCC (Cri) 777, applied

[3074] — S. 300(1) — Bar under, against trial for the 'same offence' — Applicability — Ingredients of the offences have to be seen to determine whether the offences are same or different — Ingredients of offences under S. 111 r/w S. 135 of Customs Act, 1962 and S. 85 of Gold (Control) Act, 1968 are different — Hence after acquittal under Customs Act subsequent trial under Gold (Control) Act not barred — CrPC, 1898, S. 403(1) — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2)

Section 403(1), CrPC bars trial again for the same offence. In order to ascertain whether the two offences are the same what is necessary is to analyse the ingredients of the two offences and not the allegations made in the two complaints. But the ingredients required to be established in respect of offence under S. 111 r/w S. 135 of the Customs Act are altogether different from those required to be established for offence under S. 85 of the Gold (Control) Act. In regard to the latter offence, unlike the former offence, it is not necessary to establish that there is any prohibition against the import of gold into Indian sea waters. Mere possession of gold of purity not less than 9 carats in any unfinished or semi-finished form would be an offence under the Gold Control Act. V.K. Agarwal, Asstt. Collector of Customs v. Vasantraj Bhagwanji Bhatia, (1988) 3 SCC 467: 1988 SCC (Cri) 679: AIR 1988 SC 1106: (1988) 16 ECC 164: (1988) 64 Comp Cas 664.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-1988]

[3075] — S. 300(1) — Bar under, against trial again on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge made under S. 236, CrPC, 1898 — Applicability — Held, inapplicable where accused found guilty of offences both under S. 111 r/w S. 135 of Customs Act as well as under S. 85 of Gold (Control) Act, 1968 — S. 403(2), CrPC, 1898 would then be attracted — Hence even after acquittal for offences under Customs Act, subsequent trial under Gold (Control) Act not barred — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 403(1) & (3), 236 and 237

The trial of the accused would be barred by S. 403(1) provided they are sought to be prosecuted on "same facts" for any offence for which a different charge from the one made against them might have been made under S. 236 and for which they might have been convicted under S. 237. Section 236 contemplated framing of an alternative charge where on the facts of the case an offence would fall under one of the two alternative charges, but the act would not constitute an offence under both the charges. In the present case if the ingredients of both the offences are satisfied the same act of possession of the gold would constitute an offence both under the Customs Act as also under the Gold (Control) Act. It cannot, therefore, be said that the accused could have been tried on the same facts for an alternative charge in the context of S. 236, CrPC at the time of the former proceedings.

Thus S. 403(1) is not attracted. Section 403(2) on the other hand clearly concludes the matter against the accused-respondents. V.K. Agarwal, Asstt. Collector of Customs v. Vasantraj Bhagwanji Bhatia, (1988) 3 SCC 467: 1988 SCC (Cri) 679: AIR 1988 SC 1106: (1988) 16 ECC 164: (1988) 64 Comp Cas 664.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-1988]

[3076] — S. 300(1) — Bar on trial of acquitted/convicted person again for same offence — Ingredients — In case of want of prior sanction of IG/Commissioner of Police by virtue of S. 20-A(2) of TADA Act court lacks jurisdiction to take cognizance of offence under that Act but for that reason court cannot order acquittal of the accused; it can only discharge the accused — In such case, twin ingredients of S. 300(1) viz. the court should have jurisdiction to take cognizance and try the accused and it should have recorded an order of acquittal/conviction and such acquittal/conviction should remain in force, held, does not apply — Hence Designated Court was justified in holding that the proceedings could be legally continued against accused-appellant and taking cognizance of offence under Ss. 3, 4, 5 and 6 of TADA Act and Ss. 25 and 26 of Arms Act — Submission that after a long passage of time and expiry of currency of TADA Act itself, continuance of the proceedings would be sheer abuse of process of the court not acceptable — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, Ss. 20-A(2) and 1 to 6 — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 25 and 26 (Paras 8, 14 and 16). Balbir Singh v. State of Delhi, (2007) 6 SCC 226: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 71: AIR 2007 SC 2397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-6-2007]

Basdeo Agarwalla v. King Emperor, AIR 1945 FC 16: 1945 FCR 93; Yusofalli Mulla Noorbhoy v. King, (1948-49) 76 IA 158: AIR 1949 PC 264; Mohd. Safi v. State of W.B., AIR 1966 SC 69: 1966 Cri LJ 75; P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 830, relied on

— S. 301 See also S. 493, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1268 in Vol. 2

— S. 301 See Ss. 24 and 301
See also Ss. 321, 301 and 24
See also Ss. 482, 190, 301, 302 & 225

[3077] — Ss. 301, 302 and 225 & 24 — Right of private counsel to conduct prosecution in a Sessions Court — Prosecution in sessions case cannot be conducted by anyone other than the Public Prosecutor — Role of private counsel is limited to act under the direction of the Public Prosecutor — However, he can submit written arguments after closure of the evidence with prior permission of the court — Object of the provision explained — Duty of the Public Prosecutor to act fairly and not merely to obtain conviction by any means fair or foul — If the accused is entitled to any legitimate benefit the Public Prosecutor should make it available to him or inform the court even if the defence counsel overlooked it

Unlike Section 302 CrPC, the application of which is confined to Magistrate Courts, Section 301 CrPC is applicable to all the courts of criminal jurisdiction. This distinction can be discerned from employment of the words "any court" in Section 301. In view of the provision made in the succeeding section as for Magistrate Courts the insistence contained in Section 301(2) must be understood as applicable to all other courts without any exception. The first sub-section empowers the Public Prosecutor to plead in the court without any written authority, provided he is in charge of the case. The second sub-section, which is sought to be invoked by the appellant, imposes the curb on a counsel engaged by any private party. It limits his role to act in the court during such prosecution "under the directions of the Public Prosecutor". The only other liberty which he can possibly exercise is to submit written arguments after the closure of evidence in the trial, but that too can be done only if the court permits him to do so. (Para 12)

From the scheme of the Code the legislative intention is manifestly clear that prosecution in a Sessions Court cannot be conducted by anyone other than the Public Prosecutor. The legislature reminds the State that the policy must strictly conform to fairness in the trial of an accused in a Sessions Court. A Public Prosecutor is not expected to show a thirst to reach the case in the conviction of the accused somehow or the other irrespective of the true facts involved in the case. The expected attitude of the Public Prosecutor while conducting prosecution must be couched in fairness not only to the court and to the investigating agencies but to the accused as well. If an accused is entitled to any legitimate benefit during trial the Public Prosecutor should not scuttle or conceal it. On the contrary, it is the duty of the Public Prosecutor to winch it to the fore and make it available to the accused. Even if the defence counsel overlooked it, the Public Prosecutor has the added responsibility to bring it to the notice of the court if it comes to his knowledge. A private counsel, if allowed a free hand to conduct prosecution, would focus on bringing the case to conviction even if it is not a fit case to be so convicted. That is the reason why Parliament applied a bridle on him and subjected his role strictly to the instructions given by the Public Prosecutor. (Para 13)

It is not merely an overall supervision which the Public Prosecutor is expected to perform in such cases when a privately engaged counsel is permitted to act on his behalf. The role which a private counsel in such a situation can play is, perhaps, comparable with that of a junior advocate conducting the case of his senior in a court. The private counsel is to act on behalf of the Public Prosecutor albeit the fact that he is engaged in the case by a private party. If the role of the Public Prosecutor is allowed to shrink to a mere supervisory role the trial would become a combat between the private party and the accused which would render the legislative mandate in Section 225 of the Code a dead letter. (Para 14). Shiv Kumar v. Hukam Chand, (1999) 7 SCC 467: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1277.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.P. Kurdukar, K.T. Thomas and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-1999]

Queen-Empress v. Durga, ILR (1894-96) 16 All 84: 1894 AWN 7; Medichetty Ramakistiah v. State of A.P., AIR 1959 AP 659: 1959 Cri LJ 1404; Bhupalli Malliah, Re, AIR 1959 AP 477: 1959 Cri LJ 1045, approved

[3078] — Ss. 301 and 302 — Unlike S. 302, S. 301 is applicable to all courts of criminal jurisdiction

Unlike Section 302 CrPC, the application of which is confined to Magistrate Courts, Section 301 CrPC is applicable to all the courts of criminal jurisdiction. This distinction can be discerned from employment of the words "any court" in Section 301. In view of the provision made in the succeeding section as for Magistrate Courts the insistence contained in Section 301(2) must be understood as applicable to all other courts without any exception. (Para 12). Shiv Kumar v. Hukam Chand, (1999) 7 SCC 467: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1277.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.P. Kurdukar, K.T. Thomas and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-1999]

Queen-Empress v. Durga, ILR (1894-96) 16 All 84: 1894 AWN 7; Medichetty Ramakistiah v. State of A.P., AIR 1959 AP 659: 1959 Cri LJ 1404; Bhupalli Malliah, Re, AIR 1959 AP 477: 1959 Cri LJ 1045, approved

[3079] — Ss. 301, 302, 225 and 24 — Bride burning case — Trial of father-in-law of the deceased for offence under S. 304-B IPC — Brother of the deceased engaging a private counsel to conduct the trial — Direction by the High Court that the counsel appointed by the private person to act under the direction from the Public Prosecutor who shall conduct the case — Held, the High Court correctly approached the issue and, therefore, no interference called for

The appellant's sister was given in marriage to the son of the respondent. But about 4 months after the marriage she met with a tragic death by burns. On a complaint made by the appellant a case was registered against the respondent. After completion of the investigation a charge-sheet was laid against him for the offence under Section 304-B of the Indian Penal Code. The appellant engaged a private counsel which was objected to by the respondent who was not prepared to have his case prosecuted by the complainant's counsel and hence he approached the High Court in revision. The operative portion of the order of the High Court reads thus:

> "I allow this revision and direct that the lawyer appointed by the complainant or private person in this case shall act under the directions from the Public Prosecutor and may with the permission of the Court submit written arguments after evidence is closed in the case. I further direct that the Public Prosecutor in charge of the case shall conduct the prosecution. Revision petition is disposed of accordingly."

Dismissing the criminal appeal, held, the High Court in the impugned order has correctly approached the issue and it does not warrant any interference. (Para 19). Shiv Kumar v. Hukam Chand, (1999) 7 SCC 467: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1277.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.P. Kurdukar, K.T. Thomas and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-1999]

Queen-Empress v. Durga, ILR (1894-96) 16 All 84: 1894 AWN 7; Medichetty Ramakistiah v. State of A.P., AIR 1959 AP 659: 1959 Cri LJ 1404; Bhupalli Malliah, Re, AIR 1959 AP 477: 1959 Cri LJ 1045, approved

— S. 302 See also S. 495, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1272 in Vol. 2

— S. 302 See Ss. 256 and 302
See also Ss. 301 and 302
See also Ss. 301, 302 and 225 & 24
See also Ss. 482, 190, 301, 302 & 225

[3080] — S. 302 — Scope of private person's participation in conduct of prosecution when trial is before Magistrate's Court

The private person who is permitted to conduct prosecution in the Magistrate's Court can engage a counsel to do the needful in the court on his behalf. Further if a private person is aggrieved by the offence committed against him or against anyone in whom he is interested he can approach the Magistrate and seek permission to conduct the prosecution by himself. It is open to the court to consider his request. If the court thinks that the cause of justice would be served better by granting such permission the court would generally grant such permission. Of course, this wider amplitude is limited to Magistrates' Courts, as the right of such private individual to participate in the conduct of prosecution in the Sessions Court is very much restricted and is made subject to the control of the Public Prosecutor. (Para 12). J.K. International v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2001) 3 SCC 462: 2001 SCC (Cri) 547: AIR 2001 SC 1142: 2001 Cri LJ 1264: (2001) 90 DLT 157.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-2001]

[3081] — Ss. 302, 205 and 2(q) — Permission to conduct prosecution — Representation to court by power-of-attorney holder — Persons entitled to continue prosecution (heirs of deceased complainant in the instant case) can be represented by their "power-of-attorney holder" — However, if permission for such representation is sought from the court by those persons themselves the same will be granted — Held, no such permission can be granted if the same is sought by the power-of-attorney holder — Similar situation obtaining under S. 205, CrPC — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138

The question that arose for consideration in the instant case was whether an application under Section 302 CrPC, 1973 to continue the prosecution could be filed by the power-of-attorney holders of heirs of the deceased complainant. Before the trial court, the applications under Section 302 CrPC were filed by the power-of-attorney holders and not by the heirs themselves. The trial court allowed the said applications. In revision, the High Court confirmed the order of the trial court allowing the applications. Hence these appeals.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

Under Section 302 CrPC, a party can make an application himself to continue the prosecution or the same can be made by a pleader. As provided under Section 2(q) CrPC (which defines the word "pleader"), the prayer to continue the prosecution can be made either by a legally qualified person, who is authorised to practise in the court under the Advocates Act; or by any other person which would obviously include a power-of-attorney holder in which eventuality such permission can be granted by the court where the prosecution is pending only if it is sought by the person who is entitled to continue the prosecution and not by the power-of-attorney holder. (Para 9)

The question as to whether the heirs of the complainant can be allowed to file an application under Section 302 to continue the prosecution is no longer res integra as the same has been concluded by the Supreme Court in the case of Ashwin Nanubhai Vyas v. State of Maharashtra, (1967) 1 SCR 807. (Para 5)

In the present case, neither heirs of the complainant filed petition under Section 302 CrPC to continue the prosecution nor was any permission sought by them from the competent court that they should be allowed to continue the prosecution through their power-of-attorney holders, rather the prayer was made by the power-of-attorney holders, which is not permissible under law. Hence, the trial court was not justified in allowing the petitions under Section 302 and the High Court has committed an error in confirming the said order which is liable to be set aside and the petitions under Section 302 CrPC are fit to be dismissed giving liberty to the heirs either to make application themselves before the court concerned to continue the prosecution or apply to the court to grant permission to them to authorise the power-of-attorney holders to continue the prosecution on their behalf. (Para 10). Jimmy Jahangir Madan v. Bolly Cariyappa Hindley, (2004) 12 SCC 509: (2004) 3 KLT 850.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-11-2004]

[3082] — Ss. 302 and 205 — Similarity between — Stated

Section 302 CrPC is similar to Section 205 CrPC. Under Section 205, an accused is required to appear in person but his personal appearance can be dispensed with and he can be allowed to be represented by a pleader. Under both the provisions i.e. Sections 302 and 205 CrPC, instead of taking steps personally, a party can be represented through a pleader. Power-of-attorney holder can represent the party concerned under both the said provisions, in case permission for such representation is sought from the court by the person concerned and granted by it. But where no such permission is sought by the person concerned, meaning thereby, in the case of Section 205 — an accused and in the case of Section 302 — a party who has right to continue the prosecution, power-of-attorney holder cannot be allowed to represent the person concerned in the proceeding. (Para 9). Jimmy Jahangir Madan v. Bolly Cariyappa Hindley, (2004) 12 SCC 509: (2004) 3 KLT 850.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-11-2004]

T.C. Mathai v. District & Sessions Judge, (1999) 3 SCC 614: 1999 SCC (Cri) 455, relied on [3083] — Ss. 302 and 239 — Continuation of prosecution by legal heirs of deceased complainant — Pursuant to complaint filed by respondent's father against his daughter and son-in-law (appellants) alleging commission of offences under Ss. 406 and 420 IPC, Magistrate issued process under S. 204 — But during pendency of proceedings complainant died — Immediately thereafter deceased's sons sought permission to continue the prosecution — Magistrate passed order allowing the application and granting permission to Respondent 1 to continue the prosecution — That order, having not been challenged by appellants, became final — Thereafter witnesses were also examined and written arguments submitted by appellant-accused — Application then filed by appellants under S. 239 for their discharge contending that no case made out against them — Application rejected by trial court holding that there was prima facie case against appellants — Revision thereagainst also dismissed — Held, on death of complainant, the case did not abate and therefore, it was open to deceased's sons to apply for continuation of proceedings against accused- appellants — By granting such prayer no illegality committed by courts — Having regard to the facts of the case and also the fact that the application under S. 239 for discharge of accused was only on ground that no prima facie case made out against them, this is not a fit case to exercise discretionary power under Art. 136 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 25 and 26). Rashida Kamaluddin Syed v. Shaikh Saheblal Mardan, (2007) 3 SCC 548: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 63: (2007) 1 Guj LH 621: (2007) 52 AIC 73 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 2306.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-3-2007]

Ashwin Nanubhai Vyas v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1967 SC 983: (1967) 1 SCR 807: 1967 Cri LJ 943; Jimmy Jahangir Madan v. Bolly Cariyappa Hindley, (2004) 12 SCC 509: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 317; Balasaheb K. Thackeray v. Venkat, (2006) 5 SCC 530: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 630, explained and relied on

[3084] — Ss. 302, 24 and 25 — Additional Advocate General — Appointment of — Permissibility — Scope of his functions — Appointment of Additional Advocate General, held, not contemplated by Art. 165 — However, such appointment although made under Art. 165 can be sustained under Art. 162 — But the Additional Advocate General so appointed cannot perform any constitutional or statutory functions of Advocate General — Literal interpretation applied to Art. 165 — Further held, High Court erred in resorting to S. 13, General Clauses Act and Art. 367 to hold that a provision in singular included plural — The question of interpretation of constitution would arise only in case of vagueness, indefiniteness and ambiguity but not otherwise — Constitution of India, Arts. 165, 162, 367 and 177 — CPC, 1908, S. 92 — Advocates Act, 1961, S. 23

The appellants herein challenged the appointment of two Advocates General by the A.P. Government on the ground, inter alia, that Article 165 did not contemplate appointment of more than one Advocate General. Relying on Article 367 of the Constitution and Section 13 of the General Clauses Act, the A.P. High Court held that the provision in singular included plural and that the existence of the post of Additional Advocate General did not imply that he could perform the constitutional and statutory functions. The appellants then filed the present appeal. They contended that Article 165 was clear and unambiguous and that therefore Section 13 of the General Clauses Act or Article 367 could not be invoked to interpret it. They further contended that the appointment of Additional Advocate General under Article 165 being without jurisdiction, could not be saved by invoking Article 162.

Dismissing the appeal albeit upholding the impugned order of the High Court for different reasons,

Held :

The power of the Governor of the State under Article 165 is to appoint "a person ...". Similar expressions have been used for the purpose of appointment of holders of constitutional posts including the Attorney General for India, Comptroller and Auditor General of India, the Chief Justice and Judges of the High Courts and the Supreme Court. The constitutional scheme, thus, is that when a constitutional post is required to be filled up by a person having the qualification specified therefor, he alone would perform the duties and functions, be it constitutional or statutory, attached to the said office. The Constitution does not envisage that such functions be performed by more than one person. The office of the Advocate General is a public office. He not only has a right to address the Houses of Legislature under Article 177 but also is required to perform other statutory functions in terms of Section 302 CrPC, Section 92 CPC and Section 23 of the Advocates Act. (Para 10)

The Government of a State as a litigant can appoint as many lawyers as it likes to defend it. For the said purpose, the State is not prohibited from conferring such designation on such legal practitioners as it may deem fit and proper. But, it cannot appoint more than one Advocate General. (Para 11)

In proceeding on the basis that having regard to the provisions of Section 13 of the General Clauses Act and Article 367 of the Constitution, a singular would include a plural, various High Courts committed an error insofar as they failed to take into consideration the crucial words occurring in Article 367 of the Constitution "unless the context otherwise requires". (Para 12)

The question of interpretation of a Constitution would arise only in the event the expressions contained therein are vague, indefinite and ambiguous as well as capable of being given more than one meaning. If by applying the golden rule of literal interpretation, no difficulty arises in giving effect to the constitutional scheme, the question of application of the principles of interpretation of a statute would not arise. (Para 13)

It is not possible to uphold the appellants' contention that the appointment of Additional Advocates General could not be traced to the source of the State's power under Article 162. Non-mentioning or wrong mentioning of a provision of law does not invalidate an order in the event it is found that a power therefor exists. (Para 16)

The matter relating to the appointment of a legal practitioner by a Government may be the subject-matter of a legislation. The State by amending the provisions of Sections 24 and 25 of the Code of Criminal Procedure may make a law regulating the appointment of the Public Prosecutor or Additional Public Prosecutor. Such a law can also be made for regulating appointment of other State counsel. In absence of any legislation in that behalf, various States have laid down executive instructions. Thus, the State in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 162 is competent to appoint a lawyer of its choice and designate him in such manner as it may deem fit and proper. Once it is held that such persons who are although designated as Additional Advocates General are not authorised to perform any constitutional or statutory functions, indisputably, such appointments must be held to have been made by the State in exercise of its executive power and not in exercise of its constitutional power. Consequently, Additional Advocate General so appointed is not in the constitutional scheme and does not hold constitutional office. (Para 19). M.T. Khan v. Govt. of A.P., (2004) 2 SCC 267: (2004) 1 SLR 722: (2004) 2 LLN 103: (2004) 102 FLR 3.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.N. Khare, C.J. and S.B. Sinha, J. [Date of decision: 5-1-2004]

Gurudevdatta VKSSS Maryadit v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 4 SCC 534; Balram Kumawat v. Union of India, (2003) 7 SCC 628; Union of India v. Khazan Singh, 1993 Supp (1) SCC 583: 1993 SCC (L&S) 287: (1993) 23 ATC 678; State of Karnataka v. Krishnaji Srinivas Kulkarni, (1994) 2 SCC 558, followed

M.K. Padmanabhan v. State of Kerala, 1978 Lab IC 1336: 1977 KLT 916; Regional Transport Authority v. Sita Ram, AIR 1993 Raj 76: (1992) 2 Raj LW 344; Bhadreswar Tanti v. S.N. Choudhury, AIR 1985 Gau 32, impliedly overruled

— S. 303 See also S. 340, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1145 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 303 See also Ss. 386, 374, 303, 304 and 162

[3085] — S. 303 — Right of person against whom proceedings are instituted to be defended — Reversal of order of acquittal by High Court in absence of counsel for the accused — Effect — During the pendency of appeal filed by State against order of acquittal passed by trial court, appellant filing an application for changing the counsel and seeking permission to engage one AS in place of AN — Said application allowed by High Court — However, in the cause-list for the day concerned in respect of the appeal, name of AN appeared and hence, appellant unrepresented in High Court — High Court proceeding to hear the appeal in absence of counsel and reversing the order of acquittal — Held, such an action prejudiced the appellant — Matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 149 (Paras 2, 3, 5 and 6). Netraj Singh v. State of M.P., (2007) 12 SCC 520: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 287: AIR 2008 SC 14.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2007]

[3086] — Ss. 303, 304, 233 and 243 — Defence of accused, if adequate — Counsel's performance — Judicial scrutiny of — Scope — Though objection of accused that he was not satisfied with his counsel was reiterated, it cannot be that court should dislodge the counsel and go on searching for some other counsel to liking of accused — Right to legal aid cannot be taken thus far — CPC, 1908, Or. 3 R. 1 — Legal Services Authorities Act, 1987, Ss. 12 and 13

Judicial scrutiny of a counsel's performance must be careful, deferential and circumspect as the ground of ineffective assistance could be easily raised after an adverse verdict at the trial. (Para 167)

No indicia of apparent prejudice is discernible from the manner in which the case against the accused Afzal was defended. Though the objection that he was not satisfied with his counsel was reiterated it cannot be that the Court should dislodge the counsel and go on searching for some other counsel to the liking of the accused. The right to legal aid cannot be taken thus far. It is not demonstrated as to how the case was mishandled by the advocate appointed as amicus except by pointing out stray instances pertaining to the cross-examination of one or two witnesses. (Para 167)

True, the appellant was without counsel till 17-5-2002 but the fact remains that till then, no proceedings except extending the remand and furnishing of documents took place in the court. On 5-6-2002 all the counsel appearing for the accused agreed that all the items of evidence (documents, explosives, guns, etc.) should be considered as undisputed evidence without formal proof which resulted in dropping of considerable number of witnesses for the prosecution. Whether or Afzal's counsel had instructions in this regard there is nothing wrong in the conduct of the advocate in agreeing for admission of formal documents without formal proof or in agreeing for the framing of charges. The counsel had exercised her discretion reasonably. The accused-appellant did not object to this course adopted by the amicus throughout the trial. No doubt, some of the documents admitted contained particulars of identification of the deceased terrorists by the appellant Afzal, but, the factum of identification was independently proved by the prosecution witnesses and opportunity of cross-examination was available to the accused. In the circumstances it cannot be said that there was a reasonable possibility of prejudice on account of admission of the said documents without formal proof. Further Afzal was also given the opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in addition to the amicus. In fact, he did avail of that opportunity now and then. On several occasions, there was common cross-examination on behalf of all the accused. The trial Judge did his best to afford effective legal aid to the accused Afzal when he declined to engage a counsel on his own. It cannot be held that the learned counsel who defended the accused at the trial was either inexperienced or ineffective or otherwise handled the case in a casual manner. The criticism against the counsel seems to be an afterthought raised at the appellate stage. It was rightly negatived by the High Court. Taking an overall view of the assistance given by the court and the performance of the counsel, it cannot be said that the accused was denied the facility of effective defence. (Paras 165 to 168). State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715: 2005 Cri LJ 3950: (2005) 122 DLT 194.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2005]

Strickland v. Washington, 466 US 668 (1984), followed

[3087] — Ss. 303, 304, 384, 385 and 386 — PIL — Standing — Writ petition by a third party challenging conviction and sentences awarded to certain convicts on ground of violation of their fundamental rights — Petitioner claiming to be a leader of a recognised political party and as such having interest in future of the convicts — Held, petition not maintainable — Petitioner being a total stranger to the prosecution, having not even been authorised by the convicts and having not alleged violation of his own fundamental rights, has no locus standi to maintain the petition — Such third party can be allowed to represent the convicts only if they are under some disability recognised by law — Such cases where Court after regular trial orders conviction and sentence are different from preventive detention cases — Constitution of India — Arts. 32 and 51-A

The conviction and sentence of two assassins of Gen. Vaidya under S. 302 (for murder of the General) and 307 (for causing bullet injuries to his wife) and Ss. 302 and 307 read with S. 34 IPC respectively were affirmed by the Supreme Court vide its judgment dated July 15, 1992, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705. The present petitioner, claiming to be the President of a recognised political party viz. Akali Dal (M) and 'an acknowledged political leader' and therefore, "vitally interested in upholding the rule of law and ensuring that the same is applied equally with fairness, equity and good conscience to all', filed the writ petition under Art. 32 challenging the conviction and sentences on ground of violation of Arts. 22, 21 and 14 (see para 3).

Dismissing the petition summarily,

Held :

Article 32 empowers the Supreme Court to issue directions or orders or writs for the enforcement of any of the fundamental rights. The petitioner does not seek to enforce any of his fundamental rights nor does he complain that any of his fundamental rights is violated. He seeks to enforce the fundamental rights of others, namely, the two condemned convicts. They themselves have not complained of their violation, nor have they authorised the petitioner to move the Court on their behalf. There is no provision in the Code or the Rules which permits an accused to be represented by a person, other than a lawyer, like the petitioner. The two convicts could, if so minded, have raised the contention in the earlier proceedings but a third party, a total stranger to the trial commenced against the two convicts, cannot be permitted to question the correctness of the conviction recorded against them. If that were permitted any and every person could challenge convictions recorded day in and day out by courts even if the persons convicted do not desire to do so and are inclined to acquiesce in the decision. If the aggrieved party invokes the jurisdiction of the Court under Art. 32, that may stand on a different footing though this does not mean that in all such cases the aggrieved party has a remedy under Art. 32. Unless an aggrieved party is under some disability recognised by law, it would be unsafe and hazardous to allow any third party to question the decision against him. Cases which have ended in conviction by the apex court after a full gamut of litigation are not comparable with preventive detention cases where a friend or next of kin is permitted to seek a writ of habeas corpus. Therefore, neither under the provisions of the Code nor under any other statute is a third party stranger permitted to question the correctness of the conviction and sentence imposed by the Court after a regular trial. It is difficult to accept the contention that such a public interest litigation commenced by a leader of a recognised political party who has a genuine interest in the future of the convicts should be entertained. The Court must not allow its process to be abused by politicians. Thus the petitioner has no 'locus standi' to invoke the Court's jurisdiction under Art. 32. Simranjit Singh Mann v. Union of India, (1992) 4 SCC 653: 1993 SCC (Cri) 22: AIR 1993 SC 280.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-1992]

S.P. Gupta v. Union of India, 1981 Supp SCC 87; M. Krishna Swami v. Union of India, (1992) 4 SCC 605; Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305, followed

[3088] — Ss. 303 and 2(q) — Appearance by non-advocate — Criteria for consideration by court — Before permitting a non-advocate to appear on behalf of any party the court must consider whether the permission is necessary and satisfy itself as to whether the person proposed to be appointed has the ability to assist the court in reaching proper findings on the issues involved in the case — In the adversarial system of conducting trials it is very necessary that the court gets proper assistance from both sides — Advocates Act, 1961, S. 32 — Criteria for permitting appearance by non-advocate

Under Sections 303 and 2(q) CrPC it is not necessary that the "pleader" so appointed should be the power-of-attorney holder of the party in the case. What is a condition precedent is that his appointment should have been preceded by grant of permission of the court. It is for the court to consider whether such permission is necessary in the given case and whether the person proposed to be appointed is capable of helping the court by pleading for the party, for arriving at proper findings on the issues involved in the case.

The work in a court of law is a serious and responsible function. The primary duty of a criminal court is to administer criminal justice. Any lax or wayward approach, if adopted towards the issues involved in the case, can cause serious consequences for the parties concerned. It is not just somebody representing the party in the criminal court who becomes the pleader of the party. In the adversary system which is now being followed in India, both in civil and criminal litigation, it is very necessary that the court gets proper assistance from both sides.

If the person proposed to be appointed by the party is not an advocate the court has first to satisfy itself whether the expected assistance would be rendered by that person. The reason for Parliament for fixing such a filter in the definition clause [Section 2(q) of the Code] that prior permission must be secured before a non-advocate is appointed by the party to plead his cause in the court, is to enable the court to verify the level of equipment of such a person for pleading on behalf of the party concerned. T.C. Mathai v. District & Sessions Judge, Thiruvananthapuram, (1999) 3 SCC 614: 1999 SCC (Cri) 455: AIR 1999 SC 1385: 1999 Cri LJ 2092.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-1999]

Harishankar Rastogi v. Girdhari Sharma, (1978) 2 SCC 165: 1978 SCC (Cri) 168: AIR 1978 SC 1019, relied on [3089] — Ss. 303 and 2(q) — Entitlement to defence by non-advocate, limits to — Under S. 303 an accused is entitled to be defended by a pleader of his choice, who under S. 2(q) can either be a legal practitioner or "any person" — But in the latter case such a person should have been appointed with the permission of the court to act in the proceedings — This rule is in harmony with S. 32 of the Advocates Act, 1961, which although permits a non-advocate to appear and represent a party before the court, also stipulates that if the appearance is to be before a criminal court, such party must seek and gain permission of the court for the appearance — Not necessary that the 'pleader' so appointed be a power-of-attorney holder of the party he represents — Permission of the court is however a condition precedent — Advocates Act, 1961, S. 32 — Constitution of India, Art. 22(1). T.C. Mathai v. District & Sessions Judge, Thiruvananthapuram, (1999) 3 SCC 614: 1999 SCC (Cri) 455: AIR 1999 SC 1385: 1999 Cri LJ 2092.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-1999]

[3090] — Ss. 303 and 2(q), 205, 273 — Appearance through power of attorney holder — Advocates Act, 1961 — S. 32 — S. 2 of the Power of Attorney Act, 1882, held, cannot override the specific provision of a statute which requires that a particular act should be done by a party-in-person — Personal attendance may be dispensed with under the Criminal Procedure Code by the court and appearance by pleader permitted — But accused cannot appear through a power-of-attorney holder unless permission for such appearance is sought by the accused himself and the court expressly grants such permission — Appellant power-of-attorney holder seeking to represent two persons arrayed as respondents in a criminal revision petition — Permission denied by Sessions Judge on ground that the request for permission did not emanate from the parties concerned themselves — Writ petition dismissed by Single Bench of the High Court and writ appeal by the Division Bench — Held, the Division Bench of the High Court rightly dismissed the writ appeal of the power-of-attorney holder — Powers of Attorney Act, 1882, S. 2

When the Criminal Procedure Code requires the appearance of an accused in a court it is no compliance with it if a power-of-attorney holder appears for him. It is a different thing that a party can be permitted to appear through counsel. Chapter XVI of the Code empowers the Magistrate to issue summons or warrant for the appearance of the accused. Section 205 of the Code empowers the Magistrate to dispense with "the personal attendance of the accused, and permit him to appear by his pleader" if he sees reasons to do so. Section 273 of the Code speaks of the powers of the court to record evidence in the presence of the pleader of the accused, in cases when personal attendance of the accused is dispensed with. But in no case can the appearance of the accused be made through a power-of-attorney holder.

The observations made in M. Krishnammal v. T. Balasubramania Pillai though stated sixty years ago, would represent the correct legal position even now. Thus an agent cannot become a "pleader" for the party in criminal proceedings unless the party secures permission from the court to appoint him to act in such proceedings. T.C. Mathai v. District & Sessions Judge, Thiruvananthapuram, (1999) 3 SCC 614: 1999 SCC (Cri) 455: AIR 1999 SC 1385: 1999 Cri LJ 2092.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-1999]

Ravulu Subba Rao v. CIT, AIR 1956 SC 604: (1956) 30 ITR 163, applied

M. Krishnammal v. T. Balasubramania Pillai, AIR 1937 Mad 937: (1937) 2 MLJ 552, approved

[3091] — S. 303 — Right of accused to be defended by a legal practitioner of his choice — Interference with — Effect — False criminal cases launched against lawyers appearing for defence — Attempt made by prosecution machinery to demoralise and scare the accused's senior counsel by scandalising his reputation and casting a slur on his character and conduct — On facts, held, defence lawyers could not perform their professional duty in a proper and dignified manner on account of hurdles created by the State machinery — It was bound to result in miscarriage of justice — Accused were seriously handicapped in defending themselves — CrPC, 1898, S. 340(1) — Constitution of India — Art. 22(1)

The affidavits and the documents placed on record conclusively establish that a serious attempt has been made by the State machinery to launch criminal prosecution against lawyers, who may be even remotely connected with the defence of the accused. The police submitted charge-sheet against two lady lawyers (juniors of the counsel for the accused) under various sections of IPC including Section 201 IPC when even accepting every word in the FIR lodged, no offence under the said provision is made out. The Superintendent of Police, SIT and the Police Inspector connected with the investigation even went to the extent of prompting the approver R to make insinuation against a very Senior Counsel KD who has been practising for over 43 years and is appearing as counsel for the petitioner. R during his cross-examination made a statement at the instance of the head of the Special Investigation Team (SIT) that KD met his wife at his house and had threatened her that R should not give any statement against the petitioner. (Paras 23 and 9)

Article 22(1) of the Constitution gives a guarantee to a person arrested and detained to be defended by a legal practitioner of his choice. Section 303 CrPC, 1973 says that any person accused of an offence before a criminal court or against whom proceedings are instituted under the Code, may of right be defended by a pleader of his choice. Even under the British rule when the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 was enacted, Section 340(1) thereof gave a similar right to an accused. It is elementary that if a lawyer whom the accused has engaged for his defence is put under a threat of criminal prosecution he can hardly discharge his professional duty of defending his client in a fearless manner. A senior and respected counsel is bound to get unnerved if an insinuation is made against him in court that he approached the wife of a witness for not giving evidence against the accused in the court. From the material placed the court is prima facie satisfied that a situation has arisen in the present case wherein the lawyers engaged by the petitioner and other co-accused cannot perform their professional duty in a proper and dignified manner on account of various hurdles created by the State machinery. No lawyer would like to get associated with a case where a slur is made on his character and conduct and the reputation, which he has earned by maintaining high professional standards for a long period, is sought to be damaged. Any dignified lawyer would not agree to conduct a case on behalf of the accused in such an atmosphere and even if he does so, he would not be able to discharge his duties properly on account of threat to his personal reputation. The lawyers would be more concerned with shielding their own reputation or their liberty rather than cross-examining the prosecution witnesses for eliciting the truth. The constant fear of not causing any annoyance to the prosecution witnesses specially those of the Police Department would loom large over their minds vitally affecting the defence of the accused. This is bound to result in miscarriage of justice for the accused. Institution of the criminal case against the junior lawyers, whose seniors are appearing as counsel for the accused, undoubtedly shows that in the prevailing conditions the accused will be seriously handicapped in defending themselves on account of threat and intimidation to their counsel. (Paras 23 and 12). Sri Jayendra Saraswathy Swamigal (II) v. State of T.N., (2005) 8 SCC 771.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 26-10-2005]

[3092] — S. 303 — "Pleader of his choice" — Right of accused to have — Professional misconduct — Refusal to return case files when demanded by client held, amounts to professional misconduct — Advocate has no lien in respect of litigation papers in his keeping even where there is a dispute regarding payment of his fees — Obligation to return the brief is not just a legal duty but a moral imperative — Advocate has other legal remedies to recover such fees — Litigation papers and case files cannot be equated with "goods bailed" under Ss. 171 and 148 of Contract Act — Litigant is free to change his advocate when he feels that the advocate retained cannot espouse his cause efficiently or that the conduct of such advocate is prejudicial to his interest or for any other reason — Moreover, permitting an advocate lien over the case files in view of fees claimed by him, held, would result in serious abuse and exploitation of illiterate litigants — Further, the cause in a court/tribunal is far more important than the right of an advocate to his fees — Held, the Bar Council of India rightly found the appellant guilty of professional misconduct for refusing to return the case files of his client Bank on the basis of the claim that the Bank had still to pay the balance of his fees — However, Supreme Court reducing the punishment awarded (18 months' disbarment and Rs 1000 fine) to reprimand, because this occasion was the first time that the Supreme Court had pronounced a ruling on the question of whether an advocate had a lien over case files for his fees — Clarified that reduced punishment would not count as a precedent — CPC, 1908, Or. 3 R. 4(2) — Constitution of India, Art. 22(1) — Bar Council of India Rules — Pt. VI Ch. II Rr. 24, 28, 29 — Contract Act, 1872, Ss. 171 and 148 r/w Sale of Goods Act, 1930 — S. 2(7) — Advocates Act, 1961, S. 35

The appellant R, was an advocate who was retained by the M.P. State Cooperative Bank in 1990 as a legal advisor and also to conduct cases in which the Bank was a party. In 1993 the Bank terminated the retainership and asked the appellant to return its case files. The appellant did not do so and instead presented a consolidated bill to the Bank seeking Rs 97,100 as the balance owing to him for legal services rendered. He also informed the Bank that he would return the files only after his dues were settled.

The Bank denied that any amount in respect of fees was owed to R. After fruitless correspondence it filed a complaint before the State Bar Council on 3-2-1994, accusing the appellant of professional misconduct. In his reply R admitted that he had not returned the Bank's files, but he contended that he had a right of lien over them as long as his bills remained unpaid. As the State Bar Council did not dispose of the matter even after the expiry of one year, the proceedings stood transferred to the Bar Council of India, under the provisions of Section 36-B of the Advocates Act. The Bar Council of India held an inquiry and concluded that R was guilty of professional misconduct; as punishment the appellant was disbarred for a period of 18 months and finded Rs 1000.

Before the Supreme Court, it was contended for the appellant that a miscarriage of justice had resulted, because the Bar Council of India had not considered the defence set up by the appellant, that he had a lien over his client's files in lieu of his unpaid fees. For the Bank it was contended that no amount was owing to the appellant and that the bill presented by him only showed inflated figures; in the alternative it was contended that an advocate could not retain a client's files after the termination of his engagement and that a lien in respect of such files could not be claimed.

Dismissing the appeal, but reducing the quantum of punishment to a reprimand,

Held :

Per curiam (Thomas and Sethi, JJ.)

After independence, the Advocates Act, 1961 was enacted and it repealed a host of enactments including the Indian Bar Council Act. When the new Bar Council of India came into existence it framed rules called the Bar Council of India Rules as empowered by the Advocates Act. Such Rules contain provisions specifically prohibiting an advocate from adjusting the fees payable to him by a client against his own personal liability to the client. As a rule an advocate shall not do anything whereby he abuses or takes advantage of the confidence reposed in him by his client (vide Rule 24; see also Rules 28 and 29). (Para 12)

Thus, even after providing a right for an advocate to deduct the fees out of any money of the client remaining in his hand at the termination of the proceeding for which the advocate was engaged, it is important to notice that no lien is provided on the litigation files kept with him. In the conditions prevailing in India with lots of illiterate people among the litigant public it may not be advisable also to permit the counsel to retain the case bundle for the fees claimed by him. Any such lien if permitted would become susceptible to great abuse and exploitation. (Para 13)

Nobody would dispute the proposition that the cause in a court/tribunal is far more important for all concerned than the right of the legal practitioner for his remuneration in respect of the services rendered for espousing the cause on behalf of the litigant. If a need arises for the litigant to change his counsel pendente lite, that which is more important should have its even course flow unimpeded. Retention of records for the unpaid remuneration of the advocate would impede such a course and the cause pending judicial disposal would be badly impaired. If a medical practitioner is allowed a legal right to withhold the papers relating to the treatment of his patient which he thus far administered to him for securing the unpaid bill, that would lead to dangerous consequences for the uncured patient who is wanting to change his doctor. No professional can be given the right to withhold the returnable records relating to the work done by him with his client's matter on the strength of any claim for unpaid remuneration. The alternative is that the professional concerned can resort to other legal remedies for such unpaid remuneration. (Para 14)

A litigant must have the freedom to change his advocate when he feels that the advocate engaged by him is not capable of espousing his cause efficiently or that his conduct is prejudicial to the interest involved in the lis, or for any other reason. For whatever reason, if a client does not want to continue the engagement of a particular advocate it would be a professional requirement consistent with the dignity of the profession that he should return the brief to the client. It is time to hold that such obligation is not only a legal duty but a moral imperative. (Para 15)

The words "of his choice" in Article 22(1) of the Constitution indicate that the right of the accused to change an advocate whom he once engaged in the same case, cannot be whittled down by that advocate by withholding the case bundle on the premise that he has to get the fees for the services already rendered to the client. (Para 16)

If a party terminates the engagement of an advocate before the culmination of the proceedings that party must have the entire file with him to engage another advocate. But if the advocate who is changed midway adopts the stand that he would not return the file until the fees claimed by him are paid, the situation perhaps may turn to dangerous proportions. There may be cases when a party has no resources to pay the huge amount claimed by the advocate as his remuneration. A party in a litigation may have a version that he has already paid the legitimate fee to the advocate. At any rate if the litigation is pending the party has the right to get the papers from the advocate whom he has changed so that the new counsel can be briefed by him effectively. In either case it is impermissible for the erstwhile counsel to retain the case bundle on the premise that fees are yet to be paid. (Para 17)

Even if there is no lien on the litigation papers of his client an advocate is not without remedies to realise the fee which he is legitimately entitled to. But if he has a duty to return the files to his client on being discharged, the litigant too has a right to have the files returned to him, more so when the remaining part of the lis has to be fought in the court. This right of the litigant is to be read as the corresponding counterpart of the professional duty of the advocate. (Para 18)

The word "misconduct" is a relative term. It has to be considered with reference to the subject-matter and the context wherein such term occurs. It literally means wrong conduct or improper conduct. (Para 19)

For understanding the import of the expression "misconduct" in the context in which it is referred to in Section 35 of the Advocates Act a wide canvas should be adopted. (Para 22)

Therefore it is held that the refusal to return the files to the client when he demanded the same amounted to misconduct under Section 35 of the Act. Hence, the appellant in the present case is liable to punishment for such misconduct. (Para 23)

However, regarding the quantum of punishment two broad aspects must be taken into account:

(1) This Court has not pronounced, so far, on the question whether the advocate has a lien on the files for his fees.

(2) The appellant would have bona fide believed, in the light of decisions of certain High Courts, that he did have a lien.

In such circumstances it is not necessary to inflict a harsh punishment on the appellant. A reprimand would be sufficient in the interest of justice on the special facts of this case. (Para 24)

The punishment awarded to the appellant is therefore altered to one of reprimanding the appellant. However, it is made clear that if any advocate commits this type of professional misconduct in future he would be liable to such quantum of punishment as the Bar Council will determine and the lesser punishment imposed now need not be counted as a precedent. (Para 25)

Per Sethi, J. (supplementing)

While dealing with moneys or any other article or document entrusted to him, an advocate is expected to always keep in mind the high standards of the profession and its values adopted and practised for centuries. "Professional obligations" of a lawyer are distinguished from the "business commitments" followed by the trading community. The legal profession owes social obligations to the society in discharge of professional services to the litigants. (Para 28)

Even under the common law no lien can be claimed with respect to the case file and such documents which are necessary for the further progress of the lis filed in the court. Even in England the right of retention has been much diluted by various exceptions created by decisions, chiefly by the courts of equity on the basis of what may be just and equitable as between the parties with conflicting interests. (Para 35)

In modern India, the rights of an advocate to appear in the court are referable to his enrolment as such under the statute governing the enrolment. The lawyer's rights, obligations and disabilities are, therefore, governed either by the contract or by the statute. He has the right to sue his client for his fees, if not paid, like any other professional. The rights and obligations of an advocate ought to be regulated by keeping the high standards and exalted position of the profession, by not treating the lawyers as ordinary merchants. (Para 38)

Thus, looking from any angle, it cannot be said that the case papers entrusted by the client to his counsel are the goods in his hand upon which he can claim a retaining lien till his fee or other charges incurred are not paid. An advocate is expected, at all times, to conduct himself in a manner befitting his status as an officer and a gentleman by upholding the high and honourable profession to whose privilege he has been admitted after his enrolment. If an advocate departs from the high standards which the profession has set for itself and conducts himself in a manner which is not fair, reasonable and according to law, he is liable to disciplinary action. (Para 41)

In India admittedly, a social duty is cast upon the legal profession to show the people beacon light by their conduct and actions. The poor, uneducated and exploited mass of the people need a helping hand from the legal profession. No effort should be made or allowed to be made by which a litigant could be deprived of his rights, statutory as well as constitutional, by an advocate only on account of the exalted position conferred upon him under the judicial system prevalent in the country. An advocate is competent to settle the terms of his engagement and his fee by private agreement with his client but it is equally true that if such fee is not paid he has no right to retain the case papers and other documents belonging to his client. Like any other citizen, an advocate has a right to recover the fee or other amounts payable to him by the litigant by way of legal proceedings but subject to such restrictions as may be imposed by law or the rules made in that behalf. It is high time for the legal profession to join heads and evolve a code for themselves in addition to the mandate of the Advocates Act, Rules made thereunder and the Rules made by various High Courts and the Supreme Court, for strengthening the belief of the common man in the institution of the judiciary in general and in their profession in particular. Creation of such a faith and confidence would not only strengthen the rule of law but also result in reaching excellence in the profession. (Para 42). R.D. Saxena v. Balram Prasad Sharma, (2000) 7 SCC 264: AIR 2000 SC 2912: (2000) 163 CTR 32.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas[1] and R.P. Sethi[1 & 2], JJ. [Date of decision: 22-8-2000]

State of M.P. v. Shobharam, AIR 1966 SC 1910: 1966 Cri LJ 1521; 'G', a Senior Advocate of the Supreme Court, Re, AIR 1954 SC 557: 1954 Cri LJ 1410; M, an Advocate, Re, AIR 1957 SC 149: 1957 Cri LJ 300, relied on [3093] — Ss. 303, 300, 202 and 319 — Autrefois convict or acquit — Applicability of the principle of — Proceedings under S. 319 can be initiated against a person even after inquiry under S. 202 and dismissal of complaint under S. 303 — Principles of autrefois convict or acquit not applicable — Constitution of India — Art. 20(2). S.S. Khanna v. Chief Secy., (1983) 3 SCC 42: 1983 SCC (Cri) 562: AIR 1983 SC 595: 1983 Cri LJ 1044.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1983]

— S. 304 See Ss. 303, 304, 233 and 243
See also Ss. 303, 304, 384, 385 and 386
See also Ss. 386, 374, 303, 304 and 162

[3094] — S. 304 — Legal aid programme — Norms or guide-lines laid down for State to follow in giving support and cooperation to voluntary organisations and social action groups in operating legal aid programmes and organising legal aid camps and lok adalats or niti melas — CPC, 1908, Or. 33, Rr. 9-A and 18 — Constitution of India, Art. 39-A. Centre for Legal Research v. State of Kerala, (1986) 2 SCC 706: 1986 SCC (Cri) 246: AIR 1986 SC 2195.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J. and V. Khalid and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1986]

[3095] — S. 304 — Free legal aid at State expense to the indigent accused, held, is a constitutional mandate obligating all State Governments to make adequate provisions for it, if not done so already — Where free legal services are not provided to such accused the trial may run the risk of violating Art. 21 — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 14 and 39-A. Hussainara Khatoon (V) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 108: 1980 SCC (Cri) 50: AIR 1979 SC 1377: 1979 Cri LJ 1052: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 93.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, O. Chinnappa Reddy and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-1979]

[3096] — S. 304 — Right to free legal services, held, is implicit in Art. 21 without which the procedure cannot be said to be 'reasonable, fair and just' to those who cannot secure such services — Undertrials who could not secure their release on bail for lack of legal assistance, held, must be provided free legal aid at State expense — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 14 and 39-A. Hussainara Khatoon (IV) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 98: 1980 SCC (Cri) 40: AIR 1979 SC 1369: 1979 Cri LJ 1045: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 86.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-3-1979]

[3097] — S. 304 — Free legal aid in criminal trials — Fundamental right of an indigent accused to be provided with — Held, cannot be denied on his failure to apply for free legal aid — Magistrate bound to inform every accused, who on conviction is liable to imprisonment, of this right and inquire if he wishes to be represented at State cost — Unless refused by the accused, failure to provide legal aid would vitiate the trial — Exception restated — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 39-A

The appellant Government servant was tried and convicted to suffer imprisonment for two years for offences under S. 506 r/w S. 34, IPC. He was not represented at the trial by any lawyer by reason of his inability to afford legal representation. On appeal the High Court held the trial not to be vitiated since no application for legal aid was made by them. On appeal by special leave Supreme Court.

Held :

Free legal assistance at State cost is a fundamental right of a person accused of an offence which may involve jeopardy to his life or personal liberty and this fundamental right is implicit in the requirement of reasonable, fair and just procedure prescribed by Art. 21.

The exercise of this fundamental right is not conditional upon the accused applying for free legal aid and hence cannot be denied if the accused failed to apply for it. Illiteracy, poverty and ignorance of rights and entitlements under the law abounds leading to deception, exploitation and deprivation of rights and benefits under the law. It would be a mockery of the legal aid programme if it were to be left to the poor, ignorant and illiterate accused to ask for free legal services.

Since Supreme Court's judgment in Khatri (II) on December 19, 1980 every Magistrate or the Sessions Judge before whom an accused appears is under an obligation to inform the accused that if he is unable to engage the services of a lawyer on account of poverty or indigence, he is entitled to obtain free legal services at the cost of the State, unless he is not willing to take advantage of it. And every State has to make provision for such free legal aid services if it would result in a sentence of imprisonment and is of such nature that the circumstances of the case and the needs of social justice require that he should be given free legal representation.

The High Court therefore was in error in not finding unconstitutionality with the trial merely on the ground that the appellant did not make an application for free legal assistance. That the appellant was not given the opportunity to avail free legal assistance and remained unrepresented by a lawyer at the trial violated his fundamental right under Art. 21. The trial being vitiated, the conviction and sentence must be set aside.

[On the peculiar facts and circumstances the Court ordered that the appellant be reinstated but without back wages and that no fresh trial be held against him.] . Suk Das v. UT, Arunachal Pradesh, (1986) 2 SCC 401: 1986 SCC (Cri) 166: AIR 1986 SC 991: 1986 Cri LJ 1084: 1986 ALJ 774: 1986 BLJR 394.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J. and D.P. Madon and G.L. Oza, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1986]

Hussainara Khatoon (IV) v. Home Secretary, (1980) 1 SCC 98: 1980 SCC (Cri) 40 1045 ; M.H. Hoskot v. State of Maharashtra, (1978) 3 SCC 544: 1978 SCC (Cri) 468 and Khatri (II) v. State of Bihar, (1981) 1 SCC 627: 1981 SCC (Cri) 228, followed [Ed.: The present decision has carried the dictum of Khatri II a step further by laying down that the plea that the accused failed to apply for legal aid will not stand against breach of the constitutional mandate implicit in Art. 21 of informing and providing free legal aid to every indigent accused likely to suffer imprisonment if convicted. The case clearly lays down that unless refused, failure to provide free legal aid to such accused persons would vitiate their trial, entailing setting aside of the conviction and sentence against them. This would mean that every prisoner, now serving his term of imprisonment who was unrepresented by a lawyer at his trial by reason of his indigency, and had not refused any legal aid offered to him, can have his conviction set aside. Of course he is liable to be retried after being provided free legal aid.

But such a reading of the ruling seems to be qualified. Free legal aid, it appears, may not be granted in certain cases. The grant of free legal aid must satisfy a weighty consideration. This consideration was first spelt out in Khatri II in the following words: (SCC p. 632, para 6, bottom)

"The only qualification would be that the offence charged against the accused is such that, on conviction, it would result in a sentence of imprisonment and is of such a nature that the circumstances of the case and the needs of social justice require that he should be given free legal representation. There may be cases involving offences such as economic offences or offences against law prohibiting prostitution or child abuse and the like, where social justice may require that free legal services need not be provided by the State." (emphasis added)

This, so to say, test finds verbatim repetition in the present case in paras 5 and 6.

The above criteria are neither well-defined nor exhaustive and under "and the like" in a large class of cases free legal aid may not be forthcoming. There would be no uniformity and between the different States one can expect wide divergence in the implementation of free legal aid programme. Much would also depend on the response of the Executive in each State.

One would like to think that free legal aid for the indigent and illiterate accused is an end in itself. To make it a means to achieve another end, namely social justice, is fraught with the possibility of its ending up like the many anti-poverty and development programmes of the Government.

The category of offences mentioned by the Court are those which in the present times evoke strong condemnation by the general public. But can certain offences, however grave, despicable or horrendous be put in a separate class being unworthy of free legal aid? Will that be fair and just? No such distinction is made in the United States. In Hussainara (IV), the Supreme Court quoted the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Gideon v. Waingwright and Jon Richard Argersinger v. Raymond Hamlin. From the latter case the following has been quoted: [(1980) 1 SCC 98, 104]

"Both Powell and Gideon involve felonies. But their rationale has relevance to any criminal trial, where an accused is deprived of his liberty." (emphasis added)

An accused till properly convicted is "presumed to be innocent" and must be proved guilty "beyond reasonable doubt". Can we by an a priori condemnation deny to the accused the very free legal aid which alone can in his case prove that the condemnation or charge was false and that he is unworthy of that condemnation?

Even in the categories specifically mentioned there is some difficulty. In Hussainara (II) [(1980) 1 SCC 91] the court applauded the effort of the Bihar government in withdrawing certain class of cases and amongst them were cases under the Forest Act and the Excise Act. Offences under the latter would clearly fall under the presently excepted category of "economic offences". Is the indigent and often illiterate milkman, the hawker and petty vendor to be denied legal aid on a mere challan by the Inspector under Prevention of Food Adulteration Act or the Standards of Weights and Measures Act?

In Haskot, Krishna Iyer, J. came heavily on soft justice against white-collar criminals and yet strongly argued in that case for free legal aid without drawing any distinction between such offenders and the rest.

Regarding those charged with offences against law prohibiting prostitution or child abuse, the Hussainara Orders [(1980) 1 SCC 98] which greatly boosted the cause of free legal aid show from their directions that the Court had before it women and children held in protective custody who were actually 'victims of the offence'. Such offenders were not put in a different class then. In offences tried under SITA the woman or girl being the subject of prostitution can herself be an accused under Ss. 7 and 8. Again will she on a mere challan stand excepted from free legal aid?

Can a consideration be that to defend such unworthy offenders is to put unnecessary burden on the State and therefore against social justice? The Court in Khatri (II) [(1981) 1 SCC 627, 631] has categorically ruled out the plea of 'financial' burden 'or administrative inability' against providing legal aid.

The whole basis of free legal aid seems to rule out any of these considerations. The object is to ensure equality before the law by ensuring that those who cannot afford legal representation do not suffer merely because of their indigency or illiteracy. That is the criterion. None else. Art. 39-A is the lodestar and it speaks only of "economic and other disabilities" as the deciding factors.

What is of course very necessary is that only those who are really indigent make use of free legal aid facility. A means and resources statement, on oath if necessary, can be required to be made before the Magistrate and accordingly if he falls below the predetermined poverty line he be provided free legal aid automatically. That is not to rule out coordinate functioning of Legal Aid Boards or involvement of law students and law schools in legal aid.

One would therefore like to believe that the qualifications made in Khatri (II) for the grant and denial of free legal aid and which find repetition in the present case are not intended to whittle down free legal aid to the deserving. The whole tenor of developments since Maneka do not support the carving out of any exceptions on any ground to the rule of free aid to the indigent, illiterate and the ignorant and such legal aid is a constitutional directive, an end in itself and not the means to any other goal.]

[3098] — S. 304 — Free legal aid to accused — Accused not assisted by a lawyer before the trial court in a case in which statute provided minimum sentence of 10 years' R.I. and a fine of Rs 1 lakh — Conviction set aside and case remanded for de novo trial — Accused may make request to the Court to provide him with a lawyer. Tyron Nazareth v. State of Goa, 1994 Supp (3) SCC 321: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1716.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and R.M. Sahai, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-10-1993]

Khatri II v. State of Bihar, (1981) 1 SCC 627: 1981 SCC (Cri) 228; Suk Das v. UT, Arunachal Pradesh, (1986) 2 SCC 401: 1986 SCC (Cri) 166, relied on [3099] — S. 304 — Legal aid — When warranted — Held, need not be provided in each and every case but in the instant case where the appellant had confessed in a large number of cases at the same time, the State could not have denied legal aid to him for a period of three years (Para 19). Babubhai Udesinh Parmar v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 12 SCC 268: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 702: AIR 2007 SC 420: (2007) 49 AIC 618 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 786: (2007) 1 Guj LR 742.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-2006]

[3100] — S. 304(1) — Right of accused to engage legal practitioner at State expense for defence — Held, not enforceable by writ petition under Art. 32 — Proper course would be to make application under S. 304(1), CrPC to Sessions Court for fixing counsel and amount of fee to be paid to him — But if the rules framed by (Delhi) High Court regarding the fees payable to lawyers are found to be insufficient, the Sessions Court may make reference to High Court for deciding sufficiency of the fees under Art. 227(3)

The interpretation of the expression 'the right to be defended by a legal practitioner of his choice' in Art. 22(1) has undergone a change by the enactment of S. 304(1), CrPC, the wide meaning given by the court to Art. 21 and the introduction of Art. 39-A. Primarily the mandate in Art. 39-A is addressed to the legislature and the executive but insofar as the courts of justice can indulge in some judicial law-making within the interstices of the Constitution or any statute before them for construction, the courts too are bound by this mandate. The courts have a responsibility in so interpreting the Constitution as to ensure implementation of the Directives and harmonise the social objective underlying the Directives with individual rights. The Directive Principle in Art. 39-A has been taken cognizance of by the Supreme Court by reading it with Art. 21. It is now well settled that the requirement of compliance with natural justice is implicit in Art. 21 and that if any penal law does not lay down the requirement of hearing before affecting him, that requirement would be implied by the court so that the procedure prescribed by law would be reasonable and not arbitrary procedure. In view of S. 304(1), CrPC when it becomes difficult for the accused to find sufficient means to engage a lawyer of competence, the court possesses power to grant fee legal aid if the interest of justice so requires.

The present petition under Art. 32 is virtually for the grant of a writ of mandamus for the enforcement of Art. 39-A. But the petitioner is not entitled to get the relief sought for under Art. 32. The remedy of the petitioner is to make an application before the Additional Sessions Judge making out a case for the grant of free legal aid and if the Judge is satisfied that the requirements of S. 304, CrPC are fulfilled, he may make necessary directions in that behalf. While fixing the fee of counsel appearing for the petitioner, the Sessions Court shall fix the amount of fee having regard to the interim orders passed by the Supreme Court. But if the Sessions Court feels that it is bound by the constraints of the rules framed by the Delhi High Court prescribing scales of remuneration for empanelled lawyers, it shall make a reference to the High Court for suitable directions. On such reference being made, the High Court shall consider in its jurisdiction under Art. 227(3) whether the scales of remuneration prescribed for empanelled lawyers appearing in sessions trials are not grossly insufficient and call for a revision. That is a matter which vests with the High Court and the Supreme Court will not interfere with it. However, in case the amount so fixed is lower than the scales of fee fixed by the Supreme Court by its interim orders, the excess amount paid to the petitioner in terms thereof shall not be recoverable. Ranjan Dwivedi v. Union of India, (1983) 3 SCC 307: 1983 SCC (Cri) 581: AIR 1983 SC 624: 1983 Cri LJ 1052.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Pathak and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-1983]

— S. 306 See also S. 337, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1140 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 306 See Ss. 209, 193, 26 and 306
See also Ss. 307 and 306
See also Ss. 432, 433, 433-A and 306
See also Ss. 460(g), 306, and 307
See also Ss. 465, 306 and 307

[3101] — S. 306 — Grant of pardon to approver — Object of the provision — Basis of tender of pardon is not extent of the culpability of the approver but to prevent the escape of the offender from punishment in heinous offences for lack of evidence

Since many a times the crime is committed in a manner for which no clue or any trace is available for its detection, pardon is granted for apprehension of the other offenders for the recovery of the incriminating objects and the production of the evidence which otherwise is unobtainable. The dominant object being that the offenders of the heinous and grave offences do not go unpunished, the Legislature in its wisdom considered it necessary to introduce Section 306 and confine its operation to cases mentioned in it. The object of Section 306 therefore is to allow pardon in cases where heinous offence is alleged to have been committed by several persons so that with the aid of the evidence of the person granted pardon the offence may be brought home to the rest. The basis of the tender of pardon is not the extent of the culpability of the person to whom pardon is granted, but the principle is to prevent the escape of the offenders from punishment in heinous offences for lack of evidence. There can therefore be no objection against tender of pardon to an accomplice simply because in his confession, he does not implicate himself to the same extent as the other accused because all that Section 306 requires is that pardon may be tendered to any person believed to be involved directly or indirectly in or privy to an offence. Section 306 thus lays down a clear exception to the principle that no inducement shall be offered to a person to disclose what he knows about the procedure. (Para 42). Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60: AIR 1994 SC 2420: 1994 Cri LJ 3271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-1994]

[3102] — S. 306 — Grant of pardon under — Scope of pardon — Transaction or act leading to accused being charged with offence in respect of which pardon granted — Held, the pardon would operate in respect of all offences pertaining to the said transaction or act — However, the pardon does not operate in respect of a transaction or act entirely unconnected with the offence in respect of which the pardon has been granted — Moreover, the pardon need not be only in respect of an offence under the Penal Code

Under Section 306 CrPC the pardon is granted in respect of the offence for which he had been charged as an accused. Of course, a pardon need not be only in respect of an offence under the Penal Code. A person may be charged, in respect of the same transaction or act, under the Penal Code and under some other Act e.g. the Prevention of Corruption Act. The pardon would operate in respect of all offences pertaining to that transaction. However, the pardon does not operate in respect of a transaction or act entirely unconnected with the offence in respect of which pardon has been granted. (Para 13). Dipesh Chandak v. Union of India, (2004) 8 SCC 511: (2004) 270 ITR 85.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

[3103] — S. 306 — Point in time from which pardon operates — Held, the High Court was not correct in concluding that until evidence has been given by the pardoned accused, the pardon cannot operate (Para 13). Dipesh Chandak v. Union of India, (2004) 8 SCC 511: (2004) 270 ITR 85.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586, distinguished

[3104] — S. 306 — Grant of pardon under — Scope of pardon — Appellant being granted pardon in respect of misappropriation of funds and fraudulent withdrawals from the State exchequer (the Bihar Fodder Scam) on condition that he make a full and complete disclosure — On basis of said statement of appellant, complaint case being filed against appellant under Ss. 277 and 278, IT Act, 1961, for filing false income tax returns — If pardon operated in respect thereof — Held, the pardon had been granted for misappropriation of funds — This offence has nothing to do with filing of false returns and making false declarations under the said provisions of the IT Act, and the pardon would not operate in respect of these offences — However, to continue with the prosecution under the IT Act would amount to forcing the appellant to give evidence against himself, which is barred by Art. 20(2) of the Constitution, and therefore risk that he would not make a full and complete disclosure for fear of being convicted (which would also lead to the pardon being retracted, the condition wherefor being full and complete disclosure), and risk losing valuable evidence in the Fodder Scam cases — Supreme Court therefore directing stay of the prosecution under the IT case till trial of cases in which pardon had been granted, was over — Held, if the appellant made a full and complete disclosure, then the prosecution under the IT Act should not be allowed to proceed — This was a fit case where the Govt. should consider not prosecuting the appellant under the said provisions of the IT Act — Income Tax Act, 1961, Ss. 277 and 278 — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2)

The appellant is an accused in a number of cases pertaining to the Fodder Scam in the Animal Husbandry Department of Bihar. He had, along with others, been accused of misappropriation of the funds of the Animal Husbandry Department and of fraudulent withdrawals from the State exchequer by issuing fake bills for supplies never made to the Animal Husbandry Department. The appellant had been, on 28-8-1998, granted a pardon by the Special Judge, CBI, on the condition that he make a full and complete disclosure. On the basis of the statement made by the appellant, the Deputy Commissioner of Income Tax issued a show-cause notice to the appellant as to why prosecution should not be initiated against him, under Sections 277 and 278 of the Income Tax Act, for having filed false returns of income tax. The appellant replied to the show-cause notices, inter alia, stating that he had been granted a pardon under Section 306 of the Criminal Procedure Code and thus the show-cause notice was not maintainable for an offence under Sections 277 and 278 of the Income Tax Act. This contention was not accepted by the CIT, who opined that the pardon was restricted only to offences under the Penal Code. Accordingly, Complaint Case No. 157(C) of 2000 was registered under Sections 277 and 278 of the Income Tax Act. The Court of Economic Offences, Patna, took cognizance and issued summons. The appellant filed a petition under Section 482 of the Criminal Procedure Code for quashing this complaint. By the impugned judgment that petition was dismissed, inter alia, on the ground that as yet the terms of the pardon had not been fulfilled. It is held that till full evidence is given by the appellant and the trial of all cases is concluded he continues to be an accused and, therefore, cannot claim immunity from prosecution. Hence the appeal by special leave.

Disposing of the appeal in the terms below,

Held :

The High Court was not correct in concluding that until evidence has been given by the appellant the pardon could not operate. In this case, the pardon has been granted for the offence of misappropriation of funds. This offence has nothing to do with filing of false returns by the appellant. The prosecution under Sections 277 and 278 is in respect of filing false return and making of false declaration. The pardon which has been granted would not cover those offences. (Para 13)

However, it is clear that to get benefit of the pardon the appellant has to make a full and frank disclosure regarding the offences of misappropriation. If he does not make a full and complete disclosure, the pardon may be cancelled. If he makes a full and complete disclosure he faces the prospect of being convicted in the prosecution under Sections 277 and 278 of the Income Tax Act. Article 20(2) of the Constitution enjoins that no person can be compelled to be a witness against himself. To continue with the prosecution would thus amount to forcing the appellant to give evidence against himself or to risk pardon being cancelled as he cannot make a full and complete disclosure for fear of being convicted in the other case. Thus, even though the pardon may not extend to these offences this is a fit case where the Government should consider not prosecuting the appellant under these sections. To insist on so prosecuting may result in valuable evidence being lost in the fodder scam cases. (Para 14)

It is directed that the prosecution under Sections 277 and 278 of the Income Tax Act will stand stayed till trial of the cases in which pardon is granted is over. If the appellant makes a full and complete disclosure, then the prosecution under Sections 277 and 278 should not be allowed to proceed. (Para 15). Dipesh Chandak v. Union of India, (2004) 8 SCC 511: (2004) 270 ITR 85.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

[3105] — S. 306 — Tender of pardon to accomplice — Requirements of — Compliance with — Stage and manner of examination of approver — Statement of approver (PW 6) recorded by CJM under S. 306, and he granted pardon — After committal (ST No. 319 of 1992), Sessions Court on consideration of evidence acquitting two accused, while sentencing accused LP to death and others to RI for life — High Court in appeal setting aside the judgment of conviction and remanding the case to CJM for fresh committal and directing him to examine PW 6 again — After remand, PW 6 again examined by CJM and the case committed to Court of Session (ST No. 156 of 1997) — Submission by appellant-accused that when judgment in ST No. 319 of 1992 was set aside and case was remanded to CJM, procedure under S. 306 should have been started afresh; that PW 6 should have been granted pardon and thereafter he should have been examined as a witness in presence of accused and then cross-examined — Held, so far as pardon portion of the order of CJM is concerned, that was not set aside — It was the other portion whereby L was examined but was not cross-examined nor was his statement recorded in presence of the accused was set aside — Said infirmity was overcome after remand and L was examined in presence of the accused and he was also cross-examined and thereafter case was committed to the Court of Session — Hence, there was complete compliance with S. 306 — Stage of examining the approver comes only after he has been granted pardon — On facts, he was so examined in presence of the accused, and was also cross-examined — No illegality in the order and in the procedure adopted by the learned CJM after remand of the case discernible (Paras 14 and 23). Sitaram Sao v. State of Jharkhand, (2007) 12 SCC 630: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 319: AIR 2008 SC 391.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-11-2007]

[3106] — S. 306 — Tender of pardon to approver in one of several similar cases tried together — His evidence as approver cannot be used against him in other cases — He is protected under proviso to S. 132, Evidence Act — Rule against self incrimination not violated — Approver not "accused" within the meaning of Art. 20(3) of Constitution — Constitution of India, Art. 20(3) — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 132 proviso

Once an accused is granted pardon under S. 306 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he ceases to be an accused and becomes a witness for the prosecution. So long as the prosecution does not certify that he has failed to do so he continues to be a witness and the prosecution is under obligation to examine him as a witness both in the Committing Court as well as in the trial court.

The provisions of proviso to S. 132 of the Indian Evidence Act clearly protect a witness from being prosecuted as the basis of the answers given by him in a criminal proceeding which tend to criminate him directly or indirectly. In view of this provision, the apprehension of the respondent that his evidence as approver will be used against him in the other four criminal cases where he figures as an accused is without any basis. On the other hand, he is absolutely protected from criminal prosecution on the basis of the evidence to be given by him when examined by the prosecution as an approver in the said case. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Jagjit Singh, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 770: 1990 SCC (Cri) 133: AIR 1989 SC 598: 1989 Cri LJ 986.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and N.D. Ojha, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1988]

[3107] — Ss. 306, 307 and 10(3) — Power to direct tender of pardon — Proceeding committed to the Court of Session — Held, only that court to which commitment is made can grant pardon to the approver — Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to direct the committing Magistrate or any other Magistrate to grant pardon — Sessions Judge not competent to make such direction even in exercise of power under S. 10(3) unless he himself is absent or unable to act and there is no Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge — Position under S. 338 CrPC, 1898 compared — Expression "trial" in S. 306(1) — Meaning of — CrPC, 1898, S. 338

Section 307 of the Code corresponds to Section 338 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. If the two provisions are examined in juxtaposition it would be clear that while under Section 338 of the old Code after commitment is made the Court to which the commitment was made could himself tender pardon to an accused or could order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon, under Section 307 of the Code of 1973 the Court to whom commitment is made no longer retains the power to order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon.

On a plain reading of the provisions contained in Sections 306 and 307 of the Code and on examining the changes that have been brought about by the legislature from the corresponding provisions of the old Code, the conclusion is irresistible that under the new Procedure Code of 1973 once a case is committed to the Court of Session then it is only that Court to which the proceedings have been committed can tender pardon to a person and the Chief Judicial Magistrate cannot be said to have concurrent jurisdiction for tendering pardon.

Under Section 10(3) a Sessions Judge has been empowered to make provision for disposal of any urgent application in certain contingencies by requiring an Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge or in their absence the Chief Judicial Magistrate to deal with an application which otherwise would have been dealt with by the Sessions Judge. This power can be exercised when the Sessions Judge himself is absent or is unable to act. Then again the Chief Judicial Magistrate can be required to act under this sub-section not merely when the Sessions Judge himself is absent or unable to act but also when there is no Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge.

The expression "trial" used in sub-section (1) of Section 306 conveys the meaning those cases which are triable either by a Magistrate or the Chief Judicial Magistrate. In other words, in respect of those cases which are triable by a Magistrate, while the Magistrate of First Class inquiring into or trying the offence can tender pardon at any stage of inquiry or trial, the Chief Judicial Magistrate can tender pardon at any stage of investigation, or inquiring into or the trial. Further a Magistrate, First Class, who is in session of the case can tender pardon in course of inquiry or trial of the said case while the Chief Judicial Magistrate or Metropolitan Magistrate can tender pardon even though the trial is pending before another First Class Magistrate. But by no stretch of imagination can it be construed that under Section 306(1) of the Code a Chief Judicial Magistrate or Metropolitan Magistrate has the power to grant pardon even after the commitment of the proceedings to the Court of Session. A. Devendran v. State of T.N., (1997) 11 SCC 720: AIR 1998 SC 2821.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-10-1997]

[3108] — Ss. 306 and 307 — Power to grant pardon to accomplice — Nature and object — It is a substantive power derived from statutory provisions and not an inherent power of criminal court

Penal laws require that the punishment shall be inflicted on every person found guilty of an offence under those laws. The grant of pardon results in the grantee escaping the punishment for the offence. The nature of power of pardon under Sections 306 and 307 CrPC is essentially different than the nature of such power under the Constitution of India whereby the President and/or Governor are empowered to grant pardon. Those powers are exercised after a person is found guilty. That is not so here. Under Sections 306 and 307, CrPC the pardon is tendered during the investigation, enquiry or trial, as the case may be. The object is to obtain evidence of an accomplice so as to facilitate conviction of others. The power to grant pardon is not an inherent power of a criminal court and is a substantive power to be specifically conferred. (Para 13). Harshad S. Mehta v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 8 SCC 257: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1447: AIR 2001 SC 3774: (2001) 107 Comp Cas 365.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.P. Bharucha, Y.K. Sabharwal and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-9-2001]

[3109] — Ss. 306, 307, 308 and 315 — Evidence of accomplice — Value of evidence of accomplice not complying with conditions of pardon — Discussed — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 114 Ill. (b), 132, 133 and 154 — Constitution of India, Art. 20(3)

Respondent 3, being tried for offences punishable under Sections 302, 307, 120-B, 23, 114 IPC, Sections 3, 25(1-B)(a), 5, 27 of the Arms Act and Sections 3(2)(i), 3(2)(ii), 3(3), 3(5), 5, 6 of TADA, expressed his desire to disclose truly and fully the facts pertaining to the conspiracy. IO made an application under Section 307 CrPC before the Designated Court that Respondent 3 may be tendered pardon on his readiness and willingness to disclose true and correct facts about conspiracy. Designated Court tendered pardon to Respondent 3 and permitted the prosecution to examine him as witness in the trial.

Respondent 3 (approver) was called as witness for prosecution, after some evidence Public Prosecutor realised witness was not desirous of telling the truth. Public Prosecutor put a specific question to approver as to whether he wanted to tell the court about conspiracy, his answer was in the negative. Immediately, the Special Public Prosecutor issued a certificate under Section 308 CrPC that approver had not complied with condition on which pardon was tendered to him and, therefore, he may be tried separately.

The other accused requested the court to allow him to cross-examine the approver. Public Prosecutor opposed said request on the ground that once the Public Prosecutor forfeits the pardon, witness relegates back to status of accused to be tried separately for same offence and as such loses his status as witness of prosecution, therefore, his entire evidence though still on record but cannot be used for any purpose and as such the question of cross-examining such hostile witness by other accused does not arise. Contrarily it was pleaded that it is not the law that if witness does not support prosecution he is always telling lies. The evidence recorded by the court in the proceedings cannot be wiped out. Trial court concluded that defence has statutory right to cross-examine the hostile witness or approver and as such accused in this case are entitled to exercise the right by cross-examining the Respondent. State was aggrieved by said order, whereby permission has been granted to defence to cross-examine Respondent 3.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The salutary principle of tendering a pardon to an accomplice is to unravel the truth in a grave offence so that guilt of the other accused persons concerned in commission of crime could be brought home. It has been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court that the object of Section 306 is to allow pardon in cases where heinous offence is alleged to have been committed by several persons so that with the aid of the evidence of the person granted pardon, the offence may be brought home to rest. (Para 15)

The expression, "on the same condition" occurring in Section 307, obviously refers to the condition indicated in Section 306(1), namely, on the accused making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof. (Para 16)

An accomplice who has been granted pardon under Section 306 or 307 CrPC gets protection from prosecution. When he is called as a witness for the prosecution, he must comply with the condition of making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge concerning the offence and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof and if he suppresses anything material and essential within his knowledge concerning the commission of crime or fails or refuses to comply with the condition on which the tender was made and the Public Prosecutor gives his certificate under Section 308 CrPC to that effect, the protection given to him is lifted. (Para 17)

The legal position that flows from the provisions contained in Sections 306, 307 and 308 CrPC is that once an accomplice is granted pardon, he stands discharged as an accused and becomes witness for the prosecution. As a necessary corollary, once the pardon is withdrawn or forfeited on the certificate given by the Public Prosecutor that such person has failed to comply with the condition on which the tender was made, he is reverted to the position of an accused and liable to be tried separately and the evidence given by him, if any, has to be ignored in toto and does not remain legal evidence for consideration in the trial against the co-accused, albeit such evidence may be used against him in the separate trial where he gets an opportunity to show that he complied with the condition of pardon. As a matter of fact, it is for this reason that a specific statement was made by the State before the Supreme Court-a similar statement was made before the Designated Court as well-that the evidence of Respondent 3 so far recorded shall not be used by the prosecution in the present trial. (Para 21)

The Evidence Act, CrPC and the Constitution do not bar the proposition that a pardon granted to an accomplice under Section 306 or 307 CrPC protects him from prosecution and he becomes witness for the prosecution but on forfeiture of such pardon, he is relegated to the position of an accused and his evidence is rendered useless for the purposes of the trial of the co-accused. He cannot be compelled to be a witness. There is no question of such person being further examined for the prosecution and, therefore, no occasion arises for the defence to cross-examine him. (Para 28)

The Designated Court seriously erred in treating Respondent 3 as a hostile witness; it failed to consider that the pardon granted and accepted by him was on the condition of his making a true and full disclosure of all the facts concerning the commission of crime and once the pardon granted to him stood forfeited, on the certificate issued by the Special Public Prosecutor, he was relegated to the position of an accused and did not remain a witness. In the circumstances, there was no justification to permit the defence to cross-examine Respondent 3 and to that extent the impugned order cannot be sustained. (Para 29). State of Maharashtra v. Abu Salem Abdul Kayyum Ansari, (2010) 10 SCC 179. Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-10-2010]

State v. Hiralal Girdharilal Kothari, AIR 1960 SC 360: 1960 Cri LJ 524; State (Delhi Admn.) v. Jagjit Singh, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 770: 1990 SCC (Cri) 133, relied on

A.J. Peiris v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 616: 1954 Cri LJ 1638, referred to

Balwant Singh v. State, 1978 Cri LJ NOC 126 (AP), cited

[3110] — Ss. 306 and 308 — Tender of pardon to approver — Examination of approver in committing court as well as in trial court mandatory even if he resiles from his earlier statement or does not make full and true disclosure of facts within his knowledge — However, his examination not necessary if Public Prosecutor certifies that he is wilfully concealing facts or giving false evidence contrary to condition of pardon — State cannot withdraw nor can approver cast away the pardon granted to him — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 337 and 339

The power to grant pardon carries with it the right to impose a condition limiting the operation of such a pardon. Hence a pardoning power can attach any condition, precedent or subsequent so long as it is not illegal, immoral or impossible of performance. Section 306 clearly enjoins that the approver who was granted pardon had to comply with the condition of making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and to every other concerned whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof. It is because of this mandate, the State cannot withdraw the pardon from the approver nor the approver can cast away the pardon granted to him till he is examined as a witness by the prosecution both in the Committing Court as well as in the trial court. The approver may have resiled from the statement made before the Magistrate in the Committing Court and may not have complied with the condition on which pardon was granted to him, still the prosecution has to examine him as a witness in the trial court. It is only when the Public

Prosecutor certifies that the approver has not complied with the conditions on which the tender was made by wilfully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence, he may be tried under S. 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure not only for the offence in respect of which pardon was granted but also in respect of other offences. In these circumstances, the question of casting away the pardon granted to an approver and his claim not to be examined by the prosecution as a witness before the trial court is without any substance. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Jagjit Singh, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 770: 1990 SCC (Cri) 133: AIR 1989 SC 598: 1989 Cri LJ 986.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and N.D. Ojha, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1988]

Arusami Goundan, In re, AIR 1959 Mad 274: ILR 1954 Mad 320: 1959 Cri LJ 852, explained

Emperor v. Shahdino Dhaniparto, AIR 1940 Sind 114: 41 Cri LJ 747, approved

[3111] — Ss. 306, 307, 308 and 315 — Approver — Pardon withdrawn for failing to make full disclosure — Consequences — Whether accused has a right to cross-examine such accomplice approver — None of the provisions of Evidence Act, CrPC and Constitution protect such approver from prosecution — On forfeiture of such pardon, he is relegated to position of an accused — However, he cannot be compelled to be a witness — His evidence is rendered useless for purposes of trial of co-accused — Thus, no occasion arises for defence to cross-examine him — Designated Court failed to consider that pardon was granted and accepted by Respondent 3 approver on condition of making a true and full disclosure of all facts concerning commission of crime — Not having done so, pardon granted to him stood forfeited, and he did not remain a witness — Designated Court seriously erred in treating Respondent 3 as hostile witness — Criminal Trial — Witnesses — Accomplice/Approver — Effect of withdrawal of conditional pardon — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 114 Ill. (b), 132, 133 and 154 — Constitution of India — Art. 20 — Art. 20(3) — Self Incrimination — Ingredients of cl. (3) — "Self-Incrimination" — Meaning and Scope, Art. 20(3). State of Maharashtra v. Abu Salem Abdul Kayyum Ansari, (2010) 10 SCC 179.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-10-2010]

State v. Hiralal Girdharilal Kothari, AIR 1960 SC 360: 1960 Cri LJ 524; State (Delhi Admn.) v. Jagjit Singh, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 770: 1990 SCC (Cri) 133, relied on

A.J. Peiris v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 616: 1954 Cri LJ 1638, referred to

Balwant Singh v. State, 1978 Cri LJ NOC 126 (AP), cited

[3112] — S. 306 — Approver not admitting any active participation in the crime but admitting to be a privy to or an abettor in the commission of the offence — S. 337, held, not violated — CrPC, 1898, S. 337. Maghar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1975) 4 SCC 234: 1975 SCC (Cri) 479: AIR 1975 SC 1320: 1975 Cri LJ 1102.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-4-1975]

[3113] — S. 306 — Approver — Evidence of, should be viewed with suspicion — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 133 and 114 Ill. (b) (Para 31). Renuka Bai v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 7 SCC 442: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 290: AIR 2006 SC 3056.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-2006]

[3114] — S. 306 — Approver not disclosing name of one of the accused in questioning prior to turning an approver — Held, inconsequential when in the confession he implicated himself and such other person including others — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 133 and 114 Ill. (b). Ramprasad v. State of Maharashtra, (1999) 5 SCC 30: 1999 SCC (Cri) 651: AIR 1999 SC 1969: 1999 Cri LJ 2889.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-1999]

[3115] — S. 306 — Accomplice validly made approver — Reliance upon — Accomplice's evidence — If corroborated in material particulars, can constitute the basis for conviction — Accomplice becoming approver having been validly granted pardon under S. 306 CrPC, and withstanding cross-examination in committal as well as sessions court — His testimony regarding causing death of the deceased by A-1 corroborated in material particulars by other evidence — Circumstantial evidence sufficient to connect A-1 with commission of the crime — Held on facts, courts below rightly convicted A-1 under S. 302 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 201 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 133

PW 1 has been proved to have been validly granted the pardon under Section 306 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the appellant-accused afforded sufficient opportunity of cross-examining him both in the committal as well as in the sessions case. He has withstood the cross-examination and proved the factum of the death of the deceased by A-1 and the destruction of his body by all the accused persons. An accomplice is a competent witness and a conviction can be based upon his testimony if it is otherwise corroborated in material particulars. Both the trial court as well as the High Court have found on facts that the death of the deceased was a case of homicide for which A-1 was responsible. The whole of the deposition of PW 1 is a vivid explanation of the manner in which the offence was committed by A-1 in the presence of A-2 and A-3. There is no reason to disbelieve the statement of PW 1. Besides his ocular testimony there is sufficient corroborative evidence which connects A-1 with the commission of the crime of murder of the deceased. Counsel appearing for A-1 could not refer to any alleged weak link to the circumstances relied upon by the courts below to show that the testimony of PW 1, an approver, had not been corroborated. The circumstantial evidence produced in the case is sufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime. It does not lead to any other inference than one of his involvement in the crime. There is no reason to disagree with the findings of the trial court as well as the High Court insofar as the involvement of A-1 in the commission of the crime of murder is concerned. (Paras 18 and 19). State of Kerala v. P. Sugathan, (2000) 8 SCC 203: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1474: AIR 2000 SC 3323.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2000]

— S. 306(1) See Ss. 307, 306(1) & (4) and 164

— S. 306(4) See also Ss. 307, 306(1) & (4) and 164

[3116] — S. 306(4) — Examination of approver as a witness — Object — Magistrate can examine the approver in his chamber — S. 306(4) does not mandate that the approver must be examined in open court in presence of the accused and that accused must be given opportunity to cross-examine the approver

The object of Section 304(4) is to provide an opportunity to the accused to show to the Court that the approver's evidence at the trial is untrustworthy in view of the contradictions or improvements made by him during his evidence at the trial. Considering the object and purpose of examining the person accepting tender of pardon as a witness is thus limited. The proceeding which takes place before the Magistrate at that stage is neither an inquiry nor a trial. Therefore, the submission that the approver should be examined as a witness in open court and not in the chamber and that while so examining the Magistrate should keep the accused present and afford him an opportunity to cross-examine the approver cannot be accepted. The provision does not require that the person who is granted pardon must be examined in the presence of the accused and that the accused has a right to appear and cross-examine him at that stage also. However, it is not necessary to deal with this contention any further as the facts of this case show that there is no justification in the grievance that the approver was examined by the Magistrate in the absence of the appellant and the appellant was not afforded an opportunity to cross-examine her. (Para 7). Ranadhir Basu v. State of W.B., (2000) 3 SCC 161: 2000 SCC (Cri) 587: AIR 2000 SC 908: 2000 Cri LJ 1417.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-2000]

Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60, relied on

[3117] — Ss. 306(4) and 307 — Nature of S. 306(4) and its applicability — Held, it is procedural and has to be followed by Magistrate and not by Sessions Judge while exercising power under S. 307

Section 306(4) CrPC is procedural in nature. It is necessary to be followed only by a Magistrate as he would not have any jurisdiction to try the case himself. The Sessions Judge before whom the case is committed for trial must be informed as to on what basis pardon had been tendered. Section 307 CrPC does not contain any such condition. The power of the Sessions Judge is independent of the provisions contained in Section 306. The condition mentioned in Section 307 refers to the condition laid down in Section 306(1), namely, that the person in whose favour the pardon has been tendered, will make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge. The power of a Sessions Court is not hedged with any other condition. (Para 34)

The order of the Sessions Judge granting pardon shows that he not only applied his mind on the application for grant of pardon filed by the investigating officer but also examined the appellant by putting relevant questions to him. The Sessions Judge, therefore, did not pass the order granting pardon only on the basis of the purported confessional statement made by PW 1. It was not done mechanically. (Para 35)

If it is to be held that in each and every case pardon can only be granted at the initial stage, the power conferred upon the Sessions Judge to grant pardon under Section 307 CrPC for all intent and purport shall become otiose. The order of the Sessions Judge granting pardon to the approver is, therefore, legal and valid. (Para 42). Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 457: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1546, followed

Rampal Pithwa Rahidas v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 73: 1994 SCC (Cri) 851, distinguished

[3118] — S. 306(4)(a) — Nature and object of — Examination of approver in committing court mandatory — Non-compliance of the same would vitiate the trial — However, if the defect is rectified later, the trial cannot be said to have been vitiated

A bare reading of clause (a) of sub-section (4) of Section 306 of the Code will go to show that every person accepting the tender of pardon made under sub-section (1) has to be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any. The examination of accomplice or an approver after accepting the tender of pardon as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence is thus a mandatory provision and cannot be dispensed with and if this mandatory provision is not complied with it vitiates the trial. As envisaged in sub-section (1) of Section 306, the tender of pardon is made on the condition that an approver shall make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relating to the offence. Consequently, the failure to examine the approver as a witness before the committing Magistrate would not only amount to breach of the mandatory provisions contained in clause (a) of sub-section (4) of Section 306 but it would also be inconsistent with and in violation of the duty to make a full and frank disclosure of the case at all stages. Thus the provision contained in clause (a) of sub-section (4) of Section 306 is of a mandatory nature and not merely directory and, therefore, non-compliance of the same would render committal order illegal. The object and purpose in enacting this mandatory provision is obviously intended to provide a safeguard to the accused inasmuch as the approver has to make a statement disclosing his evidence at the preliminary stage before the committal order is made and the accused not only becomes aware of the evidence against him but he is also afforded an opportunity to meet with, the evidence of an approver before the committing court itself at the very threshold so that he may take steps to show that the approver's evidence at the trial was untrustworthy in case there are any contradictions or improvements made by him during his evidence at the trial. It is for this reason that the examination of the approver at two stages has been provided for and if the said mandatory provision is not complied with, the accused would be deprived of the said benefit. This may cause serious prejudice to him resulting in failure of justice as he will lose the opportunity of showing the approver's evidence as unreliable. (Para 30)

However, if the said defect of not examining the approver at the committal stage by the committing Magistrate is rectified later, no prejudice can be said to be caused to an accused person and therefore the trial cannot be said to be vitiated on that account. (Para 33). Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60: AIR 1994 SC 2420: 1994 Cri LJ 3271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-1994]

Kalu Khoda v. State, AIR 1962 Guj 283, FB: (1962) 2 Cri LJ 604: (1962) 3 Guj LR 654; Ramasamy, Re, 1976 Cri LJ 770: 1976 Mad LJ (Cri) 111: 1976 Mad LW (Cri) 36 (Mad); Uravakonda Vijayaraj Paul v. State, 1986 Cri LJ 2104: (1986) 1 Andh LT 364: (1986) 2 APLJ (HC) 19 (AP), approved

[3119] — Ss. 306(4)(a) and 307 — Non-compliance with S. 306(4)(a) — Effect — Case exclusively triable by Court of Session — Approver tendered pardon before commitment — Compliance of S. 306(4)(a) becomes mandatory — However if pardon is granted by the court to which proceedings committed S. 306(4)(a) is not attracted — Expression "on the same condition" in S. 307 refers to condition indicated in S. 306(1) — Procedural requirement of S. 306(4)(a) is not a condition

Under Section 307 when pardon is tendered after commitment of the proceedings by the Court to which the commitment has been made the legislative mandate is that the pardon would be tendered on the same condition. The expression "on the same condition" obviously refers to the condition of tendering a pardon engrafted in sub-section (1) of Section 306, the said condition being that the person concerned makes a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relating to the offence. Sub-section (4) of Section 306 cannot be held to be a condition for tendering pardon. A combined reading of sub-section (4) of Section 306 and Section 307 would make it clear that in a case exclusively triable by the Sessions Court if an accused is tendered pardon and is taken as an approver before commitment then compliance of sub-section (4) of Section 306 becomes mandatory and non-compliance of such mandatory requirements would vitiate the proceedings but if an accused is tendered pardon after the commitment by the Court to which the proceeding is committed in exercise of powers under Section 307 then in such a case the provisions of sub-section (4) of Section 306 are not attracted. The procedural requirement under sub-section (4)(a) of Section 306 to examine the accused after tendering pardon cannot be held to be a condition of grant of pardon.

The procedure indicated in sub-section (4)(a) of Section 306 is intended to provide a safeguard to an accused inasmuch as the approver has to make a statement disclosing his evidence at the preliminary stage before the committal order is made and thereby the accused becomes aware of the evidence against him and further such evidence of an approver can be ultimately shown as untrustworthy during the trial when the said approver makes any contradictions or improvements to his earlier version. But still when the legislature in Section 307 has made specific reference to only "such conditions" and not to the other procedures in Section 306 it would not be a rule of interpretation to hold that even sub-section (4)(a) of Section 306 would also be applicable in such a case. A. Devendran v. State of T.N., (1997) 11 SCC 720: AIR 1998 SC 2821.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-10-1997]

Sardar Iqbal Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1977) 4 SCC 536: 1978 SCC (Cri) 1, relied on

Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60, explained and distinguished

[3120] — Ss. 306(4)(a) and 465(2) — Tender of pardon to accomplice — Ingredients of S. 306(4)(a) — At the time of recording of approver's evidence by Magistrate at pre-committal stage i.e. at the time of investigation or inquiry for offence triable by Sessions Court accused persons have no right to cross-examine the approver — Use of the word "shall" in S. 306(4)(a) does not mean that non-examination of the approver at that stage would vitiate the trial — On facts, no objection raised at that stage by the accused against the omission to afford opportunity to them to cross-examine the approver — Case committed to Sessions Court for trial — Approver examined as PW and also cross-examined by the accused during trial — But during the course of arguments in Sessions Court contention raised by accused that committing Magistrate's failure to afford them opportunity to cross-examine the approver amounted to non-compliance with S. 306(4)(a) which vitiated the trial — Held, such contention raised for the first time at the belated stage after cross-examining the approver in detail during trial cannot be accepted — In the circumstances S. 465 would be attracted — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 133

One S and some other persons were arrested in connection with murder of two persons. While in custody, he submitted an application through the Superintendent of Jail to the CJM expressing his intention to make a true disclosure of the facts regarding the incident. The CJM issued a notice fixing a date. On that day, the accused was produced before the CJM. It was explained to the approver that his statement could be used against him also and with a view to give time to the accused before becoming an approver, the case was adjourned to another date and on that day he was examined and pardon was granted to him. But at that stage the remaining accused were not asked to cross-examine him. A formal challan was submitted before the Magistrate by the investigating officer. After complying with the objections, the case was committed to the Court of Session. During the trial the approver was examined and on the same day he was cross-examined by the counsel for the accused. Witnesses for the defence were examined. During the period when the arguments were heard and the Sessions Judge visited the spot with a view to appreciate the evidence-on-record the contention was raised for the first time that the procedure prescribed under Section 306(4)(a) CrPC was not complied with and therefore, the trial was vitiated. Till then none of the accused raised such an objection and they never felt the need to raise it. The Additional Sessions Judge acquitted the accused-respondents for the offences under Sections 302, 380, 457, 120-B read with Section 34 IPC. The State's appeal before the High Court was dismissed solely on the ground that the Chief Judicial Magistrate had failed to comply with the mandatory directions contained in Section 306(4)(a) CrPC as no statement of the approver was recorded by the Chief Judicial Magistrate during the committal proceedings, which vitiated the committal of the accused persons to the Court of Session and consequently the trial by the Sessions Judge. Allowing the State's appeal,

Held :

Acceptance of this objection would only promote technical plea which would adversely affect dispensation of justice. In such circumstances, provisions of Section 465 CrPC would come into operation. Before or after the case was committed to the Sessions Court, the accused had not raised any objection that they were not permitted to cross-examine the approver, nor did they contend so when the approver was examined and cross-examined during the trial. Therefore, at the stage of final arguments, the accused cannot raise the said contention. Further, after cross-examining the approver in detail, there is no question of failure of justice nor any prejudice being caused to the accused on account of that omission. (Para 18)

From Section 306 it can be stated that-

(1) the purpose of the section is to obtain the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to an offence "during investigation, inquiry or trial";

(2) the Chief Judicial Magistrate or Metropolitan Magistrate is empowered to tender a pardon to such person "at any stage of investigation or inquiry into or the trial of the offence";

(3) the condition for tender of such pardon is that the person is to make a full and true disclosure of the whole circumstances within his knowledge relating to the offence;

(4) a person accepting pardon under sub-section (1) is to be "examined" as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in subsequent trial, if any;

(5) further, if the case is committed for trial to the Court of Session, Section 307 empowers the Sessions Court trying the case to tender a pardon on the same conditions to such person before the judgment is passed.

From the aforesaid ingredients, it is clear that at the stage of investigation, inquiry or trial of the offence, the person to whom pardon is to be granted, is to be examined for collecting the evidence of a person who is directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to an offence. At the time of investigation or inquiry into an offence, the accused cannot claim any right under law to cross-examine the witness. The right to cross-examination would arise only at the time of trial. During the course of investigation by the police, the question of cross-examination by the accused does not arise. Similarly, under Section 200 CrPC when the Magistrate before taking cognizance of the offence, that is, before issuing process holds the inquiry, the accused has no right to be heard, and, therefore, the question of cross-examination does not arise. Further, the person to whom pardon is granted, is examined but is not offered for cross-examination and thereafter during trial if he is examined and cross-examined then there is no question of any prejudice caused to the accused. In such cases, at the most the accused may lose the chance to cross-examine the approver twice, that is to say, once before committal and the other at the time of trial. (Para 11)

The submission that Section 306(4)(a) is couched in mandatory terms by using the word "shall" which indicates that if there is a breach of the said mandatory provision further trial would be vitiated is without any substance. By not examining the approver, the trial would not get vitiated. Such evidence may have to be scrutinised with greater circumspection. If in such scrutiny the evidence is found reliable the court cannot be inhibited from using the evidence. (Para 19). State of H.P. v. Surinder Mohan, (2000) 2 SCC 396: 2000 SCC (Cri) 400: AIR 2000 SC 1862: 2000 Cri LJ 1429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-2000]

A. Devendran v. State of T. N., (1997) 11 SCC 720: 1998 SCC (Cri) 220; Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60, explained and distinguished

Uravakonda Vijayaraj Paul v. State, 1986 Cri LJ 2104: (1986) 1 Andh LT 364 (AP), overruled

Chief Judicial Magistrate, Trivandrum, Re, 1988 Cri LJ 812: (1987) 2 Crimes 647 (Ker), approved

[3121] — S. 306(4)(b) — Release of approver on bail after grant of pardon illegal — But such a release would not affect the validity of pardon validly granted to the approver — Object of requiring an approver to be detained in custody till the termination of the trial

It is no doubt true that clause (b) of Section 306(4) directs that the approver shall not be set at liberty till the termination of the trial against the accused persons and the detention of the approver in custody must end with the trial. The dominant object of requiring an approver to be detained in custody until the termination of the trial is not intended to punish the approver for having come forward to give evidence in support of the prosecution but to protect him from the possible indignation, rage and resentment of his associates in a crime, whom he has chosen to expose as well as with a view to prevent him from the temptation of saving his one time friends and companions after he is granted pardon and released from custody. It is for these reasons that clause (b) of Section 306(4) casts a duty on the court to keep the approver under detention till the termination of the trial and thus the provisions are based on statutory principles of public policy and public interest, violation of which could not be tolerated. But one thing is clear that the release of an approver on bail may be illegal which can be set aside by a superior court, but such a release would not have any affect on the validity of the pardon once validly granted to an approver. (Para 34). Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60: AIR 1994 SC 2420: 1994 Cri LJ 3271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-1994]

— S. 307 See also S. 338, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1144 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 307 See Ss. 306 and 307
See also Ss. 306, 307 and 10(3)
See also Ss. 306(4) and 307
See also Ss. 306(4)(a) and 307
See also Ss. 354(3), 235(2) and 307
See also Ss. 460(g), 306, and 307
See also Ss. 465, 306 and 307

[3122] — S. 307 — Grant of pardon to an accused by court — Object — It is for the prosecution to decide necessity of — If it so decides, court has to agree to tendering of pardon — On facts held, court was not justified in refusing to tender pardon

Although the power to actually grant the pardon is vested in the court, obviously the court can have no interest whatsoever in the outcome nor can it decide for the prosecution whether particular evidence is required or not to ensure the conviction of the accused. That is the prosecution's job. As was observed by the Supreme Court in Lt. Commander Pascal Fernandes case: "Ordinarily it is for the prosecution to ask that a particular accused, out of several, may be tendered pardon. But even where the accused directly applies to the Special Judges he must first refer the request to the prosecuting agency. The proper course for the Special Judge is to ask for a statement from the prosecution on the request of the prisoner. If the prosecution thinks that the tender of pardon will be in the interests of a successful prosecution of the other offenders whose conviction is not easy without the approver's testimony, it will indubitably agree to the tendering of pardon. The Special Judge (or the Magistrate) must not take on himself the task of determining the propriety of tendering pardon in the circumstances of the case." Judged by this standard, the first order of the Sessions Judge refusing pardon to Respondent 1, even though it was actively canvassed for by the Special Public Prosecutor, was wrong. It was not for the Sessions Judge to have considered the possible weight of the approver's evidence, even before it was given. In any case, the evidence of an approver does not differ from the evidence of any other witness except that his evidence is looked upon with great suspicion. But the suspicion may be removed and if the evidence of an approver is found to be trustworthy and acceptable then that evidence might well be decisive in securing a conviction. The Sessions Judge could not and indeed should not have assessed the probable value of the possible evidence of Respondent 1 in anticipation and wholly in the abstract. (Paras 18 and 19). Jasbir Singh v. Vipin Kumar Jaggi, (2001) 8 SCC 289: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1525: AIR 2001 SC 2734: (2001) 132 ELT 529: (2001) 3 KLT 346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2001]

Lt. Commander Pascal Fernandes v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 594: 1968 Cri LJ 550, applied

Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60: AIR 1994 SC 2420, relied on

[3123] — Ss. 307, 306(1) & (4) and 164 — Scope and applicability — Grant of pardon by Sessions Judge — Condition precedent for — The only condition for exercise of such power, held, is that laid down in S. 306(1) and none other — Term "on the same condition" occurring in S. 307 refers to the condition laid down in S. 306(1) and not to the condition laid down in S. 306(4) — Grant of pardon by Sessions Judge to approver not mechanically but after examining him by putting relevant questions to him, held, quite valid

Section 306(4) CrPC is procedural in nature. It is necessary to be followed only by a Magistrate as he would not have any jurisdiction to try the case himself. The Sessions Judge before whom the case is committed for trial must be informed as to on what basis pardon had been tendered. Section 307 CrPC does not contain any such condition. The power of the Sessions Judge is independent of the provisions contained in Section 306. The condition mentioned in Section 307 refers to the condition laid down in Section 306(1), namely, that the person in whose favour the pardon has been tendered, will make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge. The power of a Sessions Court is not hedged with any other condition. (Para 34)

The order of the Sessions Judge granting pardon shows that he not only applied his mind on the application for grant of pardon filed by the investigating officer but also examined the appellant by putting relevant questions to him. The Sessions Judge, therefore, did not pass the order granting pardon only on the basis of the purported confessional statement made by PW 1. It was not done mechanically. (Para 35)

If it is to be held that in each and every case pardon can only be granted at the initial stage, the power conferred upon the Sessions Judge to grant pardon under Section 307 CrPC for all intent and purport shall become otiose. The order of the Sessions Judge granting pardon to the approver is, therefore, legal and valid. (Para 42). Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 457: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1546, followed

Rampal Pithwa Rahidas v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 73: 1994 SCC (Cri) 851, distinguished

[3124] — Ss. 307 and 306 — Delay in recording statement of the approver on the basis of which pardon is granted to him — Held, can be a circumstance to be kept in mind by way of caution while appreciating evidence of the approver but it cannot itself be a ground for rejecting his testimony — Where facts show that the approver was repentant from the very beginning, his testimony cannot be rejected merely on ground of prolonged delay in recording his statement — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 133 and 114 Ill. (b)

The words "at any time after commitment of the case but before judgment is passed" are clearly indicative of the legal position which the legislature intended. No time limit is provided for recording such a statement and delay by itself is no ground to reject the testimony of the accomplice. Delay may be one of the circumstances to be kept in mind as a measure of caution for appreciating the evidence of the accomplice. Human mind cannot be expected to be reacting in a similar manner under different situations. Any person accused of an offence, may, at any time before the judgment is pronounced, repent for his action and volunteer to disclose the truth in the court. Repentance is a condition of mind differing from person to person and from situation to situation. (Para 29)

In the instant case the approver (PW 2) appears to be repenting upon his action from the very beginning as is evident from the two suicidal notes (one addressed to his parents and brother and the other addressed to the police) recovered from his pocket at the time of his arrest. It appears that the apprehension of his colleagues being convicted and sentenced prevented him from taking a final decision at an early stage to make a truthful statement. The defence has not put any question which could suggest that the delay in PW 2 becoming the approver by itself was fatal to the prosecution case. There is, therefore, no substance in the submission that as the statement of the approver was recorded after a prolonged delay, no reliance could be placed upon it. The delay in granting the pardon may be a just criticism, where it is found that the pardon had been tendered at the end of the trial and in effect was intended to fill up the lacunae in the prosecution case. Such is not the present case. (Para 29). Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 457: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1546: AIR 2000 SC 3352.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-9-2000]

Lal Chand v. State of Haryana, (1984) 1 SCC 686: 1984 SCC (Cri) 355, distinguished

[3125] — Ss. 307 and 306 — S. 307 is invocable at post-commitment stage while S. 306 is invocable at pre-commitment stage — While granting pardon under S. 307 trial court is obliged to comply with the requirements of S. 306(1) and not with the requirements of S. 306(4)

Section 306 is applicable in a case where the order of commitment has not been passed and Section 307 would be applicable after commitment of the case but before the judgment is pronounced. The provisions of sub-section (4)(a) of Section 306 would be attracted only at a stage when the case is not committed to the Court of Session. After the commitment, the pardon is to be granted by the trial court subject to the conditions specified in Section 306(1), i.e., approver making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof. Section 307 provides a complete procedure for recording the statement of an accomplice subject only to compliance with the conditions specified in Section 306(1). When pardon is tendered by trial court, there is no legal obligation on the trial court or a right in favour of the accused to insist for compliance with the requirement of Section 306(4) CrPC. The trial court, in this case has taken all precautions in complying with the provisions of Section 306(1) before tendering pardon to the accused, who later appeared as PW. (Paras 25 and 27). Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 457: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1546: AIR 2000 SC 3352.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-9-2000]

Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60, distinguished

[3126] — Ss. 307 and 321 — Grant of pardon and withdrawal from prosecution compared — Role of prosecutor under each section different

The role of the prosecutor under Section 307 CrPC is distinct and different from the part he is called on to play under the provisions of Section 321 CrPC. Under Section 321, the Public Prosecutor or the Assistant Public Prosecutor in charge of a case may, with the consent of the court, at any time before the judgment is pronounced, withdraw from the prosecution of any person either generally or in respect of any one or more of the offences for which he is tried. The most noticeable difference between this section and Section 307 of the Act is that unlike the grant of pardon under Section 307, withdrawal from prosecution under Section 321 CrPC is unconditional although it does provide for the express permission of the Central Government in specified cases. Section 321 also does not spell out the circumstances under which the power may be exercised, either by the prosecution or by the court in granting consent. In contrast, the power of tendering pardon under Section 307 CrPC is restricted to one consideration alone, namely, the obtaining of evidence from the person to whom pardon is granted relating to the offences being tried. But the power under Section 321 CrPC not only emphasises the role of the executive in the trial of offences but also that the executive can exercise the power at any time during the trial but before the judgment is delivered. This is relevant in construing the language of Section 64 NDPS Act. (Paras 20 and 21). Jasbir Singh v. Vipin Kumar Jaggi, (2001) 8 SCC 289: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1525: AIR 2001 SC 2734: (2001) 132 ELT 529: (2001) 3 KLT 346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2001]

M.N. Sankarayarayanan Nair v. P.V. Balakrishnan, (1972) 1 SCC 318: 1972 SCC (Cri) 55: AIR 1972 SC 496; Subhash Chander v. State (Chandigarh Admn.), (1980) 2 SCC 155: 1980 SCC (Cri) 376: AIR 1980 SC 423, relied on [3127] — Ss. 307/34 or Ss. 326/34 — On consideration of report of injuries received by the PWs, causing of grievous hurt found established — Held, conviction under Ss. 307/34, therefore, ought to be altered in the interest of justice to that under Ss. 326/34 — Sentence also altered to two years' RI without any fine (Para 35). Lallan Rai v. State of Bihar, (2003) 1 SCC 268: 2003 SCC (Cri) 301: AIR 2003 SC 333.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-11-2002]

[3128] — S. 307 — Power under compared with S. 64, NDPS Act, 1985 — Object of S. 64, NDPS Act, held, is the same as that of S. 307 CrPC — There is no conflict between the power of Central Govt. under S. 64 of the Act and power of court under S. 307 CrPC — But even assuming there is any conflict, S. 64 would prevail — Hence after rejection of S. 307 CrPC application for grant of pardon, immunity could be granted under S. 64, NDPS Act — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 64

The object of Section 64 NDPS Act being the same as Section 307 CrPC, it should logically follow that it may be exercised at any time during the course of the trial. It is true that the words "immunity from prosecution" have been used, but the phrase does not mean anything more than the power to withdraw from prosecution. (Para 29)

There is no conflict between the powers exercised by the court under Section 307 CrPC and by the Government under Section 64 NDPS Act. All that Section 64 does is to bring expressly to the fore the role which the executive already has to play under Section 307 CrPC. The only difference is in the authority which orders the pardon or the grant of immunity. Assuming there is a conflict between the powers of the court under Section 307 CrPC and the power of the Central Government under Section 64 of the NDPS Act, then it must be held that Section 64 would prevail both on the ground that the Act being a special Act overrides CrPC which is a general Act and also because the later enactment must prevail over the earlier one. (Paras 38 and 39). Jasbir Singh v. Vipin Kumar Jaggi, (2001) 8 SCC 289: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1525: AIR 2001 SC 2734: (2001) 132 ELT 529: (2001) 3 KLT 346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2001]

Kanta Prashad v. Delhi Admn., AIR 1958 SC 350: 1958 Cri LJ 698: 1958 SCR 1218 and State of U.P. v. Kailash Nath Agarwal, (1973) 1 SCC 751: 1973 SCC (Cri) 698: (1973) 3 SCR 728; Sarwan Singh v. Kasturi Lal, (1977) 1 SCC 750: (1977) 2 SCR 421; Maharashtra Tubes Ltd. v. State Industrial & Investment Corpn. of Maharashtra Ltd., (1993) 2 SCC 144; Allahabad Bank v. Canara Bank, (2000) 4 SCC 406; Solidaire India Ltd. v. Fairgrowth Financial Services Ltd., (2001) 3 SCC 71, relied on

— S. 308 See also Ss. 339 and 339-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1145 in Vol. 2

— S. 308 See also Ss. 306 and 308

[3129] — S. 308 first proviso — Approver's evidence — Approver found to have suppressed some material facts — Even then he cannot be tried with other accused by withdrawing the pardon under the Code — But Court has inherent power to proceed against the approver in such circumstances

It was submitted that the evidence of the approver should not have been accepted by the Court as it is a tainted evidence. It was argued that there was no satisfactory corroboration of the evidence of the approver and unless there is a corroboration, it should not have been acted upon.

Held :

It is true that the evidence of the approver is always to be viewed with suspicion especially when it is seriously suspected that he is suppressing some material facts. Here the approver's evidence was not fully accepted by the High Court. The High Court was of the view that he had suppressed some material facts. The observation made by the High Court was justified. Despite all, the approver could not be proceeded against and the Public Prosecutor had not taken any step to proceed against the approver. Under such circumstances the Court itself has inherent powers to proceed against the approver in case he is wilfully suppressing material facts or is giving false evidence. When the Court suspected the evidence of the approver, the pardon given to him itself could be withdrawn and he could be tried along with the other accused. But unfortunately the provisions contained in the Criminal Procedure Code do not enable the Court to take such a strong action. (Paras 31 and 33). Renuka Bai v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 7 SCC 442: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 290: AIR 2006 SC 3056.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-2006]

— S. 309 See also S. 344, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1163 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 309 See Ss. 167, 209 and 309
See also Ss. 167, 309, 173 and 190
See also Ss. 167(2) proviso, 309, 173 and 190
See also Ss. 167(2), proviso (a)(i)&(ii), 57 and 309
See also Ss. 190, 309, 320 and 482
See also Ss. 207, 209, 309, 170, 190 and 2(g)
See also Ss. 228, 167, 173, 2(g) & (h), 190 and 309
See also Ss. 231, 242, 244, 309 and 437 & 439
See also Ss. 242, 309 and 313
See also Ss. 437 & 309
See also Ss. 482 and 197, 173, 309, 437(6) and 468
See also Ss. 482, 309, 228 and 240
See also Ss. 482, 309, 311 and 258

[3130] — S. 309 — Adjournment — When a witness is available and his examination-in-chief is over, unless compelling reasons are there, trial court should not adjourn the matter on the mere asking (Para 54). Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Kirpal, C.J. and K.G. Balakrishnan and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-2002]

State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667: 2001 SCC (Cri) 798; N.G. Dastane v. Shrikant S. Shivde, (2001) 6 SCC 135, relied on

[3131] — S. 309 — Adjournments — Provisions against are mandatory — When witnesses are in court, they will have to be examined except for "special reasons" which are to be recorded in the order of adjournment — Inconvenience of advocate is not a special reason — Where after examination of PW he could not be cross-examined as trial court granted adjournments after adjournments at long intervals on mere asking for it on behalf of the accused even though the PW remained present in court and as a result the accused persons were acquitted by trial court for want of evidence, held, there has been a miscarriage of justice — Hence acquittal order set aside and trial court directed to proceed with further examination of the PW and other witnesses

The respondents were arraigned before the Sessions Court to face charges of murder, attempt to murder and rioting etc. The trial Judge included Sections 302 and 307 read with Section 149 IPC among other offences in the charges framed against the respondents. The prosecution cited three persons including PW 1 as eyewitnesses and offered to examine them and other witnesses to prove the charges against the respondents. Though PW 1 was examined but his cross-examination was not completed on the same day. Hence, the trial court adjourned the case to some other day and then to some other day and like that to so many days. PW 1 had appeared in the court on 9-11-1994, 15-11-1994, 8-12-1994, and then on 12-1-1995, 7-2-1995, 24-6-1995, 25-8-1995 and 25-9-1995 but one or the other accused was absent on most of those days and the cross-examination of PW 1 could not be undertaken for that reason. The Public Prosecutor in the trial court filed an application on 11-7-1995 for adopting punitive action against the accused for the dilatory tactics and the Sessions Court posted the case to 25-8-1995 with a warning to the accused that no further adjournment would be given for cross-examination of PW 1. But the presiding officer happened to be on leave on 25-8-1995 and hence the case was posted to 25-9-1995. Though PW 1 was present on that day also he was not examined. Ultimately the case stood posted on 4-1-1996. But on that day PW 1 happened to be absent and an application for adjournment was presented on his behalf. The trial Judge, while expressing misgivings about the police that they and the accused in the case would have colluded together for not producing evidence against the accused, dismissed the said application and closed the prosecution evidence and pronounced the judgment on 9-1-1996 acquitting the accused for want of evidence. The State moved the High Court seeking leave to appeal but the same was refused by an order which read thus: "Heard learned AGA. Perused the impugned judgment. We do not find any good ground for interference by this Court in appeal. Leave to appeal is refused." Allowing the State's appeal,

Held :

If the Sessions Judge had succumbed to the collusive tactics of the parties in serious offences like murder by acquitting the accused on the ground of want of evidence in spite of witnesses being present on a large number of dates, the public confidence in the efficacy of the administration of criminal justice would be further drained considerably. In the present case, when PW 1 was examined-in-chief the court should have posted the case to the next working day for completion of cross-examination of that witness. In this case a miscarriage of justice has occasioned due to the failure of the trial court to comply with the mandatory directions contained in the Code. Criminal justice cannot be allowed to be defeated solely on account of inaction or lapses of the court in adhering to the mandates of law. When the State of U.P. moved the High Court, in this case, seeking leave to appeal, the above aspect should have been considered by the learned Judges and set right the grave miscarriage of justice occasioned on account of flouting the directions of law. (Paras 8 and 20)

If a witness is present in court he must be examined on that day. The court must know that most of the witnesses could attend the court only at heavy cost to them, after keeping aside their own avocation. Certainly they incur suffering and loss of income. The meagre amount of bhatta (allowance) which a witness may be paid by the court is generally a poor solace for the financial loss incurred by him. Section 309 CrPC makes it clear that once examination of witnesses has started, the court has to continue the trial from day to day until all witnesses in attendance have been examined (except those whom the party has given up). The court has to record reasons for deviating from the said course. Even that is forbidden when witnesses are present in court, as the requirement then is that the court has to examine them. Only if there are "special reasons", which reasons should find a place in the order for adjournment, that alone can confer jurisdiction on the court to adjourn the case without examination of witnesses who are present in court. (Paras 9 and 12)

It is almost a common practice and regular occurrence that trial courts flout the said command with impunity. Even when witnesses are present, cases are adjourned on far less serious reasons or even on flippant grounds. Adjournments are granted even in such situations on the mere asking for it. Quite often such adjournments are granted to suit the convenience of the advocate concerned. The legislature has frowned at granting adjournments on that ground. At any rate inconvenience of an advocate is not a "special reason" for bypassing the mandate of Section 309 of the Code. (Para 13)

If any court finds that the day-to-day examination of witnesses mandated by the legislature cannot be complied with due to the non-cooperation of the accused or his counsel the court can adopt any of the measures indicated in the sub-section i.e. remanding the accused to custody or imposing cost on the party who wants such adjournments (the cost must be commensurate with the loss suffered by the witnesses, including the expenses to attend the court). Another option is, when the accused is absent and the witness is present to be examined, the court can cancel his bail, if he is on bail (unless an application is made on his behalf seeking permission for his counsel to proceed to examine the witnesses present even in his absence provided the accused gives an undertaking in writing that he would not dispute his identity as the particular accused in the case). (Para 14)

It is no justification to glide on any alibi by blaming the infrastructure for skirting the legislative mandates embalmed in Section 309 of the Code. A judicious judicial officer who is committed to his work could manage with the existing infrastructure for complying with such legislative mandates. The precept in the old homily that a lazy workman always blames his tools, is the only answer to those indolent judicial officers who find fault with the defects in the system and the imperfections of the existing infrastructure for their tardiness in coping with such directions. (Para 18)

In some States a system is evolved for framing a schedule of consecutive working days for examination of witnesses in each sessions trial to be followed. Such schedule is fixed by the court well in advance after ascertaining the convenience of the counsel on both sides. Summons or process would then be handed over to the Public Prosecutor in charge of the case to cause them to be served on the witnesses. Once the schedule is so fixed and witnesses are summoned the trial invariably proceeds from day to day. This is one method of complying with the mandates of the law. It is for the presiding officer of each court to chalk out any other methods, if any, found better for complying with the legal provisions contained in Section 309 of the Code. Of course, the High Court can monitor, supervise and give directions, on the administration side, regarding measures to conform to the legislative insistence contained in the above section. (Para 19)

In view of the above position the order of acquittal passed by the trial court is set aside and the trial court is directed to proceed with further examination of PW 1 and examination of other witnesses to whom the court should issue process if so requested by the prosecution. (It is open to the prosecution to produce such witnesses without bothering the court to issue summons to them.) The case shall be disposed of after taking all the remaining steps in accordance with law. (Para 21). State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667: 2001 SCC (Cri) 798: AIR 2001 SC 1403: 2001 All LJ 835: 2001 Cri LJ 1740: (2001) 2 KLT 159.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-3-2001]

Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1998) 7 SCC 507: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1692; Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar, (1999) 7 SCC 604: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1324, relied on [3132] — S. 309 — Detention of a large number of persons under Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act for a long period — Delay in constitution of Special Courts frustrating the objective of S. 36(1) Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act and S. 309 Criminal Procedure Code. Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee v. Union of India, (1994) 6 SCC 731: 1995 SCC (Cri) 39.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-1994]

[3133] — S. 309 — Examination of witnesses should be continued from day to day more so where accused party is found to be stronger in money power as well as muscle power

PW who had lodged FIR immediately was under constant threat and was compelled not to speak the truth despite the fact that he was the brother of the deceased. Other witnesses also turned hostile. On that basis the High Court observed that the accused party was stronger in terms of money power and muscle power. The examination-in-chief of the said PW was over on 6-2-1984. The counsel for one of the accused requested the Court that because of his uncle's demise, he would not be in a position to cross-examine the witness and, therefore, recording of further cross-examination might be adjourned. Thereafter, the witness was cross-examined in the month of July 1985.

Held :

This was highly improper. The Sessions Judge ought to have followed the mandate of Section 309 CrPC of completing the trial by examining the witnesses from day to day and not giving a chance to the accused to threaten or win over the witnesses so that they may not support the prosecution. Even if the request for adjournment of the counsel for the accused was accepted, the cross-examination ought not to have been deferred beyond two or three days. (Para 11). Ambika Prasad v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2000) 2 SCC 646: 2000 SCC (Cri) 522: AIR 2000 SC 718: 2000 Cri LJ 810.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-1-2000]

[3134] — S. 309 — Postponement or adjournment of a proceeding for unduly long period on ground of pendency of any other proceeding having bearing on the proceeding before the court not proper

The discretion under S. 309 CrPC should be exercised judicially and in such a way as not to frustrate the object of the criminal proceedings. There is no rigid rule which makes it necessary for a criminal court to adjourn or postpone the hearing of a case before it indefinitely or for an unduly long period only because some proceeding which may have some bearing on it is pending elsewhere. This, however, has no relevance to the question of maintainability of the prosecution. The prosecution in those circumstances cannot be quashed on the ground that it is a premature one. P. Jayappan v. S.K. Perumal, Ist ITO, 1984 Supp SCC 437: AIR 1984 SC 1693: 1984 Tax LR 1197: (1984) 149 ITR 696.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-1984]

[3135] — S. 309 — Refusal of adjournment of an old pending case on ground of prosecution's laxity and negligence resulting in inordinate delay in producing and examining witnesses and documentary evidence, held, reasonable and justified. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Vishwanath Lugnani, 1981 Supp SCC 64: 1982 SCC (Cri) 139: AIR 1981 SC 1239: 1981 Cri LJ 745.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-1980]

[3136] — Ss. 309 & 190(1) — Simultaneous civil and criminal proceedings in a given matter — Stay of one of the proceedings — Factors to be considered therefor — Primacy of criminal proceeding over civil proceeding — Consideration of general rule as to — Mode of determination of civil suit, if primacy to be given to criminal proceeding — Reiterated, in a given case, a civil proceeding as also a criminal proceeding can proceed simultaneously — Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case one or the other proceedings would be stayed would depend upon several factors including the nature and the stage of the case — Ordinarily, a criminal proceeding will have primacy over the civil proceeding in view of the fact that disposal of a civil proceeding generally takes a long time — If primacy is to be given to a criminal proceeding, the civil suit must be determined on its own merit, keeping in view the evidence brought therein and not in terms of the evidence brought in the criminal proceeding — Simultaneous pendency of criminal proceeding for forgery of will, etc. as well as probate proceeding as to said will — Having regard to facts as to: (i) institution of criminal case much prior to initiation of probate proceeding, (ii) conduct of appellant-accused (criminal case not proceeding further for the last 7 years in view of pendency of matters before High Courts in different proceedings initiated by accused, though the charge-sheet was filed and cognizance of offence was taken), (iii) stage of pending probate proceeding (absence of much progress therein after about 6 years of filing of proceeding as the will in question was not yet sent to handwriting expert for his opinion), and (iv) the fact that the criminal case involved offence not only of forgery of will but also of house trespass, held, impugned judgment refusing to stay criminal proceeding not liable to be interfered with — CPC, 1908, Ss. 151 & 9 — Succession Act, 1925, S. 276 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420/468/444/34

A criminal case under Sections 420/468/444/34 IPC was instituted against the appellants alleging commission of forgery of a will by them. Prior to the said case, a civil suit was filed against the appellants, which was still pending, questioning the genuineness of the said will based on which the appellants had claimed mutation in respect of the property concerned.

Cognizance of offences in the said criminal case was taken in the year 2002. The appellants were granted anticipatory bail. On or about 30-1-2003, the appellants filed an application under Section 276 of the Succession Act, 1925 before the Jharkhand High Court for grant of probate in respect of the said will. Thereafter, the appellants preferred a writ petition before the Delhi High Court for quashing of the FIR. The said petition was disposed of making observations that the petitioners therein (i.e. the accused) could move the trial court by filing an application for stay of the criminal trial pending adjudication of the question of genuineness of the will by the civil court.

Pursuant to the said order of the High Court, the appellants filed an application under Section 309 CrPC before the Magistrate concerned seeking stay of the criminal proceedings. But that application was dismissed. Aggrieved thereby, the appellants preferred a criminal revision petition but they did not succeed. Hence, the present appeal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Indisputably, in a given case, a civil proceeding as also a criminal proceeding may proceed simultaneously. Cognizance in a criminal proceeding can be taken by the criminal court upon arriving at the satisfaction that there exists a prima facie case. The question as to whether in the facts and circumstances of the case one or the other proceedings would be stayed would depend upon several factors including the nature and the stage of the case. (Para 21)

It is now well settled that ordinarily a criminal proceeding will have primacy over the civil proceeding. Precedence to a criminal proceeding is given having regard to the fact that disposal of a civil proceeding ordinarily takes a long time and in the interest of justice the former should be disposed of as expeditiously as possible. (Para 22)

If primacy is to be given to a criminal proceeding, the civil suit must be determined on its own merit, keeping in view the evidence brought on record therein and not in terms of the evidence brought in the criminal proceeding. (Para 24)

In the present case, the impugned judgment refusing to stay the criminal proceeding cannot be interfered with. Firstly, because the criminal case was instituted much prior to the initiation of the probate proceeding and secondly, because of the conduct of the appellants and the stage at which the probate proceeding is pending. (Para 41)

Whereas the criminal case is pending before the Delhi Court, the testamentary suit has been filed before the Jharkhand High Court. Since 2003 not much progress has been made therein. The will has not been sent to the handwriting expert for his opinion, which is essential for determination of the question in regard to the genuineness of the will. Further, for the last seven years, in view of the pendency of the matters before the High Courts in different proceedings initiated by the appellants, the criminal case has not proceeded, although charge-sheet has been filed and cognizance of the offence has been taken. (Para 44)

Further, the FIR was lodged not only in regard to forgery of the will but also on the cause of action of a trespaSs. It is, thus, possible that even if the will is found to be genuine and that no case under Section 468 IPC is found to have been made out, the appellants may be convicted for commission of other offences for which they have been charged against, namely, trespass into the property and cheating. (Para 43)

Therefore, in view of the above, the impugned judgment cannot be interfered with exercising discretionary jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution. (Para 46). Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2009) 5 SCC 528.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.B. Sinha, L.S. Panta and B. Sudershan Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2009]

M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397; K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87: 2003 SCC (Cri) 223; Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101; P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, (2008) 5 SCC 765: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 79, relied on

Sardool Singh v. Nasib Kaur, 1987 Supp SCC 146: 1987 SCC (Cri) 672, distinguished [3137] — S. 309 — Remand — Magistrate's jurisdiction — Accused arrested in Jamshedpur and remanded by S.D.M., Jamshedpur — Accused transferred to Gaya jail — Magistrate at Gaya would have no jurisdiction to order further remand — CrPC, 1898, S. 344. Sandip Kumar Dey v. Officer-in-Charge, Sakchi P.S., Jamshedpur, (1974) 4 SCC 273: 1974 SCC (Cri) 435: AIR 1974 SC 871: 1974 Cri LJ 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.H. Beg and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-1974]

[3138] — S. 309 — Remand — Order of remand passed without physical production of accused not invalid — However, orders of remand not to be passed mechanically and notwithstanding the above rule Magistrate should require physical production — CrPC, 1898, S. 344. Sandip Kumar Dey v. Officer-in-Charge, Sakchi P.S., Jamshedpur, (1974) 4 SCC 273: 1974 SCC (Cri) 435: AIR 1974 SC 871: 1974 Cri LJ 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.H. Beg and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-1974]

[3139] — S. 309 — Remand under, can be only to judicial custody in terms mentioned therein

Section 309 comes into operation after taking cognizance and not during the period of investigation and the remand under this provision can only be to judicial custody and there cannot be any controversy about the same. CBI v. Anupam J. Kulkarni, (1992) 3 SCC 141: 1992 SCC (Cri) 554: AIR 1992 SC 1768: 1992 Cri LJ 2768: (1992) 2 An WR 15 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-1992]

[3140] — S. 309 — Undertrials, rights of — Right to a speedy trial, held, is part of Art. 21 — Prolonged detention of those awaiting trial, held, violates Art. 21 — Pre-trial detention must be based on 'reasonable, just and fair', procedure — Constitution of India — Art. 21

Per Bhagwati and Koshal, JJ.

A procedure which keeps large numbers of people behind bars without trial for long cannot possibly be regarded as reasonable, just or fair so as to be in conformity with the requirement of Art. 21. The law as enacted by the legislature and as administered by the courts must radically change its approach to pre-trial detention and ensure 'reasonable, just and fair' procedure which has creative connotation after Maneka Gandhi case.

Since the respondent-State despite notice has not put in appearance, the allegations contained in the newspaper and incorporated in the writ petitions are herein presumed correct.

Such imprisonment of undertrials is a denial of human rights and withholding of basic freedoms. Speedy trial is of the essence of criminal justice and there can be no doubt that delay in trial by itself constitutes denial of justice. Speedy trial though not specifically enumerated as a fundamental right, is implicit in the broad sweep and content of Art. 21. No procedure which dose not ensure a reasonable quick trial can be regarded as 'reasonable, fair or just' and it would fall foul of Art. 21. There can, therefore, be no doubt that speedy trial, meaning thereby reasonably expeditious trial, is an integral and essential part of the fundamental right to life and liberty enshrined in Art. 21.

Per Pathak, J. (concurring)

In regard to the exercise of the judicial power to release a prisoner awaiting trial on bail or on the execution of a personal bond without sureties for his appearance, there is an amplitude of power in this regard within the existing provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is for the courts to fully acquaint themselves with the nature and extent of their discretion in exercising it. It is no longer possible to countenance a mechanical exercise of the power. What should be the amount of security required or the monetary obligation demanded in a bond is a matter calling for the careful consideration of several factors. The entire object being only to ensure that the undertrial does not flee or hide himself from trial, all the relevant considerations which enter into the determination of that question must be taken into account.

At present there is the absence of an explicit provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure enabling the release, in appropriate cases, of an undertrial prisoner on his bond without sureties and without any monetary obligation. There is urgent need for a clear provision. The continued incarceration by reason of poverty may be ground for complaining of invidious discrimination. On the peculiar facts of the present case release of the persons mentioned in the newspaper on a personal bond without any monetary obligation is justified. Hussainara Khatoon (I) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 81: 1980 SCC (Cri) 23: AIR 1979 SC 1360 (Order: 1979 Cri LJ 1036: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 76.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati^{1}, R.S. Pathak^{2} and A.D. Koshal^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-1979]

[3141] — S. 309 — Right to speedy trial — Held, is part of fair, just and reasonable procedure implicit in Art. 21 and is reflected in S. 309 of CrPC, 1973 — This right comprehends all stages viz. investigation, inquiry, trial, appeal, revision and retrial — While proceedings must be concluded with reasonable despatch, no outer limit can be prescribed for conclusion of the proceedings — Burden lies on prosecution to justify and explain the delay — Accused cannot be denied the right merely on ground of his failure to demand or insist upon speedy trial — Question of denial of the right has to be decided by balancing the attendant circumstances and relevant factors — In case of infringement of the right, charges or conviction need not be quashed if it is not in the interest of justice — In such case court may fix time limit for concluding the proceedings — Relief based on allegation of denial of the right must first be sought in High Court — High Court should normally, instead of staying the proceeding, dispose of the same on priority basis — On facts held, delay in conclusion of the proceedings in the case of petitioners A.R. Antulay and Ranjan Dwivedi not such as to quash the proceedings — Constitution of India — Art. 21

On a consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the case it must be held that quashing of charges and/or criminal proceedings at this stage would not be just and proper. However it is directed that the cases be disposed of expeditiously.

Fair, just and reasonable procedure implicit in Art. 21 creates a right in the accused to be tried speedily. Right to speedy trial is the right of the accused. The fact that a speedy trial is also in public interest or that it serves the social interest also, does not make it any the less the right of the accused. Social interest lies in punishing the guilty and exoneration of the innocent but this determination (of guilt or innocence) must be arrived at with reasonable despatch — reasonable in all the circumstances of the case. It is in the interest of all concerned that the guilt or innocence of the accused is determined as quickly as possible in the circumstances.

The constitutional guarantee of speedy trial emanating from Art. 21 is properly reflected in S. 309 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This Section must be read with S. 482 of the Code which saves the inherent powers of the High Court.

Even apart from Art. 21 courts in this country have been cognizant of undue delays in criminal matters and wherever there was inordinate delay or where the proceedings were pending for too long and any further proceedings were deemed to be oppressive and unwarranted, they were put an end to by making appropriate orders.

Right to speedy trial flowing from Art. 21 encompasses all the stages, namely the stage of investigation, inquiry, trial, appeal, revision and re-trial.

The concerns underlying the right to speedy trial from the point of view of the accused are:

(a) the period of remand and pre-conviction detention should be as short as possible. In other words, the accused should not be subjected to unnecessary or unduly long incarceration prior to his conviction;

(b) the worry, anxiety, expense and disturbance to his vocation and peace, resulting from an unduly prolonged investigation, inquiry or trial should be minimal; and

(c) undue delay may well result in impairment of the ability of the accused to defend himself, whether on account of death, disappearance or non-availability of witnesses or otherwise.

But it is not possible to accede to the demand rule i.e. an accused who does not demand a speedy trial, who stands by and acquiesces in the delays cannot suddenly turn round after a lapse of period and complain of infringement of his right to speedy trial. The State or complainant prosecutes him. It is, thus, the obligation of the State or the complainant, as the case may be, to proceed with the case with reasonable promptitude. Particularly, in this country, where the large majority of accused come from poorer and weaker sections of the society, not versed in the ways of law, where they do not often get competent legal advice, the application of the said rule is wholly inadvisable. If in a given case, he did make such a demand and yet he was not tried speedily, it would be a plus point in his favour, but the mere non-asking for a speedy trial cannot be put against the accused.

It is usually the accused who is interested in delaying the proceedings. Since the burden of proving the guilt of the accused lies upon the prosecution, delay ordinarily prejudices the prosecution. Non-availability of witnesses, disappearance of evidence by lapse of time really work against the interest of the prosecution. Of course, there may be cases where the prosecution, for whatever reason, also delays the proceedings. Therefore, in every case, where the right to speedy trial is alleged to have been infringed, the first question to be put and answered is: who is responsible for the delay? Proceedings taken by either party in good faith, to vindicate their rights and interest, as perceived by them, cannot be treated as delaying tactics nor can the time taken in pursuing such proceedings be counted towards delay. But frivolous proceedings or proceedings taken merely for delaying the day of reckoning cannot be treated as proceedings taken in good faith. The mere fact that an application/petition is admitted and an order of stay granted by a superior court is by itself no proof that the proceeding is not frivolous. Very often these stays are obtained on ex parte representation.

Each and every delay does not necessarily prejudice the accused. Some delays may indeed work to his advantage. However, inordinately long delay may be taken as presumptive proof of prejudice. In this context, the fact of incarceration of accused will also be a relevant fact. The prosecution should not be allowed to become a persecution. But when does the prosecution become persecution, again depends upon the facts of a given case.

While determining whether undue delay has occurred (resulting in violation of Right to Speedy Trial) one must have regard to all the attendant circumstances, including nature of offence, number of accused and witnesses, the workload of the court concerned, prevailing local conditions and so on — what is called, the systemic delays. Though it is the obligation of the State to ensure a speedy trial and State includes judiciary as well, but a realistic and practical approach should be adopted in such matters instead of a pedantic one.

Ultimately, the court has to balance and weigh the several relevant factors — 'balancing test' or 'balancing process' — and determine in each case whether the right to speedy trial has been denied in a given case.

It is neither advisable nor practicable to fix any time-limit for trial of offences. Any such rule is bound to be qualified one. Such rule cannot also be evolved merely to shift the burden of proving justification on to the shoulders of the prosecution. In every case of complaint of denial of right to speedy trial, it is primarily for the prosecution to justify and explain the delay. At the same time, it is the duty of the court to weigh all the circumstances of a given case before pronouncing upon the complaint.

Ordinarily speaking, where the court comes to the conclusion that right to speedy trial of an accused has been infringed the charges or the conviction, as the case may be, shall be quashed. But this is not the only course open. The nature of the offence and other circumstances in a given case may be such that quashing of proceedings may not be in the interest of justice. In such a case, it is open to the court to make such other appropriate order — including an order to conclude the trial within a fixed time where the trial is not concluded or reducing the sentence where the trial has concluded — as may be deemed just and equitable in the circumstances of the case.

An objection based on denial of right to speedy trial and for relief on that account, should first be addressed to the High Court. Even if the High Court entertains such a plea, ordinarily it should not stay the proceedings, except in a case of grave and exceptional nature. Such proceedings in High Court must, however, be disposed of on a priority basis.

The above propositions are meant to serve as guidelines and are not exhaustive. Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93: AIR 1992 SC 1701: 1992 Cri LJ 2717: (1992) 1 Crimes 193.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: K.N. Singh, C.J. and P.B. Sawant, N.M. Kasliwal, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-12-1991]

[3142] — Ss. 309, 173(1), 437(6) and 468 — Right to speedy trial — Ingredients of, stated — Duty of court on its infringement, discussed — Criminal proceedings pending since 1987 for alleged offence committed in 1981 — Appellant was then a minor — His co-accused parents who managed the business involved in the offence since expired — Lackadaisical manner of investigation — On facts, appellant's right to speedy trial stood violated — Though plea regarding inordinate delay in investigations and trial raised for the first time before Supreme Court, but at this distant point of time, held, it would be unfair to the appellant to remit the matter back to High Court for examining the said plea — Delay not attributable to the appellant — Also, prosecution failed to show any exceptional circumstance for condoning prolongation to investigation and trial — Thus, as the appellant was denied his valuable constitutional right to a speedy investigation and trial, therefore, criminal proceedings initiated against him, pending in the court below, quashed on this short ground alone, without unnecessarily going into the merits of the accusations against the appellant as also the question of his age at the time of commission of alleged offences — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B, 409, 420, 465, 468, 471, 477-A, 101 and 34 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(1)(c) and (d) r/w S. 5(2) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 13(1)(c) and (d) r/w S. 13(2) — Constitution of India — Art. 21

In the instant case, charge-sheet was filed in the court against twelve persons for offences punishable under Sections 120-B, 409, 420, 465, 468, 471, 477-A, 101 and 34 IPC and Sections 5(1)(c), (d) along with Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947. In addition thereto, Sections 13(1)(c), (d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 were also invoked against Accused 1 to 9. The first nine accused were the employees of the government milk plant and the remaining three being the appellant and his father and mother (since deceased), were arraigned as Accused 11, 10 and 12 respectively. Accused 10 had two concerns supplying spare parts to the milk plant. Allegations related to the misappropriation of huge amounts during sale and purchase of spare parts, etc. for the plant.

The High Court had dismissed the writ petition filed by the appellant and his mother (since deceased) under Article 227 of the Constitution read with Section 482 CrPC, seeking quashing of the charge-sheet and the consequential proceedings initiated against them, pending in the court below. Aggrieved by the decision, the appellant preferred the instant appeal.

Before the Supreme Court, the appellant contended that, firstly, there was sufficient material on record to show that when the alleged acts of malfeasance took place, the appellant was a minor and had nothing to do with it. Secondly, referring to certain portions of the charge-sheet, appellant contended that except for the bald averment that the appellant had prepared bogus bills and had received the payment, no other incriminating material was brought on record, to show that the appellant was looking after the affairs of the concerns/firms owned or managed by his parents and, therefore, the conclusion of the High Court that a prima facie case was made out against the appellant was without any basis. Lastly, the appellant pleaded that he was deprived of his constitutional right to have a speedy investigation and trial, inasmuch as FIR was registered on 12-5-1987 for the offences allegedly committed sometime in the year 1981; charge-sheet was filed on 22-2-1991 but till date not a single witness was examined by the prosecution.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

It is well settled that the right to speedy trial in all criminal prosecutions is an inalienable right under Article 21 of the Constitution. This right is applicable not only to the actual proceedings in court but also includes within its sweep the preceding police investigations as well. The right to speedy trial extends equally to all criminal prosecutions and is not confined to any particular category of cases. (Para 22)

In every case, where the right to speedy trial is alleged to have been infringed, the court has to perform the balancing act upon taking into consideration all the attendant circumstances and determine in each case whether the right to speedy trial has been denied in a given case. Where the court comes to the conclusion that the right to speedy trial of an accused has been infringed, the charges or the conviction, as the case may be, may be quashed unless the court feels that having regard to the nature of offence and other relevant circumstances, quashing of proceedings may not be in the interest of justice. In such a situation, it is open to the court to make an appropriate order as it may deem just and equitable including fixation of time for the conclusion of trial. (Para 23)

In the instant case, the appellant's constitutional right recognised under Article 21 of the Constitution stood violated. The FIR was recorded on 12-5-1987 for the offences allegedly committed in the year 1981, and after unwarranted prolonged investigations, involving three financial irregularities, the charge-sheet was submitted in court on 22-2-1991. Nothing happened till April 1999, when the appellant and his deceased mother filed criminal writ petition, seeking quashing of proceedings before the trial court (which was dismissed by the High Court). (Para 24)

Though, the plea with regard to inordinate delay in investigations and trial was raised for the first time before the Supreme Court, but at this distant point of time, it would be unfair to the appellant to remit the matter back to the High Court for examining the said plea of the appellant. Apart from the fact that it would further protract the already delayed trial, no fruitful purpose would be served as the State very fairly stated that there was no explanation to offer for the delay in investigations and the reason why the trial did not commence for eight long years. Nothing, whatsoever, could be pointed out, far from being established, to show that the delay was in any way attributable to the appellant. (Para 25)

Moreover, having regard to the nature of the accusations against the appellant, who was a young boy of about eighteen years of age in the year 1981, when the acts of omission and commission were allegedly committed by the concerns managed by his parents, who have since died, the extreme mental stress and strain of prolonged investigation by the Anti-Corruption Bureau and the sword of Damocles hanging perilously over his head for over fifteen years must have wrecked his entire career. (Para 26)

Be that as it may, the prosecution has failed to show any exceptional circumstance, which could possibly be taken into consideration for condoning the prolongation of investigation and the trial. The lackadaisical manner of investigation spread over a period of four years in a case of this type and inordinate delay of over eight years (excluding the period when the record of the trial court was in the High Court), is manifestly clear. (Para 27)

Thus, on facts in hand, the appellant was denied his valuable constitutional right to a speedy investigation and trial and, therefore, criminal proceedings initiated against him in the year 1987 and pending in the court below, deserve to be quashed on this short ground alone. (Para 28)

It is unnecessary to go into the merits of the accusations against the appellant as also the question of his age, at the time of commission of alleged offences. (Para 29)

Consequently, the proceedings against the appellant in criminal case arising out of FIR are hereby quashed. (Para 30). Pankaj Kumar v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 16 SCC 117: AIR 2008 SC 3077: (2008) 68 AIC 93 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3944: (2009) 2 LLN 798: (2009) 122 FLR 790.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2008]

Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248; Hussainara Khatoon (1) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 81: 1980 SCC (Cri) 23; Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93; P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 830, relied on [3143] — S. 309 — Right to speedy trial — Upper time limit for conclusion of trial cannot be fixed — Trial prolonging for six years — Trial court closing the evidence and acquitting the accused-respondent in the light of Supreme Court's decision in Raj Deo Sharma (I) case, (1998) 7 SCC 507 — High Court affirming the acquittal of respondent taking the view that trial cannot proceed indefinitely — However, by virtue of a subsequent seven-Judge Bench decision of Supreme Court in P. Ramachandra Rao case, (2002) 4 SCC 578, no upper limit for conclusion of trial can be prescribed by court and A.R. Antulay case, [(1992) 1 SCC 225] decision of Supreme Court continues to hold the field — Acquittal of respondent on ground of the trial having not come to an end for six years, held, cannot be sustained — Trial to revive — Court concerned to take up the matter on day-to-day basis, keeping in view the mandate of S. 309 CrPC (Paras 2, 3, 4 and 5). State of Rajasthan v. Ikbal Hussen, (2004) 12 SCC 499.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2004]

P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 830; Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93, followed [3144] — S. 309 — Speedy trial is an essential ingredient of 'reasonable, fair and just' procedure guaranteed by Art. 21 — State obliged to provide speedy trial. Hussainara Khatoon (IV) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 98: 1980 SCC (Cri) 40: AIR 1979 SC 1369: 1979 Cri LJ 1045: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 86.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-3-1979]

[3145] — S. 309 — Where respondent-accused had gone abroad and come back after being directed to do so by Supreme Court, held on facts, there was nothing to indicate that respondent would try to abscond — Therefore the following directions issued to ensure speedy progress of trial: (i) respondent to surrender his passport before trial court; (ii) respondent permitted to approach High Court to secure permission to go abroad (Dubai in this case) to attend to his business and meet with his family resident there; (iii) trial court to expedite trial and proceed in strict compliance with S. 309 CrPC and in case departure from provisions of the section necessary, trial court to seek authorisation of High Court. Chief Enforcement Officer/Enforcement Director v. Jairaj V. Java, (2000) 9 SCC 232: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1499.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

[3146] — Ss. 309, 311, 258 and 482 — Right to speedy trial — Held, per majority, Supreme Court cannot fix any time-limit as bar beyond which criminal proceedings or trial cannot continue, thereby entitling the accused to be acquitted on ground of delay — Prescription of such limitation period would amount to judicial legislation which is not permissible — Directions prescribing such time-limit by 2- or 3-Judge Benches of Supreme Court in Common Cause I, (1996) 4 SCC 33, Common Cause II, (1996) 6 SCC 775, Raj Deo Sharma I, (1998) 7 SCC 507 and Raj Deo Sharma II, (1999) 7 SCC 604 cases run counter to the Constitution Bench decision in A.R. Antulay, (1992) 1 SCC 225 and hence deleted — But directions given in the aforesaid cases in respect of enlargement of accused on bail, being not subject-matter of the present case, not deleted — However, by deletion the law relating to speedy trial and speedy conclusion of criminal proceedings not affected — To effectuate speedy trial, powers conferred under Ss. 309, 311 and 258 CrPC should be exercised by criminal courts — High Court has also power to quash the proceedings in appropriate cases in exercise of powers under S. 482 CrPC and Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution — But no case or proceeding shall be reopened by setting aside any acquittal or discharge of accused based on the authority of Common Cause or Raj Deo Sharma cases which has already attained finality — Per Raju, J., Constitution Bench of Supreme Court in Antulay case refrained from fixing any time-limit not because the Court had no power to do so but because that was "neither advisable nor practicable" to do so — Since the law laid down by the Constitution Bench still holds the field, any declaration made in derogation thereof fixing time-limit by a smaller Bench are overruled by virtue of the doctrine of binding precedent — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13 — Acquittal due to failure to commence trial despite lapse of two years — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 32, 141 and 142

In all the appeals the accused persons, who were facing corruption charges under the Prevention of Corruption Act, were acquitted by the Special Courts for failure of commencement of trial in spite of lapse of two years from the date of framing of the charges in terms of the directions of the Supreme Court in 'Common Cause' A Registered Society v. Union of India (I), 'Common Cause' A Registered Society v. Union of India (II), Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar (I) and Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar. All the appeals were allowed by the High Court without issuing notice to the respective accused persons. A three-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court took the view that the questions in the appeals were whether the aforesaid decisions of the Court would apply to the prosecutions under the Prevention of Corruption Act and other economic offences and whether time-limits of the nature mentioned in some of these judgments can, under the law, be laid down and that the same should be considered by a Constitution Bench. Accordingly, the Constitution Bench heard the appeals and observed:

"The Constitution Bench judgment in A.R. Antulay case holds that 'it is neither advisable nor feasible to draw or prescribe an outer time-limit for conclusion of all criminal proceedings'. Even so, the four judgments aforementioned lay down such time-limits. Two of them also lay down to which class of criminal proceedings such time-limits should apply and to which class they should not.

In these circumstances the Court opined that a seven-Judge Bench should consider whether the dictum aforementioned in A.R. Antulay case still holds the field; if not, whether the general directions of the kind given in these judgments are permissible in law and should be upheld."

The present seven-Judge Bench was, therefore, constituted. Allowing the appeals,

Held :

Per majority

The constitutional philosophy propounded as right to speedy trial has though grown in age by almost two and a half decades, the goal sought to be achieved is yet a far-off peak. Myriad fact situations bearing testimony to denial of such fundamental right to the accused persons, on account of failure on the part of prosecuting agencies and the executive to act, and their turning an almost blind eye at securing expeditious and speedy trial so as to satisfy the mandate of Article 21 of the Constitution have persuaded the Supreme Court in devising solution by engrafting a bar of limitation beyond which the criminal proceedings or trial shall not proceed. Though the bar of limitation, judicially engrafted, is meant to provide solution, but a solution of this nature gives rise to greater problems like scuttling a trial without adjudication, stultifying access to justice and giving easy exit from the portals of justice. Such general remedial measures cannot be said to be apt solutions. (Paras 1 and 23)

Therefore, it must be left to the judicious discretion of the court seized of an individual case to find out from the totality of circumstances of a given case if the quantum of time consumed up to a given point of time amounted to violation of Article 21, and if so, then to terminate the particular proceedings, and if not, then to proceed ahead. The test is whether the proceedings or trial has remained pending for such a length of time that the inordinate delay can legitimately be called oppressive and unwarranted, as suggested in A.R. Antulay, (1992) 1 SCC 225. (Para 28)

The dictum in A.R. Antulay case, (1992) 1 SCC 225 is correct and still holds the field. The propositions emerging from Article 21 of the Constitution and expounding the right to speedy trial laid down as guidelines in A.R. Antulay case adequately take care of right to speedy trial. However, the guidelines laid down in A.R. Antulay case are not exhaustive but only illustrative. They are not intended to operate as hard-and-fast rules or to be applied like a straitjacket formula. Their applicability would depend on the fact situation of each case. It is difficult to foresee all situations and no generalization can be made. (Para 29)

The two- or three-Judge Bench decisions in Common Cause cases and Raj Deo Sharma cases run counter to that extent to the dictum of the Constitution Bench in A.R. Antulay case and therefore cannot be said to be good law to the extent they are in breach of the doctrine of precedents. The well-settled principle of precedents which has crystallised into a rule of law is that a Bench of lesser strength is bound by the view expressed by a Bench of larger strength and cannot take a view in departure or in conflict therefrom. (Para 28)

Prescribing periods of limitation at the end of which the trial court would be obliged to terminate the proceedings and necessarily acquit or discharge the accused, and further, making such directions applicable to all the cases in the present and for the future amounts to legislation, which, cannot be done by judicial directives and within the arena of the judicial law-making power available to constitutional courts, howsoever liberally Articles 32, 21, 141 and 142 of the Constitution may be interpreted. (Para 27)

The primary function of the judiciary is to interpret the law. It may lay down principles, guidelines and exhibit creativity in the field left open and unoccupied by legislation. Courts can declare the law, they can interpret the law, they can remove obvious lacunae and fill the gaps but they cannot entrench upon in the field of legislation properly meant for the legislature. Binding directions can be issued for enforcing the law and appropriate directions may issue, including laying down of time-limits or chalking out a calendar for proceedings to follow, to redeem the injustice done or for taking care of rights violated, in a given case or set of cases, depending on facts brought to the notice of the court. This is permissible for the judiciary to do. But it may not, like the legislature, enact a provision akin to or on the lines of Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. (Paras 25 and 27)

Legislation is that source of law which consists in the declaration of legal rules by a competent authority. When Judges by judicial decisions lay down a new principle of general application of the nature specifically reserved for the legislature they may be said to have legislated, and not merely declared the law. It is not difficult to perceive the dividing line between permissible legislation by judicial directives and enacting law — the field exclusively reserved for the legislature. (Paras 22 and 25)

Thus, it is neither advisable, nor feasible, nor judicially permissible to draw or prescribe an outer limit for conclusion of all criminal proceedings. The time-limits or bars of limitation prescribed in the several directions made in Common Cause (I), Raj Deo Sharma (I) and Raj Deo Sharma (II) could not have been so prescribed or drawn and are not good law. The criminal courts are not obliged to terminate trial or criminal proceedings merely on account of lapse of time, as prescribed by the directions made in Common Cause case (I), Raj Deo Sharma cases (I) and (II). At the most the periods of time prescribed in those decisions can be taken by the courts seized of the trial or proceedings to act as reminders when they may be persuaded to apply their judicial mind to the facts and circumstances of the case before them and determine by taking into consideration the several relevant factors as pointed out in A.R. Antulay case and decide whether the trial or proceedings have become so inordinately delayed as to be called oppressive and unwarranted. Such time-limits cannot and will not by themselves be treated by any court as a bar to further continuance of the trial or proceedings and as mandatorily obliging the court to terminate the same and acquit or discharge the accused. (Para 29)

The criminal courts should exercise their available powers, such as those under Sections 309, 311 and 258 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to effectuate the right to speedy trial. A watchful and diligent trial Judge can prove to be a better protector of such right than any guidelines. In appropriate cases, inherent power of the High Court, under Section 482 can be invoked to make such orders, as may be necessary, to give effect to any order under the Code of Criminal Procedure or to prevent abuse of the process of any court, or otherwise, to secure the ends of justice. The power is wide and, if judiciously and consciously exercised, can take care of almost all the situations where interference by the High Court becomes necessary on account of delay in proceedings or for any other reason amounting to oppression or harassment in any trial, inquiry or proceedings. In appropriate cases, the High Courts have exercised their jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC for quashing of first information report and investigation, and terminating criminal proceedings if the case of abuse of process of law was clearly made out. Such power can certainly be exercised on a case being made out of breach of fundamental right conferred by Article 21 of the Constitution. (Paras 29 and 21)

It is, however, made clear ex abundanti cautela that here only the directions made by the Supreme Court in Common Cause cases (I) and (II) and Raj Deo Sharma cases (I) and (II) regarding trial of cases have been dealt with. The directions made in those cases regarding enlargement of accused persons on bail are not the subject-matter of this reference or these appeals. Secondly, while deleting the directions made respectively by two- and three-Judge Benches of the Supreme Court in the cases under reference, no departure has been made from the law as to speedy trial and speedy conclusion of criminal proceedings of whatever nature and at whichever stage before any authority or the court. Thirdly, the bars of limitation are being deleted here on the twin grounds that it amounts to judicial legislation, which is not permissible, and because they run counter to the doctrine of binding precedents. The larger question of powers of the Supreme Court to pass orders and issue directions in public interest or in social action litigations, specially by reference to Articles 32, 141, 142 and 144 of the Constitution, is not the subject-matter of the reference before the Court and this judgment should not be read as an interpretation of those articles of the Constitution and laying down, defining or limiting the scope of the powers exercisable thereunder by the Supreme Court. And lastly, it is clarified that this decision shall not be a ground for reopening a case or proceeding by setting aside any such acquittal or discharge as is based on the authority of Common Cause and Raj Deo Sharma cases and which has already achieved finality and reopen the trial against the accused therein. (Paras 31 to 34)

Per Raju, J.

The declaration of law made by the Constitution Bench of five learned Judges of the Supreme Court in the decision reported in A.R. Antulay case, (1992) 1 SCC 225 still holds the field and its binding force and authority has not been undermined or whittled down or altered in any manner by any other decision of a larger Bench. Consequently, the Benches of lesser number of constitution of Judges which dealt with the cases reported in 'Common Cause' A Regd. Society v. Union of India, (1996) 4 SCC 33, 'Common Cause' A Regd. Society v. Union of India, (1996) 6 SCC 775, Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar and Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar could not have laid down any principles in derogation of the ratio laid down in A.R. Antulay case either by way of elaboration, expansion, clarification or in the process of trying to distinguish the same with reference to either the nature of causes considered therein or the consequences which are likely to follow and which, in their view, deserve to be averted. Even where necessities or justification, if any, were found therefor, there could not have been scope for such liberties being taken to transgress the doctrine of binding precedents, which has come to stay firmly in our method of administration of justice and what is permissible even under such circumstances being only to have had the matter referred to for reconsideration by a larger Bench of the Supreme Court and not to deviate by any other means. This solitary reason would suffice by itself to overrule the above decisions, the correctness of which stands referred to for consideration by this Bench. All the more so when there is no reason to doubt the correctness of the decision in A.R. Antulay case and this Bench concurs with the principles laid down therein. (Para 36)

Though the Supreme Court does not consider itself to be an imperium in imperio or would function as a despotic branch of "the State", the fact that the founding fathers of our Constitution designedly and deliberately, perhaps, did not envisage the imposition of any jurisdictional embargo on the Supreme Court, except in Article 363 of the Constitution of India is significant and sufficient enough to identify the depth and width or extent of its powers. The other fetters devised or perceived on its exercise of powers or jurisdiction to entertain/deal with a matter were merely self-imposed for one or the other reason assigned therefor and they could not stand in the way of or deter the Supreme Court in any manner from rising up to respond in a given situation as and when necessitated and effectively play its role in accommodating the Constitution to changing circumstances and enduring values as a sentinel on the qui vive to preserve and safeguard the Constitution, protect and enforce the fundamental rights and other constitutional mandates — which constitute the inviolable rights of the people as well as those features, which formed its basic structure too and considered to be even beyond the reach of any subsequent constitutional amendment. In substance, the Supreme Court is the ultimate repository of all judicial powers at national level by virtue of it being the summit court at the pyramidal height of administration of justice in the country and as the upholder and final interpreter of the Constitution of India and defender of the fundamentals of "rule of law". (Para 37)

It is not only difficult but impossible to foresee and enumerate all possible situations arising, to provide in advance solutions with any hard-and-fast rules of universal application for all times to come. It is well known that where there is right, there should be a remedy. In what exceptional cases, not normally visualized or anticipated by law, what type of an extraordinary remedy must be devised or designed to solve the issue arising would invariably depend upon the gravity of the situation, nature of violation and efficacy as well as utility of the existing machinery and the imperative need or necessity to find a solution even outside the ordinary framework or avenue of remedies to avert any resultant damage beyond repair or redemption, to any person. Apparently, alive to such possibilities only even the Supreme Court in A.R. Antulay case, (1992) 1 SCC 225 has chosen to decline the request for fixation of any period of time-limit for trial of offences not on any total want or lack of jurisdiction in the Supreme Court, but for the reason that it is "neither advisable nor practicable" to fix any such time-limit and that the non-fixation does not ineffectuate the guarantee of right to speedy trial. (Para 38)

The prospects and scope to achieve the desired object of a speedy trial even within the available procedural safeguards and avenues provided for obtaining relief, have also been indicated in the said decision as well as in the judgment prepared by learned Brother R.C. Lahoti, J. I am of the firm opinion that the Supreme Court should never venture to disown its own jurisdiction on any area or in respect of any matter or over any one authority or person, when the Constitution is found to be at stake and the fundamental rights of citizens/ persons are under fire, to restore them to their position and uphold the Constitution and the rule of law — for which the Supreme Court has been established and constituted with due primacy and necessary powers, authority and jurisdiction, both express and implied. (Para 38). P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578: AIR 2002 SC 1856.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: S.P. Bharucha, C.J.[1] and S.S.M. Quadri[1], R.C. Lahoti[1], N. Santosh Hegde[1], Doraiswamy Raju[2], Ruma Pal[1] and Arijit Pasayat[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 16-4-2002]

Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93; Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899, relied on

Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93, affirmed

Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1998) 7 SCC 507: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1692; Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar, (1999) 7 SCC 604: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1324; 'Common Cause' A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 4 SCC 33: 1996 SCC (Cri) 589; 'Common Cause' A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 6 SCC 775: 1997 SCC (Cri) 42, overruled

[3147] — Ss. 309, 311 and 24, 25 — Right to speedy trial — Delay in conduct of trial — Power of court to close prosecution evidence on completion of 2 years in cases of offences punishable with imprisonment for period not exceeding 7 years and on completion of 3 years in cases of offences punishable with imprisonment for period exceeding 7 years — Directions regarding, issued by Supreme Court in Raj Deo Sharma (I) case, (1998) 7 SCC 507 for effective enforcement of right to speedy trial under Art. 21 — Clarification/modification of the said directions sought by CBI — Held, per Thomas, J. (Srinivasan, J. concurring) following periods can be excluded from the prescribed period of 2/3 years for completion of prosecution evidence: (1) period of pendency of appeal or revision, against interim orders, if any, preferred by the accused to protract the trial; (2) period of absence of Presiding Officer in the trial court, and (3) period of 3 months in case the office of Public Prosecutor falls vacant (for any reason other than expiry of tenure) for enabling the Govt. to appoint a successor in that office — Even if tenure of a Public Prosecutor expires, he will continue to function as such till his successor takes charge — Courts have discretion to grant further time to prosecution to adduce evidence both in cases where the offences are punishable with imprisonment for a period not exceeding 7 years as well as for a period exceeding 7 years — Power of courts under S. 311 CrPC can be invoked by prosecution even after closure of the trial in compliance with the said directions of the Supreme Court — Provisions of S. 309 CrPC to be strictly followed — Administrative action should be taken against the Judge violating the mandates of S. 309 CrPC — Prosecutions which were pending on the date of judgment of Raj Deo Sharma (I) case entitled to claim an additional period of one year for completing the prosecution evidence — Since operation of Raj Deo Sharma (I) decision was suspended from 14-5-1999 till the date of the present judgment, that time of suspension has to be excluded from the said additional period of one year — Per Shah, J. (contra), prescribing time-limits for completion of prosecution evidence would be contrary to Supreme

Court's decisions in A.R. Antulay, Kartar Singh and other decisions — It would not be just and fair to society and the victims to close the prosecution evidence after the said prescribed periods without considering the nature of offence and the others causes for delay such as dilatory procedure, large pendency of cases, insufficient strength of judges or non-availability of counsel — If allowed, law would lose its deterrence and would affect rule of law — It would affect smooth functioning of society in accordance with law and finally the Constitution — S. 309 CrPC should be strictly followed — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 32

In Raj Deo Sharma (I) v. State of Bihar, (1998) 7 SCC 507 a three-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court had on 8-10-1998 issued certain directions for effective enforcement of the right to speedy trial flowing from Article 21 of the Constitution (as recognised by a five-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court in Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225. Relevant among such directions, for the present purpose, are the following:

Direction (i). In cases where the trial is for an offence punishable with imprisonment for a period not exceeding seven years, whether the accused is in jail or not, the court shall close the prosecution evidence on completion of a period of two years from the date of recording the plea of the accused on the charges framed whether prosecution has examined all the witnesses or not, within the said period and the court can proceed to the next step provided by law for the trial of the case.

Direction (iii). If the offence under trial is punishable with imprisonment for a period exceeding 7 years, whether the accused is in jail or not, the court shall close prosecution evidence on completion of three years from the date of recording the plea of the accused on the charge framed, whether the prosecution has examined all the witnesses or not within the said period and the court can proceed to the next step provided by law for the trial of the case, unless for very exceptional reasons to be recorded and in the interest of justice the court considers it necessary to grant further time to the prosecution to adduce evidence beyond the aforesaid time-limit.

The following two exceptions are provided therein

"(iv) But if the inability for completing the prosecution evidence within the aforesaid period is attributable to the conduct of the accused in protracting the trial, no court is obliged to close the prosecution evidence within the aforesaid period in any of the cases covered by clauses (i) to (iii).

(v) Where the trial has been stayed by orders of the court or by operation of law, such time during which the stay was in force shall be excluded from the aforesaid period for closing the prosecution evidence. The above directions will be in addition to and without prejudice to the directions issued by the Supreme Court in 'Common Cause' A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 4 SCC 33 as modified by the same Bench through the order reported in 'Common Cause' A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 6 SCC 775."

The present petition was filed by the Central Bureau of Investigation for clarification (and also for some modification) of the above directions, by stating: (1) that the said directions are only prospective, and (2) that the time taken by the Court on account of its inability to carry on day-to-day trial due to pressure of work should be excluded. In the present petition the following prayers were made requesting the Supreme Court to:

(a) order holding in abeyance the operation of the judgment/order in Raj Deo Sharma (I), (1998) 7 SCC 507;

(b) clarify that the judgment/order in Raj Deo Sharma (I) would only have prospective effect;

(c) clarify that the time taken by the courts on account of their inability to carry on day-to-day trial on account of pressure of work will be excluded;

(d) clarify that the exceptions made in para 4 of the 1st Common Cause Judgment (1996) 4 SCC 33 and para III of 2nd Common Cause Judgment, (1996) 6 SCC 775 would still continue;

(e) issue directions to the State Governments and Registrars of the High Court to come up with specific plans for the setting up of Additional Courts/Special Courts (permanent/ad hoc) to cope up with the pending workload.

Held :

Per Thomas, J.

In Raj Deo Sharma (I) case (1998) 7 SCC 507 the Court had not fixed an outer time-limit for conclusion of all criminal proceedings in a case. Nor did it go counter to the decisions of the Constitution Benches of the Supreme Court in A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225 and Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab (1994) 3 SCC 569. In paras 12 to 14 of the judgment in Raj Deo Sharma (I) the Court had considered the ratio in the afore-cited decisions and by keeping track with the observations therein it made the endeavour to achieve to the possible extent the noble ideal of "speedy trial" which has been held repeatedly by the Supreme Court to be an incidence of Article 21 of the Constitution. The whole idea was to speed up the trial in criminal cases to prevent the prosecution from becoming a persecution of the person arrayed in a criminal trial. No trial can be allowed to prolong indefinitely due to the lethargy of the prosecuting agency or the State machinery and that is the raison d'^tre in prescribing the time-frame within which prosecution evidence must be closed. (Paras 3 and 4)

It may be stated by way of clarification that the discretion of the courts in granting further time [exercisable "for very exceptional reasons to be recorded and in the interest of justice" as per Direction (iii) above] can be imported in respect of Direction (i) as well. (Para 6)

There is no scope for the apprehension that a procrastinating accused might take advantage of the said excluding provision "by filing appeal or revision against interim orders and it would indirectly delay the trial without obtaining any stay orders from superior courts". The judgment in Raj Deo Sharma (I) case has clearly provided that if the inability for completing prosecution evidence was attributable to the conduct of the accused, the court is not obliged to close the prosecution evidence at all. If the trial gets postponed on account of pendency of any appeal or revision filed against any interim order even though there was no order of stay it is open to the trial court to reckon that period also within the ambit of clause (iv) extracted above. The power of the court as envisaged in Section 311 CrPC has not been curtailed by the Supreme Court. Neither in the decision of the five-Judge Bench in A.R. Antulay case nor in Kartar Singh case such power has been restricted for achieving speedy trial. In other words, even if the prosecution evidence is closed in compliance with the directions contained in the main judgment it is still open to the prosecution to invoke the powers of the court under Section 311 CrPC. If evidence of any witness appears to the court to be essential to the just decision of the case it is the duty of the court to summon and examine or recall and re-examine any such person. (Paras 8 and 9)

It is not possible to accept the view that due to systemic causes the prosecutor would be disabled from completing evidence in a trial and hence that time must also be permitted to be discounted. Without concretising which kinds of systemic causes would disable the prosecution from promptly adducing evidence, the prosecutor cannot be permitted to take advantage on any such vague premises. However, the absence of the presiding officer in a trial court (either on account of the physical disability or due to the delay in taking over the charge of the court) is a valid cause which disables the prosecution from adducing evidence. So such time can also be excluded by the court from the period which has been prescribed by the Court for completing the prosecution evidence. (Para 10)

The plea that the interregnum between the date when a public prosecutor demits office due to any eventuality and the date when his successor takes charge should also be excluded cannot be accepted. It is the lookout of the State to see that there is no unnecessary delay in appointing a Public Prosecutor to the existing vacancy. The State cannot take advantage of its own inaction. Nonetheless, to avoid any possible dislocation of the trial on account of any such eventuality, it is made clear that if the tenure of office of a particular person as Public Prosecutor expires he shall continue to hold office and function as Public Prosecutor until his successor takes charge from him. If the office of a Public Prosecutor falls vacant on account of any other reason, a period of 3 months shall be excluded from the periods fixed under Directions (i) and (iii) for enabling the State Government to appoint a Public Prosecutor to that office. (Para 11)

The trial court cannot be permitted to flout the mandate of Section 309(1) CrPC unless the court has very cogent and strong reasons. No court has permission to adjourn examination of witnesses who are in attendance beyond the next working day. The High Court is requested to remind the trial Judges through a circular of the need to comply with Section 309 CrPC in letter and spirit. The High Court concerned is also requested to take note of the conduct of any particular trial Judge who violates the above legislative mandate and to adopt such administrative action against the delinquent judicial officer as the law permits. (Para 14)

In the context of the plea regarding prospective operation of Raj Deo Sharma (I) decision, a rider has to be included that an additional period of one year can be claimed by the prosecution in respect of prosecutions which were pending on the date of judgment in the main appeal, and the court concerned would be free to grant such extension if the court considers it necessary in the interest of administration of criminal justice. As the operation of that judgment has been suspended from 14-5-1999 till the date of the present judgment i.e. 22-9-1999, the said time of suspension will stand excluded from the aforementioned additional period of one year. (Para 15)

Per Srinivasan, J. (concurring)

The present petition is filed only for directions/modifications/clarification of the directions of the Supreme Court dated 8-10-1998 in Raj Deo Sharma (I) v. State of Bihar (1998) 7 SCC 507. This is not a petition for review of the judgment in the main appeal. There is no occasion for this Bench to consider whether the directions contained in the judgment in the main appeal are against law in the sense that they run counter to the earlier judgments of the Supreme Court rendered by Constitution Benches. It is not open to this Bench to canvass the legality or correctness of the directions contained in the main judgment. The only prayer by the petitioner is to clarify the main judgment, in order that the subordinate courts understand the directions contained therein in the proper perspective and carry out the same in letter and spirit. (Para 18)

The Constitution Bench had in Antulay case, (1992) 1 SCC 225 itself contemplated an order to conclude the trial within a fixed time in appropriate cases. In fact, in the judgment in the main appeal in the present case, the Supreme Court has not fixed any time-limit for the conclusion of trial. As such, the Supreme Court has only laid down guidelines for closing the prosecution in certain circumstances. There is a difference between fixing a time-limit for the disposal of a trial and fixing time-limit for the prosecution to complete its evidence. A perusal of the guidelines contained in the main judgment would itself show that there is no hard and fast rule applicable to every case, irrespective of facts and circumstances thereof. If the delay is not due to any fault of the prosecution, it is open to the prosecution to place the relevant facts before the court and seek further time for producing its evidence. The judgment in the appeal cannot be understood as punishing the prosecution and preventing the same from adducing evidence even when it is not responsible for the delay. (Para 20)

Per Shah, J. (dissenting)

It is true that the ideal situation may be where criminal cases are tried within six months from the date of institution, and appeals are disposed of within a period of one year from the date of filing. For achieving this ideal situation, if there is a lack of infrastructure and procedural delays for various reasons, then it would not be justifiable to acquit the accused after lapse of a particular time if the prosecution has failed to examine all witnesses. And to dismiss the appeal, if the appellate authority fails to decide the same within a particular time, would not be just and fair for the society and the victims affected by the crimes. (Para 29)

The said directions issued in the case virtually prescribe a time-limit to close the prosecution evidence in cases where the offence is punishable with imprisonment for a period not exceeding seven years or for a period exceeding seven years. In view of these directions the accused may get acquittal on the ground of delay without considering the fact that in a number of cases delay might be because of a large number of cases pending before the court and insufficient strength of Judges to cope up with the workload. Delay only due to congestion of the court calendar, unavailability of Judges and on occasions non-availability of counsel for either party or any other circumstances beyond the control of the prosecution cannot be a ground for closure of prosecution evidence. (Para 30)

Because of the directions in the said judgment after a lapse of a particular time, undertrial prisoners are not kept in jail, still the question remains of their trial. If their trial is delayed for various reasons, it would not be just, fair and reasonable to direct the trial courts to stop further proceedings in the case and dispose of the same without recording further evidence. In some of the cases, allegations against the accused would be of serious nature, such as, corruption which has affected the entire moral fibre of the society, large-scale frauds and misappropriations by persons in power or authority and offences against the human body including rape. In all such cases, the accused including the dreaded accused would get undeserving benefit by prescribing the time-limit as directed in para 17 in Raj Deo Sharma case (I). This may result in doing injustice to the society, to the victims or the heirs of the victim who is murdered — for such delay in trial they are not responsible. All the beneficiaries of the large-scale frauds, all the employees who have misappropriated large sum of money from the public exchequer or private employer or accused who are tried for corruption cases would get undeserving benefit at the system of implementation of law. (Para 32)

Before appropriate steps are taken for remedying the known causes of delay — without considering the pendency of the matters in all courts and without finding whether the prosecution agency was at fault for delay or delay was caused for any other reasons, it would not be just or fair, equitable or reasonable to prescribe time-limit and give the benefit to the accused persons, against whom serious charges are levelled, solely on the ground of delay in trial. If this is continued and permitted, it would affect the smooth functioning of the society in accordance with law and finally the Constitution. If the victims are left without any remedy, they would resort to taking revenge by unlawful means resulting in further increase in the crimes and criminals. People at large in the society would also feel unsafe and insecure and their confidence in the judicial system would be shaken. Law would lose its deterrent effect on criminals. (Para 40)

Figures of pending criminal cases are easily available. Disposal criterion is known. Applying the said disposal criterion, it would be apparent that the workload of various courts is so heavy in a number of courts that with the present strength of Judges who are required to deal with criminal cases, it would be almost impossible for them to dispose of the cases within the prescribed time. It is true that in such a situation without any further delay or without having the exercise of appointing a committee or committees for finding out how many Judges are required, on ad hoc basis, the strength of Judges who can deal with the criminal cases is required to be increased. Further, until there is a radical simplification and streamlining of the Criminal Procedure Code as well as the method of investigation of crimes, it would not be just and reasonable to close the prosecution evidence solely on the ground of delay in trial. (Para 41)

Delayed trial may not always be unfair to the accused. On occasions, the accused take advantage of such delays and it would depend upon the facts and circumstances in each case. The larger Bench of the Supreme Court has specifically held in Antulay case "it is neither advisable nor feasible to draw or to prescribe any outer limit for conclusion of all criminal proceedings". In cases where delay for trial rests not on the prosecution agency then it would not be fair to close the prosecution evidence after the prescribed period. In any case, before directing to close the prosecution evidence, the nature of offence is required to be taken into consideration. (Para 45)

Further, if the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, particularly, Section 309 are strictly adhered to, delay in trial could be reduced to some extent. That may be done by the Judge concerned with active cooperation of the prosecuting agency. At present, the said provision is observed in the breach. Once the criminal trial begins, the trial court should see that witnesses are examined continuously in the said case and it should continue from day to day until the witnesses in attendance are examined. In any case, for adjourning the matter, reasons should be recorded. If the practice of allotting certain sessions cases to a particular Judge for trial and disposal is adopted, it would fasten responsibility with the said Judge to dispose of them within the stipulated time. It is also true that under Section 311 CrPC, the court has ample power to examine witnesses who appear to the court to be essential for the just decision of the case, but this may further delay proceedings as the accused is bound to oppose such exercise of power. (Para 46)

Therefore, prescribing time-limit would be against the decisions rendered by the Constitution Bench of this Court in A.R. Antulay and Kartar Singh cases as well as other decisions stated above. It would be prescribing time-limit which is not provided by the Criminal Procedure Code or by any other statutory provision. And finally, it would have an adverse effect in implementation of criminal law. (Para 47)

In the result, prayer (a) of holding in abeyance the operation/order dated 8-10-1998 in Criminal Appeal No. 1045 of 1998 [Raj Deo Sharma (I) case] requires to be granted. Secondly, prayer (e) also requires to be granted. The Registrars of the High Courts should come up with specific plans for setting up Additional Courts/Special Courts (permanent/ad hoc) to cope up with the pending workload on the basis of available figures of pending cases as well as by taking into consideration the criteria for disposal of criminal cases prescribed by various High Courts. (Para 48). Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar, (1999) 7 SCC 604: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1324: AIR 1999 SC 3524.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[1], M. Srinivasan[2] and M.B. Shah[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1999]

Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93; Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899, explained and relied on

Directions in Raj Deo Sharma (I) v. State of Bihar, (1998) 7 SCC 507: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1692, clarified/modified

Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1998) 7 SCC 507: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1692, explained

Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93, relied on

Partly overruled in P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578*

See also State v. Narayan Waman Nerukar (Dr.), (2002) 7 SCC 6

Clarified in Supdt. of Police, Karnataka Lokayukta v. B. Srinivas, (2008) 8 SCC 580*

[3148] — S. 309 — Communal riots — Stay of trial — When warranted — Investigation by SIT — Trial of post-Godhra riot cases — Stay of trial while investigation by SIT going on — Desirability of — Held, continuance of trial simultaneously along with investigation is not desirable, for, if fresh evidence/materials surface, it would require de novo trial — Hence, trial stayed (Para 11). National Human Rights Commission v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 6 SCC 342.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-3-2008]

[3149] — S. 309 — Expeditious trial of cases — Necessity of — Communal riots in the State of Gujarat — Post-Godhra riot cases — Held, in riot cases and cases involving communal factors, trial should be held expeditiously — Chief Justice of Gujarat High Court requested to designate court(s) in each district and if necessary more than one court — Designated Courts directed to take up cases on a day-to-day basis — SIT to furnish periodic reports to the Designated Courts if there was any further inquiry/investigation — State of Gujarat directed to file status report as to the constitution of the courts within three months

It is essential that in riot cases and cases involving communal factors the trials should be held expeditiously. Therefore, the Hon'ble the Chief Justice of Gujarat High Court is requested to designate court(s) in each district where the trial of the cases concerned are to be held. The Designated Courts shall take up the cases in question. Taking into account the number of witnesses and the accused persons and the volumes of evidence, it is open to the High Court to designate more than one court in a particular district. Needless to say that these cases shall be taken up by the Designated Court on a day-to-day basis and efforts shall be made to complete the trial with utmost expedition. SIT shall furnish periodic reports if there is any further inquiry/investigation. The State of Gujarat shall also file a status report regarding the constitution of the courts in terms of the directions to be given by the Hon'ble Chief Justice of the High Court within three months. [Paras 37, 38 and 40(ii) to (iv)]. NHRC v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 6 SCC 767.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-2009]

[3150] — Ss. 309 and 314(3) — Adjournment sought by a counsel on the ground that he is not in a position to proceed with the matter inasmuch as he has been engaged recently in the case — Held, not permissible because if a counsel accepts the engagement knowing fully well that the matter is already on board, then he must be prepared to proceed with the matter — CPC, 1908, S. 148 and Or. 17 R. 1. Skipper Tower (P) Ltd. v. Skipper Bhawan Flat Buyers' Assn., (2002) 10 SCC 116: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1696.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-7-2001]

[3151] — Ss. 309 and 482 — Accused has right to speedy trial under S. 309 — In case of inordinate delay in conclusion of proceedings, court has discretion under S. 482 to quash proceedings having regard to attendant circumstances and relevant factors — Factors indicated. Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93: AIR 1992 SC 1701: 1992 Cri LJ 2717.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: K.N. Singh, C.J. and P.B. Sawant, N.M. Kasliwal, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-12-1991]

Distinguished in Bharat Parikh v. CBI, (2008) 10 SCC 109: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 609

[3152] — S. 309(1) — Speedy trial — Having regard to the directions issued in the case of Raj Deo Sharma regarding speedy trials and considering the subsequent modifications made in some of the said directions, Supreme Court setting aside the impugned order directing the trial court to proceed with trial — Constitution of India — Art. 21. State of A.P. v. Hanumanthu Santha Rao, (2000) 10 SCC 603: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1513.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-11-1999]

Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar, (1999) 7 SCC 604: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1324, relied on

— S. 309(2) See Ss. 167, 309(2) and 173(8)

See also Ss. 167(2), 309(2) and 173

See also Ss. 167(2), proviso (a), 309(2), 437(5), 439(2), 441, 442(1) and 444

See also Ss. 235(2) and 309(2)

— S. 309(2) third proviso (as introduced by Act 45 of 1978) See also Ss. 235(2) and 309(2) third proviso (as introduced by Act 45 of 1978)

[3153] — Ss. 309(2) third proviso and 235(2) — Conviction and sentence should normally be recorded on the same day — When upon conviction under S. 302, sentence of life imprisonment is proposed to be imposed, court need not proceed to hear the accused on the question of sentence — But when death sentence is proposed, third proviso to S. 309(2) would not preclude the court from granting adjournment to enable the accused to show cause against the proposed sentence — Sessions Courts or Special Courts must direct the accused persons tried and convicted by such courts to be immediately taken into custody, if on bail, and kept in jail till question of sentence is decided

Per Sethi, J. (Phukan, J. concurring)

The submission that as the sentence and conviction were recorded on the same day, the judgment of the trial court was against the law cannot be accepted. (Para 23)

The third proviso to Section 309(2) CrPC mandates that no adjournment can be granted for the purpose only of enabling the accused person to show cause against the sentence proposed to be imposed upon him. In a case punishable with death or imprisonment for life, there is no difficulty for the court where the sentence proposed to be imposed is an alternative sentence of life imprisonment but if it proposes to award the death sentence, it has discretion to adjourn the case in the interests of justice. Despite the bar of third proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 309, the court, in appropriate cases, can grant adjournment for enabling the accused persons to show cause against the sentence proposed to be imposed on them particularly if such proposed sentence is a sentence of death. In all cases where a conviction is recorded in cases triable by the Court of Session or by Special Courts, the court is enjoined upon to direct the accused convict to be immediately taken into custody, if he is on bail, and kept in jail till such time the question of sentence is decided. After the sentence is awarded, the convict is to undergo such sentence unless the operation of the sentence awarded is stayed or suspended by a competent court of jurisdiction. Such a course is necessitated under the present circumstances prevalent in the country and is in consonance with the spirit of law. A person granted bail has no right to insist to remain at liberty on the basis of the orders passed in his favour prior to his conviction. (Para 28)

Per Thomas, J. (concurring)

The trial Judge chose to pronounce the sentence on the same day of pronouncing the verdict of conviction. But the sentence cannot be altered on the reasoning that the trial court did not adjourn the proceedings, after pronouncing the conviction, for the purpose of providing the convicted person time to reflect on the question of sentence. The third proviso to Section 309(2) CrPC does not make a distinction between offences punishable with death or imprisonment for life and the other offences, in relation to the application of the said proviso. The proviso thus reflects the parliamentary concern that the rule in all cases must be that sentence shall be passed on the same day of pronouncement of judgment in criminal cases as far as possible, and perhaps by way of exception the said rule can be relaxed by adjourning the case to another day for passing orders on the sentence. (Para 31)

The legal position regarding the necessity to afford opportunity for hearing to the accused on the question of sentence may be reiterated as follows:

(1) When the conviction is under Section 302 IPC (with or without the aid of Section 34 or 149 or 120-B IPC) if the Sessions Judge does not propose to impose death penalty on the convicted person it is unnecessary to proceed to hear the accused on the question of sentence. Section 235(2) of the Code will not be violated if the sentence of life imprisonment is awarded for that offence without hearing the accused on the question of sentence. Two alternative sentences alone are permitted for imposition as for the offence under Section 302 IPC — imprisonment for life or death. Thus no court is permitted to award a sentence less than imprisonment for life as for the offence of murder. The normal punishment for the offence is life imprisonment and death penalty is now permitted to be awarded only "in the rarest of the rare cases when the lesser alternative is unquestionably foreclosed". When the Sessions Judge does not propose to award death penalty to a person convicted of the offence under Section 302 IPC what is the benefit to be secured by hearing the accused on the question of sentence? However much it is argued the Sessions Judge cannot award a sentence less than imprisonment for life for the said offence. If a Sessions Judge who convicts the accused under Section 302 IPC (with or without the aid of other sections) does not propose to award death penalty, the Court need not waste time on hearing the accused on the question of sentence. The requirement contained in Section 235(2) of the Code (the obligation of the Judge to hear the accused on the question of sentence) is intended to achieve a purpose. The said legislative provision is meant for affording benefit to the convicted person in the matter of sentence. (Para 33)

(2) In all other cases the accused must be given sufficient opportunity of hearing on the question of sentence.

(3) The normal rule is that after pronouncing the verdict of guilty the hearing should be made on the same day and the sentence shall also be pronounced on the same day.

(4) In cases where the Judge feels or if the accused demands more time for hearing on the question of sentence (especially when the Judge proposes to impose death penalty) the proviso to Section 309(2) is not a bar for affording such time.

(5) If for any reason the court is inclined to adjourn the case after pronouncing the verdict of guilty in grave offences the convicted person shall be committed to jail till the verdict on the sentence is pronounced. Further detention will depend upon the process of law. (Para 33). Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714: 2001 SCC (Cri) 915: AIR 2001 SC 2231: 2001 Cri LJ 2902.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[2], R.P. Sethi[1] and S.N. Phukan[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2001]

Muniappan v. State of T.N., (1981) 3 SCC 11: 1981 SCC (Cri) 617; Malkiat Singh v. State of Punjab, (1991) 4 SCC 341:

1991 SCC (Cri) 976; State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, relied on

[3154] — Ss. 309(2) third proviso and 235(2) — Effect of the third proviso to S. 309(2) — Held, the proviso does not prohibit grant of adjournment for the purpose of affording opportunity of hearing to the parties before pronouncing sentence in compliance with mandatory provisions of S. 235(2)

The third proviso to S. 309(2) must be read in the context of the general policy of expeditious inquiry and trial manifested by the main part of the section. That section emphasises that an inquiry or trial once it has begun should proceed from day to day till the evidence of all the witnesses in attendance has been recorded so that they may not be unnecessarily vexed. The underlying object is to discourage frequent adjournments. But that does not mean that the proviso precludes the court from adjourning the matter even where the interest of justice so demands. The proviso may not entitle an accused to an adjournment but it does not prohibit or preclude the court from granting one in such serious cases of life and death to satisfy the requirement of justice as enshrined in S. 235(2) of the Code. Expeditious disposal of a criminal case is indeed the requirement of Art. 21 of the Constitution; so also a fair opportunity to place all relevant material before the Court is equally the requirement of the said Article. Therefore, if the court feels that the interest of justice demands that the matter should be adjourned to enable both sides to place the relevant material touching on the question of sentence before the court, the above extracted proviso cannot preclude the court from doing so. State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705: AIR 1992 SC 2100.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-1992]

— S. 310 See also S. 539-B, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1297 in Vol. 2

[3155] — S. 310 — Local inspection — Purpose of — Memorandum of spot inspection recorded by trial court — To be appreciated in conjunction with the evidence already recorded — Any omission and/or commission would not constitute material irregularity

The local inspection envisaged under Section 310 CrPC is for the purpose of properly appreciating the evidence already recorded during the trial. Memorandum of spot inspection recorded by the trial Judge has to be appreciated in conjunction with the evidence already recorded. Any omission and/or commission in the memorandum recorded by the trial Judge by itself would not constitute material irregularity, which would vitiate the prosecution case. (Para 5). State of H.P. v. Mast Ram, (2004) 8 SCC 660.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2004]

[3156] — S. 310 — Local inspection by court is no substitute for evidence of proof — Full reliance on will exceed jurisdiction

Normally a court is not entitled to make a local inspection and even if such an inspection is made, it can never take the place of evidence or proof but is really meant for appreciating the position at the spot. In the present case the Sessions Judge by making a local inspection converted himself into a witness in order to draw full support to the defence case by what he may have seen. By doing so the Sessions Judge exceeded his jurisdiction. Keisam Kumar Singh v. State of Manipur, (1985) 3 SCC 676: 1985 SCC (Cri) 446: AIR 1985 SC 1664.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-7-1985]

Pritam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 415: 1956 Cri LJ 805, relied on

See also in this regard (1976) 3 SCC 672: 1976 SCC (Cri) 502

[3157] — S. 310 — Spot inspection by trial Judge — Recording of memo of inspection — Provision in respect thereof — Held, mandatory — Recourse to spot inspection, held, clearly indicates deficiency of evidence with regard to place of occurrence — Hence, in such situation, it is incumbent on the part of the trial Judge to record the memo of inspection

The learned trial Judge made a spot inspection on 11-3-1991. However, the trial Judge did not choose to record the memo of inspection. The judgment was delivered on 16-3-1991. What had prompted the learned trial Judge to have recourse to spot inspection was not spelled out because no memorandum of inspection was prepared. But it is clearly suggestive of deficiency of evidence with regard to place of occurrence. In such a situation, it was incumbent on the part of the learned trial Judge, to have recorded the memo of inspection for proper appreciation of the inspection. Undoubtedly, the mandatory provision has not been followed by the trial court. (Para 9). State of M.P. v. Mishrilal, (2003) 9 SCC 426: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1829: AIR 2003 SC 4089: 2003 Cri LJ 2312.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-2003]

— S. 311 See also S. 540, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1297 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 311 See Ss. 157, 161, 164, 311 and 391
See also Ss. 164(1) & (5), 154 to 160, 165 to 173(5) & (8) and 311
See also Ss. 207 and 311
See also Ss. 226, 242 and 311
See also Ss. 231, 311 and 313
See also Ss. 233(3) and 311
See also Ss. 309, 311 and 24, 25
See also Ss. 309, 311, 258 and 482
See also Ss. 344, 311 and 391
See also Ss. 362 and 311
See also Ss. 386, 311 and 391
See also Ss. 391 and 311
See also Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247
See also Ss. 397, 401, 91, 311 and 200
See also Ss. 397(2), 401, 91 and 311
See also Ss. 401 and 311
See also Ss. 406 and 311
See also Ss. 482, 309, 311 and 258
See also Ss. 482 and 311
See also Ss. 482, 311, 391, 173(8), 216 and 24

[3158] — S. 311 — Power of court to summon, examine, recall and re-examine any witness or person present — Nature, scope and applicability of — Provision in two parts, first part being discretionary and the second one being obligatory — Power is in the widest terms exercisable at any stage so long as court is in seisin of the proceeding — But accused entitled to fair and reasonable opportunity to rebut the evidence brought on record against him pursuant to exercise of such power — Power not unguided but has to be exercised fairly, bona fide, non-arbitrarily, with circumspection and in the exigency of the situation when it appears, in the facts and circumstances, to be essential for a just decision of the case — On facts High Court's order recalling a witness for examination and issuing summons to two more witnesses for examination caused no prejudice to the accused and hence the order valid — CrPC, 1898, S. 540

Pursuant to a search conducted by the Superintendent of Customs on the strength of warrant issued by the Assistant Collector of Customs, some gold lagadis bearing foreign marks, primary gold, gold ornaments, silver bricks, coins and cash money were seized from the premises of the appellant. Two complaints against the appellant were filed in the Court of Judicial Magistrate for offences under the Customs Act and the Gold Control Act. After examination of the prosecution as well as the defence witnesses and recording of statements of the appellant under S. 342 of CrPC, 1898 arguments were advanced on behalf of the accused-appellant. The prosecution at this stage before commencing its arguments filed two applications in both the cases under S. 540 CrPC, 1898 (corresponding to S. 311 of CrPC, 1973) requesting the trial court to recall the seizing officer for further examination and to issue summons to two more witnesses, namely, the Assistant Collector of Customs and the Deputy Chief Officer (Assayer) of Mint Master, Bombay for examination either as prosecution witnesses or as court witnesses on the ground that fresh evidence was necessary for a just decision of the case. The trial court and the first revision court rejected the request of the prosecution on three grounds, namely, first that the prosecution has attempted to fabricate evidence at a belated stage to fill up the lacuna in the prosecution case and secondly that the request of the prosecution for taking additional evidence was after the closure of the defence and thirdly a substantial prejudice would be caused to the appellant if the prosecution was allowed to adduce fresh evidence. Two criminal revision applications were thereupon preferred by the respondents. The High Court by its common judgment allowed the applications. Dismissing the appeals of the accused,

Held :

Having regard to the depositions of the witnesses already examined that are found on the file, it is clear that the accused-appellant was not prejudiced in any way by examination of the three witnesses. In view of the facts of the case the appellant's grievance that he has been taken by surprise on the request of the prosecution for taking fresh evidence; that the evidence sought to be obtained is only for filling up the lacuna and the judgment impugned is prejudicial to him cannot be countenanced. Of the three witnesses permitted to be summoned and examined on the side of the Union of India, the Mint Master is only an assayer. The facts and circumstances of the case require the examination of these three witnesses for a just decision of the case as held by the High Court. (Para 31)

A court must discharge its statutory functions — whether discretionary or obligatory — according to law in dispensing justice because it is the duty of a court not only to do justice but also to ensure that justice is being done. In order to enable the court to find out the truth and render a just decision, the salutary provisions of S. 540 of the old Code (S. 311 of the new Code) are enacted. Section 540 and S. 165 of the Evidence Act may be said to be complementary to each other and "these two sections between them confer jurisdiction on the judge to act in aid of justice". (Paras 10 and 15)

Section 540 is manifestly in two parts. Whereas the word used in the first part is 'may' the word used in the second part is 'shall'. In consequence, the first part which is permissive gives purely discretionary authority to the Criminal Court and enables it 'at any stage of enquiry, trial or other proceedings' under the Code to act in one of the three ways, mentioned therein. However, the very width requires a corresponding caution that the discretionary power should be invoked as the exigencies of justice require and exercised judicially with circumspection and consistently with the provisions of the Code. The second part, on the other hand, is mandatory and imposes an obligation on the court of summoning or recalling and re-examining any witness and the only condition prescribed is that the evidence sought to be obtained must be essential to the just decision of the case. (Paras 7, 9 and 16)

Section 540 allows the criminal court to invoke its inherent power at any stage without qualifying any limitation or prohibition. It can summon any person as a witness or recall and re-examine any such person as long as the court retains seisin of the criminal proceedings, even if evidence on both sides is closed. An enquiry or trial in a criminal proceedings comes to an end or reaches its finality when the order or judgment is pronounced and until then the court has power to use this section. (Para 21)

However, whenever any additional evidence is examined or fresh evidence is admitted against the accused, it is absolutely necessary in the interest of justice that the accused should be afforded a fair and reasonable opportunity to rebut that evidence brought on record against him. (Para 30)

The aid of the section should be invoked only with the object of discovering relevant facts or obtaining proper proof of such facts for a just decision of the case and it must be used judicially and not capriciously or arbitrarily because any improper or capricious exercise of the power may lead to undesirable results. Further it is incumbent that due care should be taken by the court while exercising the power under this section and it should not be used for filling up the lacuna left by the prosecution or by the defence or to the disadvantage of the accused or to cause serious prejudice to the defence of the accused or to give an unfair advantage to the rival side and further the additional evidence should not be received as a disguise for a retrial or to change the nature of the case against either of the parties. The jurisdiction of the court must be dictated by exigency of the situation, and fair play and good sense appear to be the only safe guides and the requirements of justice command the examination of any person which would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. (Paras 18 and 27). Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271: 1991 SCC (Cri) 595: AIR 1991 SC 1346: (1991) 2 GLH 11.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-1991]

Mir Mohd. Omar v. State of W.B., (1989) 4 SCC 436: 1989 SCC (Cri) 750, distinguished

Channu Lal v. Rex, AIR 1949 All 692: 51 Cri LJ 199: 1950 AWR 147; Rengaswami Naicker v. Muruga Naicker, AIR 1954 Mad 169: 1954 Cri LJ 123: (1952) 2 MLJ 497; Shugan Chand v. Emperor, AIR 1925 Lah 531: 26 Cri LJ 1035: 26 PLR 312; Queen v. Assanoollah, 13 SWR (Cri) 15, approved

[3159] — S. 311 — Power to summon material witness, or examine person present — Power when to be exercised — Appellant alleging that SHO, PW 1 and other constables had evil eye on his wife, DW 1, and when she resisted their advances she was slapped 2-3 times, and thereafter he was arrested — Fact that DW 1 was sitting near the gate of SP whole night and had given him application in morning, and a telegram was also sent, neither denied nor disputed — Held, in such circumstances, Special Judge in exercise of his jurisdiction under S. 311 should have called SP and recorded his statement; he could have also called for original telegram from SP's office or even from post office (Para 15). Sarju v. State of U.P., (2009) 13 SCC 698: 2009 Cri LJ 4123: (2009) 81 AIC 90 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-8-2009]

[3160] — S. 311 — Scope of power of Magistrate under — Additional evidence — FIR lodged by appellant against respondent alleging offences under Ss. 498-A, 506, 406 and 494 IPC — Though charges framed under Ss. 498-A and 406 IPC but no charge framed under S. 494 IPC — Application filed by appellant seeking permission to lead additional evidence regarding the alleged second marriage of respondent-accused and a child having been born from the second marriage — Held, Magistrate should have allowed the appellant to lead the additional evidence under S. 311

Under Section 311 CrPC the Magistrate has wide powers regarding examination of material witness during the course of trial at any stage. The only criteria for exercise of this power is that it should appear to the court that the evidence is essential to the just decision of the case. The provision is intended to be wide in view of the repeated use of the word "any" throughout its length. Interest of justice demands that in the facts of the case, the Magistrate should have allowed the additional evidence to be led under Section 311 of the Code as prayed by the appellant. On the basis of the evidence so recorded, the Magistrate might have proceeded to frame a charge under Section 494 IPC against the accused if the material on record justified it. (Para 4). Prithvi Singh v. Randhir Singh, (2008) 17 SCC 654.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2003]

Jamatraj Kewalji Govani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 178: 1968 Cri LJ 231, relied on [3161] — S. 311 — Nature, scope and object of, restated — Rejection by trial court of appellant's application under S. 311, seeking re-examination of witnesses already examined — Non-interference by High Court — Propriety — Held, in the facts and circumstances herein, trial court ought to have permitted the prayer of appellant — Rejection of the prayer by trial court and non-interference by High Court, not proper (Paras 6, 2 and 7). Godrej Pacific Tech. Ltd. v. Computer Joint India Ltd., (2008) 11 SCC 108: (2008) 228 ELT 507.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-2008]

Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8, relied on

[3162] — S. 311 — Nature, scope and object of S. 311 — Extensively discussed — Two parts to S. 311: (i) giving a discretion to the court to examine the witness at any stage, and (ii) the mandatory portion which compels the court to examine a witness if his evidence appears to be "essential to the just decision of the case", analysed and dismissed — When power under either part to be exercised, discussed in detail — Need for court to ensure that best evidence is brought on record — Right of cross-examination of witnesses called under S. 311 — Nature and scope — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 165, 137 and 154

It is a cardinal rule in the law of evidence that the best available evidence should be brought before the court. Sections 60, 64 and 91 of the Evidence Act, 1872 are based on this rule. (Para 28)

Section 311 CrPC, 1973 is manifestly in two parts. Whereas the word used in the first part is "may", the second part uses "shall". In consequence, the first part gives purely discretionary authority to a criminal court and enables it at any stage of an enquiry, trial or proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure (a) to summon anyone as a witness, or (b) to examine any person present in the court, or (c) to recall and re-examine any person whose evidence has already been recorded. On the other hand, the second part is mandatory and compels the court to take any of the aforementioned steps if the new evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case. This is a supplementary provision enabling, and in certain circumstances imposing on the court the duty of examining a material witness who would not be otherwise brought before it. It is couched in the widest possible terms and calls for no limitation, either with regard to the stage at which the powers of the court should be exercised, or with regard to the manner in which it should be exercised. It is not only the prerogative but also the plain duty of a court to examine such of those witnesses as it considers absolutely necessary for doing justice between the State and the subject. There is a duty cast upon the court to arrive at the truth by all lawful means and one of such means is the examination of witnesses of its own accord when for certain obvious reasons either party is not prepared to call witnesses who are known to be in a position to speak important relevant facts. (Para 26)

The court is not empowered under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure to compel either the prosecution or the defence to examine any particular witness or witnesses on their side. This must be left to the parties. But in weighing the evidence, the court can take note of the fact that the best available evidence has not been given, and can draw an adverse inference. The court will often have to depend on intercepted allegations made by the parties, or on inconclusive inference from facts elicited in the evidence. In such cases, the court has to act under the second part of Section 311 CrPC. Sometimes the examination of witnesses as directed by the court may result in what is thought to be "filling of loopholes". That is purely a subsidiary factor and cannot be taken into account. Whether the new evidence is essential or not must of course depend on the facts of each case, and has to be determined by the Presiding Judge. (Para 28)

If a witness called by the court gives evidence against the complainant he should be allowed an opportunity to cross-examine. The right to cross-examine a witness who is called by a court arises not under the provisions of Section 311 CrPC, but under the Evidence Act, 1872 which gives a party the right to cross-examine a witness who is not his own witness. Since a witness summoned by the court could not be termed a witness of any particular party, the court should give the right of cross-examination to the complainant. (Para 29)

The object underlying Section 311 CrPC is that there may not be failure of justice on account of mistake of either party in bringing the valuable evidence on record or leaving ambiguity in the statements of the witnesses examined from either side. The object of Section 311 CrPC is to bring on record evidence not only from the point of view of the accused and the prosecution but also from the point of view of orderly society. The determinative factor is whether it is essential to the just decision of the case. The section is not limited only for the benefit of the accused, and it will not be an improper exercise of the powers of the court to summon a witness under the section merely because the evidence supports the case of the prosecution and not that of the accused. The section is a general section which applies to all proceedings, enquiries and trials under the Code of Criminal Procedure and empowers the Magistrate to issue summons to any witness at any stage of such proceedings, trial or enquiry. In Section 311 CrPC the significant expression that occurs is "at any stage of any inquiry or trial or other proceeding under this Code". It is, however, to be borne in mind that whereas the section confers a very wide power on the court on summoning witnesses, the discretion conferred is to be exercised judiciously, as the wider the power the greater is the necessity for application of judicial mind. (Paras 27 and 29). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 2006 SC 1367: (2006) 2 KLT 350: 2006 Cri LJ 1694: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (1) v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999; Jamatraj Kewalji Govani v. State of Maharashtra, (1967) 3 SCR 415: AIR 1968 SC 178: 1968 Cri LJ 231, relied on

Followed in Iddar v. Aabida, (2007) 11 SCC 211: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 22*

[Ed.: See also Shortnotes L and M in Zahira (1) case, (2004) 4 SCC 158.]

[3163] — S. 311 — Nature, scope and object of S. 311 r/w S. 165, Evidence Act, 1872 — Complementary nature of powers under — Two parts to S. 311: (i) giving a discretion to the court to examine the witness at any stage, and (ii) the mandatory portion which compels the court to examine a witness if his evidence appears to be "essential to the just decision of the court" — When power under to be exercised, discussed in detail — Court to separate "grain from chaff" — Explained that "essential" is to be construed as it would be by an active and alert mind and not one which is bent to abandon and abdicate — Held, S. 311 does not confer on any party any right to examine, cross-examine and re-examine any witness — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 165

The power of the court under Section 165 of the Evidence Act is in a way complementary to its power under Section 311 CrPC. These sections confer vast and wide powers on presiding officers of courts to elicit all necessary materials by playing an active role in the evidence-collecting process. The object of the section is to enable the court to arrive at the truth, irrespective of the fact that the prosecution or the defence has failed to produce some evidence which is necessary for a just and proper disposal of the case and to uphold the truth. (Paras 43 and 44)

Section 311 CrPC consists of two parts i.e.: (i) giving a discretion to the court to examine the witness at any stage, and (ii) the mandatory portion which compels the court to examine a witness if his evidence appears to be essential to the just decision of the court. Though the discretion given to the court is very wide, the very width requires a corresponding caution: that the discretionary powers should be invoked as the exigencies of justice require, and exercised judicially with circumspection and consistently with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. Section 311 does not confer on any party any right to examine, cross-examine and re-examine any witness. This is a power given to the court not to be merely exercised at the bidding of any one party/person but the powers conferred and discretion vested are to prevent any irretrievable or immeasurable damage to the cause of society, public interest and miscarriage of justice. It is not that the power is to be exercised in a routine manner, but being an exception to the ordinary rule of disposal of appeal on the basis of records received, in exceptional cases or extraordinary situations the court can neither feel powerless nor abdicate its duty to arrive at the truth and satisfy the ends of justice. The court can certainly be guided by the metaphor — separate the grain from the chaff — and in a case which has telltale imprints of reasonableness and genuineness in the prayer, the same has to be accepted, at least to consider the worth, credibility and the acceptability of the same on merits of the material sought to be brought in. The second part of the section does not allow any discretion but obligates and binds the court to take necessary steps if the fresh evidence to be obtained is essential to the just decision of the case — "essential" to an active and alert mind and not to one which is bent to abandon or abdicate. (Paras 44, 45 and 46)

The power under Section 311 CrPC is exercised and the evidence is examined neither to help the prosecution nor the defence. However, if the prosecutor is remiss in some ways, the court can control the proceedings effectively so that the ultimate objective i.e. truth is arrived at. This becomes more necessary where the court has reasons to believe that the prosecuting agency or the prosecutor is not acting in the requisite manner. The court cannot afford to be wishful or pretend to be blissfully ignorant or oblivious to such serious pitfalls or dereliction of duty on the part of the prosecuting agency. The prosecutor who does not act fairly and acts more like a counsel for the defence is a liability to the fair judicial system, and courts should not also play into the hands of such prosecuting agency showing indifference or adopting an attitude of total aloofness. (Paras 43, 46 and 55). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271: 1991 SCC (Cri) 595, relied on

[3164] — S. 311 — Importance of, in administration of criminal justice — Incapacitation of witnesses — Protection of witnesses — Necessity — State's definite role in ensuring — Vast powers conferred on courts to play an active role in evidence collecting process — Held, Judges cannot act like mere tape recorders to record whatever has been stated by the witnesses — On facts, Judge presiding over trial failed to take participatory role in trial not exercising powers under S. 165 of Evidence Act — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 165

The necessity of fair trial hardly needs emphasis. The State has a definite role to play in protecting the witnesses, to start with at least in sensitive cases. The Judge has failed to take participatory role in the trial. He was not expected to act like a mere tape recorder to record whatever has been stated by the witnesses. Section 311 CrPC and Section 165 of the Evidence Act confers vast and wide powers on court to elicit all necessary materials by playing an active role in the evidence collecting process. However, the record does not indicate that the Judge presiding the trial had exercised powers under Section 165 of the Evidence Act which is in a way complimentary to his other powers. (Para 22). Vikas Kumar Roorkewal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2011) 2 SCC 178.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-2011]

[3165] — S. 311 — Power of court to summon material witness — Grounds on which may be exercised — Held, the said power can be exercised only with the object of finding out the truth or obtaining proper proof of facts which may lead to a just and correct decision — When such exercise of power is made, plea that power was exercised to fill the lacuna in the prosecution case cannot be accepted unless exercise of power causes serious prejudice to accused which results in miscarriage of justice — In the instant case, respondent-accused raised before trial court a plea of alibi that at the time of the incident he was present in the chamber of the Collector to attend a meeting there — In support of the plea defence examined two witnesses but the Collector was not examined — Public Prosecutor moved application under S. 311 for summoning the Collector and examining him as a witness — Plea taken on behalf of respondent that prosecution should not be allowed to fill in a lacuna by moving the application — Trial court allowed the application in the interest of just and fair decision in view of the fact that defence had kept behind the best available evidence on this point and that moreover it would not cause any prejudice to respondent as alibi was his own defence — Held on facts, examination of the Collector cannot be termed as filling in lacuna — Trial court having taken a decision in the interest of just and fair decision of the case, High Court erred in interfering therewith

An FIR was lodged in 1996 alleging that at the instigation of the respondent (A-7) and others (A-8 and A-9), accused A-1 to A-6 had assaulted the deceased and caused injuries to some others. After usual investigation charge-sheet was submitted against all the nine accused and the case was committed to the Court of Session. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC which was recorded after closing of the prosecution evidence, the respondent took a plea of alibi and submitted that he is a prominent member of a political party and at the time of the incident he was present in the chamber of the Collector as a meeting had been called there. The respondent examined the Dy. Collector (DW 1) and the Executive and Sector Magistrate (DW 2) in support of his plea of alibi. The Special Public Prosecutor then moved an application purported to be one under Section 311 CrPC praying that the then Collector may be summoned and examined as a witness. The trial court in 2004 allowed the application taking the view that although the matter was very old and was lingering since long but "this alone will not be sufficient to reject an opportunity to the prosecution particularly when the defence has kept behind the best available evidence of the then Collector who had convened the meeting, according to Accused 7, in which he was present". The trial court further observed: "Moreover, it will not cause any prejudice to Accused 7 as alibi is his own defence. He will have an opportunity to cross-examine the witness. Thus in order to find out the truth, evidence of the then Collector is necessary". The respondent filed an application under Sections 397/401/482 CrPC and Article 227 of the Constitution before High Court for setting aside the order passed by the trial court. The High Court held that the respondent had taken a plea of alibi as far back as in the year 1996 when he had moved an application for anticipatory bail and also when he opposed the application moved by the prosecution for giving him on police remand. In the order passed by the Sessions Judge granting bail to the respondent, it was observed that the investigating agency had not considered it appropriate to place the relevant material or to rebut the plea of alibi taken by the respondent. The High Court accordingly held that the grant of the application moved by the Public Prosecutor for summoning the Collector, under Section 311 CrPC would inevitably result in permitting the prosecution to fill in the lacuna in the prosecution case. It was further observed that the respondent had already examined two witnesses and if the trial court was of the opinion that the said evidence was insufficient, a logical conclusion could be drawn for accepting or not accepting the defence version and merely because the defence has chosen not to examine one more witness, who should also have been examined by the defence, that by itself may not be a sufficient reason for invoking the powers under Section 311 CrPC. The application filed by the respondent was accordingly allowed by the order under challenge and the order passed by the trial court was set aside.

Allowing the appeal, setting aside the judgment and order passed by the High Court and restoring the order passed by the Sessions Court,

Held :

In the circumstances of the case, if the Sessions Judge was of the opinion that in order to find out the truth, the evidence of the Collector was necessary, no exception can be taken to the course adopted by him. It was for the Sessions Judge to decide whether for just and fair decision of the case, the evidence of the Collector was necessary or not and he having come to a conclusion that the evidence of the Collector was necessary for just and fair decision of the case, the order passed by him could not have been set aside by the High Court on the ground that it would amount to filling in a lacuna in the prosecution case. In the facts and circumstances of the case, the examination of the then Collector cannot be termed as filling in lacuna in the prosecution case. The Sessions Judge rightly observed that the evidence of the Collector will not cause any prejudice to the respondent as he had himself pleaded alibi and had led evidence to substantiate the same. Therefore, the High Court clearly erred in setting aside the order passed by the Sessions Judge. (Para 17)

The principle is well settled that the exercise of power under Section 311 CrPC should be resorted to only with the object of finding out the truth or obtaining proper proof of such facts which lead to a just and correct decision of the case, this being the primary duty of a criminal court. Calling a witness or re-examining a witness already examined for the purpose of finding out the truth in order to enable the court to arrive at a just decision of the case cannot be dubbed as "filling in a lacuna in the prosecution case" unless the facts and circumstances of the case make it apparent that the exercise of power by the court would result in causing serious prejudice to the accused resulting in miscarriage of justice. (Para 15)

The charge-sheet submitted by the police under Section 173 CrPC after completion of investigation contains the statements of the witnesses as recorded under Section 161 CrPC and in a case exclusively triable by the Court of Session there is a duty enjoined on a Magistrate to furnish to the accused, free of cost, a copy of the police report including a copy of the FIR, statement of the witnesses under Section 161 CrPC and other documents as mentioned in Section 207 CrPC. It is on the basis of the charge-sheet that the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence under Section 190(1)(b) CrPC. Normally, the investigating agency cannot visualise at that stage what will be the nature of defence which an accused will take in his statement under Section 313 CrPC as the said stage comes after the entire prosecution evidence has been recorded. The prosecution is only required to establish its case by leading oral and documentary evidence in support thereof. While leading evidence the prosecution may not be in a position to anticipate or foresee the nature of defence which may be taken by the accused and evidence which he may lead to substantiate the same. Therefore, it is neither expected to lead negative evidence nor is it possible for it to lead such evidence so as to demolish the plea which may possibly be taken by the accused in his defence. This being the normal situation, an application moved by the prosecution for summoning a witness under Section 311 CrPC, after the defence evidence has been recorded, should not be branded as "an attempt by the prosecution to fill in a lacuna". (Para 16). UT of Dadra & Nagar Haveli v. Fatehsinh Mohansinh Chauhan, (2006) 7 SCC 529: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 300.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-8-2006]

Ram Jeet v. State, AIR 1958 All 439: 1958 Cri LJ 716, approved

State of W.B. v. Tulsidas Mundhra, (1964) 1 Cri LJ 443; Jamatraj Kewalji Govani v. State of Maharashtra, (1967) 3 SCR 415: AIR 1968 SC 178: 1968 Cri LJ 231; Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271: 1991 SCC (Cri) 595; Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1062; P. Chhaganlal Daga v. M. Sanjay Shaw, (2003) 11 SCC 486: 2004 SCC (Cri) 183, relied on [3166] — S. 311 — Determination whether witness planted — Allegations that key witnesses PWs 6, 20 and 24 were planted witnesses who deposed under pressure of false implication because case under Punjab Excise Act was registered against them and they were virtually pressurised to yield to prosecution case; that PW 20 was not made an accused under S. 201 IPC (for removing blood from place of occurrence), because they had agreed to toe line of prosecution; and PW 20 was not an eyewitness since both IOs PWs 100 and 101 admitted same — Held, a witness cannot be discredited without said piece of testimony having been put to her

The accused had a statutory option available by way of Section 311 of the Code to call PW 20 for the purposes of further examination. The said part of the testimony of PWs 100 and 101 are at best in the nature of opinion evidence which are inadmissible pieces of evidence and for the aforesaid reasons cannot wipe out the unchallenged testimony of PW 20, which is the case of the prosecution. (Para 82)

Further, M had also been clearly identified by PW 6 as the person in the white T-shirt who had asked for whisky and thereafter on her refusal to oblige, he misbehaved with her in the most vulgar fashion. (Para 83)

Furthermore, FIR No. 288 of 1999 at PS Mehrauli under the Excise Act was registered on 30-4-1999 itself while her statement under Section 161 CrPC was recorded on 3-5-1999 and thus the question of making PW 6 an accused on 8-5-1999 does not arise. Moreover, the excise offence is a bailable offence. There was nothing on record to suggest that PWs 6, 20 and 24 had been pressurised in any way for deposing in favour of prosecution. It is relevant to point out that the case under the Punjab Excise Act had not been withdrawn by the prosecution against the accused. On the other hand, the accused had pleaded guilty and mere fine amounting to Rs 200 was imposed on them. Hence, allegation that these witnesses were kept under pressure is unacceptable. (Paras 84, 98 and 99). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-4-2010]

[3167] — S. 311 — Power to summon material witness, or examine person present — Scope — Reiterated (Para 9). Iddar v. Aabida, (2007) 11 SCC 211: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 22: AIR 2007 SC 3029: (2007) 57 AIC 47 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 4313.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2007]

Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8, followed [3168] — S. 311 — Powers of court — Additional material relevant for just decision of the case — Grant of permission at the fag end of the trial for production of — Legality — In a complaint under S. 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act, the complainant completing the evidence including his own examination, cross-examination and re-examination — During such cross-examination, the accused denying the service of statutory notice and disowning the signature contained in the acknowledgement card produced by the complainant — After completion of evidence in the said manner, case posted for judgment — At this stage, the complainant seeking the court to permit him to produce additional material (a postal receipt in this case) — Grant of such permission by trial court even at this stage, held, within the powers of the court — High Court erred in interfering therewith on the assumption that production of the said document at that belated stage was only to fill up a lacuna — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Paras 6, 7 and 4). P. Chhaganlal Daga v. M. Sanjay Shaw, (2003) 11 SCC 486: 2004 SCC (Cri) 183.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-10-2001]

Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1062; Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271: 1991 SCC (Cri) 595; Ram Chander v. State of Haryana, (1981) 3 SCC 191: 1981 SCC (Cri) 683, relied on [3169] — S. 311 — Re-examination of witness — Delay in application for — Effect — Application filed by accused to recall the eyewitnesses after a lapse of more than one year and after they were examined, cross-examined and discharged — Held, should not be allowed (Para 9). Nisar Khan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2006) 9 SCC 386: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 568.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-1-2006]

[3170] — S. 311 — Recall of witnesses for cross-examination — Grounds — PWs recalled because counsel for the accused-respondent had been busy attending to some other case filed against the respondent when the said witnesses were first examined — Held, this could hardly have been a ground for recall of witnesses (Para 20). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882: AIR 2004 SC 524: 2004 Cri LJ 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

Gurcharan Dass Chadha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1966 SC 1418: (1966) 2 SCR 678: 1966 Cri LJ 1071; Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934; Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048, relied on [3171] — S. 311 — Recalling of witnesses — Cross-examination with respect to statements given — PWs 3 and 5 examined in trial of the accused — Also examined by Children's Court as one of the accused was a minor, where they did not support prosecution version — Application filed before trial court by accused to resummon PWs 3 and 5 for cross-examination, rejected — High Court directing the court below to recall and re-examine PWs 3 and 5 to examine their reliability — Validity — Following Mishrilal case, (2005) 10 SCC 701 which has great similarity with the facts of the present case, held, High Court's view for accepting the prayer in terms of S. 311 of the Code does not have any legal foundation — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 138 and 145 (Para 9). Hanuman Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 15 SCC 652: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1149: AIR 2009 SC 69.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-10-2008]

Mishrilal v. State of M.P., (2005) 10 SCC 701: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1712, followed

[3172] — S. 311 — Right of cross-examination of witnesses called under S. 311 — Nature and scope — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 165, 137 and 154

If a witness called by the court gives evidence against the complainant he should be allowed an opportunity to cross-examine. The right to cross-examine a witness who is called by a court arises not under the provisions of Section 311 CrPC, but under the Evidence Act, 1872 which gives a party the right to cross-examine a witness who is not his own witness. Since a witness summoned by the court could not be termed a witness of any particular party, the court should give the right of cross-examination to the complainant. (Para 29). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 2006 SC 1367: (2006) 2 KLT 350: 2006 Cri LJ 1694: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

[3173] — S. 311 — Witnesses can be recalled or resummoned for re-examination though power under this section cannot be exercised to fill up lacuna in prosecution case — Bar against filling "lacuna in prosecution case" as laid down in 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271 — Meaning of — Oversight or mistakes during conducting of case cannot be understood as lacuna and so can be corrected — Lacuna is the inherent weakness or a latent wedge in the matrix of prosecution case — CrPC, 1898, S. 540

The appellant was facing trial along with certain other persons for offences under Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985. As the trial proceeded almost to the end when the prosecution and the defence closed their evidence on 19-9-1997, the case was posted for further steps. Nevertheless, subsequently, the case stood posted to some other days also. On 7-3-1998, at the instance of the prosecution two of the witnesses, who were already examined, were resummoned for the purpose of proving certain documents for prosecution. They were further examined and the evidence was once again closed and the case was posted for hearing arguments. On 7-6-1998, the Public Prosecutor moved an application seeking permission to examine PW 21 and two other persons. Though the application was stoutly opposed by the accused's counsel the trial court allowed it in exercise of its power under Section 311 of the Code. The appellant challenged the said order in revision before the High Court which was dismissed. Dismissing the appeal by special leave,

Held :

A lacuna in the prosecution is not to be equated with the fallout of an oversight committed by a Public Prosecutor during trial, either in producing relevant materials or in eliciting relevant answers from witnesses. The adage "to err is human" is the recognition of the possibility of making mistakes to which humans are prone. A corollary of any such laches or mistakes during the conducting of a case cannot be understood as a lacuna which a court cannot fill up. (Para 7)

Lacuna in the prosecution must be understood as the inherent weakness or a latent wedge in the matrix of the prosecution case. The advantage of it should normally go to the accused in the trial of the case, but an oversight in the management of the prosecution cannot be treated as irreparable lacuna. No party in a trial can be foreclosed from correcting errors. If proper evidence was not adduced or a relevant material was not brought on record due to any inadvertence, the court should be magnanimous in permitting such mistakes to be rectified. After all, function of the criminal court is administration of criminal justice and not to count errors committed by the parties or to find out and declare who among the parties performed better. (Para 8)

It cannot be said as a legal proposition that the court cannot exercise power of resummoning any witness if once that power was exercised, nor can the power be whittled down merely on the ground that the prosecution discovered laches only when the defence highlighted them during final arguments. The power of the court is plenary to summon or even recall any witness at any stage of the case if the court considers it necessary for a just decision. The steps which the trial court permitted in this case for resummoning certain witnesses cannot therefore be spurned down or frowned at. (Para 12). Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1062: AIR 1999 SC 2292: 1999 Cri LJ 3529.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-7-1999]

Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271: 1991 SCC (Cri) 595, explained and followed

Jamatraj Kewalji Govani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 178: (1967) 3 SCR 415; Ram Chander v. State of Haryana, (1981) 3 SCC 191: 1981 SCC (Cri) 683, followed

[3174] — S. 311 — Recalling of witnesses for further cross-examination — Grounds for — Pendente lite death of defence counsel, if is a valid ground — Trial under S. 20 of NDPS Act, 1985 for possession of a certain quantity of charas — A certain number of witnesses examined for the prosecution and cross-examined by the defence counsel — Defence counsel passing away before completing the trial and a new defence counsel engaged by the accused — New counsel unaware of the scheme of the defence strategy of the former counsel and also unaware of the reasons for which the former counsel had not put to the witnesses further questions on certain aspects — In such circumstances, if in order to evolve a fresh defence strategy, the new counsel sought to have the material witnesses further examined while by then the accused had not been called to enter on his defence, held, his plea could be allowed — Hence, conviction and sentence set aside and case remitted to trial court with detailed directions for disposal afresh — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 137, 138 and 145 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 20

Normally the Supreme Court would be disinclined to open up a closed trial. But the present case calls for it on account of the passing away of the defence counsel during the trial. The counsel who was engaged for defending the appellant had cross-examined the witnesses but he could not complete the trial because of his death. When the new counsel took up the matter he was under the disadvantage that he could not ascertain from the erstwhile counsel as to the scheme of the defence strategy which the predeceased advocate had in mind or as to why he had not put further questions on certain aspects. In such circumstances, if the new counsel thought to have the material witnesses further examined the Court could adopt latitude and a liberal view in the interest of justice, particularly when the Court has unbridled powers in the matter as enshrined in Section 311 of the Code. After all the trial is basically for the prisoners and courts should afford the opportunity to them in the fairest manner possible. Here, the new defence counsel filed the petition for recalling the prosecution witnesses even before the accused was called upon to enter on his defence. (Paras 6 and 8)

Therefore the conviction and sentence is set aside and the case is remitted to the trial court for disposal afresh after summoning the said witnesses for further cross-examination. The evidence on record will remain as part of evidence in the case. After the cross-examination of the said witnesses, Court may grant liberty to the prosecution to adduce further evidence. The accused should then be called upon to enter on his defence. Hoffman Andreas v. Inspector of Customs, (2000) 10 SCC 430: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1488.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and A.P. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-1999]

[3175] — Ss. 311, 233, 243 and 315 — Closing of defence evidence — Recalling of some prosecution witnesses for examination by defence — Trial Judge, after the prosecution evidence was closed, questioning the accused under S. 313 CrPC and closing the defence evidence on accused having failed to produce any defence evidence or witness after being provided with several opportunities by the court in this regard — Petition of accused challenging the order of trial court not permitting the examination of prosecution witnesses, dismissed by High Court — Agreeing with the High Court's non-interference in instant case, however held, affording one more opportunity to the appellant to examine defence witnesses would be in the interest of justice — Appellant to be examined on defence side if he files a separate application under S. 315 CrPC — Constitution of India, Art. 142. Selvi J. Jayalalitha v. State, (2000) 9 SCC 754: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1480.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2000]

[3176] — Ss. 311, 386 and 391 — Consideration of evidence on record by court to determine attraction of — Extent of — Held, necessary only to the extent for deciding the appeals which concerned the justifiability of the rejection of applications under Ss. 311 and 391 by the court below — It was not necessary to record any finding in the appeals as to whether the respondents-accused were to be convicted or acquitted

It was submitted by the applicant accused that though the scope of consideration of the evidence was restricted to the rejection of the application under Sections 311 and 391 CrPC by the Supreme Court in Zahira case, (2004) 4 SCC 158, certain observations had been made which would prejudice the accused persons. They did not get an opportunity to show that the evidence on record was otherwise.

Dismissing the submission,

Held:

When the primary consideration was the justifiability of rejecting the applications in terms of Sections 311 and 391 CrPC, the question of considering the evidence on record did not arise. The Supreme Court considered the appeal taking note of those aspects. It was not necessary to record any finding in the appeals as to whether the respondents-accused in the appeals were to be convicted or acquitted. The appeals were allowed for the reasons that the investigation was vitiated. Tainted evidence was tendered and distorted trial was held and they would suffice to set aside the judgments. Therefore, the question of considering the evidence on record, except to the extent necessary for deciding the appeals did not arise. The observations made were in the context of the conduct of the Public Prosecutor, the prosecuting agency and the failure of the courts below to take note of relevant aspects. (Para 18)

When the matter is taken up for trial afresh as directed it is obvious that the worth of the evidence has to be considered by the court concerned on its own merits and in accordance with law to find out the real truth. That being so, the plea raised regarding the need for consideration of the evidence on record is really of no consequence and has no merit. (Para 19). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 5 SCC 353: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1613: AIR 2004 SC 3467.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-2004]

[3177] — Ss. 311, 391 and 386 — Retrial — Evidence to be considered — Held, trial Judge has to decide case on basis of evidence already on record (recorded at the initial trial) and the additional evidence which would be recorded on retrial

Moreover, even if a retrial is directed in exercise of revisional powers by the High Court, the evidence already recorded at the initial trial cannot be erased or wiped out from the record of the case. The trial Judge has to decide the case on the basis of the evidence already on record and the additional evidence which would be recorded on retrial. (Para 27). Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115: 2005 SCC (Cri) 276: 2005 Cri LJ 648: (2004) 3 KLT 1098.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-2004]

K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., (1963) 3 SCR 412: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 8; Bansi Lal v. Laxman Singh, (1986) 3 SCC 444: 1986 SCC (Cri) 342, relied on

Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999, clarified

[3178] — Ss. 311, 391 and 386 — Retrial, (re)calling of witnesses and taking of additional evidence — When to be ordered — Best Bakery case, (2004) 4 SCC 158, clarified — Held, law laid down in the extraordinary circumstances obtaining in the said case cannot be applied to all cases against the established principles of criminal jurisprudence — Direction for retrial should not be made in all or every case where acquittal of accused is for want of adequate or reliable evidence — It is only when the extraordinary situation of the first trial being found to be a farce and a "mock trial" obtains, can directions, as made in the said case, be justified

The revisional jurisdiction at the instance of the complainant has to be exercised by the High Court only in very exceptional cases, where the High Court finds defect of procedure or manifest error of law resulting in flagrant miscarriage of justice. (Para 22)

The law laid down in Best Bakery case, (2004) 4 SCC 158 in the extraordinary circumstances obtaining therein, cannot be applied to all cases against the established principles of criminal jurisprudence. Direction for retrial should not be made in all or every case where acquittal of accused is for want of adequate or reliable evidence. In Best Bak- ery case the first trial was found to be a farce and was described as "mock trial". Therefore, the direction for retrial was in fact, for a real trial. Such an extraordinary situation alone can justify the directions as made by the Supreme Court in Best Bakery case. (Para 26). Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115: 2005 SCC (Cri) 276: 2005 Cri LJ 648: (2004) 3 KLT 1098.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-2004]

[3179] — Ss. 311 and 174 — Denial of cross-examination — Effect — Court witnesses required to state about certain documents, not permitted to be cross-examined — Since in the present case the Court itself had permitted the accused to lead rebuttal evidence, denial of cross-examination, held, did not vitiate the trial — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 137 (Para 28). Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1918: AIR 2003 SC 4567.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2003]

[3180] — Ss. 311 and 225 — Prosecuting agency not acting in requisite manner — Special necessity for exercise of powers under S. 311 r/w S. 165 Evidence Act, 1872 and courts not playing into hands of such prosecuting agency in case of, stressed

The power under Section 311 CrPC is exercised and the evidence is examined neither to help the prosecution nor the defence. However, if the prosecutor is remiss in some ways, the court can control the proceedings effectively so that the ultimate objective i.e. truth is arrived at. This becomes more necessary where the court has reasons to believe that the prosecuting agency or the prosecutor is not acting in the requisite manner. The court cannot afford to be wishful or pretend to be blissfully ignorant or oblivious to such serious pitfalls or dereliction of duty on the part of the prosecuting agency. The prosecutor who does not act fairly and acts more like a counsel for the defence is a liability to the fair judicial system, and courts should not also play into the hands of such prosecuting agency showing indifference or adopting an attitude of total aloofness. (Paras 43, 46 and 55). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271: 1991 SCC (Cri) 595, relied on [3181] — Ss. 311 and 391 — Only such witnesses to be called by the High Court who are necessary for a just decision of the case — Rejection of oral request by accused for examination of two witnesses not bad where those witnesses had in their statements to the police supported the prosecution case and having turned hostile were unhelpful to the case — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 540 and 428. Abdul Latif v. State of U.P., (1978) 1 SCC 466: 1978 SCC (Cri) 123: AIR 1978 SC 472: 1978 Cri LJ 639: 1978 ALJ 362: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 472: (1978) 2 SCR 611.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-1978]

[3182] — Ss. 311 and 391 — Rule of best evidence — Cardinality of following of — Role of court in ensuring that such evidence is brought on record — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 165, 3, 5, 60, 64 and 91. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 2006 SC 1367: (2006) 2 KLT 350: 2006 Cri LJ 1694: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (1) v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999; Jamatraj Kewalji Govani v. State of Maharashtra, (1967) 3 SCR 415: AIR 1968 SC 178: 1968 Cri LJ 231, relied on [3183] — Ss. 311 and 482 — Inherent powers of High Court — High Court's power to review or recall its earlier order — Permissibility — Statement of complainant before trial court at variance with her statement recorded during investigation — Appellant filing application in terms of S. 311 for recording her statement afresh — Trial court by order dated 13-1-2006 rejected the said application — Respondent's application for setting aside said order allowed by High Court by order dated 20-2-2006 — High Court refusing to recall the said order — Appellants not heard before order dated 20-2-2006 was passed — Neither any notice was issued to them nor were they impleaded as parties — Held, though High Court has no power to recall or review its order, but in the instant factual scenario order dated 20-2-2006 set aside — Petition filed by respondent directed to be heard on merits after ensuring that the appellants were properly impleaded — Generally — Nature and Scope — Inherent powers of High Court (Paras 10, 11, 4, 5 and 6). Iddar v. Aabida, (2007) 11 SCC 211: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 22: AIR 2007 SC 3029: (2007) 57 AIC 47 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 4313.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2007]

[3184] — Ss. 311 and 482 — Summoning of material witness — Tenability of application — Application for recalling the rape victim for cross-examination at the stage of argument after recording of statement of accused under S. 313 and evidence of defence witnesses, on ground that parties have settled the dispute outside the court and also the informant could not identify who committed the offence due to darkness — Trial court dismissing the application — High Court also dismissed application in exercise of its jurisdiction under S. 482 on ground that S. 376 IPC being not compoundable in terms of S. 320 CrPC and the victim having been examined and cross-examined, prayer to recall the victim was not acceptable — Held, considering ambit of S. 311, no interference called for (Para 10). Rama Paswan v. State of Jharkhand, (2007) 11 SCC 191: 2007 Cri LJ 2750: (2007) 53 AIC 4 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-2007]

Jamatraj Kewalji Govani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 178: 1968 Cri LJ 231, relied on [3185] — S. 311 — Conclusion of prosecution case — Trial court's power to examine more witnesses from the list furnished by prosecution — Held, the trial court has such power (Para 46). Amarinder Singh v. Parkash Singh Badal, (2009) 6 SCC 260.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and P. Sathasivam and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-5-2009]

[3186] — S. 313 — Accused not questioned with respect to offence for which convicted — Unsustainability of conviction — Charge under S. 302 r/w S. 34 IPC, but conviction under Ss. 306 and 498-A IPC — Sustainability — Victim dying of burn injuries — At the stage of framing charge, trial court noting that several statements were given by deceased giving different versions, and as such it was required to be appreciated whether it was a case of murder or abetment of suicide — Trial court accordingly framing charge under S. 302 r/w S. 34, but convicting the appellant under S. 306 and S. 498-A — High Court by impugned judgment upholding the same — Following Shamnsaheb M. Multtani, (2001) 2 SCC 577, held, normally in such circumstances the matter would be remanded back so that accused could put forth his defence regarding the offence for which he was convicted — However, in the instant case no useful purpose would be served by remanding the matter since it was 20 years old and appellant had served part of the custodial sentence — Besides, no question was put to him in his examination under S. 313 CrPC relating to dowry demand or abetment of suicide — Hence, impugned judgment unsustainable — Ranbir Penal Code, 1989 Smvt., Ss. 306 & 498-A or S. 302 r/w S. 34 (Paras 6 to 8 and 10 to 16). Bimla Devi v. State of J&K, (2009) 6 SCC 629.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

Sangaraboina Sreenu v. State of A.P., (1997) 5 SCC 348: 1997 SCC (Cri) 690; Lokendra Singh v. State of M.P., 1999 SCC (Cri) 371; Shamnsaheb M. Multtani v. State of Karnataka, (2001) 2 SCC 577: 2001 SCC (Cri) 358, considered and followed [3187] — S. 311 — Court witness — Police officer — Found to be independent, disinterested and important witness — His testimony corroborated by another independent witness and found to be trustworthy and reliable — Held, his testimony cannot be underestimated merely because he is a police officer. State of Assam v. Muhim Barkataki, (1986) 4 SCC 439: 1986 SCC (Cri) 503: AIR 1987 SC 98.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-10-1986]

[3188] — S. 311 — Non-production of jail records by authorities despite demand by accused — Effect — Held, court cannot presume that the records had been destroyed in absence any evidence in that regard — Authorities should have at least produced the destruction register — Instead of blaming the defence for not examining the Jail Superintendent and closing the matter on the basis of such presumption court should have invoked jurisdiction under S. 311 CrPC in the interest of justice — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114

In this case it is not in dispute that the co-accused M has retracted from his confession. The value of the retracted confession was required to be considered on the accusation of the accused (M) that the confession was not voluntary. Although sufficient time (2 days) was given to the accused (M) to confirm his willingness to confess and finalise the contents of the confession. The reasons for which the confession had been retracted and the subsequent events wherein the appellants intended to prove a certain state of affairs, namely, although he was supposed to have been produced directly from the jail to the Magistrate concerned but in fact he was taken out of jail 2 1/2 hours before the time fixed therefor, could be a pointer to the fact as to whether the confession was a voluntary one. The lawyer appearing for the accused (M) had made a submission that an application had been filed praying for calling of some records from the Presidency Jail. No order had been passed thereupon. It is expected in a situation of this nature that the court will issue a suo motu direction to the authority to produce the records. There was absolutely no reason as to why the records would not be produced by the Presidency Jail Authorities for a period of two months. If the said records had not been produced, it was obligatory on the part of the court to issue a suo motu notice. The court was dealing with a serious matter. More than one life hinged on that valuable material. If a public authority does not produce a document despite being called upon to do so, an adverse inference is to be drawn. Converse is not the law. (Paras 120, 122, 118 and 121)

It may be true that an application for adducing evidence had been filed by the appellants in terms of Section 311 CrPC, but the said evidence, if adduced would have tilted the balance one way or the other so as to enable the court to come to the conclusion as to whether the purported judicial confession made by the accused (M) satisfies the tests laid down by the Supreme Court in a large number of decisions. There was no reason for the court to draw an adverse inference that the records had been destroyed. No such inference could be drawn in law either in terms of Section 114 of the Evidence Act or any other law. The period during which such documents are preserved under the provisions of the jail manual have not been referred to. No evidence had been brought on record to show that the documents had in fact been destroyed. The least the jail authorities could do was to produce the destruction register. (Para 123)

In the aforementioned backdrop, the court should give the benefit of doubt to the co-accused instead of the prosecution. The trial Judge should not have closed the case. He should have invoked his jurisdiction under Section 311 in the interest of justice and instead of blaming the defence for non-examination of the Superintendent of Presidency Jail, the court itself should have called upon authorities to produce the document. (Para 124). Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of W.B., (2007) 12 SCC 230: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2006]

[3189] — S. 311 — Recalling witness to confront him with an inconsistent statement given by him in another proceeding subsequently — Propriety — Held, once the witness was examined-in-chief and cross-examined fully, such witness should not have been recalled and re-examined to deny the evidence he had already given before the court, even though that witness had given an inconsistent statement before any other court or forum subsequently — A witness could be confronted only with a previous statement made by him — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 138 and 145

The conviction of the appellants under Section 302 r/w Section 149 and Section 148 IPC was based on the evidence of PWs 1 to 3. Some of the accused allegedly involved in the incident were minors and their case was tried by the Juvenile Court. PW 2 was also examined as a witness in the case before the Juvenile Court. In the Juvenile Court he gave evidence to the effect that he was not aware of the persons who had attacked him and on hearing the voice of the assailants he assumed that they were some Banjaras. Therefore on an application by the accused, PW 2 was recalled by the Sessions Judge and again examined and cross-examined.

Held :

The procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge was not strictly in accordance with law. Once the witness was examined-in-chief and cross-examined fully, such witness should not have been recalled and re-examined to deny the evidence he had already given before the court, even though that witness had given an inconsistent statement before any other court or forum subsequently. A witness could be confronted only with a previous statement made by him. At the time of examination of PW 2 on 6-2-1991 there was no such previous statement and the defence counsel did not confront him with any statement alleged to have been made previously. This witness must have given some other version before the Juvenile Court for extraneous reasons and he should not have been given a further opportunity at a later stage to completely efface the evidence already given by him under oath. (Para 6). Mishrilal v. State of M.P., (2005) 10 SCC 701: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1712.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-2005]

[3190] — S. 311 — Accused must be afforded the opportunity to rebut the evidence taken under. Rameshwar Dayal v. State of U.P., (1978) 2 SCC 518: 1978 SCC (Cri) 311: AIR 1978 SC 1558: 1978 ALJ 1011: (1978) 15 ACC 276.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-2-1978]

[3191] — S. 311 — Applicability — PW 1 who was examined in court on 5-7-1994 purported to have filed an application on 1-5-1995 stating that five accused persons named therein were innocent — Said application rejected by trial court — Revision application filed thereagainst also rejected by High Court — Held, it was not a case where stricto sensu the provisions of S. 311 could have been invoked — Very fact that such an application was got filed by PW 1 nine months after his deposition is itself pointer to the fact that he had been won over — It is absurd to contend that he, after a period of four years and that too after his examination-in-chief and cross-examination was complete, would file an application on his own will and volition — Hence, such an application rightly dismissed (Para 38). Umar Mohammad v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 14 SCC 711: 2008 Cri LJ 816.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2007]

[3192] — S. 311 — Applicability and scope — Murder trial — Prosecution evidence ordered to be closed by Sessions Judge before examination of all the witnesses — After transfer of the case to another Sessions Judge, that order was recalled and APP was directed to produce the witnesses — High Court allowing revision petition filed by accused taking the view that a criminal court cannot recall its earlier order — State filing application under S. 311 before the Sessions Judge for examining the witnesses — Application rejected in view of High Court's order allowing the revision petition — Held, application under S. 311 wrongly rejected

It was contended that there was no question of referring to Section 311 CrPC in view of the earlier order passed by the High Court setting aside the order passed by the succeeding Sessions Judge recalling the order by which the prosecution evidence was declared to have been closed.

Held :

This submission is without any substance. Section 311 empowers the court to summon material witnesses though not summoned as witnesses and to examine or recall and re-examine if their evidence appears to it to be essential to the just decision of the case. Section 311 reveals that it is of a very wide amplitude and if there is any negligence, laches or mistakes by not examining material witnesses, the court's function to render just decision by examining such witnesses at any stage is not, in any way, impaired. (Paras 10 and 11). Shailendra Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 655: 2002 SCC (Cri) 230: AIR 2002 SC 270: 2002 Cri LJ 568: (2002) 1 CHN (Supp) 104.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, B.N. Agrawal and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-2001]

Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1062, relied on [3193] — S. 311 — Duty of court to obtain testimony on important questions of the case — CrPC, 1898 — Ss. 540 and 428. Raghunandan v. State of U.P., (1974) 4 SCC 186: 1974 SCC (Cri) 355: AIR 1974 SC 463: (1974) 3 SCR 92: 1974 Cri LJ 453.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.H. Beg and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-1974]

[3194] — S. 311 — Fact not challenged or shaken in cross-examination — Effect — Evidence of investigating officer about safe custody of the contraband article not challenged or shaken in cross-examination — Held, S. 55, Evidence Act, 1872 complied with — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 3, 59 and 137 — Fact not challenged or shaken in cross-examination — Effect — Whether fact proved — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 55 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 15). Saikou Jabbi v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 2 SCC 186: 2004 SCC (Cri) 481: (2003) 158 ELT 801.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-2003]

[3195] — S. 311 — Failure to cross-examine — Effect — Search and seizure — Procedure — Intelligence Officer (PW 1) attached to Narcotics Bureau, on receipt of information while in airport that accused who was arriving by a flight, was likely to smuggle heroin in his baggage, reduced the same to writing and placed it before his immediate superior Assistant Director, which document, placed in evidence, signed by Assistant Director — Whereupon, on arrival of the plane, suitcase of the accused put on screening machine and thereafter searched — No cross-examination of Intelligence Officer conducted in this regard to point out any falsity therein — Held, S. 42(2), NDPS Act complied with — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 3, 59 and 137 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 42(2) (Para 14). Saikou Jabbi v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 2 SCC 186: 2004 SCC (Cri) 481: (2003) 158 ELT 801.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-2003]

[3196] — S. 311 — Filing of application under — While immunity from prosecution was granted to an accused by Narcotics Control Bureau under S. 64 of NDPS Act, application under S. 311 filed by prosecution before Sessions Judge for leave to examine that accused as a witness in the pending case — Rejection of the application by Sessions Judge under S. 311, which resulted in withdrawal of the immunity granted under S. 64, NDPS Act, held, was not justified as Sessions Judge cannot sit in appeal over decision of Narcotics Control Bureau under S. 64 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 64

The order under Section 64 NDPS Act was fully operative when the applications under Section 311 CrPC to examine Respondent 1 were filed by the prosecution before the Sessions Judge. The refusal of the applications under Section 311 by the Sessions Judge in fact would result in the withdrawal of the immunity granted to Respondent 1 under Section 64 since the immunity had been granted to Respondent 1 subject to the condition that evidence would be tendered by him in the pending cases. The Sessions Judge could not sit in appeal over the decision of NCB, more so when no one had challenged the order under Section 64 before him. (Para 36). Jasbir Singh v. Vipin Kumar Jaggi, (2001) 8 SCC 289: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1525: AIR 2001 SC 2734: (2001) 132 ELT 529: (2001) 3 KLT 346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2001]

[3197] — S. 311-A — Applicability — Ingredients of Cl. (3) — Specimen signatures/handwriting or thumb impressions of accused — Obtaining of from, while in police custody (without permission of court) — Permissibility — Held, does not infringe Art. 20(3) — Moreover, on facts of case S. 27, POTA had not been applicable to the investigation — Constitution of India — Art. 20(3) — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, S. 27

On the relevant date, when the specimen signatures of Afzal were obtained, the investigation was not done under the POTA provisions and dehors the provisions of POTA, hence there was no legal bar against obtaining the handwriting samples of the accused, as provided for in Section 27 of POTA. There is considerable force in the submission that Article 20(3) of the Constitution was not infringed by taking the specimen handwriting or signature or thumb impressions of a person in custody. (Para 222). State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715: 2005 Cri LJ 3950: (2005) 122 DLT 194.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2005]

State of Bombay v. Kathi Kalu Oghad, (1962) 3 SCR 10: (1961) 2 Cri LJ 856; State of U.P. v. Boota Singh, (1979) 1 SCC 31: 1979 SCC (Cri) 115, followed

[3198] — S. 312 — Problems faced by witnesses stated and suggestions made for improving their position in terms of unwarranted adjournments, amenities and diet money — Practice and Procedure — Adjournment — Malady of — Remedies suggested against (Per Wadhwa, J.)

A criminal case is built on the edifice of evidence, evidence that is admissible in law. For that, witnesses are required whether it is direct evidence or circumstantial evidence. Here are the witnesses who are a harassed lot. A witness in a criminal trial may come from a far-off place to find the case adjourned. He has to come to the court many times and at what cost to his own self and his family is not difficult to fathom. It has become more or less a fashion to have a criminal case adjourned again and again till the witness tires and gives up. It is the game of unscrupulous lawyers to get adjournments for one excuse or the other till a witness is won over or is tired. Not only is a witness threatened, he is abducted, he is maimed, he is done away with, or even bribed. There is no protection for him. Proper diet money must be paid immediately to the witness (not only when he is examined but for every adjourned hearing) and even sent to him and he should not be left to be harassed by the subordinate staff. (Para 36). Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668: 2001 SCC (Cri) 190: AIR 2000 SC 2017: 2000 Cri LJ 2780.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Wadhwa[2] and Ruma Pal[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-2000]

— S. 313 See also S. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1147 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 313 See Ss. 162, 163 and 313

See also Ss. 164 and 313

See also Ss. 202(2) proviso, 200, 203, 204, 208, 209, 313, 208, 226 to 228, 460, 461 and 465

See also Ss. 205 and 313

See also Ss. 211 to 213, 215 and 313

See also Ss. 222(2) & 464 and 313

See also Ss. 231, 311 and 313

See also Ss. 233 and 313

See also Ss. 242, 309 and 313

See also Ss. 315(1) proviso (b) and 313

See also Ss. 397 & 401, 386 and 313

See also Ss. 406 and 313

[3199] — S. 313 — Scope and object, restated — Admissibility of statement made under, in evidence — Extent and factors — Held, scope of S. 313 is wide and it is not a mere formality — Answers given thereunder by accused are relevant for finding truth and examining veracity of prosecution case but are not strictly evidence and can be used within permissible limits envisaged by CrPC — Courts may rely on portion of statement of accused and find him guilty on consideration of other evidence against him led by prosecution, however, such statements should not be considered in isolation but in conjunction with evidence adduced by prosecution — Accused cannot be convicted merely on basis of S. 313 statement as it is not substantive evidence — Object of S. 313 is to put all incriminating evidence to accused so as to provide him opportunity to explain the same and also to permit him to put forward his own version — Option lies with accused to maintain silence coupled with simpliciter denial or, in the alternative, to explain his version and reasons for his alleged involvement in commission of crime — However, if statements made are false, court is entitled to draw adverse inferences and pass consequential orders — On facts held, accused failed to offer any explanation as regards alleged circumstances and bare denial or lack of knowledge cannot tilt verdict in their favour — Rather, their answers supported prosecution version or reflected element of falsehood — Hence, court entitled to draw adverse inference against them — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114 Ill. (g) (Paras 19 to 25 and 29). Sanatan Naskar v. State of W.B., (2010) 8 SCC 249.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. B.S. Chauhan and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-7-2010]

Vijendrajit Ayodhya Prasad Goel v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 247: 1953 Cri LJ 1097, relied on [3200] — S. 313 — Object of — Held, is to afford an opportunity to the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him (Para 6). Avtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 7 SCC 419: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1769: AIR 2002 SC 3343.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2002]

[3201] — S. 313 — Object of — Duty of court to afford the accused an opportunity of explaining the incriminating circumstances appearing against him — Omission to question the accused on any incriminating circumstance appearing against him would not ipso facto vitiate the trial — Accused must show that such non-examination has actually and materially prejudiced him and has resulted in failure of justice — Omission to put question on point of motive — Objection regarding, raised for the first time before the Supreme Court — No prejudice shown to have been caused to the accused — Accused not totally unaware of substance of accusation against them — Held, in facts and circumstances, it cannot be said that any prejudice was caused to the accused

It was contended that in view of the fact that no question relating to motive had been put to the appellants under Section 313 of the Code, no motive for the commission of the crime can be attributed to the appellants nor the same can be reckoned as circumstance against the appellants.

Held :

It is no doubt true that the underlying object behind Section 313 CrPC is to enable the accused to explain any circumstance appearing against him in the evidence and this object is based on the maxim audi alteram partem which is one of the principles of natural justice. It has always been regarded unfair to rely upon any incriminating circumstance without affording the accused an opportunity of explaining the said incriminating circumstance. The provisions in Section 313, therefore, make it obligatory on the court to question the accused on the evidence and circumstance appearing against him so as to apprise him of the exact case which he is required to meet. But it would not be enough for the accused to show that he has not been questioned or examined on a particular circumstance but he must also show that such non-examination has actually and materially prejudiced him and has resulted in failure of justice. In other words in the event of any inadvertent omission on the part of the court to question the accused on any incriminating circumstance appearing against him the same cannot ipso facto vitiate the trial unless it is shown that some prejudice was caused to him. In the present case no such objection was advanced either before the trial court or the High Court. Secondly, no material was placed before the court to show as to what and in what manner the prejudice, if any, was caused to the accused persons or any of them. Apart from that it cannot be said that the accused was totally unaware of the substance of the accusation and charge against him or that he was not examined on the question of motive at all. In the facts and circumstances of the case it cannot be said that any prejudice was caused to the appellant. (Paras 26 and 27). Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60: AIR 1994 SC 2420: 1994 Cri LJ 3271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-1994]

[3202] — S. 313 — Examination of accused under — Object and extent of compliance necessary — Every circumstance appearing against accused must be put to him specifically and separately — Failure to do so would vitiate the trial if accused is shown to be prejudiced thereby or it resulted in miscarriage of justice — Circumstances put to accused in examination under S. 313 were different from those relied on by trial court for finding accused guilty for offence under S. 302 IPC — Held, trial vitiated, and acquittal directed — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 & 304 Pt. II

The accused-appellant was charged under Section 302 IPC for commission of murder of a person. It was alleged that the deceased had succumbed to the head injuries caused by the accused to him with a piece of wood. The prosecution case was based on circumstantial evidence. The accused was examined under Section 313 CrPC. The accused in his examination was asked to state his version in respect of the evidence relating to the circumstances regarding — severe injuries caused by him to the deceased by assaulting him on the head from behind with a piece of timber in the morning as a result of which the deceased died in the evening in hospital; production of a piece of timber by him which was seized by police officer during investigation; and allegation of committing murder of the deceased levelled against him. The accused was also asked to adduce evidence in defence if he had any and summon witnesses. The accused denied his involvement in the offence. The trial court found the following seven circumstances to be clinching in nature which proved and established the guilt of the accused: (i) that the accused person had a quarrel with the deceased regarding sale of land and house; (ii) that the accused had threatened the deceased with assault; (iii) that just prior to the incident the accused was seen standing outside the house of the deceased with a lathi in hand; (iv) that the accused was seen chasing the deceased with a lathi in hand; (v) that soon thereafter the deceased was found lying on the road with injuries on head; (vi) that soon after the crime the accused absconded; and (vii) that the accused led the police and produced the weapon of assault. The trial court, therefore, convicted the accused under Section 302 IPC. In appeal, the High Court found that the circumstances relied upon by the prosecution were not specifically brought to the notice of the accused; and that the evidence against the accused consisted of circumstantial evidence only and the circumstances should have been brought to his notice and his explanation called for. It was noted that the trial court faltered in its duty in the examination. But the High Court felt that no material prejudice was caused to the accused and the accused was found to be absconding for a long time and a rancorous relationship between the deceased and the accused was established. However, the High Court found that the proper conviction would be under Section 304 Part II IPC.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The object of Section 313 CrPC is to establish a direct dialogue between the court and the accused. If a point in the evidence is important against the accused, and the conviction is intended to be based upon it, it is right and proper that the accused should be questioned about the matter and be given an opportunity of explaining it. Section 313 casts a duty on the court to put in an enquiry or trial questions to the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any of the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. It follows as a necessary corollary therefrom that each material circumstance appearing in the evidence against the accused is required to be put to him specifically, distinctly and separately and failure to do so amounts to a serious irregularity. Where no specific question has been put by the trial court on an inculpatory material in the prosecution evidence, it would vitiate the trial. Non-indication of inculpatory material in its relevant facts by the trial court to the accused adds to the vulnerability of the prosecution case. Recording of a statement of the accused under Section 313 is not a purposeless exercise. In certain cases when there is perfunctory examination under Section 313, the matter is remanded to the trial court, with a direction to retry from the stage at which the prosecution was closed. (Paras 21, 22 and 24)

In the present case, no witness has stated that on the date of occurrence the accused had caused severe injury to the deceased by assaulting him on the head from behind. The circumstances which were relied upon by the trial court to find the accused guilty were not specifically brought to the notice of the accused. Therefore, in essence, his examination under Section 313 CrPC was rendered an empty formality. On that count alone, the impugned judgment of the High Court cannot be sustained and is set aside. The conviction recorded stands set aside. (Para 26). Asraf Ali v. State of Assam, (2008) 16 SCC 328: (2008) 68 AIC 111 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 4338.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-7-2008]

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87; Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116: 1984 SCC (Cri) 487, relied on [3203] — S. 313 — Applicability — Incriminating circumstance not put to accused under S. 313 — Same not challenged in cross-examination either — Effect — Statement of PW about his having last seen accused and deceased together not specifically put to accused when he was examined under S. 313 — But the statement of the PW had not been challenged in his cross-examination and he cannot be said to have introduced this fact for the first time at trial — In the examination under S. 313 trend of the accused was to make only bald denial of all the incriminating circumstances against him — Held, by omission to put the statement of the PW and to mention the name of the PW to accused, no prejudice was caused to him — Hence submission that no reliance can be placed on the evidence of the PW cannot be accepted (Para 25). State of Rajasthan v. Kashi Ram, (2006) 12 SCC 254: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 688: AIR 2007 SC 144.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2006]

[3204] — S. 313 — Circumstances in respect of which accused not examined under, cannot be used against him — CrPC, 1898, S. 342

Per Fazal Ali, J.

It is vital that any circumstance adverse to the accused must be put to him under S. 313 CrPC, 1973; otherwise it must be completely excluded from consideration because the appellant did not have any chance to explain them.

As many as 10 out of the 17 circumstances held against the accused were not put to him under S. 313 CrPC, 1973 and must therefore be excluded from consideration.

Per Varadarajan, J.

Since the circumstances not put to the appellant in his examination under S. 313 CrPC have to be completely excluded from consideration and since no question has been put to the appellant in this regard in the course of his examination under S. 313 CrPC, even if there is any evidence about any ill-treatment of the deceased by the appellant or his parents it has to be completely excluded from consideration. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116: 1984 SCC (Cri) 487: AIR 1984 SC 1622: 1984 Cri LJ 1738.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], A. Varadarajan[2] and Sabyasachi Mukharji[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 19-7-1984]

Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1953 SC 468: 1953 Cri LJ 1933; Shamu Balu Chaugule v. State of Maharashtra, (1976) 1 SCC 438: 1976 SCC (Cri) 56 and Harijan Megha Jesha v. State of Gujarat, 1979 SCC (Cri) 652, relied on [3205] — S. 313 — Circumstances in respect of which accused not examined under, cannot be used against him — Accused not asked about his having entered into conspiracy with anybody — Nor was he asked that the rates at which poles were carried by him were unreasonable or high — Held, these circumstances being crux of the prosecution case non-providing of opportunity to the accused to explain the same rendered his conviction unsustainable. Ghulam Din Buch v. State of J&K, (1996) 9 SCC 239: AIR 1996 SC 1568.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-4-1996]

Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, followed

[3206] — S. 313 — Circumstances not put to the accused in his examination under — Must be excluded from consideration — Considering the ghastly nature of the crime matter liable to be remitted to the trial court to further and properly examine the accused and then proceed with the trial — However, in view of long lapse of time (more than 15 years) and appellant having already served more than 4 years of imprisonment resort to such a course not justified — Hence conviction and sentence recorded against the appellants set aside (Para 5). Rautu Bodra v. State of Bihar, 1999 SCC (Cri) 1319.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-1996]

Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, followed [3207] — S. 313 — Circumstances not put to the accused in his statement recorded under, cannot be used against him. Bhalinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 SCC 726: 1994 SCC (Cri) 462: (1994) 1 An LT (Cri) 2.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1993]

[3208] — S. 313 — Circumstantial evidence — Failure of accused to offer satisfactory explanation for possession of the stolen property — Effect — Held, though not an incriminating circumstance by itself, would yet enable an inference being raised against him because the fact being in the exclusive knowledge of the accused it is for him to offer an explanation — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 114 Ill. (a), 106 and 3 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 411 and 404 (Para 15). Ganesh Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (2002) 1 SCC 731: 2002 SCC (Cri) 247: 2002 Cri LJ 967.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-10-2001]

Earabhadrappa v. State of Karnataka, (1983) 2 SCC 330: 1983 SCC (Cri) 447; Gulab Chand v. State of M.P., (1995) 3 SCC 574: 1995 SCC (Cri) 552, relied on [3209] — S. 313 — Dowry death — Death must occur otherwise than under normal circumstances — This essential ingredient must be fully established on evidence — In this context framing of charge and the circumstances that are put to accused under S. 313 CrPC assume importance — Death due to asphyxia — Poisoning not even mentioned in examination under S. 313 CrPC — Merely because deceased was young and death was not accidental, it cannot be surmised that death occurred otherwise than under normal circumstances — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B. Akula Ravinder v. State of A.P., 1991 Supp (2) SCC 99: 1991 SCC (Cri) 990: AIR 1991 SC 1142.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1991]

[3210] — S. 313 — Effect of non-compliance with — Held, circumstances which according to the prosecution lead to proof of the guilt against the accused must be put to him in his examination under S. 313 — In the instant case, this having not been done, appellant acquitted (Para 23). Vikramjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 306: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 732: 2007 Cri LJ 1000: (2007) 49 AIC 89 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-2006]

Tara Singh v. State, 1951 SCR 729: AIR 1951 SC 441: 1951 Cri LJ 1491, relied on

Distinguished in Harendra Nath Chakraborty v. State of W.B., (2009) 2 SCC 758*

[3211] — S. 313 — Entire gist of the confessional statement made by the accused put to him and that it was supported by the deposition of the SP — Held, on such facts the plea of prejudice having been caused to the accused was factually incorrect (Paras 11 and 12). Wariyam Singh v. State of U.P., (1995) 6 SCC 458: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1124: AIR 1996 SC 305.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-1995]

[3212] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Circumstance which was not put to accused under S. 313 CrPC, relied on in appeal while reversing the acquittal — Effect — Held, it caused prejudice to the accused — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 201 (Paras 28 and 29). Narendra Singh v. State of M.P., (2004) 10 SCC 699: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1893: AIR 2004 SC 3249.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[3213] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Circumstances not appearing in evidence cannot be put to the accused — Letters written by the accused to the court from jail during pre-trial period — Letters not adduced as evidence through any procedure known to law — Court not justified in putting those letters to the accused during his examination

Section 313 of the Code is intended to afford opportunity to an accused "to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him". It is trite that an accused cannot be confronted during such questioning with any circumstance which is not in evidence. Section 313 of the Code is not intended to be used as an interrogation. No trial court can pick out any paper or document from outside the evidence and abruptly slap it on the accused and corner him for giving an answer favourable or unfavourable. Kalpnath Rai v. State, (1997) 8 SCC 732: AIR 1998 SC 201.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-1997]

[3214] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Opportunity to accused to explain, held, is part of fair trial — Questions pertaining to various items of evidence against accused produced by prosecution should be put to accused and he should be given an opportunity to explain the same — Practice of putting to the accused a single question covering the entire evidence against him and giving him opportunity to explain the same deprecated — It results in imperfect appreciation of evidence — However, accused having not raised any contention before High Court regarding prejudice caused to him because of defective manner of his examination under S. 313, Supreme Court would not accept such contention especially when accused failed to show any prejudice

In this case only three questions were put to the accused-appellant while examining the accused under Section 313 CrPC. The first question was whether he heard the statement of the witnesses and the second question was that the evidence given by the witnesses showed that he committed the murder of the deceased and whether he had to say anything in defence. It was submitted that the Sessions Court committed serious error in not properly examining the accused under Section 313 CrPC.

Held :

The questioning of the accused under Section 313 CrPC was done in the most unsatisfactory manner. Under Section 313 CrPC the accused should have been given opportunity to explain any of the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. At least, the various items of evidence, which had been produced by the prosecution, should have been put to the accused in the form of questions and he should have been given opportunity to give his explanation. No such opportunity was given to the accused in the instant case. The practice of putting the entire evidence against the accused put together in a single question and giving an opportunity to explain the same, is deprecated as the accused may not be in a position to give a rational and intelligent explanation. The trial Judge should have kept in mind the importance of giving an opportunity to the accused to explain the adverse circumstances in the evidence and the Section 313 examination shall not be carried out as an empty formality. It is only after the entire evidence is unfurled the accused would be in a position to articulate his defence and to give explanation to the circumstances appearing in evidence against him. Such an opportunity being given to the accused is part of a fair trial and if it is done in a slipshod manner, it may result in imperfect appreciation of evidence. (Para 5)

However, in the present case, the appellant had not raised any contention in the High Court that he was seriously prejudiced by the way in which the Section 313 questioning was done. If this defect in procedure under Section 313 CrPC had been pointed out, the High Court could have very well remitted the case to the Sessions Court for a proper examination. At this stage, this contention of the appellant need not be accepted especially when the accused was not able to show that he was in any way prejudiced by such irregular procedure. (Para 6). Naval Kishore Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 7 SCC 502: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1967.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2004]

Rama Shankar Singh v. State of W.B., AIR 1962 SC 1239: (1962) 2 Cri LJ 296; Bhalinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 SCC 726: 1994 SCC (Cri) 462; State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705; Lallu Manjhi v. State of Jharkhand, (2003) 2 SCC 401: 2003 SCC (Cri) 544, relied on [3215] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Purpose of — Reliance on S. 313 statement — Extent — Proper mode of conducting examination under S. 313 — Admissibility of confession or admission made under S. 313 — Held, S. 313 is to provide opportunity to accused to explain circumstances appearing against him and for court to have an opportunity to examine accused and to elicit an explanation from him, which may be free from fear of being trapped by an embarrassing admission or statement — Such statement can be used by court to the extent that it is in line with case of prosecution but same cannot be the sole basis for convicting an accused — Court while recording statement has to invite attention of accused to circumstances and substantial evidence in relation to offence, for which he has been charged and invite his explanation i.e. it provides an opportunity to accused to state before court as to what is the truth and what is his defence, in accordance with law — It is for accused to avail of that opportunity and if he fails to do so then it is for court to examine case of prosecution on its evidence with reference to statement made by accused under S. 313 — Furthermore, admission or confession of accused under S. 313 recorded in course of trial can be acted upon and court can rely on these confessions to convict him — In present case, statement of accused before court, to some extent, fell in line with case of prosecution and to that extent, case of prosecution can be substantiated and treated as correct by court (Paras 28 to 32). Dharnidhar v. State of U.P., (2010) 7 SCC 759.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. B.S. Chauhan and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-7-2010]

Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468: 1953 Cri LJ 1933; Narain Singh v. State of Punjab, (1964) 1 Cri LJ 730: (1963) 3 SCR 678; State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705, relied on

[3216] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Proper mode for — Does not require framing of common questions and asking the same to all the accused persons

In this case one questionnaire common to all was prepared. 90% of the questions in the said questionnaire were to be put to S. But strangely the same questions had been put to all the respondents. Except one question viz. "What you want to say in your defence?", not only similar questions had been put, similar answers had been recorded. Even questions required to be put to each of the accused persons separately have been made part of the same questionnaire. Such common questions framed and asked to all the accused persons did not subserve the requirements of Section 313 CrPC. (Para 21). State of M.P. v. Mukesh, (2006) 13 SCC 197: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 680: (2006) 48 AIC 766 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-10-2006]

[3217] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Trial court's failure to examine the accused to enable him personally to explain any circumstances appearing against him — Effect can be fatal to the prosecution case

Incidentally, the manner in which the trial court has recorded the statements of the accused persons under Section 313 CrPC is far from satisfactory. The entire prosecution case running into very many details has been summed up into just 5 questions asked of each of the accused persons. It is obligatory on the part of the trial court to examine the accused for the purpose of enabling the accused personally to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him. If such opportunity is not afforded, the incriminating pieces of evidence available in the prosecution evidence cannot be relied on for the purpose of recording the conviction of the accused persons.(Para 14). Lallu Manjhi v. State of Jharkhand, (2003) 2 SCC 401: 2003 SCC (Cri) 544: AIR 2003 SC 854: 2003 Cri LJ 914.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-2003]

[3218] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Version given by him for the first time during examination — Whether acceptable — Respondent, for the first time taking stand under S. 313 that bribe money was forced into his hands — Such stand, held, not acceptable in the face of other evidence against him (Para 8). State of A.P. v. P. Satyanarayana Murthy, (2008) 9 SCC 674: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 855.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

[3219] — S. 313 — Examination of accused under — Trial court need not consult or hear counsels of parties — However, prosecution can invite attention of court if any incriminating circumstance left out and not put to accused — Accused can be further examined with reference to additional circumstance appearing against him on account of re-examination of any prosecution witness — Order for re-examination of accused after expunging entire examination already on record, held, improper. Mir Mohd. Omar v. State of W.B., (1989) 4 SCC 436: 1989 SCC (Cri) 750: AIR 1989 SC 1785: 1989 Cri LJ 2070: (1989) 2 Crimes 698.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-1989]

[3220] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Necessity of putting all incriminating circumstances to accused — On facts held, since oral dying declaration by deceased P to PWs 2 and 3 was not put to accused in his examination under S. 313, an important circumstance was lost — Thus, said oral dying declaration cannot be taken into consideration — Trial courts cautioned to be extremely careful in putting all incriminating circumstances to accused — Trial Judge cannot be a mere spectator but should control criminal trial by actively participating therein (Paras 35 and 43). Sunder Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2010) 10 SCC 611.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-2010]

[3221] — S. 313 — Examination of accused under is not a mere formality — Utility of answers given by the accused put to him

Examination of the accused under Section 313 of the Code is not a mere formality. Answers given by the accused to the questions put to him during such examination have a practical utility for criminal courts. Apart from affording an opportunity to the delinquent to explain incriminating circumstances against him, they would help the court in appreciating the entire evidence adduced in the court during trial. Rattan Singh v. State of H.P., (1997) 4 SCC 161: 1997 SCC (Cri) 525: AIR 1997 SC 768: 1997 Cri LJ 833.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-1996]

[3222] — S. 313 — Examination under — Importance and purpose of — Held, not an empty formality — Purpose is to bring to the notice of accused materials brought on record by prosecution to substantiate its accusations — An opportunity is granted to accused to explain incriminating circumstances against him — On facts, accusations put to accused in examination under S. 313, but no plea taken by him that the offending vehicle did not belong to him or that he was not driving it — Held, mere fact that IO did not enquire as to whether the accused had a driving licence or not was too insignificant to corrode the credibility of ocular testimony (Para 8). Damodar v. State of Rajasthan, (2004) 12 SCC 336: AIR 2003 SC 4414: 2003 Cri LJ 5014.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2003]

[3223] — S. 313 — Explanation of accused in statement under — When inconsistent with the conduct and appears to be palpably false, it cannot be accepted (Para 7). Surendra Chauhan v. State of M.P., (2000) 4 SCC 110: 2000 SCC (Cri) 772: AIR 2000 SC 1436: 2000 Cri LJ 1789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Wadhwa and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-2000]

Ramaswami Ayyangar v. State of T.N., (1976) 3 SCC 779: 1976 SCC (Cri) 518; Rajesh Govind Jagesha v. State of Maharashtra, (1999) 8 SCC 428: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1452; Dinabandhu Sahu v. Jadumoni Mangaraj, AIR 1954 SC 411: (1955) 1 SCR 140, relied on [3224] — S. 313 — Adverse inferences — Accused M: (i) taking false pleas and giving either evasive or incorrect answers in reply to some questions put to him under S. 313 CrPC; (ii) failing to explain whereabouts of his licensed .22" bore P. Berretta pistol which could not be traced despite extensive efforts; (iii) conduct of M in not taking any steps despite opportunity in reporting alleged taking away of Tata Safari on 30-4-1999 and his licensed pistol on 1-5-1999; (iv) PW 2 who was maker of FIR and complainant accompanied by lawyer of accused M: PW 2 not fully supporting prosecution case though admitting having made statement to police and signing same; thus, adverse inference for influencing witness; (v) as per disclosure made by M, pistol was given to RS who left the country on 4-5-1999, while M surrendered on 6-5-1999 after RS had left country — Held, adverse inference needs to be drawn for such incriminating circumstances — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114 Ill. (g) (Paras 150 and 273 to 279). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-4-2010]

Sucha Singh v. State of Punjab, (2001) 4 SCC 375: 2001 SCC (Cri) 717, relied on [3225] — S. 313 — Appellant under S. 313 CrPC merely denying incriminating circumstances proved in his examination — Effect — Hence held, was an additional link in chain of circumstances to sustain charges under Ss. 302, 376 and 201 IPC against him — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 376 and 201 (Paras 58 and 59). Aftab Ahmad Anasari v. State of Uttaranchal, (2010) 2 SCC 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and T.S. Thakur, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-2010]

Vasa Chandrasekhar Rao v. Ponna Satyanarayana, (2000) 6 SCC 286: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1104; Geetha v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 10 SCC 72: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1208, followed [3226] — S. 313 — New explanation of receipt of illegal gratification, held, not permissible — Conviction confirmed — Appellant, an employee of Commercial Taxes Department, convicted for accepting illegal gratification to help out complainant/proprietor of hotel in reducing amount of tax claimed from him by Commercial Taxes Department — Contended that the amount was received towards part-payment of tax imposed — No such contention regarding acceptance of amount made before lower courts nor in statement under S. 313 CrPC — Held, accused is given an opportunity to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him after prosecution witnesses are examined — Submission for first time making out a different case has no substance and is not permissible — High Court justified in confirming conviction of appellant — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7 and 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2). Balasubramanian v. State, (2010) 9 SCC 20: (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 1125.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. M.K. Sharma and Anil R. Dave, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-9-2010]

[3227] — S. 313 — Underwear of appellant stained with blood and semen worn by him for four days after incident and then seized — Plausibility — Held, would not make any dent in prosecution case on ground that a person would not wear such underwear for 3-4 days — Stains were not visible and even IO had stated said fact — If bloodstains are found on visible part of clothes worn, normally such person would not move around with those clothes on, but it is difficult to notice bloodstained underwear worn by any person — Further, sense of cleanliness of a rustic villager cannot be ignored — Moreover, appellant had not denied said fact in course of his examination under S. 313 CrPC — High Court erred in ignoring this incriminating circumstance (Paras 45 to 47). Aftab Ahmad Anasari v. State of Uttaranchal, (2010) 2 SCC 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and T.S. Thakur, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-2010]

State of U.P. v. M.K. Anthony, (1985) 1 SCC 505: 1985 SCC (Cri) 105, followed [3228] — S. 313 — Evidence regarding age — Need of satisfactory/adequate/prima facie material, stressed — Evidence regarding age in confession under S. 313 CrPC and school leaving certificate (without the primary evidence of birth certificate), held, are not satisfactory and adequate to arouse judicial conscience regarding juvenility that too when the school leaving certificate was procured after conviction — Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2000, S. 7-A (Paras 42 and 41). Pawan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2009) 15 SCC 259: (2009) 2 ECrN 789 (SC): (2009) 3 All LJ 637: 2009 Cri LJ 2257.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.B. Sinha, A.K. Ganguly and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-2009]

[3229] — S. 313 — Facts within the special knowledge of accused — Non-explanation of, by accused — If facts within the special knowledge of the accused are not satisfactorily explained, held, it is a factor against the accused — Said factor, though by itself not conclusive of his guilt, held, is relevant while considering the totality of the circumstances — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 106 & 101 and 114 Ill. (h). State of Punjab v. Karnail Singh, (2003) 11 SCC 271: 2004 SCC (Cri) 135: AIR 2003 SC 3609.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-8-2003]

Bhagwan Singh v. State of M.P., (2002) 4 SCC 85: 2002 SCC (Cri) 736; Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033: (1974) 1 SCR 489; Ramesh Babulal Doshi v. State of Gujarat, (1996) 9 SCC 225: 1996 SCC (Cri) 972; Jaswant Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 4 SCC 484: 2000 SCC (Cri) 991, relied on [3230] — S. 313 — Failure of accused, in a case based on circumstantial evidence which included last seen together evidence, to explain under S. 313 CrPC that in what circumstances victims suffered death — Involvement of accused in crime — Inference of — When could not be drawn — Evidence of last seen together could not be taken into account due to long time gap between the accused persons seen in the company of the deceased and the detection of the crime — Even other circumstances not favouring prosecution case — On such facts, held, the said non-explanation under S. 313 CrPC could not be taken to be a circumstance pointing towards irresistible conclusion that the accused were involved in commission of crime (Paras 38 and 37). State of Goa v. Sanjay Thakran, (2007) 3 SCC 755: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 162: (2007) 2 Guj LH 122: (2007) 54 AIC 240 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-3-2007]

Birbal v. State of M.P., (2000) 10 SCC 212: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1227; Raju v. State of Haryana, (2001) 9 SCC 50: 2002 SCC (Cri) 408; Babu v. Babu, (2003) 7 SCC 37: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1569; Amit v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 8 SCC 93: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1959, distinguished on facts

[3231] — S. 313 — Failure of accused to explain any inculpating circumstance — Where the accused failed to explain the circumstances established by the prosecution against him, held, it would form an additional link in the chain of circumstances — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The appellant has given three different versions on three different occasions. The statement of the appellant made under Section 313 CrPC being palpably false and there being cogent evidence adduced by the prosecution to show that the appellant had given two other versions as to the incident of 12-2-1988, the Court will have to proceed on the basis that the appellant has not explained the inculpating circumstances established by the prosecution against him which would form an additional link in the chain of circumstances. (Para 6). Mani Kumar Thapa v. State of Sikkim, (2002) 7 SCC 157: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1637: AIR 2002 SC 2920.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and Bisheshwar Prasad Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-2002]

State of Maharashtra v. Suresh, (2000) 1 SCC 471: 2000 SCC (Cri) 263, followed [3232] — S. 313 — Failure to afford opportunity to explain incriminating circumstances appearing in prosecution evidence against the accused persons resulting in serious prejudice to them — Held, their acquittal for the offence under S. 210, IPC, in peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, does not call for any interference by the Supreme Court — Constitution of India — Article 136 (Para 13). State of M.P. v. Shyamsunder Trivedi, (1995) 4 SCC 262: 1995 SCC (Cri) 715.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1995]

[3233] — S. 313 — Failure of court to examine accused on certain aspects — Consequences, if any, where no prejudice is caused to accused — Held, evidence cannot be excluded in such a situation

The facts of each case have to be examined but the broad principle is that all incriminating material circumstances must be put to an accused while recording his statement under Section 313 of the Code, but if any material circumstance has been left out that would not ipso facto result in the exclusion of that evidence from consideration unless it could further be shown by the accused that prejudice and miscarriage of justice had been sustained by him. In the present case, not only were the questions pertaining to the helmet and the ligature marks on the neck put to the doctor and even in a way to the appellant but the defence counsel had raised comprehensive arguments on these core issues not only before the trial court and the High Court but before the Supreme Court as well. The defence was, therefore, alive to the circumstances against the appellant. No prejudice or miscarriage of justice has, thus, been occasioned. (Para 92). Santosh Kumar Singh v. State, (2010) 9 SCC 747.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-10-2010]

Asraf Ali v. State of Assam, (2008) 16 SCC 328: (2010) 4 SCC (Cri) 278; Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116: 1984 SCC (Cri) 487; Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60; Kashmira Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1952 SC 159: 1952 Cri LJ 839; Ashish Batham v. State of M.P., (2002) 7 SCC 317: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1718, relied on

Ishwar Singh v. State of U.P., (1976) 4 SCC 355: 1976 SCC (Cri) 629, distinguished

S. Harnam Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1976) 2 SCC 819: 1976 SCC (Cri) 324; Bejoy Chand Patra v. State of W.B., AIR 1952 SC 105: 1952 Cri LJ 644; Rama Shankar Singh v. State of W.B., AIR 1962 SC 1239: (1962) 2 Cri LJ 296, cited

[3234] — S. 313 — Failure to draw accused's attention to inculpatory material to enable him to explain it — Held, by itself does not vitiate the proceedings — Prejudice, if any, caused to the accused must be established by him — It is also open to the appellate court to call upon the counsel for the accused to show the explanation which accused had to offer — On facts, held, in a food adulteration case, no prejudice had occasioned to the accused on omission to put the contents of the certificate of Director, Central Food Laboratory while recording his statement under S. 313 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 13 and 20

Where an omission, to bring the attention of the accused to an inculpatory material has occurred, that does not ipso facto vitiate the proceedings. The accused must show that failure of justice was occasioned by such omission. Further, in the event of an inculpatory material not having been put to the accused, the appellate court can always make good that lapse by calling upon the counsel for the accused to show what explanation the accused has as regards the circumstances established against the accused but not put to him. (Para 13)

In the present case both the Sessions Judge and the High Court were wrong in concluding that the omission to put the contents of the certificate of the Director, Central Food Laboratory, could only result in the accused being acquitted. The accused had to show that some prejudice was caused to him by the report not being put to him. Even otherwise, it was the duty of the Sessions Judge and/or the High Court, if they found that some vital circumstance had not been put to the accused, to put those questions to the counsel for the accused and get the answers of the accused. If the accused could not give any plausible or reasonable explanation it would have to be assumed that there was no explanation. Both the Sessions Judge and the High Court have overlooked this position of law and failed to perform their duties and thereby wrongly acquitted the accused. (Para 14)

Further, in all these cases, the copy of the certificate of the Director, Central Food Laboratory had been supplied to the accused. They were thus aware of the contents of the certificate. Under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act the prosecution is based upon the contents of either the report of the Public Analyst or the certificate of the Director of Central Food Laboratory. During their examination, under Section 313 CrPC, questions pertaining to the certificate were put to the accused. The explanation of the accused, in respect of the certificate, had been called for. In such cases it is enough if the attention of the accused is brought to the report or the certificate, as the case may be. It is not necessary that the contents of the report be also put to the accused. The questions put to the accused in these cases clearly indicated that what was being put to the accused were the contents of the certificate. The accused clearly understood that what was being put to them was the contents of the certificate. The accused gave their answers to the contents of the certificate. Clearly no prejudice had been caused to them. Before the Supreme Court also it could not be shown that any prejudice had been caused to them. (Paras 15 and 18). State (Delhi Admn.) v. Dharampal, (2001) 10 SCC 372: AIR 2001 SC 2924.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-10-2001]

Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, relied on [3235] — S. 313 — Failure to draw accused's attention to inculpatory material, to enable him to explain it, in examination of accused under S. 313 — Murder of wife — Incriminating circumstances against accused husband were that he was last seen in the company of deceased, he giving a false statement about cause of death and torn piece of a shirt and buttons found at the scene of offence matched with the shirt seized from house of accused — As in this case death of the deceased came to light sometime early in the morning, a report was thereafter lodged and investigation commenced, held, the circumstance that accused was last seen in the company of deceased at 4 p.m. on the earlier day reduces its significance — Statement made by accused's father to Sarpanch that his son had informed him that deceased had died after consuming pesticide (when medical evidence conclusively established that deceased was battered and her neck was pressed with great force), not admissible being hit by rule against hearsay evidence and therefore, cannot be relied upon by prosecution to prove that accused had given a fake explanation as regards the cause of death — Lastly, no evidence was led by the prosecution to connect the torn shirt pocket with the shirt recovered, nor any evidence could be adduced to establish that the piece of cloth found at the scene of occurrence was really a part of the shirt recovered, nor the incriminating circumstance about recovery of the pocket of the shirt worn by accused at the time of committing the alleged offence was found at the scene of occurrence, was put to the accused in his examination under S. 313 CrPC — Held, the incriminating circumstances cannot be relied upon to convict the accused under S. 302 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 60 — Circumstantial Evidence, S. 302 (Paras 8 to 12). State of A.P. v. Patnam Anandam, (2005) 9 SCC 237: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1225: AIR 2005 SC 764: 2005 Cri LJ 894.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-12-2004]

[3236] — S. 313 — False statement by accused — Effect — Held, cannot take place of proof though it may be an additional circumstance against the accused

The falsity of the defence cannot take the place of proof of facts which the prosecution has to establish in order to succeed. A false plea may be considered as an additional circumstance if other circumstances proved and established point out the guilt of the accused. Tanviben Pankajkumar Divetia v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 156: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1004: AIR 1997 SC 2193: 1997 Cri LJ 2535: (1997) 1 Guj LH 851: (1997) 2 Guj LR 1346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1997]

Shankarlal Gyarasilal Dixit v. State of Maharashtra, (1981) 2 SCC 35: 1981 SCC (Cri) 315, followed [3237] — S. 313 — Important incriminating circumstance not put to accused during his examination under — Effect — Held, it disentitled the prosecution from placing reliance on the said piece of evidence — Accused need not establish the prejudice caused to him by such default on the part of prosecution as the same was quite apparent (Para 9). Kuldip Singh v. State of Delhi, (2003) 12 SCC 528: AIR 2004 SC 771: (2004) 109 DLT 190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2003]

Kuldip Singh v. State, (2003) 103 DLT 69, reversed

[3238] — S. 313 — Improper examination of accused under S. 313 — Allegation regarding, has to be considered from the angle whether any prejudice was caused to the accused thereby — If there is any error on this account that can also be corrected by the Reference Court by again examining the accused (Per Wadhwa, J.) (Para 540). State v. Nalini, (1999) 5 SCC 253: 1999 SCC (Cri) 691: AIR 1999 SC 2640: 1999 Cri LJ 3124.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[1], D.P. Wadhwa[2] and S.S.M. Quadri[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1999]

[3239] — S. 313 — Incriminating circumstances against the accused stated by the approver in his testimony must be put to the accused in course of the accused's examination under S. 313

The incriminating circumstances in the evidence of the approver appearing against the appellant should have been put to the appellant in her examination under S. 313 CrPC. Appellant was not afforded an opportunity to submit an explanation to it. That part of the evidence must for that reason, be excluded from consideration. Appellant, in the circumstances, would be entitled to benefit of doubt. Balwant Kaur v. UT, Chandigarh, (1988) 1 SCC 1: 1988 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 1988 SC 139: 1988 Cri LJ 398.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-11-1987]

[3240] — S. 313 — Non-compliance with — Effect — Need for prejudice to accused — Failure to draw accused's attention to inculpatory material — Attention of accused not drawn to contents of forensic report — Held, the same does not vitiate the judgment of conviction and sentence as accused was not prejudiced thereby (Para 28). Yuvaraj Ambar Mohite v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 12 SCC 512: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 554: (2006) 48 AIC 673 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-10-2006]

State (Delhi Admn.) v. Dharampal, (2001) 10 SCC 372: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1012; State of Punjab v. Swaran Singh, (2005) 6 SCC 101: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1359, relied on [3241] — S. 313 — Non-compliance with procedure regarding recording of statement of accused under S. 313 alleged — Unless material prejudice is shown to have been caused, challenge to conviction based on procedural non-compliance of S. 313 made for the first time in appeal before Supreme Court cannot be entertained — Prosecution strongly relying upon ocular evidence of eyewitnesses and relevant questions with reference to the evidence of the witnesses of such nature that, if found acceptable, conviction could be sustained unless prejudice shown to have been caused to the accused — No such prejudice demonstrated before Supreme Court — Held, trial cannot be said to have been vitiated on ground of non-compliance with S. 313. Shobhit Chamar v. State of Bihar, (1998) 3 SCC 455: 1998 SCC (Cri) 790: AIR 1998 SC 1693.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-3-1998]

Tara Singh v. State, AIR 1951 SC 441: 1951 SCR 729; Ajmer Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 76: 1953 SCR 418; State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705; Bhalinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 SCC 726: 1994 SCC (Cri) 462, distinguished

[3242] — S. 313 — Non-examination of accused — Effect — Question of prejudice to the accused, held, is relevant in case of defective examination and not when there is no examination at all — Appellate court may either examine the accused itself or direct retrial of case confined to the stage of recording of statement of the accused — Direction for retrial of entire case by framing de novo charges improper

Section 313 CrPC prescribes a procedural safeguard for an accused facing the trial to be granted an opportunity to explain the facts and circumstances appearing against him in the prosecution's evidence. That opportunity is a valuable one and cannot be ignored. It is not a case of defective examination under Section 313 CrPC where the question of prejudice may be examined but a case of no examination at all under Section 313 CrPC and as such the question whether or not the appellants have been prejudiced on account of that omission is really of no relevance. It was open to the High Court to have either examined the accused, whose statements under Section 313 CrPC had not been recorded, itself under Section 313 CrPC and then proceeded with the hearing of the appeal or directed retrial of the case confined to the stage of recording of the statements of the appellants under Section 313 CrPC but it was not justified to order the retrial of the entire case by framing de novo charges and examining afresh prosecution evidence. The direction of the High Court to that extent cannot be sustained. (Para 5)

Order of the High Court is liable to be set aside to the extent it directs retrial of the case from the stage of framing of the charges and confine the retrial of the case to the stage of the recording of the statements of the appellants, whose statements have not been recorded under Section 313 CrPC. After recording their statements and the defence evidence, if any, the trial court shall pass fresh orders in accordance with law on the basis of the prosecution evidence already on the record and the defence evidence, if any, which the appellants may lead after their examination under Section 313 CrPC. (Para 6). Janak Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1999) 9 SCC 125: 1999 SCC (Cri) 558.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-1996]

[3243] — S. 313 — Presence of accused in court while examination under — Necessity of — Held, general rule is that the accused must answer the questions by being personally present in court — Only in exceptional circumstances the said rule can be departed from/ dispensed with — Accused (Chief Minister of State), though present in city, dispensed with personal appearance in court on the ground of her physical condition — Questionnaire sent to her and answered — Held, that was a ploy adopted to circumvent the due process of law — Grant of said exemption in absence of any exceptional exigency or circumstances, held, not proper — Basavaraj case, (2000) 8 SCC 740, explained and distinguished — Conduct of Public Prosecutor in not opposing such a frivolous application, deprecated (Para 32). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882: AIR 2004 SC 524: 2004 Cri LJ 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, explained and distinguished [3244] — S. 313 — Presence of the accused at the time of incident — Misinterpretation of admission by accused — High Court wrongly interpreting the English translation of the accused's statement to come to a conclusion that the accused had admitted that he was present at the time the incident took place — Accused's statement excluded from being a circumstance against him. Siddaiah v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 10 SCC 224.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-2002]

[3245] — S. 313 — Probative value of statements obtained under — Held, statements under S. 313 cannot form the sole basis of conviction; but the effect thereof may be considered in the light of other evidence brought on record (Para 34). Bishnu Prasad Sinha v. State of Assam, (2007) 11 SCC 467: AIR 2007 SC 848: (2007) 53 AIC 166 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1145.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-2007]

Mohan Singh v. Prem Singh, (2002) 10 SCC 236: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1514; State of U.P. v. Lakhmi, (1998) 4 SCC 336: 1998 SCC (Cri) 929; Rattan Singh v. State of H.P., (1997) 4 SCC 161: 1997 SCC (Cri) 525, relied on [3246] — S. 313 — Purpose of — Effect of not explaining fact within exclusive knowledge of accused — Held, the said section affords the accused an opportunity of offering an explanation of incriminating circumstances appearing in prosecution evidence against him — Though it is not necessary for the accused to speak and explain, yet when the case rests on circumstantial evidence the failure of the accused to offer any satisfactory explanation for his possession of the stolen property though not an incriminating circumstance by itself would yet enable an inference being raised against him because the fact being in the exclusive knowledge of the accused it was for him to have offered an explanation which he failed to do — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 106 (Para 15). Ganesh Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (2002) 1 SCC 731: 2002 SCC (Cri) 247: 2002 Cri LJ 967.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-10-2001]

Earabhadrappa v. State of Karnataka, (1983) 2 SCC 330: 1983 SCC (Cri) 447; Gulab Chand v. State of M.P., (1995) 3 SCC 574: 1995 SCC (Cri) 552, relied on

[3247] — S. 313 — Purpose of asking questions during examination under

The purpose of asking questions during examination under Section 313 CrPC is to afford the accused personally an opportunity of explaining any incriminating circumstance so appearing in evidence against him. The accused may or may not avail the opportunity for offering his explanation. The accused did not avail the opportunity and stood short by simply stating that the statement of the cinema-owner that he was on leave on the fateful day was not correct. The accused has not stated during his statement under Section 313 CrPC and nowhere suggested during cross-examination of prosecution witnesses that at the time of the incident he was at a place wherefrom he could not have reached the place of the offence on the date and at the time of its commission. (Para 20). Subhash Chand v. State of Rajasthan, (2002) 1 SCC 702: 2002 SCC (Cri) 256.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-10-2001]

[3248] — S. 313 — Purpose of asking questions during examination of accused under — Effect of omission, if any — Trial when vitiated — Held, as part of fair trial, S. 313 requires giving opportunity to accused to give his explanation regarding circumstance appearing against him — Purpose behind it is to enable accused to explain those circumstances — It is not necessary to put entire prosecution evidence to accused and elicit answers but only those circumstances which are adverse to accused and his explanation would help the court in evaluating evidence properly — Circumstances are to be put to accused and not the conclusion — It is not an idle formality and questioning must be fair and couched in a form intelligible to accused — But an omission will not necessarily vitiate trial — Trial would be vitiated only when on facts it is found that an omission had occasioned a failure of justice — In present case there was no omission re S. 313 as contended by accused (Paras 21 to 24). Dharampal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2010) 9 SCC 608.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-9-2010]

State of Punjab v. Hari Singh, (2009) 4 SCC 200: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 243, distinguished

[3249] — S. 313 — Questioning of accused under — Nature of questions to be asked — Held, generally, composite questions should not be asked bundling so many facts together — Questions must be such that any reasonable person in the position of the accused may be in a position to give a rational explanation to the questions as had been asked

The questioning of the accused is done to enable him to explain any circumstances which have come out in the evidence against him. It may be noticed that the entire evidence is recorded in his presence and he is given full opportunity to cross-examine each and every witness examined on the prosecution side. He is given copies of all documents which are sought to be relied on by the prosecution. Apart from all these, as part of fair trial the accused is given opportunity to give his explanation regarding the evidence adduced by the prosecution. However, it is not necessary that the entire prosecution evidence need be put to him and answers elicited from the accused. If there were circumstances in the evidence which are adverse to the accused and his explanation would help the court in evaluating the evidence properly, the court should bring the same to the notice of the accused to enable him to give any explanation or answers for such adverse circumstance in the evidence. There shall not be failure of justice on account of an unfair trial. (Para 10). State of Punjab v. Swaran Singh, (2005) 6 SCC 101: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1359: AIR 2005 SC 3114: 2005 Cri LJ 3445.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2005]

[3250] — S. 313 — Questioning of accused under — Purpose of, held, is to give an opportunity to accused to explain the circumstances adverse to him in the evidence adduced by prosecution — However, it is not necessary that entire prosecution evidence need be put to accused and answers elicited from him — If explanation to adverse circumstances would help the court in evaluating the evidence properly, the court should bring the same to the notice of the accused to enable him to give the explanation — There should not be failure of justice on account of an unfair trial — Recovery of opium — Conviction under NDPS Act — Evidence of PWs 1 and 4 not specifically put to accused while being examined under S. 313 — Hence, High Court acquitting accused on ground that evidence of said PWs could not be used against him — Accused not in any way prejudiced by failure to put said evidence to him — Evidence of said PWs recorded in presence of accused — Despite having opportunity, accused failed to cross-examine PWs 1 and 4 in respect of the facts deposed by them — Case against accused clearly established — On such facts, held, acquittal by High Court on the aforesaid ground not sustainable — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 18

In the instant case, the accused was not in any way prejudiced by not giving him an opportunity to answer specifically regarding the evidence of PW 1 and PW 4. If at all, the evidence of PW 1 and PW 4 was recorded in his presence, he had the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses but he did not specifically cross-examine these two witnesses in respect of the facts deposed by them. The learned Single Judge seriously erred in holding that the evidence of PW 1 and PW 4 could not have been used against the accused. The acquittal of the accused was improper as the evidence in this case clearly established that the accused was in possession of 5 kg of opium and thereby committed the offence under Section 18 of the NDPS Act. (Para 15). State of Punjab v. Swaran Singh, (2005) 6 SCC 101: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1359: AIR 2005 SC 3114: 2005 Cri LJ 3445.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2005]

(1997) 1 CCC 488 (P&H), reversed

State (Delhi Admn.) v. Dharampal, (2001) 10 SCC 372: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1012; Jai Dev v. State of Punjab, (1963) 3 SCR 489: AIR 1963 SC 612: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 495; Bakhshish Singh Dhaliwal v. State of Punjab, (1967) 1 SCR 211: AIR 1967 SC 752: 1967 Cri LJ 656; Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033, relied on

[3251] — S. 313 — Questions put to accused under — Relevance of — Imperative duty of court in relation to — Omission by court regarding — Need for accused to prove prejudice on account thereof — Held, S. 313 makes it obligatory for court to question accused on evidence and circumstances against him so as to offer accused opportunity to explain the same — But, it would not be enough for accused to show that he has not been questioned or examined on a particular circumstance — Instead, he must show that such non-examination has actually and materially prejudiced him and has resulted in failure of justice (Paras 21 to 30)

An accused can be questioned under Section 313 CrPC only for the purpose of enabling him personally to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. No matter how weak or scanty the prosecution evidence is in regard to certain incriminating material, it is the duty of the court to examine the accused and seek his explanation on incriminating material which has surfaced against him. (Para 21)

Section 313 CrPC is based on the fundamental principle of fairness. The attention of the accused must specifically be brought to inculpatory pieces of evidence to give him an opportunity to offer an explanation if he chooses to do so. Therefore, the court is under a legal obligation to put the incriminating circumstances before the accused and solicit his response. This provision is mandatory in nature and casts an imperative duty on the court and confers a corresponding right on the accused to have an opportunity to offer an explanation for such incriminatory material appearing against him. Circumstances which were not put to the accused in his examination under Section 313 CrPC cannot be used against him and have to be excluded from consideration. (Paras 22 and 23)

If any appellate court or revisional court comes across the fact that the trial court had not put any question to an accused, even if it is of a vital nature, such an omission alone should not result in the setting aside of the conviction and sentence as an inevitable consequence. An inadequate examination cannot be presumed to have caused prejudice. Every error or omission in compliance with the provisions of Section 313 CrPC, does not necessarily vitiate trial. Such errors fall within the category of curable irregularities and the question as to whether the trial is vitiated, in each case depends upon the degree of error and upon whether prejudice has been or is likely to have been caused to the accused. Efforts should be made to undo or correct the lapse. (Para 24)

Thus, the provisions of Section 313 CrPC make it obligatory for the court to question the accused on the evidence and circumstances against him so as to offer the accused an opportunity to explain the same. But, it would not be enough for the accused to show that he has not been questioned or examined on a particular circumstance. Instead, he must show that such non-examination has actually and materially prejudiced him and has resulted in the failure of justice. In other words, in the event of an inadvertent omission on the part of the court to question the accused on any incriminating circumstance, cannot ipso facto vitiate the trial, unless it is shown that some material prejudice was caused to the accused by the omission of the court. (Paras 25 to 30). Paramjeet Singh v. State of Uttarakhand, (2010) 10 SCC 439.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-9-2010]

Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116: 1984 SCC (Cri) 487; State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705; S. Harnam Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1976) 2 SCC 819: 1976 SCC (Cri) 324; Wasim Khan v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 400: 1956 Cri LJ 790; Bhoor Singh v. State of Punjab, (1974) 4 SCC 754: 1974 SCC (Cri) 664; Labhchand Dhanpat Singh Jain v. State of Maharashtra, (1975) 3 SCC 385: 1975 SCC (Cri) 11; State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33; Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 189: 2005 SCC (Cri) 113; Asraf Ali v. State of Assam, (2008) 16 SCC 328: (2010) 4 SCC (Cri) 278; Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; Ganesh Gogoi v. State of Assam, (2009) 7 SCC 404: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 421; Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87; Sk. Maqsood v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 583: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 82; Ranvir Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2009) 6 SCC 595: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 92; Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60, relied on [3252] — S. 313 — Reliance on inculpatory part of statement when exculpatory part falsified — Statement of accused police official that the deceased party started firing at police party which necessitated the opening of fire by the police party itself — Evidence on record falsifying first part of the statement of the accused police official — Second part of his statement can be utilised as an admission — However, other accused police officials not bound by such admission — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 17 and 24. Brijlala Pd. Sinha v. State of Bihar, (1998) 5 SCC 699: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1382: AIR 1998 SC 2443: 1998 Cri LJ 3611.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-1998]

[3253] — S. 313 — Reliance on inculpatory portion of statement of accused. Keshoram Bora v. State of Assam, (1978) 2 SCC 407: 1978 SCC (Cri) 219: AIR 1978 SC 1096: 1978 Cri LJ 1089: (1978) 26 BLJR 8.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-1978]

See 'Criminal Procedure Code, 1898', S. 342

[3254] — S. 313 — Purpose of, restated — Appellant contending that conviction and sentence stood vitiated by reason of non-compliance with provisions of S. 313 — Sustainability — Held, as all material evidence brought on record by prosecution was brought to appellant's notice, it was not shown as to how he was prejudiced — He could have given his side of story proving his defence on the basis of material brought on record — Contention, thus, unsustainable

The entire prosecution case was based on documentary evidence as also the material objects which had been seized. The seizure witnesses, namely, PWs 1 and 2 might have been declared hostile, but the seizure memos had duly been proved. The seized documents had also been proved. The appellant maintaining the said documents, when discrepancies occurring therein were pointed out to him, it was for him to explain the same. (Para 17)

The appellant did not adduce any evidence in defence. It has not been denied or disputed that the seized kerosene oil had been put in the custody of the son of the appellant. The son was examined as a prosecution witness as PW 5. The appellant also accepted the said fact. Thus, the amount of kerosene which had been seized and kept in the custody of his son has not been denied or disputed. (Para 18)

Contention of the appellant that the trial court should have specifically put the prosecution case to the appellant under Section 313 CrPC that the stock register did not contain any entry of 502 litres does not appear to be correct. The prosecution case based on the basic primary material which the prosecution had brought on record, namely, raid in the shop, the stock of kerosene oil found, the seizure of the display board, stock register, cash memo, etc., had been put to him. Apart from making a bald denial that measurement had not been taken or that no measurement chart had been prepared he had not explained the discrepancies in the stock or non-display thereof. (Para 19)

As all the material evidence brought on record by the prosecution had been brought to the appellant's notice, it has not been shown as to how he was prejudiced, particularly when his son was examined as a witneSs. He could have given his side of the story which, according to him, could have proved his defence, on the basis of the material brought on record. Submission of the appellant that the judgment of conviction and sentence stands vitiated by reason of non-compliance with the provisions of Section 313 CrPC, thus, cannot be accepted. (Paras 19 and 20). Harendra Nath Chakraborty v. State of W.B., (2009) 2 SCC 758.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-12-2008]

State of Punjab v. Swaran Singh, (2005) 6 SCC 101: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1359, relied on

Vikramjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 306: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 732, distinguished

[3255] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Mandatory nature of — Purpose/Necessity of — Effect of non-compliance with S. 313 even in trial involving a most gruesome and horrifying mass murder — Held, requirement under S. 313 is not an empty formality — In the instant case neither any incriminating material, nor any accusation specifically put to accused in his examination under S. 313 — While noting with concern and regret lapse on part of trial court in not indicating incriminating material to accused, held, in such circumstances impugned judgment convicting accused liable to be set aside (Paras 8 to 11)

On the day of occurrence at about 8 a.m. informant along with several other persons reached diar side of River Ganges in a boat. Some persons alighted from the boat and had proceeded to some distance when some criminals alighted from a small boat and asked them to stop. When their command was not heeded to, they started firing and one such shot hit PW 1. The criminals thereafter caught hold of D-1, D-2 and D-3, and brought them near the boat of informant. Near the boat D-1 was shot dead by A-1; D-2 by A-2; and D-3 by A-3. The dead bodies were then loaded on informant's boat. Some of the criminals boarded informant's boat, while others boarded the small boat and sailed inside the river. The dead bodies were beheaded, their stomachs slit open, and cut parts thrown into the river. One D-4 was also shot dead by A-2 as a lesson on ground that he had filed certain criminal cases against the assailants.

The cause of occurrence as stated in fardbeyan was that A-2 had taken possession of several lands of the village, and the villagers wanted their lands to be measured and demarcated. So being angered, the accused committed the ghastly incident.

The defence of accused was that police were inimical to main accused, A-2 whose father was killed by ASP and a case in this connection was filed. A-3 and A-1 were employees of A-2 and hence were falsely implicated. The police were pressurising the accused to withdraw case of murder filed against police officials.

The trial court held that the prosecution version lacked credibility and, therefore, directed acquittal. On appeal the High Court held that there was improper analysis of the evidence and accordingly held that the acquittal was not proper. Therefore A-2 i.e. present appellant and A-3 were sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life for the offence punishable under Section 302 of the Penal Code, 1860.

The present appeal relates to A-2. Though various points were urged in respect of the appeal, the primary stand was that incriminating materials were not put to A-2 in examination under Section 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. Allowing the appeal on the said ground, the Supreme Court held as above. Ranvir Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2009) 6 SCC 595.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

Ajay Singh v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 12 SCC 341; Tara Singh v. State, AIR 1951 SC 441; Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468, applied

[3256] — S. 313 — Examination of accused — Non-putting of appropriate question — Effect of — The appellant convicted under S. 302 IPC — However, in the examination under S. 313 no question was put to the accused which established that he was the author of the crime — Held, the conviction cannot be maintained, and is set aside (Para 9). Sk. Maqsood v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-2009]

Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468, Tara Singh v. State, AIR 1951 SC 441; Ajay Singh v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 12 SCC 341, followed

[3257] — S. 313 — Factors vitiating trial — Putting unfair/irrelevant questions under S. 313 CrPC to accused, held, is a factor vitiating the trial — Provisions of S. 313 CrPC, further held, are not meant to nail the accused to his disadvantage but are meant for his benefit — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, S. 3(2)(i)

It was totally unfair on the part of the Court to put a question to the appellant-accused under Section 313 CrPC that witnesses were deposing that he was a member of ULFA. It does not appear that any witness has deposed that the appellant is a member of ULFA. Therefore, it is a very unfair question. (Paras 19 and 17)

The provisions of Section 313 are for the benefit of the accused and are there to give the accused an opportunity to explain the "circumstances appearing in the evidence against him". Those provisions are not meant to nail the accused to his disadvantage but are meant for his benefit. These provisions are based on the statutory principles of natural justice and the maxim "audi alteram partem" has been enshrined in them. Therefore, the examination under Section 313 has to be of utmost fairness. But that has not been done here. This is also a factor vitiating the trial. (Para 20). Ganesh Gogoi v. State of Assam, (2009) 7 SCC 404: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 421: (2009) 80 AIC 267 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-7-2009]

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, relied on [3258] — S. 313 — Non-compliance with — Effect — Held, questioning of accused under S. 313 is not an empty formality — Essence of accusation has to be brought to notice of accused while examining under S. 313 — Trial court convicting respondents under NDPS Act, 1985 for conscious possession of 16 bags of poppy husk — Conscious possession of contraband material though evident, but no question relating to possession put to accused — Effect — Held, the omission vitally affects prosecution case — High Court rightly set aside conviction — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 15 (Paras 16 and 18). State of Punjab v. Hari Singh, (2009) 4 SCC 200.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-2009]

Keya Mukherjee v. Magma Leasing Ltd., (2008) 8 SCC 447; Avtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 7 SCC 419: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1769, followed

Hari Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 1 Rec Cri R 738 (P&H), affirmed

[3259] — S. 313 — Personal examination of accused under — Object and necessity of — Failure to examine the accused properly under — Effect of, on trial and conviction — In the present case, alleged confessional statement of accused were the inculpatory materials against them — Those incriminating materials not brought to notice of accused while examining them under S. 313 — Held, acquittal as recorded by High Court suffers from no infirmity to warrant interference — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 8, 21 and 41(2) — Customs Act, 1962, S. 110

On 1-7-1995 at about 4.15 a.m. Army patrolling party, on the other side of the village near DCB end point, noticed suspicious movement of some infiltrators who on being challenged abandoned some suspicious materials and escaped under the cover of darkneSs. On receipt of this information, the Customs staff camping at the other side of the village rushed to the spot. Both the Army authorities and the Customs staff, found some suspicious materials on spot in two salwars and a plastic bag left abandoned in the field near DCB end point. They called two panchas from the area and the three packages found lying abandoned in the field were opened in their presence from which 56 packets of light brown powder, each weighing one kilogram were recovered and seized by the Customs staff under Section 110 of the Customs Act, 1962. Apart from that, one pair of chappals and two pairs of shoes, total three footwear were also recovered from the spot. Recovered material appeared to be some narcotic drug in packets and in yellow brownish paper kept in polythene bags wrapped in cotton cloth bearing stamp marking in Urdu. It was subjected to drug test by the Customs staff with U.N. Drug test kit and it was confirmed that the material was contraband morphine-heroin or its derivative. Recovery-cum-seizure memo of the heroin was prepared and panchnama was drawn on the spot. The samples were taken out of the seized material and sent for chemical analysis to FSL, which in its report revealed that diactyl morphine-heroin was found present in the samples taken out of the recovered light brown powder.

The identity of infiltrators was established through the secret information report recorded prior to the seizure. It was disclosed that the names of two suspects were H and Y. Recovery of three packages and three pairs of footwear were made from the spot indicated that a third person was also accompanying the two infiltrators. Y was summoned by the Superintendent, Customs under Section 108 of the Customs Act. He appeared before him and made confessional statement involving himself in smuggling of heroin and was thereupon arrested. In his voluntary statement of confession, he disclosed the names of two accomplices, namely, H and P and narrated the sequence of events of fetching fifty-six kilogram of heroin at Indo-Pak Border and its carriage up to the village and on its detection by the Army patrol, it led to his escape from the scene after abandoning the material and three pairs of footwear. He also confessed that he was being paid by H and P for carriage of contraband articles. Similarly, accused H also came to be intercepted by the Customs staff, and he made voluntary statement to the same effect. He confessed that he was being paid for carriage of the material. P did not appear before the Customs Authorities. Complaint was presented before the Sessions Judge (Special Judge) by the Inspector of Customs. The third accused was proceeded against separately.

The trial court after appreciating the evidence led by the parties came to the conclusion that the accused have committed the offences punishable under Sections 8 and 21 of the NDPS Act and recorded conviction and imposed sentence. In appeal two stands were taken. First related to non-compliance with Section 41(2) of the Act and the other related to not putting the alleged incriminating materials to the accused while the statement was recorded under Section 342 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure or Section 313 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure. The High Court found substance in the second plea and directed acquittal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

It is to be noted that the High Court did not accept the stand relating to non-compliance with Section 41(2) of the NDPS Act. It only interfered on the ground that the relevant incriminating materials were not put to the accused when they were being examined. It is to be noted that in the instant case there was no reference to any of the incriminating materials. If the foundation of the prosecution case was the alleged confession before the Customs Authorities, that material was not brought to the notice of the accused persons. Above being the position, there is no infirmity in the impugned judgment to warrant interference. (Paras 13, 16 and 17). Inspector of Customs v. Yashpal, (2009) 4 SCC 769.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, D.K. Jain and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-3-2009]

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87; Keya Mukherjee v. Magma Leasing Ltd., (2008) 8 SCC 447: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 537, relied on [3260] — S. 313 — Right of accused under — General denials by accused and non-explanation of suspicious circumstances — Rape and murder of a minor girl of 10 years — If a rarest of rare case — Mitigating circumstances — General denials by accused and non-explanation of suspicious circumstances — Effect on severity of sentence (per Ganguly, J.)

Per Ganguly, J.

The High Court cannot accept one part of the statement to the total non-consideration of the other part in which the appellant has retracted his confession. In a case where death penalty has been imposed, the High Court is expected to consider the evidence with greater care and circumspection. In para 13 of the High Court's judgment, the High Court merely referred to the general denials by the appellant in the course of his examination under Section 313 CrPC and held that the non-explanation of the suspicious circumstances under which the deceased had died will be treated as an additional link against the appellant. (Paras 56 and 55). Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 5 SCC 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat[1] and A.K. Ganguly[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Megh Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 8 SCC 666: 2004 SCC (Cri) 58, relied on

[3261] — S. 313 — Right of accused under, to explain circumstances against him — Application — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 3 and 5 — Facts in issue and relevant facts not considered — Effect — Natural justice (per Ganguly, J.)

Per Ganguly, J.

The written statement which the accused gave and the court made it as an exhibit must be treated as part of his statement under Section 313 CrPC. It is true that when an extra-judicial confession is retracted by the accused, there is no inflexible rule that the court must accept the retraction. But if the court wants to reject the retraction, the court must give cogent reasons before such rejection. It does not appear that the High Court has given any reason for not accepting the retraction of the confession by the accused. The High Court dealt with the so-called extra-judicial confessions by the appellant and held that the second extra-judicial confession by the appellant before the police is hit by Section 25 of the Evidence Act. But about the retraction of his first extra-judicial confession in the written statement of the appellant, which is part of his Section 313 statement, there is no discussion in the judgment of the High Court. (Paras 52 to 54). Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 5 SCC 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat[1] and A.K. Ganguly[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87; Mohd. Azad v. State of W.B., (2008) 15 SCC 449, relied on

King Emperor v. Biseswar Dey, (1921-22) 26 CWN 1010, approved

[3262] — S. 313 — Statement made by accused under — Court cannot reject a part of the statement and use the other part as admission of the accused — Court should consider the whole statement as admission. Dwarka Prasad v. State of U.P., 1993 Supp (3) SCC 141: 1993 SCC (Cri) 882: (1993) 1 Crimes 975.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-1993]

[3263] — S. 313 — Object and scope — Use of statement made thereunder — Examination of accused by court must be only after completion of prosecution evidence — Accused may prefer not to answer the question put by court or to explain his conduct — But if he makes a false statement, court may draw adverse inference — Statement of accused under S. 313 cannot be regarded as substantive evidence but it can be used to corroborate prosecution case

The object of recording the statement of the accused under Section 313 CrPC is to put all incriminating evidence to the accused so as to provide him an opportunity to explain such incriminating circumstances appearing against him in the evidence of the prosecution. At the same time, also permit him to put forward his own version or reasons, if he so chooses, in relation to his involvement or otherwise in the crime. The dual purpose is sought to be achieved when the courts comply with the mandatory requirement of recording the statement of an accused under this provision. Firstly, every material piece of evidence which the prosecution proposes to use against the accused should be put to him in clear terms and secondly, the accused should have a fair chance to give his explanation in relation to that evidence as well as his own versions with regard to alleged involvement in the crime. This dual purpose has to be achieved in the interest of the proper administration of criminal justice and in accordance with the provisions of CrPC. (Paras 30 and 29)

The Court has been empowered to examine the accused but only after the prosecution evidence has been concluded. It is a mandatory obligation upon the Court and besides ensuring the compliance thereof, the Court has to keep in mind that the accused gets a fair chance to explain his conduct. The option lies with the accused to maintain silence coupled with simpliciter denial or, in the alternative, to explain his version and reasons, for his alleged involvement in the commission of crime. This is the statement which the accused makes without fear or right of the other party to cross-examine him. However, if the statements made are false, the Court is entitled to draw adverse inferences and pass consequential orders, as may be called for, in accordance with law. Once such a statement is recorded, the next question that has to be considered by the Court is to what extent and consequences such statement can be used during the enquiry and the trial. (Para 31)

The statement of the accused can be used to test the veracity of the exculpatory part of the admission, if any, made by the accused. It can be taken into consideration in any, enquiry or trial but still it is not strictly an evidence in the case. It can be used by the Court insofar as it corroborates the case of the prosecution. Section 313(4) CrPC explicitly provides that the answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such enquiry or trial and put in as evidence for or against the accused in any other enquiry or trial for any other offence for which, such answers may tend to show he has committed. In other words, the use of a statement under Section 313 CrPC as an evidence is permissible as per the provisions of the Code but has its own limitations. The Courts may rely on a portion of the statement of the accused and find him guilty in consideration of the other evidence against him led by the prosecution. However, such statements made under this section should not be considered in isolation but in conjunction with evidence adduced by the prosecution. Conviction of the accused cannot be based merely on the statement made under Section 313 CrPC as it cannot be regarded as a substantive piece of evidence. (Paras 32, 29 and 33)

From various answers given by the accused to the Court in his statement recorded under Section 313 CrPC, it appears that the death of the deceased by burning is not disputed. The limited question was whether the deceased committed suicide simpliciter for the reasons given by the accused or in the alternative, the prosecution story, that it was a dowry death relatable to the harassment and cruelty inflicted upon her by the accused and his family members, is correct. (Para 34). Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2010) 12 SCC 350: AIR 2010 SC 2839: 2010 Cri LJ 4402: (2010) 93 AIC 129 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. B.S. Chauhan and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-7-2010]

Vijendrajit Ayodhya Prasad Goel v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 247: 1953 Cri LJ 1097, relied on

[3264] — S. 313 — Statement made by accused under — Nature of — Held, not a substantive piece of evidence or a substitute for the evidence of the prosecution — It could certainly be taken aid of to lend credence to the evidence led by the prosecution — But only a part of such statement cannot be made the sole basis of conviction — Statement under S. 313 can either be relied in whole or in part — Where the prosecution evidence disbelieved and the exculpatory part of the statement of the accused under S. 313 not rejected outright as false, held, the inculpatory part of the statement of the accused under S. 313 could not be the sole basis of his conviction

The statement made in defence by the accused under Section 313 CrPC can certainly be taken aid of to lend credence to the evidence led by the prosecution, but only a part of such statement under Section 313 CrPC cannot be made the sole basis of his conviction. The law on the subject is almost settled that statement under Section 313 CrPC of the accused can either be relied on in whole or in part. It may also be possible to rely on the inculpatory part of the statement of the accused if the exculpatory part is found to be false on the basis of the evidence led by the prosecution. The statement of the accused under Section 313 CrPC is not a substantive piece of evidence. It can be used for appreciating evidence led by the prosecution to accept or reject it. It is, however, not a substitute for the evidence of the prosecution. If the exculpatory part of the statement of the accused is found to be false and the evidence led by the prosecution is reliable, the inculpatory part of his statement can be taken aid of to lend assurance to the evidence of the prosecution. If the prosecution evidence does not inspire confidence to sustain the conviction of the accused, the inculpatory part of his statement under Section 313 CrPC cannot be made the sole basis of his conviction. In the present case, the exculpatory part of the statement of the accused A-1 under Section 313 CrPC in which he stated that he was attacked by the deceased and his associate, whereupon the villagers rushed for his help and inflicted injuries on the deceased, cannot be outright rejected as false. The inculpatory part of his statement under Section 313 CrPC, therefore, to the extent of admission of his presence in the compound of A when the deceased was attacked, cannot form the sole basis of his conviction. (Paras 27, 30 and 31)

The alternative submission of the complainant that on the basis of the statement of the accused A-1 under Section 313 CrPC, he is liable to be convicted for exceeding his right of private defence under Section 304 IPC, cannot be accepted for the reasons mentioned above. (Para 32). Mohan Singh v. Prem Singh, (2002) 10 SCC 236: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1514: AIR 2002 SC 3582: 2003 Cri LJ 11: (2003) 1 CHN 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-10-2002]

Nishi Kant Jha v. State of Bihar, (1969) 1 SCC 347, followed

[3265] — S. 313 — Essential features — Statement made under — Use to which may be put — Particular relevance in cases based on circumstantial evidence — Guiding factors for proper application of S. 313 — Consequences which flow from S. 313

In cases of circumstantial evidence, particularly, besides the entire case of the prosecution, even the statement of the accused made under Section 313 CrPC can be of substantial help. (Para 11)

The object of recording the statement of the accused under Section 313 CrPC is to put all incriminating evidence against the accused so as to provide him an opportunity to explain such incriminating circumstances appearing against him in the evidence of the prosecution. At the same time, also to permit him to put forward his own version or reasons, if he so chooses, in relation to his involvement or otherwise in the crime. The court has been empowered to examine the accused but only after the prosecution evidence has been concluded. It is a mandatory obligation upon the court and besides ensuring the compliance therewith the court has to keep in mind that the accused gets a fair chance to explain his conduct. The option lies with the accused to maintain silence coupled with simpliciter denial or in the alternative to explain his version and reasons for his alleged involvement in the commission of crime. This is the statement which the accused makes without fear or right of the other party to cross-examine him. However, if the statements made are false, the court is entitled to draw adverse inferences and pass consequential orders, as may be called for, in accordance with law. The primary purpose is to establish a direct dialogue between the court and the accused and to put to the accused every important incriminating piece of evidence and grant him an opportunity to answer and explain. Once such a statement is recorded, the next question that has to be considered by the court is to what extent and consequences such statement can be used during the enquiry and the trial. (Para 13)

The statement of the accused can be used to test the veracity of the exculpatory nature of the admission, if any, made by the accused. It can be taken into consideration in any enquiry or trial but still it is not strictly evidence in the case. The provisions of Section 313(4) explicitly provide that the answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such enquiry or trial and put as evidence against the accused in any other enquiry or trial for any other offence for which such answers may tend to show he has committed. In other words, the use is permissible as per the provisions of the Code but has its own limitations. The courts may rely on a portion of the statement of the accused and find him guilty in consideration of the other evidence against him led by the prosecution, however, such statements made under this section should not be considered in isolation but in conjunction with evidence adduced by the prosecution. (Para 14)

The accused has admitted that the deceased was his wife and was living with him in the cabin. On the basis of the record, the High Court has also noticed the fact that the deceased had separated from her earlier husband and was living with the accused who was also staying away from his family. The villagers had objected to the accused living with the deceased in that manner. In these circumstances, the onus to explain the cause of death of the deceased was upon the husband. He did offer an explanation that she had committed suicide by burning herself but this explanation has been disbelieved. Another very material factor is that as per his own statement when he noticed that the deceased was still alive and her burnt body was lying just outside the cabin in the chilli plantation, he had taken the help of BH. He neither referred to the name of this person in his statement under Section 313 CrPC nor he examined this person as a witness. In the normal course, thus, it will have to be presumed that if this witness was produced and examined in court, he might have spoken the truth which was not suitable or favourable to the accused. For reasons best known and which remained unexplained, this witness was not examined though in his statement under Section 313 CrPC in answer to the last question he had stated that he was innocent and would give in writing whatever he wanted to say. Despite this, no defence was led by the appellant. (Para 24). Manu Sao v. State of Bihar, (2010) 12 SCC 310: (2010) 3 UPLJ 113 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. B.S. Chauhan and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2010]

Vijendrajit Ayodhya Prasad Goel v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 247: 1953 Cri LJ 1097; Ajay Singh v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 12 SCC 341: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 371; Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468: 1953 Cri LJ 1933, relied on

[3266] — S. 313 — Statement of accused recorded under — Use of — Inculpatory admissions — Held, cannot altogether be ignored merely because they were advanced as a defence strategy — Court to give weight to the answers given by the accused — However, they cannot be made sole basis for arriving at a finding of guilt of the accused

It cannot be said that statement of an accused recorded under Section 313 of the Code does not deserve any value or utility if it contains inculpatory admissions. The need of law for examining the accused with reference to incriminating circumstances appearing against him in prosecution evidence is not for observance of a ritual in a trial, nor is it a mere formality. It has a salutary purpose. It enables the court to be apprised of what the indicted person has to say about the circumstances pitted against him by the prosecution. Answers to the questions may sometimes be flat denial or outright repudiation of those circumstances. In certain cases the accused would offer some explanations to incriminative circumstances. In very rare instances the accused may even admit or own incriminating circumstances adduced against him, perhaps for the purpose of adopting legally recognised defences. In all such cases the court gets the advantage of knowing his version about those aspects and it helps the court to effectively appreciate and evaluate the evidence in the case. If an accused admits any incriminating circumstance appearing in evidence against him there is no warrant that those admissions should altogether be ignored merely on the ground that such admissions were advanced as a defence strategy.

Sub-section (4) of Section 313 contains necessary support to the legal position that answers given by the accused during such examination are intended to be considered by the court. The words "may be taken into consideration in such enquiry or trial" in sub-section (4) would amount to a legislative guideline for the court to give due weight to such answers, though it does not mean that such answers could be made the sole basis of any finding.

Answers given by the accused during examination under Section 313 can well be taken into consideration in deciding whether the prosecution evidence can be relied on, and whether the accused is liable to be convicted of the offences charged against him.

Answers of the accused, when they contain admission of circumstances against him are not by themselves, delinked from the evidence, be used for arriving at a finding that the accused had committed the offence. State of U.P. v. Lakhmi, (1998) 4 SCC 336: 1998 SCC (Cri) 929: AIR 1998 SC 1007: 1998 All LJ 680: 1998 Cri LJ 1411.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and M. Srinivasan, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-1998]

Sampat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1969) 1 SCC 367; Jethamal Pithaji v. Asstt. Collector of Customs, (1974) 3 SCC 393: 1973 SCC (Cri) 958; Rattan Singh v. State of H. P., (1997) 4 SCC 161: 1997 SCC (Cri) 525, relied on [3267] — S. 313 — Confession or admission made by accused under, held, can be relied on to convict him (Para 32). Dharnidhar v. State of U.P., (2010) 7 SCC 759.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. B.S. Chauhan and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-7-2010]

Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468: 1953 Cri LJ 1933; Narain Singh v. State of Punjab, (1964) 1 Cri LJ 730: (1963) 3 SCR 678; State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705, relied on [3268] — S. 313 — Statement of accused under — Reliance on inculpatory part of admission — Statement of accused that he was caught by village people who were chasing the dacoits and was taken to the village on suspicion — Inculpatory part of his admission that he was caught by the village people and that he made a confession before the Mukhia cannot be rejected merely because exculpatory part of his admission that he was arrested on suspicion is found to be false — General denial of his participation in dacoity could not set at naught admission of independent facts — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 24 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 396. State of Bihar v. Anirudh Thakur, (1998) 9 SCC 616: AIR 1998 SC 921.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-2-1998]

[3269] — S. 313 — Statement of accused recorded under — Evidentiary value — Held, answers given by accused to questions put under S. 313 are not per se evidence because they are not on oath, and prosecution does not get opportunity to cross-examine accused — Nevertheless, they are subject to consideration by court to limited extent of drawing an adverse inference against accused for any false answers voluntarily offered by him and to provide an additional/missing link in chain of circumstances to prove guilt of accused — In instant case, accused M had taken false pleas in reply to some of the questions put to him — Hence, adverse inference drawn against him (Paras 269 and 274). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-4-2010]

Pershadi v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 211: 1957 Cri LJ 328; State of M.P. v. Ratan Lal, AIR 1994 SC 458: 1994 Cri LJ 131; Anthony D'Souza v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 1 SCC 259: 2003 SCC (Cri) 292, relied on [3270] — S. 313 — Statement recorded under — Held, cannot be used for convicting the co-accused. Nareshkumar Harmanbhai Brahmbhatt v. State of Gujarat, (1996) 2 GCD 248 (SC): (1995) 2 Guj LH 441.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.M. Sahai and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-1-1995]

[3271] — S. 313 — Statement under — Nature of — Held, is not evidence — It is only the stand of the accused or version by way of explanation, when incriminating materials appearing against him are brought to his notice (Para 11). Devender Kumar Singla v. Baldev Krishan Singla, (2005) 9 SCC 15: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1185: AIR 2004 SC 3084: 2004 Cri LJ 1778.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-2004]

[3272] — S. 313 — Statement under, held, cannot be used to make up absence of any suggestion during cross-examination (Para 12). Devender Kumar Singla v. Baldev Krishan Singla, (2005) 9 SCC 15: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1185: AIR 2004 SC 3084: 2004 Cri LJ 1778.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-2004]

[3273] — Ss. 313 and 315 — Submission that statement of accused recorded under S. 313 be treated as evidence and as such stand of appellant as regards his gun being taken away by police considered — Held, accused had right to appear as witness on his own behalf as envisaged under S. 315 — By declining to do so he failed to offer any evidence to show loss/removal of his gun — Thus, it cannot be urged merely to suit his convenience that his statement under S. 313 be treated as evidence and facts therein as true unless contradicted by prosecution (Paras 268 and 269). Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and Swatanter Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-4-2010]

Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468: 1953 Cri LJ 1933, referred to [3274] — S. 313 — Statement under, when liable to be rejected — Contradictory stands of accused — Respondent on one hand claiming animosity between him and family of victim (of rape) and on the other hand raising defence of consent on part of victim in having sex with him — Held, the two stands being contradictory, are both liable to be rejected — Criminal Trial — Appreciation of evidence — Contradictions, inconsistencies, exaggerations or embellishments — Contradictory stands taken by accused — Liable to be rejected (Para 14). State of M.P. v. Balu, (2005) 1 SCC 108: 2005 SCC (Cri) 270: AIR 2005 SC 222: 2005 Cri LJ 335: (2005) 25 AIC 369 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-2004]

[3275] — S. 313 — Testimony given on oath cannot be rejected merely on the ground that it was contradicted by the statement of the accused made under S. 313. Mohan Lal v. Ajit Singh, (1978) 3 SCC 279: 1978 SCC (Cri) 378: AIR 1978 SC 1183: 1978 Cri LJ 1107.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Shinghal and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1978]

[3276] — S. 313 — Trial court must examine the accused so as to give opportunity to him to personally explain any incriminating circumstances appearing in evidence against him — Statement alleged to have been recorded in a casual and cursory manner, not in accordance with law — But no such contention was raised before trial court or High Court — Before Supreme Court, no prejudice shown to have caused due to the irregular, imperfect recording of statement under S. 313 — Held, accused not entitled to benefit for the defective recording of the statement

It was submitted that the statement under Section 313 CrPC of the accused persons had been recorded in a most cursory, casual and perfunctory manner by the Sessions Court. It was urged that this is a normal practice followed in the court in the State and that manner in which the trial court recorded the statement under Section 313 CrPC of the accused persons, being not in accordance with law the accused-appellants would be entitled for the benefit as they had not been provided with sufficient opportunity to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against them.

Held :

Having perused the statement under Section 313 CrPC and the question formulated by the trial court in the present case it can be said that it is far from satisfactory. The Supreme Court time and again has laid down that it is obligatory on the part of the trial court to examine the accused for the purpose of enabling the accused personally to explain any circumstance appearing in evidence against him. If such opportunity is not afforded, the incriminating piece of evidence available in the prosecution evidence against the accused cannot be relied upon for the purpose of recording the conviction of the accused person. It is imperative on the court to record the statement under Section 313 CrPC of the accused persons so as to give opportunity to the accused persons to explain any incriminating circumstance proved by the prosecution. The duty cast on the court cannot be taken lightly. However, no argument had been advanced by the counsel for the appellants in the trial court or before the High Court on the basis of improper recording of the statement under Section 313 CrPC. The counsel for the accused-appellants could not point out any prejudice being caused to the accused-appellants on account of the irregular, imperfect statement recorded under Section 313 CrPC. That being the case, the accused are not entitled for any benefit for the lacuna in recording the statement of the accused under Section 313 CrPC. (Para 17). Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 113: AIR 2004 SC 5068.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-10-2004]

[3277] — S. 313 — Trial court must examine the accused so as to give opportunity to him to personally explain any incriminating circumstances appearing in evidence against him — Statement alleged to have been recorded in a casual and cursory manner, not in accordance with law — But no such contention was raised before trial court or High Court — Before Supreme Court, no prejudice shown to have caused due to the irregular, imperfect recording of statement under S. 313 — Held, accused not entitled to benefit for the defective recording of the statement

It was submitted that the statement under Section 313 CrPC of the accused persons had been recorded in a most cursory, casual and perfunctory manner by the Sessions Court. It was urged that this is a normal practice followed in the court in the State and that manner in which the trial court recorded the statement under Section 313 CrPC of the accused persons, being not in accordance with law the accused-appellants would be entitled for the benefit as they had not been provided with sufficient opportunity to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against them.

Held :

Having perused the statement under Section 313 CrPC and the question formulated by the trial court in the present case it can be said that it is far from satisfactory. The Supreme Court time and again has laid down that it is obligatory on the part of the trial court to examine the accused for the purpose of enabling the accused personally to explain any circumstance appearing in evidence against him. If such opportunity is not afforded, the incriminating piece of evidence available in the prosecution evidence against the accused cannot be relied upon for the purpose of recording the conviction of the accused person. It is imperative on the court to record the statement under Section 313 CrPC of the accused persons so as to give opportunity to the accused persons to explain any incriminating circumstance proved by the prosecution. The duty cast on the court cannot be taken lightly. However, no argument had been advanced by the counsel for the appellants in the trial court or before the High Court on the basis of improper recording of the statement under Section 313 CrPC. The counsel for the accused-appellants could not point out any prejudice being caused to the accused-appellants on account of the irregular, imperfect statement recorded under Section 313 CrPC. That being the case, the accused are not entitled for any benefit for the lacuna in recording the statement of the accused under Section 313 CrPC. (Para 17). Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 189: 2005 SCC (Cri) 113: AIR 2004 SC 5068: 2004 Cri LJ 4978.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-10-2004]

[3278] — S. 313 — Use of, to contradict new allegations by the accused — Accused convicted under S. 20 of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act for possession of charas — Accused alleging before Supreme Court that nothing had happened at the place of alleged search and seizure and that everything was done at the police station — Where the accused had not so stated in his statement under S. 313 such allegation made at this stage, held, not sustainable — More so when according to the IO's evidence the accused, while alighting from a bus, was found carrying a bag and, on suspicion, was searched, and there was no reason to disbelieve the evidence of the IO — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 20 (Para 7). Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2000) 2 SCC 592: 2000 SCC (Cri) 506: AIR 2000 SC 3474: 2000 Cri LJ 3186.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-1999]

[3279] — S. 313 — Court can rely on a portion of the statement of the accused and find him guilty in consideration with the other evidence led against him by the prosecution — Reconstruction of the incident with other evidence — CrPC, 1898, S. 342

Where the commencement or genesis of the occurrence is not available because there was no witness to the occurrence available, the only direct version of the commencement of the occurrence would be found in the statement of the accused, if he chooses to give out his version of the occurrence. His statement has to be considered in the light of the evidence adduced by the prosecution and weighing his statement with the probabilities of the case either in his favour or against him.

Here though the dying declaration refers to assailants and those present, it throws no light on how the occurrence commenced or what was the genesis of the trouble. Taking the statement of the accused along with the remaining evidence a case of sudden fight on sudden quarrel is established. The conviction under S. 304, Part II was improper and should be under S. 304, Part I, Indian Penal Code. State of H.P. v. Wazir Chand, (1978) 1 SCC 130: 1978 SCC (Cri) 58: AIR 1978 SC 315: 1978 Cri LJ 347.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.K. Goswami, N.L. Untwalia and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-11-1977]

[3280] — S. 313 — Prejudice likely to occur by failure to frame a charge or if one omnibus question put to the accused without intimating him of the offence of which he was likely to be convicted — Penal Code, 1860, S. 411 — CrPC, 1898, S. 342. Karnal Singh Uttam Singh v. State of Maharashtra, (1976) 1 SCC 882: 1976 SCC (Cri) 204: AIR 1976 SC 1097: 1976 Cri LJ 842.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.H. Beg and P.K. Goswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-1975]

[3281] — S. 313 — Effect of omission to frame, or absence of, or error in charge — Charges framed against four accused including appellant for offences punishable under Ss. 147, 148, 324, 302 r/w S. 149 IPC, while appellant alone convicted under S. 302 simpliciter — Held, accused can be convicted for an offence for which no charge was framed, unless it had occasioned failure of justice — In instant case, role of appellant in assaulting deceased with knife was clearly proved by PWs — In his examination under S. 313 CrPC a specific question was put to appellant and he was made aware of basic ingredients of the offence and main facts sought to be established against him were explained to him — Thus, he can be convicted under S. 302 IPC simpliciter for having committed the murder — CrPC, 1973 — S. 464 (Paras 11, 27 and 28). Balraje v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 6 SCC 673.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-5-2010]

Radha Mohan Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 2 SCC 450: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 661, relied on

[3282] — S. 313 — Admission of guilt before court by accused after close of prosecution evidence and his examination under S. 313 — Conviction, held on facts, was affected by the admission and hence, cannot be sustained — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, S. 16 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 18

When there is an admission of guilt made by the accused as a result of plea bargaining or otherwise, the evaluation of the evidence by the Court is likely to become a little superficial and perfunctory and the Court may be disposed to refer to the evidence not critically with a view to assessing its credibility but mechanically as a matter of formality in support of the admission of guilt. In the present case, the Magistrate was affected by the admission of guilt made by the appellant and in the circumstances, it would not be right to sustain the conviction of the appellant. Ganeshmal Jashraj v. Govt. of Gujarat, (1980) 1 SCC 363: 1980 SCC (Cri) 239: AIR 1980 SC 264: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 474: (1980) 21 GLR 429: (1980) 1 SCR 1114.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-10-1979]

[3283] — S. 313 — Illegal gratification — Demand and acceptance of bribe by public servant — Trap — Conviction — Appellant-accused found guilty of offences punishable under Ss. 7 and 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and convicted and sentenced thereunder — On facts, accused, a public servant, allegedly demanded and accepted illegal gratification from the complainant PW 1 — Before the trial court accused denying the charge levelled against him in a statement made under S. 313 CrPC — Trial court finding the evidence of PWs 1 and 2 credible and cogent, held the accused guilty by mainly placing reliance on their evidence — Before High Court the trial court's judgment was primarily attacked on the ground that PWs 1 and 2 were interested witnesses and their evidence should not have been accepted — High Court not finding any substance in the submissions, confirmed the conviction and sentence — Held, there is no substance that evidence of PW 1 is the evidence of an interested witness — There is no basis for PW 1 to falsely implicate the accused — Evidence on record clearly shows why the illegal gratification was demanded and accepted by the appellant — Evidence of PW 1, thus, does not suffer from any infirmity to warrant interference — Moreover, evidence of PW 2 is also clear, credible and cogent — Conviction upheld — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7 and 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) (Paras 2, 4, 5, 8 and 9). B. Noha v. State of Kerala, (2006) 12 SCC 277: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 711.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-2006]

[3284] — S. 313 — Proof beyond reasonable doubt — Explanation when due from accused — Held, generally it is for the prosecution to prove its case beyond doubt but in circumstances such as in the present case, some explanation is also due from an accused in order to absolve himself from suspicion of the crime — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 106

It is true that it is generally for the prosecution to prove its case beyond doubt but in circumstances such as the present one, some explanation is also due from an accused in order to absolve himself from suspicion of the crime. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC his positive stand was that he alone had been in the house with M when she had been killed and indeed as per Ext. P-JJ, M's body had been found only one karam (5 feet) away from the place where the appellant lay injured. It must be emphasised that but for this self-serving statement made by the appellant, there is nothing on record to support his positive stance. Even otherwise, had the shot been fired by some intruder, the direction would have been more or less horizontal and parallel to the ground and not from down upwards with the pellets hitting the jaw, skirting the cheek and hitting the roof at Point E. (Para 21). Ujjagar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2007) 13 SCC 90: 2008 Cri LJ 808.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-12-2007]

Modi: Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, 23rd Edn., p. 765; Dr. B.R. Sharma: Forensic Science in Criminal Investigation and Trials, 4th Edn., p. 1160, relied on [3285] — S. 313 — Guilt established — Gunning down brother, his family members and also mother — Circumstances proved were: motive (property dispute), recovery of bloodstained shoes, shirts and pants, presence of injury over right surface of shoulder which could have been caused due to repeated firing from the gun for which no explanation given either in statement under S. 313 CrPC or in written statement and accused seen leaving the place of occurrence after the incident and also confessional statement of accused's son which corroborated the proved circumstances — On facts held, conviction of accused for the offence under S. 302 IPC and S. 25(1)(b)(a) of Arms Act has to be confirmed — Arms Act, 1959, S. 25(1)(b)(a) — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 8 and 114 Ill. (h). Prakash Dhawal Khairnar (Patil) v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 2 SCC 35: 2002 SCC (Cri) 281: AIR 2002 SC 340: 2002 Cri LJ 928.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2001]

[3286] — S. 313 — Pledging of ornaments of deceased soon after the murder — Evidence on record showing that appellant did not pledge the articles on his own but brought them at the instance of his father who was a goldsmith — Held, reversal of acquittal by High Court not justified — Statement of co-accused under S. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 taken into consideration — CrPC, 1898, S. 342 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 416

When the receipt evidencing the pledging itself does not implicate the appellant, it would not be safe to base the conviction either for murder or under S. 411 of IPC. Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 145: 1990 SCC (Cri) 32.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and K.N. Saikia, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-1-1989]

[3287] — S. 313 — Circumstantial evidence, held, can be relied on to convict the accused if all the circumstances proved negate the innocence of the accused and bring home the charge beyond doubt — On facts, held, the circumstances of the case led to the conclusion that the charge of murder was proved beyond doubt against the accused

The accused was a jobless person and was in the habit of taking liquor. He used to often demand money from his wife and used to assault her. One day a quarrel continued between the accused and his wife from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. which ended on the interference by a neighbour (PW 1 herein). Suddenly in the night PW 4, who was staying in the house of PW 1, heard the cries of the accused's elder daughter. When he came out he found the accused's hut on fire. PW 1 and PW 4 rescued the accused's elder daughter but by then the accused's wife and their younger daughter were already dead. PW 4 took the elder daughter to hospital and PW 1 narrated the incident to her father PW 2 who, in turn, informed the police. Asked by PW 5 about the fire, the accused told him that the deceased refused to serve meals to him and was also not giving money and as he had doubts about her chastity, so on the previous night he strangulated the deceased and killed her. He added that he poured kerosene on the dead body of the deceased and set fire to the body. In the course of the incident, the accused himself was seen coming out of the house through the roof as deposed to by PWs 1 and 3 and the accused also admitted it in his statement under Section 313 CrPC. No attempt was made by the accused to save any one of the deceased persons. He rather stood as a silent spectator. The elder daughter was examined by a doctor who found extensive burn injuries on her person. She however died in the hospital. On the basis of the information received from PW 2 the police registered a case and after investigation submitted the charge-sheet. On committal, the Sessions Court convicted the accused under Sections 302 and 436 of the Penal Code on the basis of the circumstances established by the prosecution and sentenced him to death and to rigorous imprisonment for five years respectively under the said sections. The accused did not prefer any appeal but in confirmation proceedings under Section 366 CrPC, the High Court without examining the circumstances said to have been established by the prosecution evidence and without examining the conclusion of the trial Judge, held the accused to be entitled to benefit of doubt and acquitted him.

Allowing the State's appeal,

Held :

The law is fairly well settled that in a case of circumstantial evidence, the cumulative effect of all the circumstances proved must be such as to negative the innocence of the accused and to bring home the charge beyond reasonable doubt. The opinion of the doctor indicates that the wife of the accused died of asphyxia due to strangulation and not on account of burn injuries and several findings indicated in the post-mortem report undoubtedly support the conclusion about the death on account of asphyxia. If the accused and his wife were seen together in the house at 9 p.m. and the accused came out in the morning through the roof, leaving the wife and two children and the death of the wife was found to be not on account of burn injuries but on account of strangulation and on being asked, the accused offered an explanation about the accidental fire which was found to be untrue, then, there cannot be any hesitation to come to the conclusion that it was the accused who was the perpetrator of the crime. (Para 6)

In a case of circumstantial evidence when an incriminating circumstance is put to the accused and the said accused either offers no explanation or offers an explanation which is found to be untrue, then the same becomes an additional link in the chain of circumstances to make it complete. This proposition fully applies to the circumstances of the present case. (Para 6). State of T.N. v. Rajendran, (1999) 8 SCC 679: AIR 1999 SC 3535.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, M. Srinivasan and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1999]

[3288] — S. 313 — Circumstances establishing guilt of the accused — S seen in the company of the deceased in his house when the deceased was alone and thereafter seen leaving the place of occurrence with a knife in his hand immediately after the occurrence — Evidence establishing that S with bloodstained clothes on his person reached the house of the witness and requested her to bring a set of clothes from the house of the co-accused — Recovery of bloodstained clothes from the house of the co-accused — Reports of chemical examiner and serologist indicating presence of human blood on those clothes for which no explanation offered by S — Recovery of a knife stained with human blood pursuant to the disclosure statement made by him — Held, in the circumstances of the case, chain of circumstances is complete and the charge of murder against the accused S is proved beyond reasonable doubt — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 27 . Sanjiv Kumar v. State of H.P., (1999) 2 SCC 288: 1999 SCC (Cri) 127: AIR 1999 SC 782: 1999 Cri LJ 1138.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-1-1999]

[3289] — S. 313 — Circumstance regarding abscondence, not put to accused in examination under S. 313 CrPC — Held, circumstance cannot be used against the accused (Para 18). Kanhai Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2001) 3 SCC 451: 2001 SCC (Cri) 537: AIR 2001 SC 1113: 2001 Cri LJ 1259.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2001]

Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1988) 3 SCC 609: 1988 SCC (Cri) 711, relied on [3290] — S. 313 — Missing person last seen with accused — If the prosecution on the basis of reliable evidence establishes that the missing person was last seen in the company of the accused and was never seen thereafter, held, it is obligatory on the accused to explain the circumstances in which the missing person and the accused parted company — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 3 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 19). Sahadevan v. State, (2003) 1 SCC 534: AIR 2003 SC 215.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-11-2002]

Joseph v. State of Kerala, (2000) 5 SCC 197: 2000 SCC (Cri) 926, relied on [3291] — S. 313 — Defence case is required to be proved only by preponderance of probability

Where an accused sets up a defence or offers an explanation, it is well settled that he is not required to prove his defence beyond a reasonable doubt but only by preponderance of probabilities. M. Abbas v. State of Kerala, (2001) 10 SCC 103.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and Doraiswamy Raju, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-1-2001]

[3292] — S. 313 — False implication/accusation — Alleged in a rape case on the ground of enmity — Neither nature of enmity nor gravity of the same stated — Fact of false implication, held, not established — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 375 and 376 (Para 7). State of Chhattisgarh v. Derha, (2004) 9 SCC 699: 2004 Cri LJ 2109.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-2004]

[3293] — S. 313 — Presumption of conscious possession — Whether rebutted — Accused travelling in private car with a known co-accused, in his S. 313 CrPC statement trying to rebut presumption by stating that he was simply a passenger unconnected with contraband seized i.e. he had just taken a "lift" — He not examining said co-accused person under S. 315 CrPC nor producing any other evidence in support of his plea — Noticing fact of vehicle concerned being a private car (as distinguished from a public transport vehicle) and there being no admissible evidence, plea rejected — Therefore, presumption of conscious possession not rebutted and conviction of appellants under S. 20 NDPS Act, held, justified — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985', Ss. 35, 54 and 20 (Paras 24 and 23). Dehal Singh v. State of H.P., (2010) 9 SCC 85: (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 1139: AIR 2010 SC 3594.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-2010]

Madan Lal v. State of H.P., (2003) 7 SCC 465: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1664, followed

[3294] — S. 313 — Possession — Whether appellant was in exclusive possession of the factory from where the psychotropic substances were seized — Burden to prove, on whom lay — On facts, the affirmative finding in respect of the question of possession recorded by trial court and affirmed by High Court, upheld — Further held that where the statements of the accused under S. 313 CrPC showed complicity the burden to prove the contrary lay on the appellant — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 106 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 22 and 20(b)

Rejecting the appellant's contention that absence of evidence to prove that he was in exclusive possession of the factory from where the offending articles were seized, vitiated his conviction under Sections 22 and 20(b)(ii),

Held :

One of the members of the raiding party, PW 1 has stated in his evidence that when he raided the factory, it was locked and that the appellant was not found at his residence nor could his whereabouts be known from his son and brother. The appellant had absconded and was found from Pune after about 2 months. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC, he had not stated that he had not closed the factory or that he was not present at that time or that the key of the factory had remained with someone else. The factory belonged to the appellant. He was the sole proprietor. In view of these facts and circumstances, it was necessary for the appellant to explain how the offending articles came to be found from his factory. He did not offer any plausible explanation. Therefore, the finding recorded by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court that the offending articles were found from the possession of the appellant are justified. Jagdish Budhroji Purohit v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 7 SCC 270: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1578: AIR 1998 SC 3328.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-1998]

[3295] — S. 313 — Search and seizure — Requirements under S. 42 of taking down in writing the information received and sending a copy thereof to the immediate official superior — Non-compliance with — Effect — Action taken on unrecorded information, held, would become suspect and one causing prejudice to the accused but would not ipso facto vitiate the trial — In the instant case, the information received by the Police Inspector but not recorded by him, was to the effect that I was trying to transport charas to a particular place in the specified vehicle — Investigation revealed that I and M had loaded the contraband in the vehicle — The Police Inspector intercepted and searched the vehicle and recovered from it gunny bags containing charas — Driver of the vehicle while admitting that two persons had loaded the bags into his vehicle and directed him to transport the same to the specified destination, pleading his unawareness of the contents of the bags — Prosecution not adducing any evidence to show the existence of any criminal conspiracy between the driver and the main culprits viz. I and M to transport the contraband — Nothing even to suggest that the driver and main culprits were close, or even known, to each other — Moreover, the police failed to nab the main culprits (I and M) — In such circumstances, held, the accused driver had successfully rebutted the presumption under S. 35 — Hence, his conviction under S. 20(b)(ii) of the NDPS Act as well as under S. 66(1)(b) of Bombay Prohibition Act, set aside Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949 (25 of 1949), S. 66(1)(b) — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 42(1) & (2), 35 and 20(b)(ii)

The Inspector of Police received an information from a Constable that one I was trying to transport charas up to a specified place in an autorickshaw bearing a particular number. Without taking down in writing the said information, the Inspector, accompanied by a police force, proceeded to the road concerned and succeeded in intercepting the said autorickshaw. On checking they found four gunny bags placed inside it. When the gunny bags were opened at the police station ten packets of charas (cannabis hemp) were found concealed therein. Investigation showed that the consignment was loaded in the rickshaw by two persons, viz., I and M. The police could not arrest or find out I and M and laid a charge-sheet under Section 20(b)(ii) of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 and Section 66(1)(b) of the Bombay Prohibition Act against the driver of the autorickshaw only. The said driver is the appellant herein. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC in the trial court, the appellant admitted the recovery from his autorickshaw but pleaded his unawareness of the contents of the gunny bags, which according to him had been loaded by two persons with a direction to him to transport the same to the specified destination. Though acquitted by the trial court, the appellant was convicted by the High Court mainly on the ground that he had failed to rebut the presumption under Section 35 of the Act. Before the Supreme Court, the appellant contended, inter alia, that non-compliance by the Police Inspector with the requirements of taking down in writing the information received and sending a copy thereof to his immediate superior as contemplated by Section 42 of the Act vitiated the search as a whole. On the other hand, the State contended that: (i) the said omissions would not vitiate the trial, and, (ii) the appellant having admitted the recovery of charas from his vehicle, the said omissions were inconsequential. The State further relied on the presumption under Section 35 of the Act. The Supreme Court although not fully agreeing with the appellant's contention as to consequences of non-compliance with Section 42, clarified the legal position. Then allowing the appeal, it

Held :

In view of Section 42 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, if the officer has reason to believe from personal knowledge or prior information received from any person that any narcotic drug or psychotropic substance (in respect of which an offence has been committed) is kept or concealed in any building, conveyance or enclosed place, it is imperative that the officer should take it down in writing and he should forthwith send a copy thereof to his immediate official superior. The action of the officer, who claims to have exercised it on the strength of such unrecorded information, would become suspect, though the trial may not vitiate on that score alone. Nonetheless the resultant position would be one of causing prejudice to the accused. (Para 18

In the instant case, the non-recording of information has in fact deprived the appellant as well as the Court of the material to ascertain what was the precise information which the Police Inspector got before proceeding to stop the vehicle. Value of such an information, which was the earliest in point of time, for ascertaining the extent of the involvement of the appellant in the offence, was of a high degree. It is not enough that the Police Inspector was able to recollect from memory, when he was examined in court after the lapse of a long time, as to what information he got before he proceeded to the scene. (Para 19)

No doubt, when the appellant admitted that the narcotic drug was recovered from the gunny bags stacked in the autorickshaw, the burden of proof is on him to prove that he had no knowledge about the fact that those gunny bags contained such a substance. The standard of such proof is delineated in Section 42(2) as "beyond a reasonable doubt". If the court, on an appraisal of the entire evidence does not entertain doubt of a reasonable degree that he had real knowledge of the nature of the substance concealed in the gunny bags then the appellant is not entitled to acquittal. However, if the court entertains strong doubt regarding the accused's awareness about the nature of the substance in the gunny bags, it would be a miscarriage of criminal justice to convict him of the offence keeping such strong doubt undispelled. Even so, it is for the accused to dispel any doubt in that regard. (Para 21)

The burden of proof cast on the accused under Section 35 can be discharged through different modes. One is that he can rely on the materials available in the prosecution evidence. Next is, in addition to that, he can elicit answers from prosecution witnesses through cross-examination to dispel any such doubt. He may also adduce other evidence when he is called upon to enter on his defence. In other words, if circumstances appearing in the prosecution case or in the prosecution evidence are such as to give reasonable assurance to the court that the appellant could not have had the knowledge or the required intention, the burden cast on him under Section 35 of the Act would stand discharged even if he has not adduced any other evidence of his own when he is called upon to enter on his defence. (Para 22)

In the instant case non-recording of the vital information collected by the police at the first instance can be counted as a circumstance in favour of the appellant. Next is that even the information which the Police Inspector recollected from memory is capable of helping the accused because it indicates that the real culprits would have utilised the services of an autorickshaw driver to transport the gunny bags and it is not necessary that the autorickshaw driver should have been told in advance that the gunny bags contained such offensive substance. The possibility is just the other way round that the said culprits would not have disclosed that information to the autorickshaw driver unless it is shown that he had entered into a criminal conspiracy with the other main culprits to transport the contraband. The prosecution did not adduce any evidence to show any such connivance between the appellant and the real culprits. There is nothing even to suggest that those culprits and the appellant were close to each other, or even known to each other earlier. Yet another circumstance discernible from the evidence in this case is that the police had actually arrayed two other persons as the real culprits and made all endeavour to arrest them, but they absconded and escaped from the reach of the police. (Para 23)

From the said circumstances, it has to be held that the accused had discharged the burden of proof in such a manner as to rebut the presumption envisaged in Section 35 of the Act. He is, therefore, not liable to be convicted for the offences pitted against him. (Para 24). Abdul Rashid Ibrahim Mansuri v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 2 SCC 513: 2000 SCC (Cri) 496: AIR 2000 SC 821: 2000 Cri LJ 1384.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2000]

State of Punjab v. Baldev Singh, (1999) 6 SCC 172: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1080, followed

State of Punjab v. Balbir Singh, (1994) 3 SCC 299: 1994 SCC (Cri) 634, impliedly, held, not good law

[3296] — S. 313 — Question as to non-compliance with S. 50 NDPS Act — Accused not stating under S. 313 CrPC that he was unaware of his rights under S. 50 NDPS Act or that he was misled on that account in any manner — Effect — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 50

In the instant case, it was held that the requirements of Section 50 of the NDPS Act were sufficiently complied with. In addition to that, considering the statement made by the accused under Section 313 CrPC,

Held :

It may also be noticed that while giving statement under Section 313 CrPC the accused did not say that he was unaware of his rights or that he was misled on that account in any manner. On the contrary, in general and vague manner it was only said that he did not know or he had no idea of the allegations. Though that by itself is not sufficient to convict the accused in view of the procedural safeguards required to be observed by compliance with the requirements of Section 50, yet that is of some relevance in appreciating the grievance, now sought to be ventilated. (Para 15). Prabha Shankar Dubey v. State of M.P., (2004) 2 SCC 56: 2004 SCC (Cri) 420: AIR 2004 SC 486.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2003]

[3297] — S. 313 — Self-defence pleaded but accused in his statement under S. 313 CrPC not admitting to have inflicted the fatal blow — Held, is no ground to reject the plea of self-defence if the evidence of the eyewitnesses reveal facts and circumstances supporting the plea — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 96, 97 and 100 to 103

The trial court considered the plea of self-defence but rejected it on the ground that the appellant did not state in his statement under Section 313 CrPC that he had hit R in self-defence. Obviously, an accused cannot be expected to admit that he had inflicted the blow that killed the deceased. Where the plea of the accused, when read with the evidence of the eyewitnesses, brings out a set of facts and circumstances showing that the accused acted in exercise of the right of private defence, the fact that the accused in his Section 313 CrPC statement only referred to the acts of the deceased and his son hitting him and did not admit that he hit back the deceased, is not a ground to reject the plea of private defence. The approach of the trial court to the plea of private defence was erroneous. The High Court did not go into this aspect at all. (Para 24). Krishnan v. State of T.N., (2006) 11 SCC 304: AIR 2006 SC 3037: 2006 Cri LJ 3907.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-8-2006]

[3298] — S. 313 — Causing serious knife injuries on vital parts of bodies of two unarmed persons resulting in their instantaneous death — No plea of exercise of right of private defence taken by the accused persons in their statements under S. 313 CrPC — Nature of injuries negating any just plea for right to private defence — On facts, High Court rightly held that the accused persons had no right to private defence — Accordingly existence of customary right of way need not be considered in the facts of the case — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 97 and 96. Kuriakose v. State of Kerala, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 602: 1994 SCC (Cri) 614: (1994) 1 Crimes 935: (1994) 31 ACC 297.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-1994]

[3299] — S. 313 — Plea of acting in exercise of right of private defence — Held, cannot be accepted merely because such a statement was made by accused under S. 313 CrPC — Only minor and superficial injuries sustained by accused — Material on record established that accused had fired gunshot which resulted in death of the deceased — Held, on facts, there was no basis for accepting the plea — Penal Code, 1860, S. 100 (Para 12). Anil Kumar v. State of U.P., 2005 SCC (Cri) 178: 2004 All LJ 3779.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-2004]

[3300] — S. 313 — Plea of acting in exercise of right of private defence — Held, cannot be accepted merely because such a statement was made by accused under S. 313 CrPC — Only minor and superficial injuries sustained by accused — Material on record established that accused had fired gunshot which resulted in death of the deceased — Held, on facts, there was no basis for accepting the plea (Para 12). Anil Kumar v. State of U.P., (2004) 13 SCC 257: 2005 SCC (Cri) 178: AIR 2004 SC 4662: 2004 Cri LJ 4881.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-2004]

[3301] — S. 313 — Right to private defence of body — Existence of, as a possibility for doubting the prosecution story — Factual considerations — Marks of lathi-blows on the gun of the accused — Accused giving statement under S. 313 CrPC that deceased's party were the aggressor and that the shot was fired when the aggressors were trying to snatch the gun from the accused — Existence of right of private defence, on facts, held, cannot be ruled out — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 100 & 97 and S. 302

An aggression between the deceased's group and the accused took place just outside the accused's house. During snatching of the accused's gun in the ensuing scuffle and aggression, an accidental shot from the accused's bullet vertically pierced the deceased's neck. PW 2 (a member of the deceased's group) was also injured by a pellet piercing him horizontally. After the bullet shot, the accused went inside his house and locked himself. The accused gave Section 313 CrPC statement and the deceased group led evidence as prosecution witnesses in support of their respective allegations/blame on each other of initiating the aggression. Trial court doubting the prosecution story as well as their witnesses, acquitted the accused. However, the High Court by the impugned order, reversed the acquittal and convicted the accused under Sections 302, 323 and 307 IPC.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The accused is presumed innocent until proven guilty. The trial court's acquittal bolsters the presumption that he is innocent. On proper analysis of the ratio and findings of this case, it is revealed that the findings of the trial court are based on the fundamental principles of the criminal jurisprudence. Presumption of innocence in favour of the accused further gets reinforced and strengthened by the acquittal of the trial court. Due or proper weight and consideration must be given to the trial court's decision. This is especially true when a witness' credibility is at issue. (Paras 43 and 69)

The possibility that the deceased and the complainant's side were aggressors and had gone there and caused pharsa and lathi-blows on the accused cannot be ruled out because of the marks on the gun, Ext. 3. That the said gun was fired in snatching all of a sudden, injuring the deceased also cannot be ruled out from the circumstances of the case. The trial court did not discard the defence version of right of private defence as pleaded by the accused. (Para 36). Ghurey Lal v. State of U.P., (2008) 10 SCC 450.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-2008]

[3302] — S. 313 — Dowry death — Rebuttable presumption that death caused by husband or his relative — Held, presumption under S. 113-B, Evidence Act begins to operate if prosecution is able to prove the circumstances set out in S. 304-B IPC — If defence of accused is only total denial, presumption remains unrebutted — Where accused-Respondent 1 was charged under S. 302 IPC and in the alternative under S. 304-B and evidence on record established (i) that marriage had been agreed to by accused on condition of payment of dowry (Rs 10,000 and 3 gold sovereigns); (ii) that marriage took place (on 17-5-1987) after part-payment (Rs 8000); (iii) that only a few days prior to her death, deceased wife had pleaded with her father and brother, during a visit to them, that she was being tortured by her husband and mother-in-law because of non-payment of balance and that she did not want to return to matrimonial home without it; (iv) that her father escorted her back there anyway, and (v) that she was found dead in a dry well, as a result of head injuries within 48 hours (on 14-11-1987), held on facts, High Court erred in allowing appeal of accused-Respondent 1, setting aside his conviction under S. 302 and not considering the charge under S. 304-B at all —

Respondent 1 convicted by Supreme Court under S. 304-B and sentenced to 10 years' RI — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 113-B — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B

Accused 1 (Respondent 1 herein), M, was charged under Section 302 IPC and in the alternative under Section 304-B for the murder of K, his wife. M married K on 17-5-1987 in unusual circumstances. K was originally supposed to marry somebody else, but that person never came to the venue fixed for the solemnization of the marriage. Relatives and well-wishers who had gathered there discussed the matter and decided that K must be married. At that point M put himself forward as a potential bridegroom for K, but only on the condition that he be given Rs 10,000 and three sovereigns of gold as dowry. As PW 6, father of K was unable to arrange for the money and gold straight away, the relatives and elders present decided to contribute money of their own. In this way they collected Rs 8000, which was given to M and it was agreed that the balance amount as well as the gold would be given after PW 6 harvested his crops. The marriage was then solemnized. To establish this part of the sequence of events, the prosecution relied on the testimony of PW 1, brother of K, PW 6, father of K, PW 7, an independent witness who testified as to his participation in the collection of the money, and PW 12, also an independent witness, who testified as to the demand for dowry and the payment to M.

On 14-11-1987 K was found dead in a dry well. In the post-mortem examination carried out the next day, K was found to have died of shock and haemorrhage resulting from head injuries, which the examining doctor concluded were ante-mortem. He also felt that the head injuries were sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature; that the death was homicidal.

On the issue of whether M had subjected K to cruelty and harassment in connection with the demand for dowry just before her death, the testimony of PW 1 and that of PW 6 were significant. PW 1 had testified that K, his sister had come to their parental home and asked him and their father to pay the balance amount due to M; K had also told them that M, her husband and her mother-in-law had been torturing her because of the non-payment. PW 1 promised to pay in January, after the harvest. K on the other hand pleaded that she should not be sent back to the matrimonial home without the money and gold. In spite of her pleas K was escorted back on 12-11-1987 by PW 6, who stayed overnight at M's place and returned home on 13-11-1987. There was no evidence on record indicating that any compromise had been reached about the balance payment between 13-11-1987 and 14-11-1987, the date on which K was killed.

The trial court found M solely responsible for the death of K and convicted him under Sections 302 and 201 IPC, sentencing him to life imprisonment and two years' RI. The trial court also convicted M under Sections 3, 4 and 6 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961. M's appeal, however, was allowed by the High Court and his convictions were set aside.

The Supreme Court, upholding the acquittal of M, Respondent 1, under Section 302 IPC, but finding him guilty under Section 304-B IPC

Held :

In order to establish the offence under Section 304-B IPC the prosecution is obliged to prove that the death of a woman is caused by any burns or bodily injury or occurs otherwise than under normal circumstances and such death occurs within 7 years of her marriage and it is shown that soon before her death she was subjected to cruelty or harassment by her husband or any relative of her husband. Such harassment and cruelty must be in connection with any demand for dowry. If the prosecution is able to prove these circumstances then the presumption under Section 113-B of the Evidence Act will operate. It is a rebuttable presumption and the onus to rebut shifts on the accused. The defence of the accused was a total denial. Therefore, the presumption as to dowry death envisaged under Section 113-B of the Evidence Act remains unrebutted. (Paras 22 to 24)

In the present case it is clear that PW 6 took his daughter, the deceased to the house of the accused on 12-11-1987 and halted overnight there and returned to his house the next day i.e. 13-11-1987 and the deceased was murdered on 14-11-1987, stated to be early in the morning. There was no evidence on record which would throw some light that in the intervening period of 13-11-1987 and 14-11-1987 there was some settlement or resolution with regard to the balance amount of dowry being paid to the accused. From the testimony of PW 1 and PW 6, it clearly appears that soon before her death she was subjected to cruelty or harassment in connection with the demand for dowry by her husband. In the absence of the evidence on record showing any settlement or resolution for payment of balance of dowry amount and gold in the intervening period of 13-11-1987 and 14-11-1987, the cruelty and harassment in connection with any demand for dowry as on 12-11-1987 would continue till her death on 14-11-1987. This would constitute cruelty and harassment in connection with demand for dowry soon before her death. (Para 24)

The marriage of the deceased with the accused was solemnized on 17-5-1987 and she died within 7 years of marriage. Having regard to the entire facts and circumstances and evidence on record, it must be concluded that the offence under Section 304-B IPC is found to be well established against A-1. (Para 24)

Respondent-Accused 1 is accordingly convicted under Section 304-B IPC and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for ten years. The impugned order of the High Court is set aside and the appeals filed by the State are allowed to the extent indicated. (Para 25). State of Karnataka v. M.V. Manjunathegowda, (2003) 2 SCC 188: 2003 SCC (Cri) 467: AIR 2003 SC 809: 2003 Cri LJ 900.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-2003]

Followed in Rameshwar Dass v. State of Punjab, (2007) 14 SCC 696*

[3303] — S. 313 — Dowry death — Suicide — Death by falling in well, whether on facts was a dowry death — Evidence of wife's parents showing that since the date of marriage appellant was insisting upon dowry — On betrothal day itself land transferred in his favour and at the time of marriage some ornaments given to the deceased wife by her parents — Since 3rd day of marriage, appellant making further demand for dowry and ultimately given a certain sum — Evidence further showing that even till two years after marriage the appellant continued to make demands for dowry and subjected his wife to cruelty both mental and physical on that score — Appellant putting forth a further demand for a certain sum and a certain number of sovereigns as the balance of dowry and asking the cousin of his wife to persuade the deceased's parents to hand over the same — But before the wife's cousin could communicate to the appellant the outcome of his efforts, the appellant's wife meeting her death by falling in a well — Incident taking place within 31/2 years of marriage [much less than the time-limit postulated by S. 304-B(1) IPC] — Moreover, two independent witnesses stating that the appellant's mother-in-law had told them that the appellant was quarrelling with the deceased for more dowry — Obviously, because his continuous and persistent demands for dowry were not met, the appellant in his statement under S. 313 CrPC going to the extent of stating that the deceased was not his wife — In such circumstances, the High Court rightly held that the deceased was subjected to cruelty for dowry soon before her death for which she committed suicide — Hence, conviction under S. 304-B, upheld — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B(1) and 498-A. Rajayyan v. State of Kerala, (1998) 4 SCC 85: 1998 SCC (Cri) 811: AIR 1998 SC 1211: 1998 Cri LJ 1633.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-1998]

[3304] — S. 313 — Rape and murder — Circumstantial evidence — First circumstance that accused-appellant came to the house of deceased on the day of occurrence and gave a proposal to the deceased for going to orchard for plucking flowers, established — But the second circumstance that appellant and deceased left the house together, which was very material, could not be established — Prosecution also failed to prove the other circumstances — Hence appellant entitled to acquittal — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376 & 320 (Paras 17 to 19). Kanhai Mishra v. State of Bihar, (2001) 3 SCC 451: 2001 SCC (Cri) 537: AIR 2001 SC 1113: 2001 Cri LJ 1259.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2001]

[3305] — S. 313 — Criminal breach of trust — Burden of proof — Initial burden on prosecution to prove entrustment of the property to accused — Actual manner of misappropriation of the property by accused need not be proved by it — Once the initial burden is discharged by prosecution, onus would lie on accused to prove how the property entrusted to him was dealt with by him — Amount deposited by PW with respondent Postmaster for purchase of NSCs but the same having not been purchased, complaint made by PW with postal authorities — Respondent having come to know about initiation of inquiry by postal authorities, deposited the full amount with interest in two instalments in post office — Held, trial court rightly convicted respondent under S. 409 IPC — High Court in revision, misdirected itself in taking the view that prosecution failed to prove misappropriation of the amount by respondent — Contention that no question was put to respondent while examining him under S. 313 CrPC as to whether the amount was given to him for his personal use or it was converted by him for his personal use, held, misconceived since while examining under S. 313 CrPC trial court was only required to ask such question which had been brought on record against the accused — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 405 and 409

The respondent, a Postmaster, was holding an office of public trust. The complainant who was a teacher entrusted a certain amount to the respondent for the purpose of purchasing national savings certificates. As soon as the amount was received by the respondent on behalf of the postal authorities, it became public money. It was required to be utilised for the purpose for which the same was handed over to the respondent. The respondent being a public officer had the requisite knowledge that the amount carried interest as he had deposited the amount in two instalments along with a sum by way of interest. The respondent thought himself liable to pay the said amount with interest, so as to reimburse to the complainant the amount to which he was entitled by way of interest for depositing the said amount. The High Court erred in taking the view that the second ingredient of Section 405 IPC i.e. misappropriation of the amount by the respondent-accused had not been proved. The High Court, in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, completely misdirected itself in opining that it was obligatory on the part of PWs to state in their complaint that the accused committed criminal misappropriation with the intention to utilise the amount for his personal use. The very fact that the respondent retained with him the entrusted amount is not disputed. If he did not utilise the amount for the purpose for which the same had been deposited, an offence must be held to have been committed. It was not necessary for the prosecution to bring on record material to show as to how the respondent had utilised the amount. In view of the admitted fact, it was for the respondent himself to prove the defence raised by him that the entire amount had not been paid to him by the complainant. (Paras 8 to 10)

The actual manner of misappropriation, it is well settled, is not required to be proved by the prosecution. Once entrustment is proved, it was for the accused to prove as to how the property entrusted to him was dealt with in view of Section 405 IPC. If the respondent had failed to produce any material for this purpose, the prosecution should not suffer therefor. (Para 11)

It is not possible to accept the further contention that no question was put to the respondent while he was being examined under Section 313 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, with a view to give him an opportunity to explain whether the amount was given to him for his personal use or he converted the money for his personal use. While examining the accused under Section 313 CrPC, the trial court is merely required to ask such question which has been brought on record as against the respondent. The respondent in fact had admitted the entire prosecution case for all intent and purport. The entire evidence which was adduced on behalf of the prosecution was made known to the accused. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC, he accepted that he had received a sum of Rs 8000 from the complainant and he had deposited the said amount together with interest, in two instalments. He has merely reiterated his defence, that the complainant had not paid to him the entire sum of Rs 8000, which has not been accepted by the trial court. Therefore, the High Court committed a manifest error in arriving at a finding that there has been infraction of the mandatory provisions of Section 313 CrPC. (Paras 13 and 14)

For the aforesaid reasons, the impugned judgment cannot be sustained and it is set aside accordingly. (Para 15). State of H.P. v. Karanvir, (2006) 5 SCC 381: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 460: AIR 2006 SC 2211: 2006 Cri LJ 2917.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2006]

N. Bhargavan Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2004) 13 SCC 217: 2005 SCC (Cri) 142, relied on [3306] — S. 313 — Appellants along with co-accused attacking the complainant party with knives, farsas, gandasas and lathis — Eyewitnesses' account and statement of the medical witnesses and the investigating officer connecting the appellants with the crime — Co-accused B in his statement under S. 313 CrPC stating that the accused party attacked the complainant party in self-defence — Evidence led by prosecution establishing that the plea of self-defence was an afterthought and had no basis — On facts, held, appreciation of evidence by the courts below did not suffer from any infirmity — Hence, conviction of appellants upheld — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34. Darshan v. State of Haryana, (2002) 9 SCC 755: AIR 2002 SC 2344.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-2001]

[3307] — S. 313 — Injuries sustained by accused in the same incident in which deceased died — Prosecution not invariably bound to explain the injuries on the accused — Prosecution case, if otherwise trustworthy and acceptable, held, would not be affected by its failure to explain the injuries on the accused — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 96 & 100

The question as to the obligation of the prosecution to explain the injuries sustained by the accused in the same occurrence may not arise in each and every case. In other words, it is not an invariable rule that the prosecution has to explain the injuries sustained by the accused in the same occurrence. The burden of proving the guilt of the accused is undoubtedly on the prosecution. The accused is not bound to say anything in defence. The prosecution has to prove the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubts. If the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution are believed by the court in proof of the guilt of the accused beyond any reasonable doubt, the question of the obligation of the prosecution to explain the injuries sustained by the accused will not arise. When the prosecution comes with a definite case that the offence has been committed by the accused and proves its case beyond any reasonable doubt, it becomes hardly necessary for the prosecution to again explain how and in what circumstances injuries have been inflicted on the person of the accused.

When the court has believed the prosecution witnesses as convincing and trustworthy, the court overruled the contention of the accused that as the prosecution had failed to explain the injuries sustained by the accused in the same occurrence, the prosecution case should be disbelieved and the accused should be acquitted. Thus, it is not the law or invariable rule that whenever the accused sustains an injury in the same occurrence, the prosecution has to explain the injuries failure of which will mean that the prosecution has suppressed the truth and also the origin and genesis of the occurrence.

In the present case all the eyewitnesses stated that the appellant had fired at the deceased as a result of which the deceased had died. They denied the suggestion put to them that the deceased had been firing on the appellant. It was not the case of the appellant that he had fired at the deceased in self-defence. Though two empties were found by the side of the dead body of the deceased, and three live cartridges were also recovered from the pocket of the deceased at the time of inquest, but the presence of the empties does not necessarily mean that the deceased had fired. As the deceased was going along with his sisters at the time of occurrence, it is not at all amenable to reason that the deceased had started from his house along with his two sisters with a view to fighting with the accused. In the circumstances, the appellant had been rightly convicted and sentenced. Though the appellant had made a statement under S. 313 CrPC denying that he had any firearms or that he had fired at the deceased, but in the circumstances of the case the material on record including the statement of the appellant under S. 313 CrPC do not probabilise any case of self-defence or that the deceased had inflicted on him the injury by firing at him from his rifle. Accordingly, the prosecution was not obliged to account for the injury and the failure of the prosecution to give a reasonable explanation of the injury would not go against or throw any doubt on the prosecution case. Hare Krishna Singh v. State of Bihar, (1988) 2 SCC 95: 1988 SCC (Cri) 279: AIR 1988 SC 863: (1988) 2 Crimes 927.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Dutt and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-2-1988]

Bhaba Nanda Sharma v. State of Assam, (1977) 4 SCC 396: 1977 SCC (Cri) 602; Ramlagan Singh v. State of Bihar, (1973) 3 SCC 881: 1973 SCC (Cri) 563; Onkarnath Singh v. State of U.P., (1975) 3 SCC 276: 1974 SCC (Cri) 884; Bankey Lal v. State of U.P., (1971) 3 SCC 184: 1971 SCC (Cri) 253 and Bhagwan Tana Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (1974) 3 SCC 536: 1974 SCC (Cri) 11, relied on

Lakshmi Singh v. State of Bihar, (1976) 4 SCC 394: 1976 SCC (Cri) 671; Mohar Rai v. State of Bihar, (1968) 3 SCR 525: AIR 1968 SC 1281; Jagdish v. State of Rajasthan, (1979) 2 SCC 178: 1979 SCC (Cri) 436; Munshi Ram v. Delhi Admn., (1968) 2 SCR 455: AIR 1968 SC 702 and State of Gujarat v. Bai Fatima, (1975) 2 SCC 7: 1975 SCC (Cri) 384, distinguished on facts

[3308] — S. 313 — Explanation of accused for accepting money — Given belatedly in statement under S. 313 CrPC and not immediately to IO — Effect — Courts are generally slow in accepting such explanation — Mere explanation such as that the money was accepted by accused towards payment of govt. dues not sufficient — Accused must prove, either by direct evidence or on the basis of inferences legally drawn from evidence on record, his position contrary to the statutory presumption under S. 4, PC Act, 1947 of acceptance of gratification by him as a motive or reward — Presumption under S. 4, PC Act, 1947 would stand rebutted if the explanation proved by accused is reasonable and probable — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 4 and 5(2) & 5(1)(d) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 20 and 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(d)

But for any special facts, courts are wary of accepting belated explanations given for the first time in the statement under Section 313 and not at the first available opportunity. (Para 10). State of Maharashtra v. Rashid B. Mulani, (2006) 1 SCC 407: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 408: AIR 2006 SC 825: 2006 Cri LJ 794: (2006) 39 AIC 65 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-2006]

A. Abdul Kaffar v. State of Kerala, (2004) 9 SCC 333: 2004 SCC (Cri) 981; T. Shankar Prasad v. State of A.P., (2004) 3 SCC 753: 2004 SCC (Cri) 870, relied on

Punjabrao v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 10 SCC 371: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1130, distinguished [3309] — S. 313 — Motive — On facts held, motive to commit murder clearly established by enmity between the parties evidenced by the reply of the accused under S. 313 and past criminal cases between them — A clear and strong motive to wreak vengeance proved — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 8. Sone Lal v. State of U.P., (1978) 4 SCC 302: 1978 SCC (Cri) 587: AIR 1978 SC 1142: 1978 Cri LJ 1122: 1978 ALJ 530.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-4-1978]

[3310] — S. 313 — Application made by the co-accused before magistrate alleging that police had already arrested the accused and was also trying to falsely implicate him — Held, the application is relevant under S. 11(2), Evidence Act and could be considered as a part of the co-accused's statement made under S. 342, CrPC, 1898 — Hence, the recitals in the application can be considered in conjunction with other circumstances of the case — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 11(2). Satbir v. State of Haryana, (1981) 4 SCC 508: 1981 SCC (Cri) 860: AIR 1981 SC 2074: 1981 Cri LJ 1702.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-1981]

[3311] — S. 313 — Confession of co-accused — Statement made by A-3 under S. 313 CrPC that he helped the appellant A-1 in throwing the dead body in the pond — Use of, against A-1 — Held, the said statement being in the nature of a confession involving a co-accused, it was not safe to place reliance on the same in the absence of any corroboration — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 30 (Para 8). Kojja Sreenu v. State of A.P., (2003) 12 SCC 783: AIR 2004 SC 1101.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2003]

[3312] — S. 313 — Presumption under S. 114 Ill.(a), Evidence Act, 1872 when can be drawn — Theft of ornaments worn by deceased — Soon after the incident accused persons coming in possession of the ornaments — An earring recovered from a jeweller to whom the same had been sold by one of the accused on the very next day of the incident and other ornaments recovered from the places where the same were concealed at the instance of the accused persons within a reasonable time after the incident — No explanation given by accused about their possession and concealment of those articles — Instead accused making false denial of their knowledge about the incriminating circumstances regarding the recoveries — Held, presumption of commission of theft of the ornaments by the accused by removing the same from the person of the deceased and not merely of receiving the stolen ornaments, can be drawn under Ill. (a)

The presumption under Section 114 Illustration (a) could be safely drawn and the circumstance of recovery of the incriminating articles within a reasonable time after the incident at the places shown by the accused unerringly points to the involvement of the accused. The appellants who were in a position to explain as to how they could lay their hands on the stolen articles or how they had the knowledge of concealment of the stolen property, did nothing to explain; on the other hand, they denied knowledge of recoveries which in the light of the evidence adduced by the prosecution must be considered to be false. By omitting to explain, it must be inferred that either they intended to suppress the truth or invited the risk of presumption being drawn. Thus, the presumption as to the commission of offence envisaged by Illustration (a) of Section 114 is the minimum that could be drawn. (Para Va[16])

The fact that within a short time after the murder of the deceased, the appellants came into possession of the ornaments removed from the person of the deceased and the first accused offered one of the stolen articles for sale on that very day and the further fact that the other articles were found secreted to the knowledge of the appellants coupled with non-accountal of the possession of the articles and the failure to give even a plausible explanation vis-à-vis the incriminating circumstances would go to show that they were not merely the receivers of stolen articles from another source but they themselves removed them from the person of the deceased. Thus, the presumption to be drawn under Illustration (a) to Section 114 should not be confined to their involvement in the offence of receiving the stolen property under Section 411 but on the facts of the case, it can safely go beyond that. (Para Vb[17]). Limbaji v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 10 SCC 340: AIR 2002 SC 491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-12-2001]

Sanwat Khan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 54: 1956 Cri LJ 150; Shivappa v. State of Mysore, (1970) 1 SCC 487: 1970 SCC (Cri) 215, relied on

[3313] — S. 313 — Statement of accused under S. 108, Customs Act, 1962 in English — If on facts made involuntarily as he knew only French language — In view of the absence of such allegation in his statement under S. 313 CrPC and in view of other evidence, answered in the negative — Customs Act, 1962, Ss. 108 and 135 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 21, 23, 28 and 8(c)

In his examination under Section 313 CrPC, the appellant had stated that the statement was obtained by force and that he was beaten by the officers of the Narcotic Control Bureau. He had not stated at that time that he did not know English. Apart from the evidence of the said officers there is evidence of an employee of Jewel Hotel where the appellant had stayed, who has proved some of the entries made in English by the appellant himself in the register maintained by the hotel. The panchnama also contains the words "received copy" written by the appellant. The said statement of the appellant was recorded in 1990. He retracted it in 1994. Till then he had not complained against any officer as regards the alleged beating or use of force nor had he stated that he did not know English. Therefore, this contention cannot be accepted. (Para 6). Kalema Tumba v. State of Maharashtra, (1999) 8 SCC 257: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1422: AIR 2000 SC 402.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-1999]

[3314] — S. 313 — Absence of evidence to establish presence of the accused at the scene of occurrence — Courts below erred in splitting up and taking into consideration statement of the accused for fixing her presence at the scene of occurrence — However, if there is other clear evidence then her presence can be inferred by taking assurance from her statement. Kagen Bera v. State of W.B., AIR 1994 SC 1511.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-1992]

[3315] — S. 313 — Absence of specific plea of self-defence when examined under S. 313 — Held, not enough to denude the accused of the right if the same can be made out otherwise. Periasami v. State of T.N., (1996) 6 SCC 457: 1997 SCC (Cri) 121.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-9-1996]

[3316] — S. 313 — Accused declining to examine any defence witness in reply to a specific question asked in original examination under S. 313 CrPC — But in fresh examination under S. 313 CrPC before High Court accused seeking to examine three more witnesses — High Court without placing any reliance on such prayer of accused, dealing with the issue on the basis of evidence available on record — Held, High Court was justified in doing so — Contention before Supreme Court that in the justice delivery system and for proper administration of justice a further opportunity ought to be given to the accused persons to lead defence evidence before the court and the matter ought to be adjourned on that score awaiting the evidence as may be available on record not accepted — Acceptance of the testimony of the eyewitness by trial court and High Court finding it to be trustworthy was justified and no interference of Supreme Court called for — Constitution of India — Arts. 136, 141 and 142 (Paras 6 to 10). Baba v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 9 SCC 567.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-2002]

[3317] — S. 313 — Admission of guilt before court by accused after close of prosecution evidence and his examination under S. 313 — Conviction, held on facts, was affected by admission and hence, cannot be sustained. Ganeshmal Jashraj v. Govt. of Gujarat, (1980) 1 SCC 363: 1980 SCC (Cri) 239: AIR 1980 SC 264: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 474: (1980) 21 GLR 429: (1980) 1 SCR 1114.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-10-1979]

[3318] — S. 313 — Opportunity to be afforded to accused to explain circumstances against him and not the inferences flowing from such circumstances — Accused is not to be cross-examined — Also his answers to be considered by the Court. State of H.P. v. Wazir Chand, (1978) 1 SCC 130: 1978 SCC (Cri) 58: AIR 1978 SC 315: 1978 Cri LJ 347.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.K. Goswami, N.L. Untwalia and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-11-1977]

[3319] — S. 313 — Plea of self-defence not taken under — Effect — Burden of proving that the alleged offence falls within the exception of exercise of right of private defence — Even if plea of private defence not specifically taken by accused persons in their statements under S. 313 CrPC and accused who was injured in the same incident did not enter in the witness box, such plea can be raised during the course of submissions by relying on probabilities and circumstances of the case and it can be considered if made out from the evidence on record — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 96 to 106 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 105

Though Section 105 of the Evidence Act enacts a rule regarding burden of proof but it does not follow therefrom that the plea of private defence should be specifically taken and if not taken shall not be available to be considered though made out from the evidence available in the case. A plea of self-defence can be taken by introducing such plea in the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses or in the statement of the accused persons recorded under Section 313 CrPC or by adducing defence evidence. And, even if the plea is not introduced in any one of these three modes still it can be raised during the course of submissions by relying on the probabilities and circumstances obtaining in the case. It is basic criminal jurisprudence that an accused cannot be compelled to be examined as a witness and no adverse inference can be drawn against the defence merely because an accused person has chosen to abstain from the witness box. In this case the High Court was also not right in criticising and discarding availability of plea of self-defence to the accused persons on the ground that the plea was not specifically taken by the accused in their statements under Section 313 CrPC and because the accused did not enter the witness box. (Para 24) . Kashiram v. State of M.P., (2002) 1 SCC 71: 2002 SCC (Cri) 68: AIR 2001 SC 2902.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti, Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2001]

Vijayee Singh v. State of U.P., (1990) 3 SCC 190: 1990 SCC (Cri) 378, relied on

[3320] — S. 313 — Silence and failure of accused-appellants to explain the circumstances in which they were travelling at odd hours (1.30 a.m.) in a truck carrying 16 bags of poppy husk — Held, was a strong circumstance that could be put against them — However, it was unfortunate that no question was asked of appellants under S. 313 CrPC about the possession of poppy husk placed in the truck

The silence and failure of the appellants to explain the circumstances in which they were travelling in the vehicle at odd hours, is one strong circumstance that can be put against them. A case of drawing presumption under Section 114 of the Evidence Act could perhaps be made out then to prove the possession of the accused, but the fact remains that in the course of examination under Section 313 CrPC, not even a question was asked that they were the persons in possession of poppy husk placed in the vehicle. In this state of things, it is not proper to raise a presumption under Section 114 of the Evidence Act nor is it safe to conclude that the prosecution established beyond reasonable doubt that the appellants were in possession of poppy husk which was being carried by the vehicle. (Para 6). Avtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 7 SCC 419: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1769: AIR 2002 SC 3343.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2002]

[3321] — S. 313 — When death caused while deceased in the custody of the accused, accused is obliged to give a plausible explanation for the cause of the death in his statement under S. 313. Ganeshlal v. State of Maharashtra, (1992) 3 SCC 106: 1992 Cri LJ 1545.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.M. Kasliwal and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-1992]

[3322] — Ss. 313, 228, 374 and 386 — Framing of proper charges and appropriate examination of accused under S. 313 — Necessity — Eleven accused, variously armed with lethal weapons alleged to have assaulted the deceased resulting in his death and causing injuries to others — Motive for crime said to be the land dispute — Trial court finding all accused guilty under Ss. 302/149 IPC — Appeals filed thereagainst dismissed by High Court — Submission by appellant that neither their examination under S. 313 was properly done, nor the details of accusations were brought to their notice and even the charges were not properly framed — Common charges had been framed against all accused as far as Ss. 149 and 302/34 were concerned — Finding by High Court that charges were explained to accused while recording their statements under S. 313 found erroneous — Supreme Court on perusal of relevant documents noting that no appropriate question was posed during examination under S. 313 CrPC and appropriate charges were also not framed — Moreover, High Court had dismissed the appeal by an unreasoned order — Discussing the case law highlighting the importance of a reasoned order, and necessity of proper examination of accused under S. 313, held, conviction as recorded by trial court and upheld by High Court unsustainable — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34 and Ss. 302/149 (Paras 2 to 4, 7, 10 to 15, 19 and 20). Latu Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2008) 8 SCC 395: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 500.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-5-2008]

Raj Kishore Jha v. State of Bihar, (2003) 11 SCC 519: 2004 SCC (Cri) 212; State of Punjab v. Bhag Singh, (2004) 1 SCC 547: 2004 SCC (Cri) 341; Bibhuti Bhusan Das Gupta v. State of W.B., AIR 1969 SC 381, relied on [3323] — Ss. 313 and 205 — Personal examination of accused under S. 313 — General direction by High Court to all criminal courts, particularly in cases involving offences under S. 138, NI Act, as also in all other cases involving offences which are technical in nature and do not involve any moral turpitude, to dispense with personal examination of accused under S. 313 and in place to accept and consider written statement filed by accused, as a matter of course — Propriety — Held, aforesaid direction is not in accord with language of S. 313 and also dictum laid down in Basavaraj case, (2000) 8 SCC 740 — On plain language of S. 313, it is evident that in a summons case, when personal appearance of accused has been dispensed with under S. 205, a discretion is vested in Magistrate to dispense with rigour of personal examination of accused under S. 313 as well — Dispensation with personal examination of accused in terms of said provision is within trial court's discretion, to be exercised keeping in view certain parameters enumerated in Basavaraj R. Patil case and not as a matter of course — Hence, impugned order containing aforesaid general direction to lower courts, set aside — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138 and 143 to 145 (Paras 15 to 19 and 22). TGN Kumar v. State of Kerala, (2011) 2 SCC 772.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, A.K. Ganguly and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-1-2011]

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, followed

[3324] — Ss. 313, 229, 228 and 226 — Accused pleading guilty — Conviction can be founded upon confession/admission of guilt made by accused at any stage including the stage of making statement under S. 313 — However, while acting upon the plea of guilt of accused, court must approach with caution and circumspection to ensure that the plea is clear and unqualified and the admission of facts constitutes the offence — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, S. 12(4)

Since no oath is administered to the accused, the statements made by the accused under S. 313 will not be evidence stricto sensu. That is why sub-section (3) says that the accused shall not render himself liable to punishment if he gives false answers. But sub-s. (4) says that the answers given by the accused in response to his examination under S. 313 can be taken into consideration in such inquiry or trial. Sub-section (4) is a verbatim reproduction of sub-s. (3) of the corresponding S. 342 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure. In the context of the old sub-s. (3) the Supreme Court in Hate Singh Bhagat Singh case held that an answer given by an accused under S. 313 examination can be used for proving his guilt as much as the evidence given by a prosecution witness and in Narain Singh case it held that if the accused confesses to the commission of the offence with which he is charged the Court may, relying upon that confession, proceed to convict him. These decisions apply with equal force in the case of the new sub-s. (4) also.

Under S. 12(4) of the TADA Act a Designated Court shall, for the purpose of trial of any offence, have all the powers of a Court of Session. The procedure for the trial of Session cases is outlined in Chapter XVIII of the Code. Section 229 of the Code provides that if the accused pleads guilty the Judge has to record the plea and thereafter decide whether or not to convict the accused. The plea of guilt tantamounts to an admission of all the facts constituting the offence. It is, therefore, essential that before accepting and acting on the plea the Judge must feel satisfied that the accused admits facts or ingredients constituting the offence. The plea of the accused must, therefore, be clear, unambiguous and unqualified and the Court must be satisfied that he has understood the nature of the allegations made against him and admits them. The Court must act with caution and circumspection before accepting and acting on the plea of guilt. Once these requirements are satisfied the law permits the Judge trying the case to record a conviction based on the plea of guilt. If, however, the accused does not plead guilty or the Judge does not act on his plea he must fix a date for the examination of the witnesses i.e. the trial of the case. There is nothing in this Chapter which prevents the accused from pleading guilty at any subsequent stage of the trial. But before the trial Judge accepts and acts on that plea he must administer the same caution unto himself. This plea of guilt may also be put forward by the accused in his statement recorded under S. 313 of the Code.

In the present case both the accused 1 and 5 have unmistakably, unequivocally and without any reservation whatsoever admitted the fact that they were responsible for the murder of Gen. Vaidya. Apart from the confession of accused 1, Accused 5 has himself admitted that he was driving the motor cycle with Accused 1 on the pillion seat and to facilitate the crime he had brought the motor cycle in line with the car so that Accused 1 may have an opportunity of firing at his victim from close quarters. There is, therefore, no doubt whatsoever that both Accused 1 and 5 were acting in concert, they had a common intention to kill Gen. Vaidya and in furtherance of that intention Accused 1 fired the fatal shots. Therefore, the trial Judge was justified in holding that Accused 1 was guilty under S. 302 and Accused 5 was guilty under S. 302/34 IPC. State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705: AIR 1992 SC 2100.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-1992]

[3325] — Ss. 313, 242 and 243 — Trial judge must exercise control over the evidence being tendered in his court and the questions put to the accused (Per Varadarajan, J.). Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116: 1984 SCC (Cri) 487: AIR 1984 SC 1622: 1984 Cri LJ 1738.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], A. Varadarajan[2] and Sabyasachi Mukharji[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 19-7-1984]

[3326] — Ss. 313 and 315 — Relative evidentiary value of statements under, compared — As S. 313 statement is recorded without administering oath and without witness being cross-examined same, held, cannot be treated as evidence under S. 3, Evidence Act — But if an accused is examined under S. 315, said statement, held, relevant — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 3

The plea of the appellant that he had taken lift in the car is not fit to be accepted only on the basis of the statements of the appellants under Section 313 CrPC. Section 313 CrPC is taken into consideration to appreciate the truthfulness or otherwise of the case of the prosecution and it is not an evidence. Statement of an accused under Section 313 is recorded without administering oath and, therefore, the said statement cannot be treated as evidence within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Act. The appellants have not chosen to examine any other witness to support this plea and in case none was available they were free to examine themselves in terms of Section 315 which provides that a person accused of an offence is a competent witness of the defence and may give evidence on oath in disproof of the charges. (Para 23)

There is reason not to treat the statement under Section 313 CrPC as evidence as the accused cannot be cross-examined, with reference to those statements. However, when an accused appears as a witness under Section 315 CrPC in defence to disprove the charge, his version can be tested by his cross-examination. (Para 23)

Further, the person who claims that he was not in conscious possession has to establish it. Presumption of conscious possession is further available under Section 54 of the Act, which provides that the accused may be presumed to have committed the offence unless he accounts for satisfactorily the possession of contraband. To bring the offence within the mischief of Section 20 of the Act possession has to be conscious possession. Section 35 of the Act recognises that once possession is established the court can presume that the accused had a culpable mental state, meaning thereby conscious possession. (Para 24)

Both the appellants have been found travelling in the car from which charas was recovered and, therefore, they were in possession thereof. They were knowing each other. They were not travelling in a public transport vehicle. Distinction has to be made between the accused travelling by public transport vehicle and private vehicle. (Para 24). Dehal Singh v. State of H.P., (2010) 9 SCC 85: (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 1139: AIR 2010 SC 3594.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-2010]

Madan Lal v. State of H.P., (2003) 7 SCC 465: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1664, relied on [3327] — Ss. 313, 374, 386 and 401 — Omission to put question to accused of a vital nature — Where objection not raised at the appellate stage, the revisional court should normally not bother about it (Paras 12 and 16). State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33: AIR 2001 SC 3955.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

[3328] — Ss. 313 and 235 — Age of the accused — School leaving certificate produced by the prosecution at the stage of hearing on sentence — Such school leaving certificate can be acted upon even if the accused not questioned separately with reference to the date of birth given in the said certificate — in the circumstances, accused cannot be directed to be medically examined at the stage of review petition when the authenticity of the school leaving certificate had never been in doubt. Amrutlal Someshwar Joshi v. State of Maharashtra (II), (1994) 6 SCC 200: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1604: AIR 1994 SC 2582.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-1994]

Harnam v. State of U.P., (1976) 1 SCC 163: 1975 SCC (Cri) 794; Raisul v. State of U.P., (1976) 4 SCC 301: 1976 SCC (Cri) 613, distinguished [3329] — Ss. 313 and 296 — Omission to put question to accused under S. 313 concerning evidence of formal nature given by affidavit — Effect of, on proceedings — Held, if the remaining evidence is sufficient to bring home the guilt of the accused, the said lapse could be sidelined justifiably — More so, such an omission does not ipso facto vitiate the proceedings unless any prejudice caused to the accused is established by him -If accused succeeds in showing prejudice caused to him, the appellate court can call for the explanation from his counsel — In the present case, the High Court erred in not affording an opportunity to the prosecution to make up the lapse, resulting in miscarriage of justice (Paras 12, 16, 6). State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33: AIR 2001 SC 3955.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, relied on

[3330] — S. 313(1)(b) — Examination of accused by Court — Held, per majority, though court has to question the accused "personally", but in exigent conditions court can allow the counsel for the accused to answer the questions on his behalf — For this accused required to file before the court an application and an affidavit sworn by himself — Procedure in this regard laid down — If such an application is made in the instant case trial court can pass appropriate orders — Per Sethi, J. (dissenting), when Parliament has consciously incorporated this mandatory provision for examination of accused personally, interpreting it so as to admit an exception of allowing counsel in accused's place to answer the questions would amount to judicial legislation which is not permissible — However, objection regarding non-compliance with the mandate of S. 313 can be raised only by the accused and not by the complainant or the prosecution — Trial court dispensing with personal appearance of accused who were in USA — Their counsel allowed to answer on their behalf

The first appellant is the husband of the second respondent who obtained an order from a Judicial Magistrate for maintenance allowance from her husband under Section 125 CrPC. The second respondent thereafter lodged a complaint with the police alleging inter alia that her husband and his sister, the second appellant, and their parents had ill treated her for not bringing more dowry. The appellants were tried for the offence punishable under Section 498-A of the Indian Penal Code read with Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. After the prosecution examined the witnesses and closed the evidence and when the next stage for examination of the accused under Section 313 CrPC reached, the trial court observed that the counsel for the accused had filed an application for dispensing with the questioning the first appellant who was in USA and the second appellant who was then studying in Gadag and that the counsel endorsed their statement that they had nothing to say by way of their statement. On that basis the trial court gave an opportunity to the counsel to make statement for the appellants and dispensed with their physical presence. The trial Magistrate thereafter proceeded to hear the arguments and finally passed a judgment acquitting all the accused of the offences charged. The second respondent then filed a revision before the High Court challenging the said order of the acquittal. A Single Judge of the High Court found that as per the decision of the Supreme Court in Usha K. Pillai, the trial court had no other alternative and had no discretion to dispense with the examination of the accused personally under Section 313 of the Code. Hence the Single Judge set aside the order of acquittal passed by the trial court and remitted the case to the trial court with a direction to dispose of it afresh after examining the accused under Section 313 of the Code. In the present appeal one of the contentions raised by the appellants was that no criminal court can be rendered absolutely powerless to deal with a situation like the present one, i.e. if the accused is in such a faraway country and if he has to incur a whopping expenditure and undertake a tedious long-distance journey solely for the purpose of answering the court questions, he himself pleaded that his counsel may be allowed to answer such questions on his behalf. The next contention was that if the court did not put questions under Section 313 of the Code there was no reason for the complainant to be aggrieved thereof because the prejudice can be caused only to the accused due to non-compliance with the said provision. Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

Per majority

Section 313 CrPC is mainly intended to benefit the accused and as its corollary to benefit the court in reaching the final conclusion. The provision is not intended to nail him to any position, but to comply with the most salutary principle of natural justice enshrined in the maxim audi alteram partem. The word "may" in clause (a) of sub-section (1) in Section 313 of the Code indicates, without any doubt, that even if the court does not put any question under that clause the accused cannot raise any grievance of it. But if the court fails to put the needed question under clause (b) of the sub-section it would result in a handicap to the accused and he can legitimately claim that no evidence, without affording him the opportunity to explain, can be used against him. It is now well settled that a circumstance about which the accused was not asked to explain cannot be used against him. (Paras 19 and 20)

But the situation to be considered now is whether, with the revolutionary change in technology of communication and transmission and the marked improvement in facilities for legal aid in the country, is it necessary that in all cases the accused must answer by personally remaining present in court. This is the requirement and would be the general rule. However, if remaining present involves undue hardship and large expense, could the court not alleviate the difficulties. If the court holds the view that the situation in which he made such a plea is genuine, should the court say that he has no escape but he must undergo all the tribulations and hardships and answer such questions personally presenting himself in court. If there are other accused in the same case, and the court has already completed their questioning, should they too wait for long without their case reaching finality, or without registering further progress of their trial until their co-accused is able to attend the court personally and answer the court questions? Why should a criminal court be rendered helpless in such a situation? (Para 21)

The one category of offences which is specifically exempted from the rigour of Section 313(1)(b) of the Code is "summons cases". Every case in which the offence triable is punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years is a "summons case". Thus, all other offences generally belong to a different category altogether among which are included offences punishable with varying sentences from imprisonment for three years up to imprisonment for life and even right up to death penalty. Hence there are several offences in that category which are far less serious in gravity compared with grave and very grave offences. Even in cases involving less serious offences, can not the court extend a helping hand to an accused who is placed in a predicament deserving such a help? (Para 22)

Section 243(1) of the Code enables the accused, who is involved in the trial of warrant case instituted on police report, to put in any written statement. When any such statement is filed the court is obliged to make it part of the record of the case. Even if such case is not instituted on police report the accused has the same right (vide Section 247). Even the accused involved in offences exclusively triable by the Court of Session can also exercise such a right to put in written statements [Section 233(2) of the Code]. It is common knowledge that most of such written statements, if not all, are prepared by the counsel of the accused. If such written statements can be treated as statements directly emanating from the accused, hook, line and sinker, why not the answers given by him in the manner set out hereinafter, in special contingencies, be afforded the same worth. (Para 23)

A pragmatic and humanistic approach is warranted in regard to special exigencies. The word "shall" in clause (b) to Section 313(1) of the Code is to be interpreted as obligatory on the court and it should be complied with when it is for the benefit of the accused. But if it works to his great prejudice and disadvantage the court should, in appropriate cases, e.g., if the accused satisfies the court that he is unable to reach the venue of the court, except by bearing huge expenditure or that he is unable to travel the long journey due to physical incapacity or some such other hardship, relieve him of such hardship and at the same time adopt a measure to comply with the requirements in Section 313 of the Code in a substantial manner. (Para 24)

If the accused (who is already exempted from personally appearing in the court) makes an application to the court praying that he may be allowed to answer the questions without making his physical presence in court on account of justifying exigency, the court can pass appropriate orders thereon, provided such application is accompanied by an affidavit sworn to by the accused himself containing the following matters:

(a) A narration of facts to satisfy the court of his real difficulties to be physically present in court for giving such answers.

(b) An assurance that no prejudice would be caused to him, in any manner, by dispensing with his personal presence during such questioning.

(c) An undertaking that he would not raise any grievance on that score at any stage of the case.

If the court is satisfied of the genuineness of the statements made by the accused in the said application and affidavit it is open to the court to supply the questionnaire to his advocate (containing the questions which the court might put to him under Section 313 of the Code) and fix the time within which the same has to be returned duly answered by the accused together with a properly- authenticated affidavit that those answers were given by the accused himself. He should affix his signature on all the sheets of the answered questionnaire. However, if he does not wish to give any answer to any of the questions he is free to indicate that fact at the appropriate place in the questionnaire (as a matter of precaution the court may keep photocopy or carbon copy of the questionnaire before it is supplied to the accused for an answer). If the accused fails to return the questionnaire duly answered as aforesaid within the time or extended time granted by the court, he shall forfeit his right to seek personal exemption from court during such questioning. If the above course is adopted in exceptional exigency it would not violate the legislative intent envisaged in Section 313 of the Code. (Paras 26 and 27)

In the present case the trial court can pass appropriate orders if an application is made by the accused relating to the examination under Section 313 of the Code, in the light of the legal principles stated above. (Para 28)

Per Sethi, J. (dissenting)

Section 313 CrPC is based upon the maxim of audi alteram partem which has been acknowledged as the cardinal principle of natural justice. It is a principle of English law that the whole burden of proving the evidence is on the prosecution which means the accused can stand by and do nothing as he is protected from all judicial questioning at the trial. Section 313 makes a departure from the English law. Examination under the section is not intended to be an idle formality. It has to be carried out in the interests of justice and fair play to the accused. Section 313 is for the benefit of the accused and for enabling him to obtain the full benefit under the section it is imperative that he must be examined by the court after the witnesses of the prosecution have been examined and before he is called upon to enter upon his defence. In our country it often happens that an accused is tried in a language which he understands but indifferently well, and for that reason as well as for other equally grave reasons the intention of the statute is that at a certain stage in the proceedings, the court itself shall put aside all counsel, all pleaders, all witnesses, all representatives, and shall call upon each individual accused with the authority of the court's own voice to take advantage of the opportunity which then arises to state in his own way anything which he may desire to state. The statement recorded under the section can be taken into consideration in determining the innocence or the guilt of the accused. The accused is obliged to explain each and every circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. (Paras 31 and 32)

The object of the section would be defeated if, instead of the accused, his lawyer replies the question with his invented ingenuity. The imaginative suggestions of the counsel cannot be a substitute for the taking of the statement from the accused. The section enables a Judge to ascertain from time to time, from the accused as to what explanation he may desire to offer regarding any fact stated by a witness against him. It has to be noticed that the non-compliance of the provisions of section is not a mere irregularity. Omission to put questions to the accused on specific points vitiates the trial. Omission to put specific points appearing against the accused apparently occasions prejudice to him which cannot be rectified under Section 465 CrPC. It is true that all omissions on some points to be put to the accused under Section 313 would not vitiate the trial but the failure to put vital points and circumstances is sure to occasion a miscarriage of justice and thus vitiates the trial to that extent. (Para 33)

The scheme of the Code shows that after the evidence of the prosecution is closed, the local inspection, if any, is held and the court witnesses in terms of Section 311 are examined, the court would, then and then alone, direct the examination of the accused under Section 313, upon being satisfied that he was required to personally explain the circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. Such a recourse to examine the accused at this stage cannot in any way be termed to be causing him inconvenience or occasioning any harassment. Otherwise, in the absence of such examination, and without leading defence evidence, the accused in all probability is likely to be convicted and sentenced for the commission of the offence with which he has been charged and tried by the Magistrate or the court. In that event permitting the examination of the accused personally, is actually for his benefit. There are cases where the accused during the course of his examination under this section, may place on record any clinching evidence which may not even require him to produce any defence evidence. The accused when personally appearing can also be in a bargaining position by persuading the court to take a lenient view despite proof of material circumstances against him. Such a statement by which the accused may admit, any of the allegations or circumstances appearing against him, cannot be made by his pleader. Any such statement made by his counsel cannot bind the accused. The conviction or sentence passed against the accused, without offering him an opportunity of explaining the circumstances would not only violate the maxim of audi alteram partem but also be contrary to the concept of the "due process of law" recognised and accepted by all civilised nations. (Para 39)

The incorporation of the provision necessitating the examination of the accused personally, undoubtedly is the reflection of a conscious decision, which the legislature took in its wisdom. The courts only interpret the law and do not legislate it. Where the legislature's intention is clear, there is no scope of reading between the lines or putting an interpretation contrary to the intention of the legislature. Adding to or providing for ancillary measures can be resorted to by the courts only in grey areas and not in the covered fields. If on its true construction a statute leads to anomalous results, the courts have no option but to give effect to it and leave it to the legislature to amend or alter the law. Any other view, even based on howsoever high, cherished or pious desire cannot be the substitute of specific legislative indictment. (Paras 40 and 41)

Section 313 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not envisage the examination of the counsel, in place of the accused and the law laid down by the Supreme Court by three-Judge Bench in 1969 and later on followed in 1973, does not require any reconsideration, particularly by a Bench of the same strength and of a coordinate jurisdiction. (Para 45)

The mandate of Section 313 is imperative with no exception. However, the violation of its compliance can be objected to only by the accused for whose benefit the section has been enacted. The complainant or the prosecution cannot be permitted to allow the illegality being committed and perpetuated and after the inquiry or trial results in acquittal of the accused, to complain on the basis of the alleged violation. There is no allegation nor could there be any that the personal non-examination of the accused persons had, in any way, adversely affected the prosecution. Section 465 of the Code could not be relied upon by the prosecution for the purposes of assailing the judgment of acquittal after the completion of the trial. Despite laying down the correct position of law the High Court appears to be not justified in setting aside the order of acquittal at the instance of the informant of the crime. In the absence of any complaint by the accused for their non-examination under Section 313 of the Code, there was no justification to remand the case only for the purposes of examining the accused concerned personally and to pass fresh orders on merits in accordance with law. (Para 46). Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87: AIR 2000 SC 3214.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-10-2000]

Jai Dev v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 612: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 495; Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; Jai Dev v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 612: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 495, relied on

Usha K. Pillai v. Raj K. Srinivas, (1993) 3 SCC 208: 1993 SCC (Cri) 824, overruled

Bibhuti Bhusan Das Gupta v. State of W.B., AIR 1969 SC 381: 1969 Cri LJ 654: (1969) 2 SCR 104, dissented from

Followed in Latu Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2008) 8 SCC 395 and Keya Mukherjee v. Magma Leasing Ltd., (2008) 8 SCC 447*

[3331] — S. 313(1)(b) — Examination of accused under — Mandatory — Purpose and stage of examination — If any incriminating material against accused appears on the conclusion of the prosecution evidence, court would be duty-bound to solicit accused's explanation therefor irrespective of how weak or scanty the prosecution evidence was in that respect

Section 313 embodies the fundamental principle of fairness based on the maxim audi alteram partem. The purpose of the examination of the accused under S. 313 is to give the accused an opportunity to explain the incriminating material which has surfaced on record. The stage of examination of the accused under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of S. 313 is reached only after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before the accused is called on to enter upon his defence. The trial Judge is not expected before he examines the accused under S. 313 of the Code, to sift the evidence and pronounce on whether or not he would accept the evidence regarding any incriminating material to determine whether or not to examine the accused on that material. To do so would be to pre-judge the evidence without hearing the prosecution under S. 314 of the Code. The words "shall question him" clearly bring out the mandatory character of the clause and cast an imperative duty on the court and confer a corresponding right on the accused to an opportunity to offer his explanation for such incriminating material appearing against him. Therefore, no matter how weak or scanty the prosecution evidence is in regard to a certain incriminating material, it is the duty of the court to examine the accused and seek his explanation thereon. It is only after that stage is over that the oral arguments have to be heard before the judgment is rendered. It is only where the court finds that no incriminating material has surfaced that the accused may not be examined under S. 313 of the Code. If there is material against the accused he must be examined. In the instant case it is not correct to say that no incriminating material had surfaced against the accused. Therefore, the trial court was justified in examining the accused under S. 313. State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdev Singh, (1992) 3 SCC 700: 1992 SCC (Cri) 705: AIR 1992 SC 2100.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-1992]

[3332] — S. 313(1)(b) — Examination of accused under — Object of — Questioning the accused "generally" — Meaning — Nature of question which should be put to accused should be such that the accused knows what he is to explain, even if illiterate and ignorant, knows what he is to explain — Provision must be followed faithfully and fairly

The object of examination under Section 313 CrPC is to give the accused an opportunity to explain the case made against him. This statement can be taken into consideration in judging his innocence or guilt. Where there is an onus on the accused to discharge, it depends on the facts and circumstances of the case if such statement discharges the onus. (Para 13)

The word "generally" in sub-section (1)(b) of Section 313 CrPC does not limit the nature of the questioning to one or more questions of a general nature relating to the case, but it means that the question should relate to the whole case generally and should also be limited to any particular part or parts of it. The question must be framed in such a way so as to enable the accused to know what he is to explain, what are the circumstances which are against him and for which an explanation is needed. A conviction based on the accused's failure to explain what he was never asked to explain is bad in law. The whole object of enacting Section 313 CrPC was that the attention of the accused should be drawn to the specific points in the charge and in the evidence on which the prosecution claims that the case is made out against the accused so that he may be able to give such explanation as he desires to give. (Para 14)

The provisions of Section 313 CrPC must be observed faithfully and fairly. (Para 15)

In this case the appellant-accused was tried on a charge of having committed murder of his wife by pouring kerosene on her person and setting her ablaze. As regards the prosecution case that kerosene was found on the accused's dress, no question in this regard was put to the accused while he was examined under Section 313 of the Code. This was fatal to the prosecution case. (Paras 3 and 11). Ajay Singh v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 12 SCC 341: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 371: AIR 2007 SC 2188.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-6-2007]

Hate Singh Bhagat Singh v. State of Madhya Bharat, AIR 1953 SC 468, relied on

[Ed.: See also Ajmer Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 76; Tara Singh v. State, AIR 1951 SC 441.]

[3333] — S. 313(1)(b) — Object and nature of — Object is to benefit the accused — Provision is based on the natural justice principle of audi alteram partem . Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87: AIR 2000 SC 3214.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-10-2000]

[3334] — S. 313(1)(b) proviso — Dispensing with examination of accused by examining accused's pleader, held, cannot be allowed in cases relating to dishonour of cheque — After completion of prosecution evidence in proceeding under S. 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act, accused-appellant's application under S. 205 for dispensing with her personal attendance and for being represented by her pleader allowed by Magistrate with the condition that she shall appear before the court as and when called — But appellant's application under S. 313(1)(b) proviso for dispensing with her examination by examining her pleader who was to represent her under S. 205 rejected — Magistrate and Addl. Sessions Judge in revision — High Court dismissed appellant's application under S. 401 r/w S. 482 — Held, High Court's impugned order does not suffer from any infirmity to warrant Supreme Court's interference in view of principles set out in Basavaraj R. Patil case, (2000) 8 SCC 740 — Although in Chandu Lal Chandraker case, a two-Judge Bench of Supreme Court had taken a view supporting that of appellant, but in that case no reference was made to Bibhuti Bhusan Das Gupta case in which Supreme Court had held that pleader cannot represent the accused for the purpose of S. 342 CrPC, 1898 which is presently S. 313 — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S.138. Keya Mukherjee v. Magma Leasing Ltd., (2008) 8 SCC 447: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 537: AIR 2008 SC 1807: (2008) 2 KLT 327: 2008 Cri LJ 2597: (2008) 2 Cal LJ 67 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-4-2008]

Chandu Lal Chandraker v. Puran Mal, 1988 Supp SCC 570: 1988 SCC (Cri) 907, held per incuriam

Bibhuti Bhusan Das Gupta v. State of W.B., AIR 1969 SC 381, relied on

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, followed

[3335] — Ss. 313(1)(b) proviso and 2(w) & (x), 205(1) and 317 — Examination of accused, after examination of prosecution witnesses in a warrant case — Held, mandatory even if court had dispensed with accused's personal attendance under S. 205(1) or 317 — Rule of natural justice incorporated in — Case arising from complaint against respondent-accused for offence under S. 363 IPC, being a warrant case, Magistrate erred in dismissing the application of appellant-complainant for personal appearance and examination under S. 313(1)(b) of accused who was residing in USA

